

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE LAWYERS REPORTS
ANNOTATED

---

BOOK XLIII

---

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE, WITH FULL ANNOTATION.

BURDETT A. RICH, EDITOR, AND HENRY P. FARNHAM, Asst.

---

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

1899

KF
133
23
A. 43

---

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, by

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,

In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

---

Rec. Aug. 9, 1899.

TABLE

CASES REPORTED

OF

IN

LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK XLIII.

A

American Gas & V. M. Co. v. Wood (Me.)	449
American Waltham Watch Co. v. United States Watch Co. (Mass.)	826
Anglo-American Sav. & L. Asso. v. Campbell (D. C. App.)	622
Armington v. Palmer (R. I.)	95
Ashland & C. Street R. Co. v. Faulkner (Ky.)	554
Ashland Water Co., Green v. (Wis.)	117
Augusta, Cleveland v. (Ga.)	638

B.

Bank, Citizens' Nat., Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. (Ohio)	777
Grafton Nat., v. Wing (Mass.)	831
Grafton Sav., v. Wing (Mass.)	831
Mechanics' Nat., Glidden v. (Ohio)	737
National of Ill., Beattie v. (Ill.)	654
Union, Warren v. (N. Y.)	256
Barry, Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	349
Bartlett v. Clarksburg (W. Va.)	295
Bates, State v. (Utah)	33
Battis, Ex parte (Tex. Crim. App.)	863
Beach v. Brown (Wash.)	114
Beattie v. National Bank of Ill. (Ill.)	654
Beebe, Illinois C. R. Co. v. (Ill.)	210
Birmingham Ry. & E. Co., Birmingham Traction Co. v. (Ala.)	233
Watkins v. (Ala.)	297
Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham Ry. & E. Co. (Ala.)	233
Bixby v. Omaha & C. B. Ry. & B. Co. (Iowa)	533
Bland, State, Hazel, v. (Mo.)	845
Board of Aldermen of Boston, Sears v. (Mass.)	834
Boston, Ransdell v. (Ill.)	526
Boutwell v. Marr (Vt.)	803
Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.)	593
Bradneck, State v. (Conn.)	620
Brown, Beach v. (Wash.)	114
43 L. R. A.

Bruce, Camp v. (Va.)	146
Burlington Traction Co., Ploof v. (Vt.)	108

C.

Calhoun v. Little (Ga.)	630
Camp v. Bruce (Va.)	146
Campbell, Anglo-American Sav. & L. Asso. v. (D. C. App.)	622
Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. (Tex.)	225
Sully v. (Tenn.)	161
Capital Electric Co., Carpenter v. (Ill.)	645
Carland v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Mich.)	280
Carpenter v. Capital Electric Co. (Ill.)	645
Carson v. Gentner (Or.)	130
Carter v. County Court of Tyler County (W. Va.)	725
Cason, State, ex rel., Sharp v. (Tenn.)	788
Catlettsburg, Commonwealth, ex rel., Dunn v. (Ky.)	701
Central Elevator Co. v. People, Moloney (Ill.)	658
Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Price (Ga.)	402
Central R. Co., Haver v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	84
Runyan v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	284
Chicago & G. T. R. Co., Sweetland v. (Mich.)	563
Chicago G. W. R. Co., Trezona v. (Iowa)	136
Choate v. Stevens (Mich.)	277
Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (Ohio)	777
Citizens' Nat. Bank, Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. (Ohio)	777
Claridge, Brackenridge v. (Tex.)	593
Clark, Lehman v. (Ill.)	648
v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. (D. C. App.)	390
Clarksburg, Bartlett v. (W. Va.)	295
Cleveland v. Augusta (Ga.)	638
Collins v. Ryan (La.)	514
Columb v. Webster Mfg. Co. (C. C. App. 1st C.)	195
Commonwealth, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Ky.)	541
Murphy v. (Mass.)	154

Commonwealth, ex rel. Catlettsburg, Dunn v. (Ky.) -	701
Consolidated Elevator Co., Vega S. S. Co. v. (Minn.) -	843
County Court of Tyler County, Carter v. (W. Va.) -	725

D.

Danehower, Fields v. (Ark.) -	519
Deeds v. Strode (Idaho) -	207
Deposit Bldg. & L. Asso., Doty v. (Ky.)	551
Dick, John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. (Mich.) -	566
Donaldson, Wilson v. (Cal.) -	524
Doremus v. Hennessy (Ill.) -	797
Doty v. Deposit Bldg. & L. Asso. (Ky.)	551
Douglass v. Montgomery (Ala.) -	376
Duluth, St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. (Minn.)	433
Dunn v. Commonwealth, Catlettsburg (Ky.) -	701
People v. (N. Y.) -	247
Du Quoin v. Kelly (Ill.) -	644

E.

Eaton, Wyman v. (Iowa) -	695
Economic L. Asso., Seiler v. (Iowa)	537
Ellison, Kaysville v. (Utah) -	81
Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland (Or.) -	435
Eugene, Huddleston v. (Or.) -	444
Ex parte Battis (Tex. Crim. App.) -	863

F.

Fall Brook Coal Co. v. Hewson (N. Y.)	676
Faulkner, Ashland & C. Street R. Co. v. (Ky.) -	554
Feder v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. (Iowa) -	693
Fields v. Danehower (Ark.) -	519
Fire Asso. of Phila., L'Anse v. (Mich.)	838
Fisher v. Walsh (Wis.) -	810
Flinn, Reighard v. (Pa.) -	502
Foley v. Manufacturers' & B. F. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) -	664
Fosseen, Svanburg v. (Minn.) -	427

G.

Gage v. Harvey (Ark.) -	143
Gannon v. Laclede Gaslight Co. (Mo.)	505
v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Mass.) -	833
Gentner, Carson v. (Or.) -	130
Gibson v. Wood (Ky.) -	692
Glidden v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank (Ohio)	737
Glock v. Howard & W. Colony Co. (Cal.) -	190
Gottschalk, Wight v. (Tenn.) -	189
Grafton Nat. Bank v. Wing (Mass.)	831
Grafton Sav. Bank v. Wing (Mass.)	831
Graham v. McNeill (Wash.) -	300
Green v. Ashland Water Co. (Wis.)	117
Greenville, Mauldin v. (S. C.) -	101
Grommes v. Sullivan (C. C. App. 7th C.) -	419

43 L. R. A.

Gross v. Kentucky Bd. of M. of W. C. E. (Ky.) -	703
Gustafson v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) -	615
Gwin, Worthington v. (Ala.) -	382

H.

Hadden, Linville v. (Md.) -	222
Harrison, Southern R. Co. v. (Ala.) -	385
State, ex rel., v. Menaugh (Ind.) -	403
Harvey, Gage v. (Ark.) -	143
Haver v. Central R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) -	84
Hays, Williams v. (N. Y.) -	253
Healey, Valentine v. (N. Y.) -	667
Heert, Perkins v. (N. Y.) -	858
Heidt, Iowa Sav. & L. Asso. v. (Iowa)	689
Hekking v. Pfaff (C. C. App. 1st C.) -	618
Hennessy, Doremus v. (Ill.) -	797
Hewson, Fall Brook Coal Co. v. (N. Y.)	676
Hezel, State, ex rel., v. Bland (Mo.) -	845
Hotchkiss v. Middlekauf (Va.) -	806
Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Campbell (Tex.) -	225
Howard & W. Colony Co., Glock v. (Cal.) -	199
Hoyt, Seton v. (Or.) -	634
Huddleston v. Eugene (Or.) -	444

I.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Beebe (Ill.) -	210
Imperial Mut. L. Ins. Co., Pistel v. (Md.) -	219
Ingersoll v. Nassau Electric R. Co. (N. Y.) -	236
Insurance Co., Imperial Mut. L., Pistel v. (Md.) -	219
John Hancock Mut. L., v. Dick (Mich.) -	566
Manufacturers' & B. F., Foley v. (N. Y.) -	664
Iowa Sav. & L. Asso. v. Heidt (Iowa)	689
Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso., Feder v. (Iowa) -	693
Ives v. McNicoll (Ohio) -	772

J.

Jackson v. McInnis (Or.) -	128
Jacobs, Wheelock v. (Vt.) -	105
John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Dick (Mich.) -	566

K.

Kaysville v. Ellison (Utah) -	81
Kelly, DuQuoin v. (Ill.) -	644
Kentucky Bd. of M. of W. C. E., Gross v. (Ky.) -	703

L.

Laclede Gaslight Co., Gannon v. (Mo.)	505
L'Anse v. Fire Asso. of Phila. (Mich.)	838
Larchmont Electric Co., Palmer v. (N. Y.) -	672

Latimer, Olmstead v. (N. Y.)	-	685
Lee, Nathan v. (Ind.)	-	820
Lehman v. Clark (Ill.)	-	648
Linville v. Hadden (Md.)	-	222
Little, Calhoun v. (Ga.)	-	630
Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. Barry (C. C. App. 8th C.)	-	349
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. (Ky.)	-	541
v. Turner (Tenn.)	-	140
Lynn & B. R. Co., Spade v. (Mass.)	-	832

M.

McClain v. Williams (S. D.)	-	287
McConville v. St. Paul (Minn.)	-	584
McInnis, Jackson v. (Or.)	-	128
McLane v. Perkins (Me.)	-	487
McNeill, Graham v. (Wash.)	-	300
McNicoll, Ives v. (Ohio)	-	772
McNulty, Weeks v. (Tenn.)	-	185
McPeck v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Iowa)	-	214
Manufacturers' & B. F. Ins. Co., Foley v. (N. Y.)	-	664
Marquette v. Wilkinson (Mich.)	-	840
Marr, Boutwell v. (Vt.)	-	803
Martin, State v. (Ohio)	-	94
Mauldin v. Greenville (S. C.)	-	101
Mechanics' Nat. Bank, Glidden v. (Ohio)	-	737
Menaugh, State, Harrison v. (Ind.)	-	408
Middlekauf, Hotchkiss v. (Va.)	-	806
Mohrmann v. State (Ga.)	-	398
Moloney, People, ex rel., Central Elevator Co. v. (Ill.)	-	658
Monroe, State v. (N. C.)	-	861
Montgomery, Douglass v. (Ala.)	-	376
Morton v. Murray (Ill.)	-	529
Murphy v. Com. (Mass.)	-	154
Murray, Morton v. (Ill.)	-	529
Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso., Clark v. (D. C. App.)	-	390

N.

Nassau Electric R. Co., Ingersoll v. (N. Y.)	-	236
Nathan v. Lee (Ind.)	-	820
National Bank of Ill., Beattie v. (Ill.)	-	654
New Haven, Yale University v. (Conn.)	-	490
New Jersey Electric R. Co. v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)	-	849
New Lincoln Hotel Co. v. Shears (Neb.)	-	588
New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., New Jersey Electric R. Co. v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	-	849
New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., Gannon v. (Mass.)	-	833
Nolan v. (Conn.)	-	305
Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Conn.)	-	305

O.

O'Donnell v. Slack (Cal.)	-	388
Olmstead v. Latimer (N. Y.)	-	685
Omaha & C. B. Ry. & B. Co., Bixby v. (Iowa)	-	533

P.

Palmer, Armington v. (R. I.)	-	95
v. Larchmont Electric Co. (N. Y.)	-	672
Sims v. (R. I.)	-	95
People v. Dunn (N. Y.)	-	247
Revell v. (Ill.)	-	790
People, ex rel., Moloney, Central Elevator Co. v. (Ill.)	-	658
Tyroler, v. Warden of N. Y. City Prison (N. Y.)	-	264
Perkins v. Heert (N. Y.)	-	853
McLane v. (Me.)	-	487
Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.)	-	581
Irfaß, Hekking v. (C. C. App. 1st C.)	-	618
Pistel v. Imperial Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Md.)	-	219
Plimmer, State, ex rel., v. Poston (Ohio)	-	90
Ploof v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.)	-	108
Portland, Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. (Or.)	-	435
Poston, State, Plimmer v. (Ohio)	-	90
Price, Central of Ga. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	-	402

R.

Railroad Co., Central, Haver v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	-	84
Central, Runyan v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	-	284
Illinois C., v. Beebe (Ill.)	-	210
Louisville & N., v. Com. (Ky.)	-	541
Louisville & N., v. Turner (Tenn.)	-	140
Lynn & B., Spade v. (Mass.)	-	832
New York, L. E. & W., New Jersey Electric R. Co. v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	-	849
New York, N. H. & H., Gannon v. (Mass.)	-	833
New York, N. H. & H., Nolan v. (Conn.)	-	305
St. Paul & D., v. Duluth (Minn.)	-	433
Railway Co., Ashland & C. Street, v. Faulkner (Ky.)	-	554
Central of Ga., v. Price (Ga.)	-	402
Chicago & G. T., Sweetland v. (Mich.)	-	568
Chicago G. W., Trezona v. (Iowa)	-	136
Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P., v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (Ohio)	-	777
Houston, E. & W. T., v. Campbell (Tex.)	-	225
Little Rock & M., v. Barry (C. C. App. 8th C.)	-	349
Nassau Electric, Ingersoll v. (N. Y.)	-	236
New Jersey Electric, v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)	-	849
Southern, v. Harrison (Ala.)	-	385
Ransdell v. Boston (Ill.)	-	526
Reed, State v. (Miss.)	-	134
Reighard v. Flinn (Pa.)	-	502
Revell v. People (Ill.)	-	790
Ritz v. Wheeling (W. Va.)	-	148
Runyan v. Central R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)	-	284
Ryan, Collins v. (La.)	-	814

S.

St. Paul, McConville v. (Minn.) -	584
St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. Duluth (Minn.)	433
Schmalz v. Woolley (N. J. Err. & App.)	86
Sears v. Board of Aldermen of Boston (Mass.)	834
Seiler v. Economic L. Asso. (Iowa) -	537
Seton v. Hoyt (Or.) -	634
Sharp v. State, Cason (Tenn.) -	788
Shears, New Lincoln Hotel Co. v. (Neb.)	588
Siegel-Cooper Co., Standard Fashion Co. v. (N. Y.) -	854
Sims v. Palmer (R. I.) -	95
Slack, O'Donnell v. (Cal.) -	388
Smith v. Smith (Ill.) -	403
White v. (Pa.) -	498
Southern R. Co. v. Harrison (Ala.) -	385
Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. (Mass.) -	832
Sponaule, State v. (W. Va.) -	727
Sprenger v. Tacoma Traction Co. (Wash.) -	706
Standard Fashion Co. v. Seigel-Cooper Co. (N. Y.) -	854
State v. Bates (Utah) -	33
v. Bradneck (Conn.) -	620
Gustafson v. (Tex. Crim. App.)	613
v. Martin (Ohio) -	94
Mohrmann v. (Ga.) -	398
v. Monroe (N. C.) -	861
v. Reed (Miss.) -	134
v. Sponaule (W. Va.) -	727
v. Theriault (Vt.) -	290
v. Tugwell (Wash.) -	717
State, ex rel. Cason, Sharp v. (Tenn.)	788
Harrison, v. Menaugh (Ind.)	408
Hezel, v. Bland (Mo.) -	845
Plimmer, v. Poston (Ohio) -	90
Stevens, Choate v. (Mich.) -	277
Steward, York v. (Mont.) -	125
Strode, Deeds v. (Idaho) -	207
Sullivan, Grommes v. (C. C. App. 7th C.)	419
Sully v. Campbell (Tenn.) -	161
Svanburg v. Fosseen (Minn.) -	427
Sweetland v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (Mich.) -	568
Syracuse, Weston v. (N. Y.) -	678

T.

Tacoma Traction Co., Sprenger v. (Wash.)	706
Theriault, State v. (Vt.)	290
Trezona v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (Iowa)	136
Tugwell, State v. (Wash.)	717
Turner, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Tenn.)	140
43 L. R. A.

Tyroler, People, ex rel., v. Warden of N. Y. City Prison (N. Y.) -	264
---	-----

U.

Union Bank, Warren v. (N. Y.) -	256
United States Watch Co., American Waltham Watch Co. v. (Mass.)	826

V.

Valentine v. Healey (N. Y.) -	667
Vega S. S. Co. v. Consolidated Elevator Co. (Minn.) -	843

W.

Walsh, Fisher v. (Wis.) -	810
Warden of N. Y. City Prison, People, Tyroler v. (N. Y.)	264
Warren v. Union Bank (N. Y.) -	256
Watkins v. Birmingham Ry. & E. Co. (Ala.)	297
Webster Mfg. Co., Columb v. (C. C. App. 1st C.)	195
Weeks v. McNulty (Tenn.) -	185
Western U. Teleg. Co., Carland v. (Mich.)	280
McPeck v. (Iowa)	214
Peterson v. (Minn.)	581
Weston v. Syracuse (N. Y.) -	678
Wheeling, Ritz v. (W. Va.) -	148
Wheelock v. Jacobs (Vt.) -	105
White v. Smith (Pa.) -	498
Wight v. Gottschalk (Tenn.) -	189
Wilkinson, Marquette v. (Mich.)	840
Williams v. Hays (N. Y.) -	253
McClain v. (S. D.) -	287
Wilson v. Donaldson (Cal.)	524
Wing, Grafton Nat. Bank v. (Mass.)	831
Grafton Sav. Bank v. (Mass.)	831
Wood, American Gas & V. M. Co. v. (Me.)	449
Gibson v. (Ky.)	699
Woolley, Schmalz v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	86
Worthington v. Gwin (Ala.) -	382
Wyman v. Eaton (Iowa) -	695

Y.

Yale University v. New Haven (Conn.)	490
York v. Steward (Mont.) -	125

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.

Abbey v. Chase, 6 Cush. 54.....	831
Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 128 N. Y. 682, 686, 687.....	375
Ackley v. Staehlin, 58 Mo. 558.....	518
Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Barnard, 96 N. Y. 531.....	262
Albany Northern R. Co. v. Brownell, 24 N. Y. 345.....	640
Albertson v. Ashton, 102 Ill. 50.....	532
Alden v. Pearson, 3 Gray. 342.....	752
Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141, 23 Am. Rep. 434.....	440
Alexander v. Newcastle, 115 Ind. 51.....	145
Allegretti Chocolate Cream Co. v. Keller, 85 Fed. Rep. 643.....	830
Allen v. Atlantic & P. Teleg. Co. 21 Hun. 22.....	516
v. Flood, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 119 [1898] A. C. 1.....	802
v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 65.....	85
v. McKibbin, 5 Mich. 449.....	818
v. South Boston R. Co. 150 Mass. 200, 5 L. R. 716.....	786
Allison v. Allison, 1 Verg. 16.....	191
v. Drake, 145 Ill. 500.....	263
Alt v. Graf, 85 Minn. 191.....	438
Alta Land & Water Co. v. Hancock, 85 Cal. 219.....	182
Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co. 12 Ill. 38, 52 Am. Dec. 479.....	380
Alves v. Henderson, 16 B. Mon. 131, 169, American Brewing Asso. v. Talbot, 141 Mo. 674.....	516
American Order of Scottish Clans v. Merrill, 151 Mass. 558, 8 L. R. A. 320.....	99
American Print Works v. Lawrence, 28 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420.....	832
American S. E. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 532, 21 L. ed. 272.....	578
American Sunday School Union v. Philadelphia, 161 Pa. 807, 23 L. R. A. 698.....	494
Anderson v. Anderson, 129 Ind. 578.....	522
v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 87 Wis. 195, 23 L. R. A. 208.....	121
v. Dunn, 6 West. 204, 5 L. ed. 242.....	723
v. Perkins, 10 Mont. 154.....	126
Andrews v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 34 Conn. 57.....	571
Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 12, 38 L. ed. 55, 62.....	628
Anthony v. Anthony, 23 Ark. 479.....	522
Arbogast v. Louisville, 2 Busn. 271.....	84
Archer v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 45 W. Va. 30, 8 E. 241.....	692
Arctic F. Ins. Co. v. Austin, 69 N. Y. 470, 30 Am. Rep. 221.....	853
Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. 120, 20 L. ed. 765.....	733
v. Thruston, 11 Md. 148.....	129
Arnold v. Illinois C. R. Co. 83 Ill. 278, 25 Am. Rep. 386.....	218
Ashworth v. Kittidge, 12 Cush. 193, 59 Am. Dec. 178.....	534
Aspden v. Nixon, 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059.....	408
Assessors, The, v. Osborne, 9 Wall. 567, 19 L. ed. 748.....	289
Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 507, 22 L. ed. 414.....	132
Atkinson v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 60 Wis. 141, 50 Am. Rep. 352.....	852

Atlanta & C. Air-Line R. Co. v. Gravitt, 44 Am. St. Rep. 145, and note, 93 Ga. 389, 26 L. R. A. 553.....	112
Atlas Nat. Bank v. Holm, 34 U. S. App. 472, 71 Fed. Rep. 489, 19 C. C. A. 94.....	426
Atty. Gen. v. Burridge, 10 Price, 350.....	794
v. Cape Fear Nav. Co. 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 444.....	685
v. London, 8 Beav. 270.....	794
v. Parmenter, 30 Price, 378.....	794
v. Terry, L. R. 9 Ch. 423.....	794
Atwater v. Morning News Co. 67 Conn. 504, 528.....	328
v. Woodbridge, 6 Conn. 223, 16 Am. Dec. 46.....	495
Austin v. McKinney, 5 Lea. 499.....	191
v. Vrooman, 128 N. Y. 229, 14 L. R. A. 138.....	682
Auvil v. Leager, 24 W. Va. 583.....	733
Avery v. Fitzgerald, 94 Mo. 207.....	518
Ayres v. Siebel, 82 Iowa, 347.....	698

B.

Babcock v. Kuntzsch, 85 Hun. 615, 66 N. Y. S. R. 47.....	688
Bacon v. United States Mut. Accl. Asso. L. N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617.....	695
Bagley v. Peddle, 16 N. Y. 469, 69 Am. Dec. 713.....	208
Bahia & S. F. R. Co., Re, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 584.....	785
Bahr v. National F. Ins. Co. 80 Hun. 309.....	840
Bailey v. New York, 3 Hill. 538, 38 Am. Dec. 669, 2 Denio, 433.....	440, 442
Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. 184, 193, 22 Am. Dec. 421.....	294
v. Kirk, 33 Ind. 517.....	415
Baldwin v. Oswego, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 62, 68	682
Bales v. State, 68 Ala. 30.....	586
Ball v. Dunsterville, 4 T. R. 313.....	533
v. Woodbine, 61 Iowa, 83, 47 Am. Rep. 805.....	297
Ballard v. Burton, 64 Vt. 387, 16 L. R. A. 664.....	129
Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 25 L. ed. 231.....	289
Bank of Batavia v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 440.....	785
Bethel v. Pahquioque Bank, 14 Wall. 383, 20 L. ed. 840.....	129
Kentucky Schuylkill Bank, 1 Para. Sel. Eq. Cas. 180.....	783
Old Dominion v. Dubuque & P. R. Co. 8 Iowa, 277, 74 Am. Dec. 302.....	748
United States v. Ritchie, 8 Pet. 128, 8 L. ed. 890.....	263
Barbot v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 100 Ga. 681.....	395
Barbour v. Ellsworth, 67 Me. 294.....	440
Bardaley v. Sternberg, 18 Wash. 612, 719, 724	724
Bardwell v. Collins, 20 Am. St. Rep. 554, note, 44 Minn. 97, 9 L. R. A. 152.....	731
Barfield v. State, 29 Ga. 127, 74 Am. Dec. 40.....	656
Barnard v. Cushing, 4 Met. 230, 38 Am. Dec. 362.....	453
v. Eaton, 2 Cush. 294.....	591
Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440.....	443

Barnett v. Lucas, Jr. Rep. 6 C. L. 247....	572	Bloomington v. Shrock, 110 Ill. 219, 51 Am. Rep. 679.....	536
Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372.....	153	Blossom v. Harrett, 37 N. Y. 434, 97 Am. Dec. 747.....	209
v. Oyster Bay & H. S. B. Co. 67 N. Y. 301.....	130	Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 532, 19 L. R. A. 40.....	776
Bartlett v. Drake, 100 Mass. 175, 97 Am. Dec. 92, 1 Am. Rep. 101.....	538	Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 433.....	647
v. Tucker, 104 Mass. 236, 6 Am. Rep. 240.....	531	Bodurtha v. Goodrich, 3 Gray, 508.....	155
v. Wilbur, 53 Md. 485.....	224	Boshme v. Hall, 61 N. J. Eq. 541.....	824
Barton v. Glichrst, 19 W. Va. 230.....	730	Bohm Mfg. Co. v. Mounts, 30 Neb. 710, 12 L. R. A. 23.....	620
Bailey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. 670, 23 L. ed. 452.....	132	Bollman, Ex parte , 4 Cranch, 75, 2 L. ed. 354.....	723
Bastian v. Modern Woodmen of America, 168 Ill. 596.....	650	Booth v. Clark, 17 How. 322, 15 L. ed. 164.....	698
Bates's Case, 65 N. H. 325.....	790	v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271.....	522
Battell v. Torrey, 65 N. Y. 294.....	262	Bork v. Martin, 132 N. Y. 280.....	432
Battin v. Woods, 27 W. Va. 58.....	738	Born v. Horstmann, 80 Cal. 452, 5 L. R. A. 677.....	526
Bauer Grocer Co. v. Zelle, 172 Ill. 407....	687	Borton v. Brines Chase Co. 175 Pa. 209.....	824
Bay v. Gage, 36 Barb. 447.....	637	Boston v. Boston & A. R. Co. 170 Mass. 836, 837.....	836
Bay City Bridge Co. v. Van Etten, 36 Mich. 210.....	567	Boston & A. R. Co. v. Cambridge, 159 Mass. 283.....	640
Beard v. Brooklyn, 81 Barb. 142, 149....	602	Boston & M. R. Co. v. York County Comrs. 79 Me. 398.....	640, 641, 642
Beasley v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 181.....	239	Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 26, 24 L. ed. 989.....	642
Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299.....	411	Boston Ferrole Co. v. Hills, 159 Mass. 147, 20 L. R. A. 844.....	830
Beauregard v. Webb Granite & Constr. Co. 100 Mass. 201, 203.....	107	Boston Rubber Shoe Co. v. Boston Rubber Co. 149 Mass. 436.....	90
Bees v. Tinker, 2 Root, 180.....	677	Bostwick v. Stiles, 35 Conn. 198.....	804
Beck v. Allison, 54 N. Y. 300, 15 Am. Rep. 430.....	687	Bott v. Pratt, 33 Minn. 323, 53 Am. Rep. 47.....	188
Beckett v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. 241, L. R. 3 C. P. 62.....	563	Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333, 301.....	802
Bees v. State, 6 Ind. 501, 63 Am. Dec. 391.....	411	Bowers v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 16 L. R. A. 305.....	572, 573, 577
Behmer v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 835.....	547	Bowie v. Greenville Street R. Co. 60 Minn. 106.....	209
Belding v. Black Hills & Ft. P. R. Co. 3 R. D. 309.....	577	Bowman v. Woods, 1 G. Ormsu, 441.....	535, 536
Belfast & B. R. Co. v. Keys, 9 H. L. Can. 573.....	287	Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 46 Am. Rep. 41.....	535, 536
Bell v. McKinney 63 Minn. 167.....	632	Bracegirdle v. Bailey, 1 Post. & F. 536.....	978
v. State, Summers, 129 Ind. 1.....	415	Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 102, 205.....	207
Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 802.....	781	Bradley v. Fisher, 18 Wall. 335, 20 L. ed. 846.....	632, 633
Beloit v. Morgan, 7 Wall. 619, 19 L. ed. 206.....	107	Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 139.....	672
Benedict v. Golt, 3 Barb. 459.....	448	v. Omaha, 1 Neb. 1d.....	64
Benjamin v. Elmitra, J. & C. R. Co. 40 Barb. 441.....	601	v. South Boston R. Co. 138 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 461.....	120
Bennett v. Bennett, 110 N. Y. 564, 6 L. R. A. 553.....	116	Brain v. Marfell, 41 L. T. N. S. 455, 20 Am. J. Reg. N. S. 93.....	108
v. Hyde, 92 Cal. 131.....	308	Brainard v. Colchester, 31 Conn. 407.....	404
v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. 30 N. J. L. 225, 18 Am. Rep. 485.....	663	Braithwaite v. Hall, 168 Mass. 38.....	932
Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 53, 56, 20 L. R. A. 714.....	161	Brady v. Henry, 71 Cal. 481, 60 Am. Rep. 543.....	126
Bergman, Ex parte , 3 Wyo. 395.....	723	Brannin v. Henderson, 12 B. Mon. 61.....	221
Bergmann v. Jones, 94 N. Y. 51.....	582	Brannon v. Hursell, 112 Mass. 63.....	636
Bernina Case, L. R. 12 Prob. Div. 58.....	662	Brannon v. Gee, 25 Or. 462, 24 L. R. A. 355.....	724
Berrinkott v. Traphagen, 30 Wis. 219.....	813	Brossier v. Wayne County, 25 Neb. 468.....	288
Bethlehem v. Watertown, 51 Conn. 494.....	622	Brett v. Carter, 3 Cent. L. J. 256, 2 Low. Dec. 458.....	501
Bethurum, Ex parte , 66 Mo. 545.....	157	Brewer v. Otos County 1 Neb. 373.....	637
Betts v. New Hartford, 25 Conn. 185.....	621	Bridgeport Bank v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 231.....	786, 787
Beveridge v. New York Elev. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 648.....	346	Briggs v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co. 70 Me. 363.....	500
Bigelow v. Nickerson, 24 U. S. App. 201, 70 Fed. Ren. 113, 17 C. C. A. 1, 30 L. R. A. 336.....	573	Brill v. Singer Mfg. Co. 41 Ohio St. 127, 52 Am. Rep. 74.....	100
Birkett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 103 Mich. 307, 33 L. R. A. 404.....	282	Brinkley Car Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ark. 545, 46 Am. St. Rep. 216, and note.....	153
Birmingham Electric R. Co. v. Clay, 108 Ala. 223.....	300	Brinsmead v. Brinsmead, 18 The Times L. R. 3.....	830
Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. (A. C.) 24 So. 368.....	234	Brinton v. Van Cott, 23 Pac. 215.....	481
Bishop v. Union R. Co. 14 R. I. 320, 51 Am. Rep. 396.....	150	British Mut. Bkg. Co. v. Charnwood Forest R. Co. L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 714.....	789
Dimell v. Michigan, R. & N. I. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 259.....	420	Britton v. State, 77 Ala. 202.....	621
v. Terry, 60 Ill. 184.....	532	Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. 101 U. S. 274, 25 L. ed. 790.....	132, 133
Blackburn v. Reilly, 47 N. J. L. 200, 64 L. R. A. 117.....	354	Brodhead v. White, 35 Iowa, 429.....	536
Co. v. Grand 2 S. D. 546.....	289	Brokaw v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. 22 N. J. L. 328, 90 Am. Dec. 659.....	84
.....	121	Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562, 35 L. R. A. 536.....	280
.....	127	Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 14, 26 L. ed. 61.....	426
.....	601	Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576.....	632
.....	222	Brown v. Bell, 58 Mich. 68.....	842
.....	635	v. Busan, 24 Ind. 194.....	412
.....	656	v. Guyandotte, 54 W. Va. 239, 11 L. R. A. 121.....	150, 206, 207
.....	553	v. Maxwell, 6 Hill, 592, 41 Am. Dec. 771.....	113
.....	108	v. Smart, 60 Md. 327.....	225
Bloodgood v. Decher, 35 Conn. 400.....	324	v. Vinthaven, 65 Me. 402, 20 Am. Rep. 700.....	440
Bloomer v. Stolley, 5 McLean, 158.....	412
Bloomfield & R. Natural Gaslight Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 398.....	674
43 L. R. A.

Browne v. Turberville, 2 Call (Va.) 391....	775	Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Miles, 88 Ala. 260	299, 300
Brownell v. Flagler, 5 Hill, 282.....	113	Chagrin Falls & C. Pl. Road Co. v. Cane, 2 Ohio St. 419.....	448
Bruen v. Kansas City Agri. & H. Fair Asso. 40 Mo. App. 425.....	518	Chalker v. Dickinson, 1 Conn. 382, 6 Am. Dec. 250.....	616
Bruff v. Mall, 36 N. Y. 200.....	786	Chamberlain v. West End of London & C. P. R. Co. 2 Best & S. 605.....	563
Bryan v. Baldwin, 52 N. Y. 232.....	748	Chambers v. Union Nat. Bank, 78 Pa. 205.....	687
r. Wear, 4 Mo. 106.....	509	Champer v. Greencastle, 138 Ind. 339, 24 L. R. A. 768, 46 Am. St. Rep. 390.....	294
Bryant v. Mack, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 744.....	554	Chapin v. Worcester, 124 Mass. 464.....	837
v. Rich, 106 Mass. 180.....	86	Chapman v. Douglas County, 107 U. S. 348, 27 L. ed. 378.....	637
v. St. Paul, 33 Minn. 289, 58 Am. Rep. 31.....	440	Charlebois v. Goebie & M. River R. Co. 91 Mich. 59.....	151
Bueeleuch v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, L. R. 5 H. L. 418.....	795	Chase v. Maine C. R. Co. 77 Me. 62, 52 Am. Rep. 744.....	488, 489
Budd v. Power, 8 Mont. 380.....	127	Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 349, 1 English Ruling Cases, 729.....	107
Buell v. Ball, 20 Iowa, 252.....	84	Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42.....	99
Buffalo v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 152 N. Y. 276.....	683	Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49.....	107
Burdick v. People, 149 Ill. 600, 24 L. R. A. 152.....	272	Cheaney v. Hooser, 9 B. Mon. 330.....	84
Burke v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 34 Conn. 474, 479.....	848	Cheatham v. Red River Line, 56 Fed. Rep. 248.....	569
Burkhard v. Travellers' Ins. Co. 102 Pa. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205.....	695	Chemical Nat. Bank v. Hartford Deposit Co. 161 U. S. 1, 40 L. ed. 595.....	129
Burlington Mut. L. Asso. v. Helder, 55 Iowa, 424.....	691	Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. Dyer County, 87 Tenn. 712.....	643
Burnby v. Bollett, 16 Mees. & W. 644.....	120	v. Wells, 85 Tenn. 613.....	141
Burnill v. Augusta, 78 Me. 118, 58 Am. Rep. 788.....	440	Chesley v. Josselyn, 7 Gray, 490.....	592
Bush v. Person, 18 How. 82, 15 L. ed. 273.....	192	v. King, 74 Me. 164, 43 Am. Rep. 569.....	108
Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 756, 757, 28 L. ed. 585, 590, 501.....	269, 642	Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 536, 28 L. ed. 770.....	637
Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 69, 1 Am. St. Rep. 638.....	294	Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 356, 68 Am. Dec. 558.....	571
v. Rockwell, 17 Colo. 290, 17 L. R. A. 611.....	638	v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 162, 31 L. ed. 639.....	562, 564
Buxell v. Laconia Mfg. Co. 48 Me. 113, 77 Am. Dec. 212.....	488	v. Union Bldg. Asso. 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598.....	562
Byrns v. Woodward, 10 Lea. 444.....	789	Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnold, 144 Ill. 261, 19 L. R. A. 313.....	212, 218
C.
Caben v. Platt, 69 N. Y. 348, 25 Am. Rep. 208.....	884	v. Jollet, L. & A. R. Co. 105 Ill. 388, 44 Am. Rep. 799.....	641, 644
Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648.....	47, 157	v. McLaughlin, 47 Ill. 265.....	153
Callahan v. Jennings, 16 Colo. 471.....	289	v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 518, 521.....	857
Callis v. Cogbill, 9 Lea. 137.....	191	Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586.....	571, 573
Callison v. Hedrick, 15 Gratt. 244.....	448	Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 Mich. 507.....	640, 642
Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, 33 Am. Rep. 154.....	440	Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 50 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 150, 140 Ill. 309.....	640, 641, 643, 644
Camden v. Alkire, 24 W. Va. 681.....	735	v. Chicago (Ill.) 29 N. E. 1109.....	642
v. Johnson, 104 Mass. 491.....	837	v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 589.....	640
Campbell v. Montgomery, 53 Ala. 527, 25 Am. Rep. 856.....	297	Chicago & P. R. Co. v. Francis, 70 Ill. 238.....	563
Campbell County Ct. v. Newport, 12 B. Mon. 541.....	380	Chicago, R. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 116 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979.....	640, 642, 644
Canadian P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 19 Can. S. C. 292.....	573	v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. ed. 94.....	274
Canastota Knife Co. v. Newington Tramway Co. 63 Conn. 146.....	285	v. Stumps, 55 Ill. 367.....	516, 518
Canfield, Re, 98 Mich. 644.....	158	v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 156 Ill. 235, 29 L. R. A. 485.....	235, 647
Canfield v. Minneapolis Agricultural & Mechanical Asso. 4 McCrary, 646.....	748	Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Bockoven, 53 Kan. 279.....	152, 153
Cannon v. Midland Great Western R. Co. Ir. L. R. 6 C. L. 199.....	862	v. Chautauque County Comrs. 49 Kan. 763.....	640
Caren v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Rep. 287.....	801	Chicago Mut. L. Indemnity Asso. v. Hunt, 127 Ill. 257, 2 L. R. A. 549.....	651, 652
Carey v. Mayer, 51 U. S. App. 184, 79 Fed. Rep. 926, 25 C. C. A. 239.....	195	Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 136 U. S. 286, 34 L. ed. 349.....	280
Carnes v. Iowa Traveling Men's Asso. 106 Iowa, 281.....	694	Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 281, 386, 55 Fed. Rep. 949, 952, 20 L. R. A. 582, 5 C. C. A. 847, 350.....	371
Carr v. State, Coetcoquet, 127 Ind. 204, 11 L. R. A. 370.....	635	Chilliner v. Chilliner, 2 Ves. 8r. 528.....	203
Carroll v. Carroll, 20 Tex. 781.....	776	Chiple v. Atkinson, 23 Fla. 206.....	801
Carson v. Blazer, 2 Binney, 475, 4 Am. Dec. 463.....	616	Choate v. Quincheff, 12 Helsk. 427.....	194
Carter v. Burt, 12 Allen, 424.....	157, 158	Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290, 335.....	747
v. Clark, 89 Ind. 238.....	448	Christian's Appeal, 102 Pa. 184.....	426
v. Portland, 4 Or. 346.....	380	Christy v. Sacramento County Supers. 39 Cal. 3.....	417
Caruth v. Richeson, 96 Mo. 186.....	518	Church, Re, 92 N. Y. 1.....	252
Case v. Allen, 21 Kan. 217, 30 Am. Rep. 425.....	525	v. Portland (Or.) 6 L. R. A. 259.....	332
Case of Awoory, 9 Coke, 22.....	255	Chynoweth v. Tenney, 10 Wis. 400.....	592
Caspary v. Portland, 19 Or. 496.....	439	Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110.....	494
Castello v. Landwehr, 28 Wis. 522.....	121	Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Third Nat. Bank, 1 Ohio C. C. 199.....	788
Castleman v. Templeman, 87 Md. 546, 41 L. R. A. 367.....	224	Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 11 Ohio L. J. 86.....	788
Caswell v. Fuller, 77 Me. 105.....	457	Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455.....	104
Catlett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 57 Ark. 461.....	153	Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Blakesley, 42 Ohio St. 645.....	786
Catlin v. Wilcox Silver Plate Co. 123 Ind. 477, 8 L. R. A. 62.....	826	City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery, 61 Ark. 381, 31 L. R. A. 570.....	515
Celloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 94.....	99
43 L. R. A.

City of Norwalk, Re , 65 Fed. Rep. 90.....	573	Cooke v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 183 Mass.	644
Claffin v. Farmers' & C. Bank, 25 N. Y. 293	787	185, 10 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 323....
Clarendon Land Invest. Agency Co. v. Mc-		Coolidge v. Hager, 43 Vt. 9, 5 Am. Rep.	107
Clalland Bros. 86 Tex. 179, 22 L. R.		256.....	209
A. 105.....	604	Cooper v. Cooper, 147 Mass. 270.....
Clark v. Com. 14 Bush, 166.....	447	v. People, Wyatt, 18 Colo. 237, 6 L. R. A.	723
v. Gilbert, 26 N. Y. 279, 34 Am. Dec. 100.	813	450.....	523
v. Holdridge, 58 Barb. 61.....	632	v. Ramsen, 6 Johns. Ch. 459.....
v. Hougham, 2 Barn. & C. 149.....	260	Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 652-653, 34 L. ed.	776
v. Manchester, 52 N. H. 577.....	161	832, 833.....	147
v. Richmond, 33 Va. 355.....	152	Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542, 19 L. ed. 244.
v. State, 12 Ohio. 483, 40 Am. Dec. 481.	535	Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274,	324
v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. 32, 36.....	294	278, 71 Am. Dec. 63.....
Clarke v. Curtis, 11 Leigh, 550, 37 Am.		Corcoran v. Boston & A. R. Co. 123 Mass.	578
Dec. 825.....	553	507.....
v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 9 App. Div. 51.	515	Cornelia Real-Estate Co. v. Charleston (S.	102
Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316.....	305	C.) 31 S. E. 322.....	515
Clemmer v. Drivers' Nat. Bank, 167 Ill.	602	Cornet v. Bertelsmann, 61 Mo. 118.....
206.....		Cornair, The, 145 U. S. 335, 36 L. ed. 737	579
Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hawkins,	842	569.....	752
79 Fed. Rep. 29.....		Costello v. Crowell, 127 Mass. 293, 34 Am.	453
v. Moneyhun, 148 Ind. 147, 34 L. R. A.	303	Rep. 367.....
141.....		Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y.	153
Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Curran, 10	312	118.....
Ohio St. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 362.....	692	Coaltar v. American Merchants' Union Exp.	677
Clinton v. Walliker, 98 Iowa. 655.....	687	Co. 56 N. Y. 585.....	84
Clover v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 101 N. Y. 277		Covington v. Southgate, 15 B. Mon. 491....	853
Coatsworth v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 156 N.	857	Covington Transfer Co. v. Kelly, 38 Ohio	136
Y. 451.....	857	Nt. 66.....	622
Cochran v. Atchison, 27 Kan. 723....	656	Cravens v. Rodgers, 101 Mo. 247.....	519
v. Benton, 126 Ind. 53.....	824	Crawford v. Schmits, 139 Ill. 564.....	677
v. State, 102 Ga. 631.....	400	v. State, 44 Ala. 382.....	190
Cocks v. Isard, 7 Wall. 559, 19 L. ed. 275.	147	Creasy v. Carr, 7 Car. & P. 84.....
Codman v. Freeman, 3 Cusb. 306.....	591	Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84.....	636
Cody v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 151 Mass.	592	Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 51, 24	407
462, 463, 7 L. R. A. 843.....	834	L. ed. 681.....
Cole v. Goodwin, 32 Am. Dec. 505, and		Cronise v. Hardt, 47 Md. 433.....	447
notes. 19 Wend. 251.....	142	Crooke v. Flatbush Waterworks Co. 29	231
53.....	592	Hun. 245.....
219, 18 L. R. A. 846.....	136	Crooker v. Holmes, 65 Me. 195, 20 Am. Rep.	565
5 Car. & P. 73.....	535	687.....	191
25 N. C. (3 Irad. L.)	616	Cross v. St. Louis, E. C. & N. R. Co. 77	387
Dec. 722.....	287	Mo. 318.....
Co. 10 Cusb. 506.....	522	Crutcher v. Stump, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 100..	145
491, 20 L. ed. 723.....	270	Cubbedge v. Napier, 62 Ala. 518.....	146
I. Y. 165.....		Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 25 N. J. L.	157
in Co. v. Kingston City	245	31, 10 Am. Rep. 205.....
Y. 540.....	121	Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L.	447
Co. v. Hawthorne, 144		ed. 356.....	801
L. ed. 405.....	383	Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am.	182
No. v. Bridges, 36 Ala.	294	Rep. 618.....
448.....	159	Curran v. Galen, 52 N. Y. S. R. 479.....
Com. v. Alger, 7 Cusb. 83, 84, 86.....	732	Curtis v. La Grande Hydraulic Water Co.
v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144.....	156	20 Or. 34, 10 L. R. A. 484.....
v. Byrne, 20 Gratt. 165.....	156
v. Crowley, 168 Mass. 121.....	160	D.
v. Dandridge, 2 Va. Cas. 414.....	157
v. Desmond, 123 Mass. 407.....	157	Danforth v. Tennessee & C. R. Co. 96 Ala.	383
v. Foster, 114 Mass. 311, 19 Am. Rep.	353	620.....
353.....	157	Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 184	153
v. Gardner, 11 Gray, 433.....	157	Mass. 349, 13 L. R. A. 243.....	682
v. Hall, 97 Mass. 570.....	394	Dannat v. New York, 66 N. Y. 585.....	276
v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 359, 35 Am. Dec.	160	Dansiger v. Boyd, 120 N. Y. 628.....	246
326.....	575	Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52	546
v. McDonough, 13 Allen, 581.....	380	Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590.....
v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 236....	536	Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 116 N. Y.	441
v. Rush, 14 Pa. 186.....	160	537, 6 L. R. A. 495.....	733
v. Sturtevant, 117 Mass. 122, 19 Am.	294	David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Or.	220
Rep. 401.....	160	98.....
v. Sullivan 150 Mass. 315.....	294	Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24	113
v. Tewksbury, 11 Met. 55.....	650	L. ed. 619.....	513
v. Wetherbee, 105 Mass. 161.....	448	Davies v. Smith, 4 Esp. 36.....	309
v. Wilkinson, 16 Pick. 175, 26 Am. Dec.	272	Davis v. Central Vermont R. Co. 66 Vt.	100
654.....	157	290.....	842
v. Wilson, 14 Phila. 384.....	414	v. Fox, 59 Mo. 125.....	653
v. Wyman, 13 Cusb. 227.....	578	v. Headley, 23 N. J. Eq. 115.....	776
Com., Broom, v. Hanley, 9 Pa. 513.....	523	v. Kendall, 2 R. I. 566.....
Comstock v. Johnson, 46 N. Y. 615.....	153	v. Ney, 125 Mass. 590.....
Conlon's Case, 148 Mass. 168.....	578	v. Page, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 622.....
Conner v. Paul, 12 Bush, 144.....	523	v. Rowe, 6 Band. (Va.) 355.....
Conrad v. Long, 33 Mich. 78.....	214	v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 53 Ark.	577
Consolidated Coal Co. v. Harnal, 146 Ill.	112	117, 7 L. R. A. 383.....	636
614.....	637	v. State, 28 Md. 15.....	426
Consolidated Traction Co. v. Hone, 59 N.		v. West Saratoga Bldg. Union, No. 3,	436
J. L. 275.....	674	32 Md. 286.....	453
Constable v. National B. R. Co. 154 U. S.	155	Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 240....	276
51, 33 L. ed. 903, 914.....	686	Davlin v. Hill, 11 Me. 484.....	290
Consumers' Gas & Electric Light Co. v.		Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 290.....
Congress Spring Co. 61 Hun, 133....		Dawson v. Kestice, 148 Ill. 346.....
Conto v. Silvia, 170 Mass. 152.....		Day v. Hill, 2 Speers, L. 628, 42 Am. Dec.	107
Cook v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 27.....		390.....	748
v. Lasher, 42 U. S. App. 42, 73 Fed. Rep.		v. Holmes, 103 Mass. 307, 311.....	224
701, 19 C. C. A. 654.....		v. Postal Teleg. Co. 60 Md. 354.....
v. United States, 138 U. S. 157, 34 L. ed.		Dean v. Ann Arbor Street R. Co. 93 Mich.	235
906.....		330.....
43 L. R. A.

De Brimont v. Penniman, 10 Blatchf. 436.	408
Decamp v. Feay, 5 Serg. & R. 323, 9 Am. Dec. 372.	204
Decatur County Comrs. v. Humphrey, 47 Ga. 565.	448
Decker v. Gardner, 124 N. Y. 334, 11 L. R. A. 430.	129
Deeds v. Sanborn, 26 Iowa, 419.	84
Deiman v. Ft. Madison, 30 Iowa, 542.	84
Deiz v. Winfree, 80 Tex. 400.	801
Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-Press & S. Co. 90 Tenn. 353, 13 L. R. A. 518.	187-189
Den, Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 280, 15 L. ed. 372, 376.	45, 731, 732
Denney v. State, Basler, 144 Ind. 508, 31 L. R. A. 726.	419
Deobold v. Oppermann, 111 N. Y. 531, 538, 2 L. R. A. 644.	260
Derby v. Alling, 40 Conn. 410.	484
Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634.	235, 560
Detroit Parks & B. Comrs. v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 58.	640
DeWitt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306, 33 L. ed. 896.	126
Diamond Match Co. v. Roerber, 106 N. Y. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 464.	203
Dibble v. New York & E. R. Co. 25 Barb. 188.	573
Dicken v. Liverpool Salt & Coal Co. 41 W. Va. 511.	151
Dietz v. Neenah, 91 Wis. 422-427, 91 Wis. 430.	836
Dillon v. Barnard, 21 Wall. 437, 22 L. ed. 676.	395
Doane v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 97, 165 Ill. 510.	235
Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573.	151, 153
Dodge v. Wright, 48 Ill. 382.	662
Dolan v. Thomas, 12 Allen, 421.	157
Donald v. Suckling, L. R. 1 Q. B. 585.	749
Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 18 Iowa, 280, 87 Am. Dec. 391.	536
Donegan v. Wood, 40 Ala. 242, 20 Am. Rep. 275.	387
Donnell v. Bennett, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 835.	857
Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306.	500-502
Dorgan v. Boston, 12 Allen, 238.	886, 887
Dorrell v. State, 83 Ind. 357.	621
Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 59 Mo. 27, 21 Am. Rep. 371.	299
Douglas v. Russell, 1 Myl. & K. 488.	591
Douglass v. Boonsborough Turnp. Road Co. 22 Md. 219, 85 Am. Dec. 647.	448
v. McFarland, 92 Cal. 656.	525
Dow v. Tuttle, 4 Mass. 414, 3 Am. Dec. 226.	451
Downer v. Boston, 7 Cush. 277.	837
Downey v. Sawyer, 157 Mass. 418.	121
Drew v. Hilliker, 56 Vt. 641.	203
v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443.	201, 204, 206, 211
v. Towle, 30 N. H. 587, 64 Am. Dec. 309.	191
Duchess of Kingston's Case, 2 Smith. Lead. Cas. 424.	108
Duffles v. Duffles, 76 Wis. 374, 8 L. R. A. 420.	115
Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492.	539
Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485.	47, 157
Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 205.	748
Dunham v. State, 6 Iowa, 245.	720, 721
Dunlap v. Haynes, 4 Helsk. 476.	189
Durell v. Hayward, 9 Gray, 248, 69 Am. Dec. 284.	390
Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black, 23, 17 L. ed. 29.	796
Dwinnell v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L. R. A. 224.	85
Dyar v. Farmington, 70 Me. 527.	836
Dyckman v. New York, 5 N. Y. 434.	448
Dyer County v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 87 Tenn. 712.	639
Dyrgert v. Schenck, 23 Wend. 446.	639

E.

Eames v. Savage, 77 Me. 212, 52 Am. Rep. 757.	732
East & West India Docks & B. Junction R. Co. v. Gatt'ke, 3 MacN. & G. 155.	563
43 L. R. A.

East & West R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 75 Ala. 280.	234
East End Street R. Co. v. Doyle, 88 Tenn. 747, 9 L. R. A. 100.	235
Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Broom, 6 Exch. 314.	85
Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302.	440
Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307.	206
East Portland v. Multnomah County, 6 Or. 62.	447
East Tennessee Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 7 Lea, 420.	192
East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 91 Tenn. 899, 17 L. R. A. 891.	187, 189
Eberhardt v. Wood, 2 Tenn. Ch. 488, 496.	194
v. Wood, 6 Lea, 467, 471.	194
Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8.	440, 443
Edgerton v. Peckham, 11 Paige, 352.	204
Edwards v. Com. 78 Va. 39, 49 Am. Rep. 377.	95
v. Elliott, 21 Wall. 532, 22 L. ed. 487.	42
v. Tyler, 141 Ill. 454.	532
Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 143 N. Y. 133, 25 L. R. A. 640.	674
Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622.	442, 443
Elseman v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 74 Iowa, 11.	139
Electric Lighting Co. v. Elder Bros. 115 Ala. 188.	385
Elgin v. Eaton, 83 Ill. 535, 25 Am. Rep. 412.	563, 564
Ellenbogen v. Griffey, 55 Ark. 268.	521
Ellerbe v. Barney, 119 Mo. 632, 23 L. R. A. 435.	653
Elliott v. Philadelphia, 75 Pa. 347, 15 Am. Rep. 591.	440
Ellis v. American Teleg. Co. 13 Allen, 226.	218
v. Ham, 28 Me. 885.	104
Ellison v. Linford, 7 Utah, 166.	83
Ellsworth v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 95 Iowa, 101, 29 L. R. A. 173.	138
Ellwood v. Northrup, 106 N. Y. 172.	262
Emack v. Rushenberger, 8 App. D. C. 249, 254.	630
Emerson v. Brigham, 10 Mass. 197, 6 Am. Dec. 109.	120
Emery v. Darling, 50 Ohio St. 160-167.	482
English v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. 55 Mich. 273, 54 Am. Rep. 377.	840
v. New Haven & N. Co. 82 Conn. 240.	640, 643, 644
Enos v. Cole, 53 Wis. 235.	850
Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 409, 418.	330, 367
Ensel v. Levy, 46 Ohio St. 255.	785
Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill. 384, 95 Am. Dec. 495.	795
Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565.	501
Eppendorf v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 195, 25 Am. Rep. 171.	299
Eppe v. State, 102 Ind. 539.	535
Erle v. Russell, 148 Pa. 384, 386.	836
Erskine v. Davis, 25 Ill. 251.	656
Eyler v. Alleghany County Comrs. 40 Md. 269, 38 Am. Rep. 240.	639

F.

Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 227.	447
Fairbanks v. Snow, 145 Mass. 158.	832
Fairchild v. Mullan, 90 Cal. 190.	203
Fargo v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 8 Misc. 205.	857
Farley v. Shipped Wythe, 185.	809
Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 21 Abb. N. C. 104.	99
v. Oregon P. B. Co. 81 Or. 237, 38 L. R. A. 424.	129
Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 239.	346
Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339.	348
Faulkner v. Aurora, 85 Ind. 130, 44 Am. Rep. 1.	297
Favorita v. Booher, 17 Ohio St. 548.	775
Fellows v. Longyor, 91 N. Y. 324.	260
Fenton v. Clark, 11 Vt. 567.	813
Ferguson v. Ross, 126 N. Y. 459.	252
Ferriss v. Harbath, Mart. & Y. 54, 17 Am. Dec. 732.	191
Fessler v. Brayton, 145 Ind. 71, 77, 32 L. R. A. 578.	413, 418
Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Johnson, 72 Miss. 333, 30 L. R. A. 206.	694

Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. 150, 11 Am. Dec. 441	280
Fifth Avenue Bank v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 10 L. R. A. 331	786
Finalyson v. Utica Min. & Mill. Co. 32 U. S. App. 143, 151, 67 Fed. Rep. 507, 512, 14 C. C. A. 492, 496	371
First Nat. Bank v. Arthur, 10 Colo. App. 283	638
v. Dovetail Body & Gear Co. 143 Ind. 534	825
v. Lanier, 11 Wall. 377, 20 L. ed. 174	785
First Unitarian Soc. v. Hartford, 66 Conn. 368	494
Fischer v. Hayes, 6 Fed. Rep. 64	789
Fishback v. Green, 87 Ky. 107	553
Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 87, 6 Am. Rep. 196	297
v. Briscoe, 10 Mont. 124	126
v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 20 Jones & S. 176	398
Flisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 U. S. 131, 2 L. ed. 587	637
v. Potter, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 138	553
Fitch v. American Popular L. Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 550	540
Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald & M. Constr. Co. 41 Neb. 374	699
Flaherty v. Thomas, 12 Allen 428	180
Fleck v. Union R. Co. 134 Mass. 480	299
Fletcher v. Dickinson, 7 Allen 235	752
v. Rylanda L. R. 1 Exch. 265	514
Florida R. & Nav. Co. v. Webster, 25 Fla. 394	212
Fluker v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 461, 2 L. R. A. 843	136
Flynn v. Canton Co. 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603	188
Fonseca v. Cunard S. S. Co. 153 Mass. 553, 12 L. R. A. 340	387
Foot v. Card, 58 Conn. 1, 6 L. R. A. 829	116
Forsyth v. Atlanta, 45 Ga. 152, 12 Am. Rep. 576	297
Forsythe v. Hammond, 186 U. S. 506, 518, 41 L. ed. 1095, 1100	197
Fowler v. Lewis, 25 Tex. Supp. 380	535
v. State, 58 N. J. L. 423	251
Fowlkes v. N. & D. R. Co. 5 Baxt. 663	573
Frazer v. Frazer Lubricator Co. 121 Ill. 147	100
Frederickson v. Johnson, 60 Minn. 387	584
Freidenburg v. Jones, 63 Ga. 812	127
Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220	153
Fullington v. Williams, 98 Ga. 807	631
Fulton v. Davenport, 17 Iowa, 408	84
v. Matthews, 15 Johns. 433, 8 Am. Dec. 261	687

G.

Gable, Re , 79 Iowa, 178, 9 L. R. A. 218	407
Gaffney, Re , 146 Pa. 49	842
Gaffney Mercantile Co. v. Hopkins, 21 Mont. —, 52 Pac. 561	126
Gallagher v. Market Street R. Co. 67 Cal. 13, 56 Am. Rep. 713	536
Galland v. Galland, 44 Cal. 475, 13 Am. Rep. 167	721
Garberino v. Roberts, 100 Cal. 125	207
Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. 483, 52 Am. Dec. 740	533
v. Lucas, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 582	160
v. McEwen, 19 N. Y. 125	591
Garland, Ex parte , 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366	157
v. Harrison, 8 Leigh, 368	775
Garrett v. Greenwell, 92 Mo. 120	518
Garrison v. Rudd, 19 Ill. 558	647
Gavin v. Chicago, 97 Ill. 66, 37 Am. Rep. 99	153
Gay v. Essex Electric Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 238, 21 L. R. A. 448	152
Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520	426
George v. People, 167 Ill. 447	159
German Nat. Bank v. Barham, 57 Ark. 536	522
Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 9, 16	347
Gervais v. Edwards, 2 Dru. & W. 80	857
Gettys v. Lountree, 2 Pinney, 379, 54 Am. Dec. 138	120
Giberson v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 89 Me. 337	488, 489
Gibson v. Huntington, 88 W. Va. 177, 22 L. R. A. 561	151
v. Renne, 19 Wend. 390	687, 688
43 L. R. A.

Gilbert v. Stone, Aleyn, 35, Style, 72	832
Gillespie v. Lincoln, 35 Neb. 34, 16 L. R. A. 349	440
v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 865	151, 152
Gillette v. Hartford, 81 Conn. 351	494
Gilmore v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 6 App. Div. 117	515
v. Holt, 4 Pick. 258	188
Glitner v. Carrollton, 7 B. Mon. 680	378
Glroux v. Stedman, 145 Mass. 439	120
Given v. Western U. Tele. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 119	218
Gleason v. Bremen, 50 Me. 222	488
Glenn v. Howard, 65 Md. 40	194
Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39	583
v. Wilde, 17 Fed. Rep. 346	857
Godine v. Kidd, 64 Hun. 585	431
Goldsmith v. Baker City, 31 Or. 249	637
Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Asso. 97 Iowa, 226, 32 L. R. A. 473	540
Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 128 U. S. 598, 32 L. ed. 535	100
Gorman v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 78 Iowa, 509	535
Goss v. Gibson, 8 Humph. 197	194
Graham v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 336	303
Granite State Provident Asso. v. Monk (N. J. Eq. 30 Atl. 872	692
Grannan v. Westchester Racing Asso. 153 N. Y. 461	276
Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 665	785
Graves v. American Exch. Bank, 17 N. Y. 205	656
v. Northern P. R. Co. 5 Mont. 556, 51 Am. Rep. 81	844
Grayson's Case, 6 Gratt. 712	150
Green v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 91 Iowa, 615	839
Gregory, Ex parte , 20 Tex. App. 210, 54 Am. Rep. 116	864
v. Wendell, 39 Mich. 338, 33 Am. Rep. 390	284
Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359	203
Gridley v. Watson, 53 Ill. 166	662
Griebel v. State, Niezer, 111 Ind. 369	414
Griffiths v. Dudley, 1 R. O. Q. B. Div. 357	573
Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. Eq. 494	204
Grindley v. McKechnie, 163 Mass. 494	151
Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275, 26 Am. Rep. 138	494
Grover v. Ocean Grove Camp-Meeting Asso. 45 N. J. L. 399	89
Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Eddins, 60 Tex. 663	565
v. Geer, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 349	283, 284
v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910	388
v. Shields, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 632	403
Gurley v. Missouri P. R. Co. 93 Mo. 445	508
Gut v. Minnesota, 9 Wall. 35, 19 L. ed. 573	47, 157
Guthrie v. Maine C. R. Co. 81 Me. 572	489

H.

Hackensack Water Co. v. DeKay, 36 N. J. Eq. 548	786
Hackett v. Hackett, 18 R. I. 155, 10 L. R. A. 558	390
Hackley v. Draper, 80 N. Y. 92	264
Hadden v. Linville, 68 Md. 210	223
Hadsell v. Hadsell, 7 Ohio C. C. 196	390
Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray. 297	440
Hahn v. Concordian Soc. 42 Md. 460	203
Haines v. Haines, 6 Md. 435	431
Hale v. Branscum, 10 Gratt. 418	733
Hall v. Bristol, L. R. 2 C. P. 322	563
v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485, 487, 488, 24 L. ed. 547, 548	274
v. State, 3 Ga. 18	400, 401
v. Webb, 21 W. Va. 322	735
Hallday v. Hart, 30 N. Y. 474	687
Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 175	524
Halsey v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 380	235
Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459	440, 443
Hamilton v. Marks, 63 Mo. 167	516
Hamlyn v. Crown Accidental Ins. Co. [1893] 1 Q. B. 750	695
Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146, 157, 3 Am. Rep. 815	836
Hanch v. Ripley, 127 Ind. 151, 11 L. R. A. 61	525

Hancock v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 145 U. S. 409, 36 L. ed. 755.	704	Hill v. Harding, 130 U. S. 609, 704, 32 L. ed. 1083, 1084.	194
v. Yaden, 121 Ind. 866, 6 L. R. A. 576.	411	v. Huntress, 43 N. H. 480.	452, 453
Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324.	440	v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 178 Pa. 223, 35 L. R. A. 196.	573
Hankinson v. Vantine, 152 N. Y. 20, 27.	677	v. Warren, 2 Starkie, 377.	113
Hanley v. Banks, 6 Okla. 79.	127	Hipsley v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 88 Mo. 348.	518
Hannibal v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 49 Mo. 480.	640	Hite v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 130 Mo. 132.	519
Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. 262, 20 L. ed. 423.	287	Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653.	403
Hansbrough v. Peck, 5 Wall. 497, 18 L. ed. 520.	204	Hoagland v. Lowe, 39 Neb. 897, 407.	626
Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 30 L. ed. 285.	280	Hodder v. Ruffin, 1 Tamlyn, 341.	147
Harn v. Dadeville, 100 Ala. 200.	378	Hodges v. Percival, 132 Ill. 53.	121
Harris v. Douglas, 64 Ill. 466.	408	Hofbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 342, 843, 35 Am. Rep. 278.	369
v. Panama R. Co. 3 Bosw. 7.	399	Holbrook v. West Jersey Zinc Co. 57 N. Y. 616.	786
v. People, 1 Colo. App. 289.	103	Holland v. Fox, 3 El. & Bl. 977.	724
Hart v. Bates, 17 S. C. 35.	111	Holliday v. Holgate, L. R. 3 Exch. 299.	748
Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 651, 34 Am. Dec. 273.	494	Holly River Coal Co. v. Howell, 86 W. Va. 489.	733, 734
Hartford v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 66 Conn. 476.	187	Holmark v. Molin, 5 Coldw. 484.	187
Hartley v. Cummins, 5 C. B. 247.	801	Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324.	99
Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95.	400	Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 191, 9 Jur. N. S. 213.	591, 592
Harvey v. State, 65 Ga. 568.	399, 395	v. Wyatt, 9 Jur. 1072, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 327.	148
Hass v. Mutual Relief Assn. 118 Cal. 6.	647	Holton v. Daly, 106 Ill. 131.	570, 571, 573, 574, 578
Haverford Electric Light Co. v. Hart, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 571.	776	Hopkins v. Westcott, 6 Blatchf. 64.	287
Hawbecker v. Hawbecker, 43 Md. 516.	691	Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 262.	187
Hawkeye Ben. & Loan Assn. v. Blackburn, 48 Iowa. 385.	691	Horn v. Cole, 51 N. H. 287, 12 Am. Rep. 111.	692
Hawkeye State Sav. & L. Assn. v. Johnston, 106 Iowa. 218.	287	Horsey v. Chew, 65 Md. 557.	225
Hawkins v. Americus Nat. Bldg. & L. Assn. 96 Ga. 206.	852	Hosford v. Johnson, 74 Ind. 479.	522
v. Hoffman, 6 Hill, 586, 41 Am. Dec. 767.	854	Householder v. Kansas City 85 Mo. 488.	564
v. Phythian, 8 B. Mon. 515.	129	Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Hill, 70 Tex. 51.	232
Hawks v. Locke, 139 Mass. 205, 209.	324	Hovey v. State, Carson, 119 Ind. 396.	411
Hawley v. Jette, 10 Or. 31, 45 Am. Rep. 129.	641	Howard v. Farr, 18 N. H. 457.	850
Hayden v. Alyn, 55 Conn. 280, 289.	324	Howe v. Cambridge, 114 Mass. 388.	837
v. Skillings, 78 Me. 413.	188	v. West End Street R. Co. 167 Mass. 46.	235
Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410.	347	Howell v. Buffalo, 15 N. Y. 512, 519.	682
v. Oshkosh, 38 Wis. 314, 14 Am. Rep. 760.	515	v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 61 Barb. 378.	398
v. Western R. Corp. 3 Cush. 270.	733	Hubbard v. Belden, 27 Vt. 645.	813
Haynes v. Aldrich, 138 N. Y. 287, 289, 668, 700.	736	Hudson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 581, 44 Am. Rep. 692.	121
v. Nowlin, 129 Ind. 581, 14 L. R. A. 787.	591, 592	Huey v. Gahlenbeck, 6 Am. St. Rep. 790, note, 121 Pa. 238.	444
v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 510.	518	Huff v. Cook, 44 Iowa. 639.	693
Hays v. Camden, 38 W. Va. 109.	783	Huffman v. Clegg, 77 N. C. 55.	535
v. Heatherly, 36 W. Va. 613.	786	Hughes, Re, 8 N. M. 225.	723
Hazel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 82 Iowa. 477.	387	Hubert v. Topeka, 34 Fed. Rep. 510.	571, 573, 578
Head v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 187.	592	Humphrey v. Phillips, 57 Ill. 182.	656
Heard v. Brooklyn 68 N. Y. 242.	447	Humphreys v. Perry, 148 U. S. 627, 37 L. ed. 587.	287
Hearne v. Keath, 63 Mo. 84.	518	Hunn v. Michigan C. R. Co. 78 Mich. 513.	575
Hedge v. Clapp, 22 Conn. 262, 58 Am. Dec. 424.	622	Hunt, Ex parte , 28 Tex. App. 361.	158
Hedrick v. Ilwaco R. & Nav. Co. 4 Wash. 400.	574, 577	v. Livermore, 5 Pick. 395.	452, 453
Heeney v. Sprague, 11 E. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 502.	188	v. Utica, 18 N. Y. 442.	682
Hefron v. Pollard, 73 Tex. 96.	601	Hunter's Appeal, 22 W. N. C. 861.	501
Heland v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 407, 81 Am. Dec. 670.	188	Hurst v. Detroit City R. Co. 84 Mich. 589.	570, 577
Hendershott v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Iowa) 76 N. W. 828.	218	Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 587, 28 L. ed. 259.	45, 782
Henderson v. Connelly, 123 Ill. 98.	626	Hussey v. State, 69 Ga. 54.	400
v. Indiana Trust Co. 143 Ind. 561.	825	Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. 222.	516
v. McClain (Ky.) 39 L. E. A. 349.	561, 562	v. Crutcher, 98 Tenn. 421, 87 L. R. A. 89.	129
Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 378.	682	v. York, N. & B. E. Co. 5 Exch. 343.	348
Henneberger Case, 155 N. Y. 420, 42 L. R. A. 132.	252	Hutton v. Camden, 39 N. J. L. 122.	754
Henry v. Sneed, 99 Mo. 407.	516	Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 458.	113
Henshaw v. Hunting, 1 Gray, 210.	434
Hequembourg v. Dunkirk, 49 Hun, 550.	674
Hern v. Nichols, 1 Balk. 289.	784
Hervey v. Kroat, 116 Ind. 268.	521, 522
Hewitt v. Doherty, 25 Mo. App. 326.	518
Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co. 15 N. Y. 455, 466.	273, 275
Hickey, Ex parte , 4 Smedes & M. 751.	789
v. Forristal, 49 Ill. 255.	662
Higgins v. Breen, 9 Mo. 497.	209
Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 113 Ala. 239.	235
v. Birmingham Union R. Co. 93 Ala. 505.	234
v. Matthews, 99 Ala. 24, 14 L. R. A. 462.	234
Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. Jr. 59.	202
v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332.	440
v. Charlotte, 72 N. C. 55.	297
43 L. R. A.

I.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bloomington, 76 Ill. 447.	639
v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 453, 36 L. ed. 1042.	504, 793, 795, 796
v. Latimer, 123 Ill. 163.	214
v. Neer, 26 Ill. App. 356, 360, 31 Ill. App. 126, 134, 139.	330, 365
v. Read, 37 Ill. 484, 87 Am. Dec. 260.	213
v. Whittemore, 43 Ill. 420, 423, 12 Am. Dec. 138.	369, 375
Imlay v. Union Branch R. Co. 26 Conn. 249, 68 Am. Dec. 302.	447
Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. ed. 898.	218
v. Stout, 53 Ind. 143.	580

Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Beaver, 41 Ind. 493.....	213
Indianapolis Brewing Co. v. Claypool, 149 Ind. 193.....	416
Ingalls v. Bills, 9 Met. 1, 48 Am. Dec. 346.....	884
v. Vance, 61 Vt. 582.....	525
International & G. N. R. Co. v. Herndon, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 465.....	232
International Trust Co. v. Boardman, 149 Mass. 158.....	667
Interstate Commerce Commission v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 168 U. S. 144, 42 L. ed. 414, 69 Fed. Rep. 227, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 41 U. S. App. 453, 74 Fed. Rep. 715, 21 C. C. A. 51, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 686.....	547
v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 295, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 323.....	547
v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 37, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 192.....	547
Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Soper, 39 Iowa, 112, 124.....	693
Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. 47 N. Y. 122, 7 Am. Rep. 418.....	85

J.

Jackson v. Hardin, 83 Mo. 175.....	518, 519
Jacobs, Re , 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636.....	240, 269
Jacquins v. Com. 0 Cush. 279.....	160
Jaffee v. Jacobson, 4 U. S. App. 4, 48 Fed. Rep. 21, 14 L. R. A. 852, 1 C. C. A. 24.....	431
Jamleson v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. 128 Ind. 555, 12 L. R. A. 652, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 613.....	411
Jarnagin v. Stratton, 95 Tenn. 619, 30 L. R. A. 495.....	165
Jarvis v. Manhattan Beach Co. 148 N. Y. 652, 31 L. R. A. 776.....	786, 787
Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co. 53 Neb. 631, 39 L. R. A. 751.....	235
Jefts v. York, 4 Cush. 371, 50 Am. Dec. 701, 10 Cush. 382.....	831
Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 240.....	132
Jersey City v. O'Callaghan, 41 N. J. L. 349.....	636
Johnson v. Allen, 78 Ala. 391, 56 Am. Rep. 34.....	384
v. McMurry, 72 Mo. 278.....	516
v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 56 Minn. 865, 26 L. R. A. 187.....	433
v. San Francisco City & County Super. Ct. 63 Cal. 578.....	721
v. Simonton, 43 Cal. 242, 249.....	188
v. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. 54 Hun, 469.....	674
v. Walker, 23 Neb. 736.....	592
Johnston v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 95 Ga. 685.....	535
Jones, Ex parte , 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 48 S. W. 513.....	617
v. Adams, 19 Nev. 78.....	133
v. Dils, 18 W. Va. 764.....	736
v. Freidenburg, 66 Ga. 505, 42 Am. Rep. 36.....	127
v. Horsey, 4 Md. 306, 59 Am. Dec. 81.....	225
v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 33 U. S. App. 703, 713, 76 Fed. Rep. 683, 35 L. R. A. 698, 22 C. C. A. 483.....	197
v. Richardson, 10 Met. 488.....	591, 592
v. State, Snodgrass, 112 Ind. 193.....	415
v. Union R. Co. 18 App. Div. 267.....	515
Jordan v. Balley, 37 Minn. 174.....	412, 417
Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 47, 34 L. ed. 843, 858.....	857
Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 335.....	207
Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 105.....	271

K.

Kalamazoo Hack & Bus Co. v. Sootsman, 84 Mich. 194, 10 L. R. A. 819.....	136
Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Dye, 38 U. S. App. 23, 29, 70 Fed. Rep. 24, 27, 16 C. C. A. 604, 607.....	369
Kansas & E. R. Constr. Co. v. Topeka, S. & W. R. Co. 135 Mass. 34, 46 Am. Rep. 439.....	308
Kansas City v. Kansas City Belt R. Co. 102 Mo. 633, 10 L. R. A. 851.....	640
Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond, 58 Ark. 324, 334.....	347, 369, 375
43 L. R. A.

Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. St. Joseph Terminal R. Co. 97 Mo. 457, 8 L. R. A. 240.....	235
Kansas C. R. Co. v. Jackson County Comrs. 45 Kan. 716.....	640
Kearney, Ex parte , 7 Wheat. 38, 5 L. ed. 391.....	723
Keene v. Keene, 3 C. B. N. S. 144.....	636
Keith v. Boston, 120 Mass. 108.....	837
Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 625, 33 L. ed. 667, 674.....	627
v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 113.....	203
Kellogg v. Olmsted, 25 N. Y. 189.....	687, 688
Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78, 26 L. ed. 658.....	731
Kelsey v. Hammer, 18 Conn. 311, 317.....	343
Kennedy v. Standard Sugar Refinery, 125 Mass. 90, 28 Am. Rep. 214.....	569
Kennelty v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 166 Pa. 60.....	365
Kenney v. Norton, 10 Helsk. 384.....	191
Kentucky Club v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 309.....	401
Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414.....	732
Kernochan v. New York Bowery F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 428.....	667
Kerr v. Clark, 11 Humph. 77.....	194
v. Minnesota Mut. Ben. Assn. 39 Minn. 174.....	540
Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232.....	274
Killian v. Hoffman, 6 Ill. App. 200.....	748
Killinger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 50 N. Y. 206.....	559
Kimball v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 157 Mass. 7.....	398
Kimberlin v. State, Tow, 130 Ind. 120, 14 L. R. A. 858.....	413
Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed. 124.....	191
King v. Doane, 139 U. S. 166, 173, 35 L. ed. 84, 87.....	426
v. Edmunds, 4 Barn. & Ald. 471.....	250
v. Mullins, 171 U. S. 404, 43 L. ed. 214.....	731, 733, 735
v. Pagham Sewer Comrs. 8 Barn. & C. 355.....	707, 832
v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76, 90.....	260
v. Tirrell, 2 Gray, 331.....	160
Kingman, Petitioner, 153 Mass. 566, 12 L. R. A. 417.....	837
Kingsbury v. Sperry, 119 Ill. 279.....	263, 290
Kingston Case, 154 N. Y. 493.....	246
Kinney v. Beverley, 2 Hen. & M. 818.....	733
Kirkland v. Cox, 94 Ill. 412.....	529
Kline v. Hanke, 14 Mont. 361.....	127
Klinkler v. Wheeling Steel & I. Co. 43 W. Va. 219.....	150
Klix v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 60 Am. Rep. 854.....	151
Klug v. State, 77 Ga. 734.....	400
Knox v. Eden Musee American Co. 148 N. Y. 441, 31 L. R. A. 779.....	787
Knox County v. Goggin, 105 Mo. 182.....	507
Knox County Supers. v. Davis, 63 Ill. 405.....	662
Koch v. New York, 152 N. Y. 72, 75.....	246
v. North Ave. R. Co. 15 L. R. A. 377, 75 Md. 222.....	235
Koehler, Ex parte , 31 Fed. Rep. 315, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 317.....	547
Kofka v. Rosicky, 41 Neb. 328, 25 L. R. A. 207.....	431
Koplit v. Powell, 56 Wis. 671.....	812
Korminsky v. Korminsky, 2 Misc. 138.....	431
Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 668, 26 L. ed. 886.....	637
Kossuth County v. Wallace, 60 Iowa. 508.....	693
Krall v. United States, 48 U. S. App. 351, 79 Fed. Rep. 241, 24 C. C. A. 543.....	133
Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506.....	157
Krouse v. Woodward, 110 Cal. 638.....	202
Kuchenheiser v. Beckett, 41 Ill. 172.....	263
Kyser v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 207.....	539

L.

Lackland v. North Missouri R. Co. 31 Mo. 181.....	564
Lafayette v. Timberlake, 88 Ind. 330.....	297
Lafayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185.....	411
Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268.....	565
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Brown, 124 Ill. 162.....	213

- Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. 30 Ohio St. 604. 641
 v. Richards, 30 L. R. A. 33, notes, 152 384
 Ill. 59. 641
 Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71. 273, 641
 Lakings v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 94 Iowa, 478, 28 L. B. A. 70. 840
 Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mo. 488. 851
 v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 5 Lea, 128. 141, 142
 Langdon v. Northfield, 42 Minn. 464. 846
 Lange v. Benedict, 73 N. Y. 12, 29 Am. Rep. 80. 632
 Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 549. 591
 Langworthy v. Dubuque, 18 Iowa, 86. 84
 Lankin v. Terwilliger, 22 Or. 97. 446
 Lanhorne v. Lowe, 3 Neb. 131. 591
 Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 14 L. R. A. 85. 390
 Latourette v. McKeon, 104 Mich. 156. 842
 Lawson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 64 Wis. 447, 54 Am. Rep. 634. 218
 Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385. 293, 734
 Lay v. King, 5 Day, 72. 616
 Leary v. Columbia River & P. S. Nav. Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 775. 398
 Lefevre v. Laraway, 23 Barb. 167. 263
 Leffer v. Forsberg, 1 App. D. C. 36, 40. 630
 Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652. 581
 112, 571-573, 577, 578. 581
 Leggett v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 394. 204
 Leggett v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 599. 572
 Leighton v. Grant, 20 Minn. 345 (Gil. 298) 845
 Leominster v. Conant, 139 Mass. 384. 837
 Leas v. Maine C. R. Co. 77 Me. 87. 488
 Leases v. Wilks, 12 La. Ann. 739. 637
 Levasser v. Washburn, 11 Gratt. 572. 733
 Levering v. Bimel, 146 Ind. 545. 824, 825
 Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 54 Mich. 55, 52 Am. Rep. 790. 408
 v. Tipton, 10 Ohio St. 88, 75 Am. Dec. 498. 220
 Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Kidd, 7 Dana, 245. 850
 Libby v. Hopkins, 104 U. S. 308, 26 L. ed. 769. 842
 Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 70. 784
 Lindsay v. Canadian P. R. Co. 68 Vt. 556. 111, 112
 Linnehan v. Sampson, 126 Mass. 506, 511, 512, 30 Am. Rep. 692. 834
 Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 29 L. ed. 652. 853
 Littlefield v. Coombs, 71 Me. 110. 452, 453
 Little Neutucca Toll Road Co. v. Tillamook County, 31 Or. 1. 447
 Littlewood v. New York, 89 N. Y. 24, 42 Am. Rep. 271. 577
 Livermore v. Jamaica, 23 Vt. 361. 294
 Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788. 387
 Lloyd v. Collett, 4 Bro. Ch. 469. 205
 v. Kirkwood, 112 Ill. 329. 263
 Lockhart v. Craig Street R. Co. 139 Pa. 419. 235
 Lockwood v. Crawford, 18 Conn. 361, 372. 342
 Lomer v. Meeker, 25 N. Y. 363. 618
 Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 65 Minn. 196, 83 L. R. A. 437. 251
 Loney v. Bayly, 45 Md. 450. 225
 v. Courtney, 24 Neb. 580. 522
 Long v. Montgomery, 6 Bush. 396. 554
 v. Moon, 107 Mo. 384. 518
 Loring v. Kendall, 1 Gray, 305. 194
 Losey v. Stanley, 147 N. Y. 560, 578. 262, 263
 Louisville & N. R. Co., vs. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 67. 547
 v. Garrett, 8 Lea, 438, 41 Am. Rep. 640 141
 v. Gilbert, 88 Tenn. 430, 7 L. R. A. 162. 142
 v. Manchester Mills, 88 Tenn. 659. 187
 v. McElwain, 98 Ky. 700, 34 L. R. A. 788 571
 v. State, 3 Head, 523. 639
 Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 95 Ky. 50. 235, 560 561
 Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 91 Ind. 119, 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 608. 640, 643, 644
 Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 129. 141, 143, 369 43 L. R. A.
- Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Guinan, 11 Lea, 98, 47 Am. Rep. 279. 141, 143
 v. Harris, 9 Lea, 180, 42 Am. Rep. 668. 141
 Lowman v. Yates, 37 N. Y. 601. 687, 688
 Lowry v. Commercial & F. Bank, Taney, 810. 787
 v. Hardwick, 4 Humph. 188. 165
 Loyd v. Malone, 23 Ill. 43, 74 Am. Dec. 179. 263
 Lubrano v. Atlantic Mills, 19 R. I. 129, 34 L. R. A. 797. 572-574, 578
 Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216. 801, 802
 v. Wagner, 1 DeG. M. & G. 604. 857
 Lunn v. Thornton, 1 C. B. 879. 591
 Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255. 133
 Lybe's Appeal, 106 Pa. 626, 51 Am. Rep. 542. 107, 108
 Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Langley, 62 Md. 106. 224
 Lyman v. Central Vermont R. Co. 59 Vt. 167. 388
 Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577. 116
 Lyons v. Fishmongers' Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662. 795
- M.
- McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445, 447. 332
 McAfee v. Ryan, 11 Mo. 365. 509, 518
 McAndrew v. Bassett, 4 DeG. J. & S. 380. 80
 McCall v. Cohen, 16 S. C. 445, 42 Am. Rep. 641. 632
 McCann v. Day, 57 Ill. 101. 648
 McCordle, Ex parte, 7 Wall. 514, 19 L. ed. 265. 289
 McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 742. 571, 573, 574, 578
 v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, L. R. 7 C. P. 508. 563
 McCartney v. Finnell, 106 Mo. 445. 518
 v. Osburn, 118 Ill. 403. 406
 McCaull v. Braham, 16 Fed. Rep. 37. 203
 McClintock's Appeal, 58 Mich. 152. 842
 McClure v. Maitland, 20 W. Va. 561. 733
 v. Mapperture, 29 W. Va. 633. 733
 McConnell v. Pedigo, 92 Ky. 465. 136
 McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 455. 206
 McCullom v. Black Hawk County, 21 Iowa, 409. 447
 McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412. 218, 214, 209
 McDonald v. Fleming, 12 B. Mon. 285. 127
 McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67. 127
 McElroy v. Kansas City, 21 Fed. Rep. 257. 564
 McGarvey v. Darnall, 184 Ill. 367, 10 L. R. A. 861. 406, 408
 McGrath v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 15 R. I. 95, 97. 865
 McGrew v. Stewart, 51 Kan. 185. 447
 McGuiness v. Butler, 159 Mass. 233. 152
 McIntyre v. New York C. R. Co. 43 Barb. 532. 804
 McKay v. Mumford, 10 Wend. 351. 663
 v. Ohio River R. Co. 34 W. Va. 65, 9 L. R. A. 192. 139
 McKinnon v. McKinnon, 12 U. S. App. 433, 56 Fed. Rep. 409, 5 C. C. A. 530. 431
 McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828. 100
 v. Nicol, 48 Minn. 160. 126
 McLemore v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 58 Miss. 514. 263
 McLeod v. Jones, 105 Mass. 403, 7 Am. Rep. 539. 832
 McMahon v. Palmer, 102 N. Y. 176, 55 Am. Rep. 790. 731
 McMillen v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 37, 24 L. ed. 385. 732, 734
 McMurray v. McMurray, 66 N. Y. 175. 263
 McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 841. 786
 McNulty v. Batty, 10 How. 72, 13 L. ed. 538. 289
 Macon v. Dykes (Ga.) 31 S. E. 443. 403
 v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239. 380
 Macon County v. Shores, 97 U. S. 272-279, 24 L. ed. 889, 890. 426
 McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237. 446
 McQuillan v. Seattle, 10 Wash. 465. 304
 Macrow v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 612. 287
 Madden v. Penn Electric Light Co. 181 Pa. 617, 38 L. R. A. 638. 398

Madison County v. Bartlett, 2 Ill. 67.....	635	Miller v. Amsterdam, 149 N. Y. 288.....	681
Magee v. Magee, 51 Ill. 500, 99 Am. Dec. 571.....	662	v. Craig, 11 N. J. Eq. 175.....	640
Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 320.....	293	v. Denny, 99 Ky. 58.....	533
Maher v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 290.....	261	v. Holbrook, 31 Wend. 317.....	687, 688
Maier, Ex parte , 42 Am. St. Rep. 129, 103 Cal. 470.....	298	v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 10 L. R. A. 116.....	832
Maitland v. Gilbert Paper Co. 97 Wis. 476.....	122	v. New York & E. R. Co. 21 Barb. 513.....	639, 640
Makibben v. Arndt, 88 Ky. 180.....	447	v. People, 39 Ill. 457.....	636
Malone v. Toledo, 28 Ohio St. 643.....	448	v. State, 149 Ind. 607, 40 L. R. A. 109.....	159
Manchester v. Van Brunt, 46 N. Y. S. R. 566.....	688	Miller's Appeals, 10 W. N. C. 168.....	501
Maney v. State, 6 Lea. 218.....	293	Milliken v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 110 N. Y. 403, 1 L. R. A. 281.....	218
Mann v. Higgins, 83 Cal. 66.....	482	Millington v. Fox, 3 Myl. & C. 338.....	100
Manning, Re, 44 Fed. Rep. 275.....	789	Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98.....	535
Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 233, 57 Am. Rep. 825.....	157	Millwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Faribault, 23 Minn. 167.....	640
Marks v. Purdue University, 37 Ind. 155.....	638	v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 474, 24 L. ed. 256, 258.....	376
Marquette v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 83 Iowa. 564.....	804	v. Smith, 74 Ill. 197.....	214
Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 148.....	536	Minard v. Currier, 67 Vt. 480.....	108
v. Cohen, 44 Ga. 489, 9 Am. Rep. 170.....	127	Minor v. State, 53 Ga. 318.....	400
Marston v. Kennebec Mut. L. Ins. Co. 89 Me. 260.....	457	Missouri K. & T. E. Co. v. Edwards, 90 Tex. 65, 32 L. R. A. 825.....	152, 153
Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 134, 31 Am. Rep. 446.....	842	Missouri P. R. Co. v. Moseley, 12 U. S. App. 601, 609, 57 Fed. Rep. 921, 926, 6 C. C. A. 641, 646.....	371
v. Missouri P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 475.....	573	v. Patton (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 477.....	638
v. Morgan, 87 Cal. 203.....	203	v. Texas & P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 862.....	547
v. State, 59 Ala. 34.....	401	Mitchell v. Clay, 8 Tex. 443.....	220
Maryland F. Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 25 Md. 242, 80 Am. Dec. 779.....	748	v. Winslow, 2 Story, 630.....	591
Mason v. Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co. 81 Md. 446, 29 L. R. A. 273.....	224	Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Dismukes, 54 Ala. 131, 17 L. R. A. 113, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 200.....	387
Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 126.....	640	Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 476.....	801
Mast v. Pearce, 58 Iowa, 579, 43 Am. Rep. 125.....	126	Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 665.....	93
Matthews v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 56 N. J. L. 34, 22 L. R. A. 261.....	853	Monroe v. State, 78 Ga. 110.....	400
Mauldin v. Greenville, 42 S. C. 293, 27 L. R. A. 284.....	102, 103, 105	Montagu v. Pacific Bank, 81 Fed. Rep. 602.....	842
Maxmillian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468.....	439, 440, 443	Montague v. Flockton, L. R. 16 Eq. 189.....	857
Maxwell v. Hogg, L. R. 2 Ch. 307.....	89	Montana Union R. Co. v. Langlois, 9 Mont. 419, 8 L. R. A. 753.....	136
Maywood Co. v. Maywood, 118 Ill. 61.....	380	Montgomery v. Thompson [1891] A. C. 217.....	830
Mead v. Noyes, 44 Conn. 487.....	324	Monument Nat. Bank v. Globe Works, 101 Mass. 57, 3 Am. Rep. 322.....	426
v. Young, 4 T. R. 28.....	657	Moody v. Wright, 13 Met. 17, 46 Am. Dec. 706.....	591
Meador Furniture Co. v. Newport, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 829.....	708	Moore v. Albany, 98 N. Y. 306.....	681
Mears v. London & S. W. R. Co. 11 C. B. N. S. 850.....	850	v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 55 N. Y. 41, 14 Am. Rep. 173.....	786
Medler v. Atlantic Ave. R. Co. 86 N. Y. S. R. 89, Affirmed in 126 N. Y. 669.....	299	v. Norman, 52 Minn. 83, 18 L. R. A. 369.....	523
Medley Petitioner, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835.....	157, 158	v. State, Denny, 55 Ind. 362, 363.....	544
Meech v. Buffalo, 29 N. Y. 198.....	681	v. Woolsey, 4 Bl. & Bl. 243.....	539
Meessel v. Lynn & E. R. Co. 8 Allen, 234.....	804	Moore v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 156, 28 L. ed. 385.....	786, 788
Melvin v. Easley, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 386, 62 Am. Dec. 171.....	585	Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 134 Mo. 641, 33 L. R. A. 755.....	151
Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Benson, 85 Tenn. 627.....	141	Morford v. Unger, 8 Iowa. 82.....	84
Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 233, 57 Am. Rep. 603.....	297	Morgan, Cox, 22 Mo. 873, 66 Am. Dec. 623.....	515
Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 757, 26 L. R. A. 72.....	218	v. Durfee, 69 Mo. 469, 33 Am. Rep. 508.....	519
Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1008.....	786	v. Jones, 8 Exch. 620.....	636
Merkle v. Bennington Twp. 53 Mich. 158, 35 Am. Rep. 666.....	580	Moroney's Appeal, 24 Fa. 373.....	626
v. State, 37 Ala. 139.....	536	Morrill v. Noyes, 56 Me. 468, 96 Am. Dec. 486.....	591
Merrill v. Grinnell, 80 N. Y. 619.....	287	Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75.....	832
v. Merrill, 103 Cal. 287.....	205	v. Sea Girt Land Improv. Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 304.....	378
v. Monticello, 138 U. S. 673, 34 L. ed. 1069.....	425	v. Williams, 39 Ohio St. 584.....	776
Mersey Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686.....	440	Morrison v. Erie R. Co. 56 N. Y. 302.....	299
Mersey Steel & I. Co. v. Naylor, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 434.....	884	Moses v. Mead, 1 Denio, 378, 43 Am. Dec. 676.....	120
Merwin v. Manhattan R. Co. 113 N. Y. 659.....	803	Motey v. Pickle Marble & G. Co. 36 U. S. App. 682, 74 Fed. Rep. 155, 20 C. C. A. 366.....	121
Metropolitan Bd. of Excise v. Barrie, 34 N. Y. 657.....	275	Mott v. Hudson River R. Co. 8 Bosw. 345.....	852
Mette v. Dow, 9 Lea. 93, 96, 100.....	192	Mount v. Com. 2 Duv. 93.....	95
Meuer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 5 S. D. 568, 25 L. R. A. 81.....	387	v. State, Richey, 90 Ind. 29, 46 Am. Rep. 182.....	411
Meyer v. Butterbrodt, 146 Ill. 131.....	802	Mt Carmel v. Howell, 137 Ill. 91.....	802
v. King, 29 La. Ann. 867.....	533	Mt. Morris v. Williams, 38 Ill. App. 401.....	635
Michigan v. Phoenix Bank, 33 N. Y. 9, 27.....	284	Mousseau v. Mousseau, 40 Minn. 236.....	432
Michigan C. R. Co. v. Boyd, 91 Ill. 268.....	214	Mulcahey v. Washburn Car Wheel Co. 145 Mass. 281.....	569
v. Mineral Springs Mfg. Co. 16 Wall. 830, 21 L. ed. 303.....	142	Mullea, Re, 7 Blachf. 23.....	789
Middlesex Bank v. Minot, 4 Met. 325.....	748	Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530.....	444, 515
Middleton v. Pritchard, 4 Ill. 510, 38 Am. Dec. 112.....	795	Multnomah County v. Silker, 10 Or. 65.....	447
Milbau v. Sharp, 15 Barb. 193.....	447	Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77.....	274, 275, 844
43 L. R. A.		Munroe v. Leach, 7 Met. 274.....	113
		Murdock v. Franklin Insurance Co. 33 W. Va. 407, 7 L. R. A. 572.....	638
		Murphy, Re, 87 Fed. Rep. 549.....	156, 159

Murphy v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 375. 151
 Murray v. Berkshire County Comrs. 12 Met. 448
 455
 v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 McMull. L. 348
 385, 36 Am. Dec. 268.

N.

Nalley v. Hartford Carpet Co. 51 Conn. 121
 524, 50 Am. Rep. 47.
 Nance v. Carolina C. R. Co. 94 N. C. 619. 299
 Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McConnell, 82 Fed. Rep. 65. 268
 Natches Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Shields, 71 Miss. 630. 692
 National Bank v. Young, 41 N. J. Eq. 531. 426
 Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. L. 831, 43 Am. Rep. 380. 126
 Needham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 38 Vt. 294. 571, 574, 577
 Nelson v. Von Bonnhorst, 29 Pa. 352. 221, 222
 Newark & S. O. Horse Car R. Co. v. Hunt, 50 N. J. L. 308. 734
 New Brighton v. Peirsol, 107 Pa. 280. 562
 Newby v. Oregon C. R. Co. Deady, 609. 99
 New England Awl & Needle Co. v. Marlborough Awl & Needle Co. 168 Mass. 154. 830
 New England Trout & S. Club v. Mather, 68 Vt. 388, 33 L. R. A. 569. 293
 New Era Life Assn. v. Rositter, 182 Pa. 314. 653
 New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 638, 30 L. ed. 1050. 85
 New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 344, 12 L. ed. 405. 142
 New Orleans v. Abbagnato, 23 U. S. App. 533, 62 Fed. Rep. 240, 10 C. C. A. 361, 26 L. R. A. 329. 440
 v. New York Mail S. S. Co. 20 Wall. 387, 22 L. ed. 354. 789
 Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487. 203
 New York v. Mable, 18 N. Y. 151. 127
 New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30. 786, 787
 New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 24, 25 L. ed. 531. 287
 New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Blumenthal, 160 Ill. 40. 213
 New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627. 213
 New York Health Dept. v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L. R. A. 710, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579. 276, 294, 734
 New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Steinbrenner, 47 N. J. L. 161, 54 Am. Rep. 126. 852
 Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 836. 836
 v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. 38 N. Y. 131, 97 Am. Dec. 780. 299
 v. White, 85 N. Y. 531. 677
 Nield v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 10 Exch. 4. 832
 Noe v. Moutray, 170 Ill. 169. 406
 Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 462. 153
 Noonan v. State, 55 Wis. 258. 122
 Norfolk v. Chamberlain, 89 Va. 196, 213. 836
 Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Mgrs. of World's Columbian Exposition, 93 Ky. 543, 18 L. R. A. 556. 705
 Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. 429, 14 L. ed. 210. 289
 Norristown v. Fitzpatrick, 94 Pa. 121. 297
 North American Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212. 694, 695
 Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 128 Pa. 132. 494
 North Bridgewater Bank v. Copeland, 7 Allen, 139. 160
 Northern C. R. Co. v. Baltimore, 46 Md. 425. 640
 v. Baltimore, 46 Md. 445. 639
 North Shore R. Co. v. Plon, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 612, Affirming 14 Can. S. C. 677. 795
 North State Copper & Gold Min. Co. v. Field, 64 Md. 151. 398
 Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 639, 24 L. ed. 1036. 641
 Northwestern Traveling Men's Assn. v. Schauss, 148 Ill. 304. 652, 654
 43 L. R. A.

Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 836, 837
 v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 161 Mass. 259, 24 L. R. A. 158. 836
 Nourse v. Packard, 138 Mass. 307. 579
 Noyes v. Wyckoff, 114 N. Y. 204. 523

O.

O'Brien v. Young, 95 N. Y. 428, 47 Am. Rep. 64. 636
 O'Connor v. Illinois C. R. Co. 44 La. Ann. 339. 152
 O'Donnell v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co. 89 Mich. 174. 575
 Ogden City R. Co. v. Ogden City, 7 Utah, 207. 235
 Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499. 440
 O'Hear v. De Goesbriand, 33 Vt. 593. 670
 Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258-267, 24 L. ed. 693-695. 426
 Old Colony & F. R. Co. v. Plymouth County, 14 Gray, 155. 639
 Old Colony R. Co. v. Tripp, 147 Mass. 35. 136
 Oliver v. Oliver, 169 Mass. 592. 156, 159
 v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485. 440
 Omaha v. Bowman, 52 Neb. 293, 40 L. R. A. 531. 151
 Omaha, N. & B. H. R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 22 Neb. 475. 644
 Opinion of the Justices, 13 Gray 618. 157, 158
 Ordway v. Haynes, 50 N. H. 159. 535
 Osborne v. McMaster, 40 Minn. 103. 188
 Osterhout v. Rigney, 98 N. Y. 222. 883
 Otis v. Still, 8 Barb. 108. 591
 Ottawa v. Walker, 21 Ill. 605, 71 Am. Dec. 121. 447
 Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422. 151
 Oviatt v. Akron Street R. Co. 2 Ohio N. P. 84. 235

P.

Pabodie v. King, 12 Johns. 426. 687
 Page v. Cook, 164 Mass. 116, 28 L. R. A. 759. 221
 v. Gardner, 20 Mo. 508. 591
 Palne v. Caswell, 68 Me. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 21. 636
 Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 33 L. ed. 772. 731
 Pantton Turnp. Co. v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 198. 448
 Parker v. Adams, 12 Met. 415, 46 Am. Dec. 694. 113
 v. C. Lamb & Sons, 99 Iowa, 265, 34 L. R. A. 704. 698
 v. Walker, 56 Tenn. 566. 603
 Parmater v. State, Drake, 102 Ind. 90. 415
 Parmelee v. Thompson, 45 N. Y. 58, 6 Am. Rep. 83. 688
 Paterson R. Co. v. Grundy, 51 N. J. Eq. 213. 560
 Patrick v. Putman, 27 Vt. 759. 813
 Patrick Land Co. v. Leavenworth, 42 Neb. 715. 627
 Patterson v. Wold, 38 Fed. Rep. 703, 791. 198
 Paul v. Travellers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L. R. A. 443. 694
 Pauley v. Steam Gauge & Lantern Co. 131 N. Y. 90, 15 L. R. A. 194. 188
 Paulino v. Portuguese Ben. Assn. 18 R. I. 165, 20 L. R. A. 272. 99
 Payne v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 136 Mo. 562 519
 Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 217 (Gil. 137) 535
 Peck v. Hutchinson, 88 Iowa, 320. 536
 v. Lockwood, 5 Day, 22. 616
 Peet v. Hatcher, 112 Ala. 514. 387
 Pekin v. Brereton, 87 Ill. 477, 16 Am. Rep. 629. 563, 564
 v. Winkel, 77 Ill. 56. 563, 564
 Pendleton v. Kingsley, 3 Cliff. 416. 85, 86
 Pennington v. Detroit G. H. & M. R. Co. 90 Mich. 505. 575
 Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 732, 24 L. ed. 565, 572. 619
 Pennsylvania Co. v. Fairchild, 69 Ill. 260 213, 387
 Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Braddock Electric R. Co. 1 Pa. Dist. R. 626. 235
 v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 118 U. S. 290, 298, 30 L. ed. 83, 87. 396

People v. Arensberg, 105 N. Y. 123, 59 Am. Rep. 483	276	Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572	204, 206
v. Arensberg, 103 N. Y. 388, 57 Am. Rep. 741	294	Philadelphia v. Pennsylvania Hospital for Insane, 154 Pa. 9	501
v. Bradley, 83 N. Y. S. R. 562	401	v. Women's Christian Assn. 125 Pa. 572	501
v. Bridges, 142 Ill. 30, 16 L. R. A. 684	293	Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Ervin, 89 Pa. 71, 33 Am. Rep. 726	188
v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75	245	Phillips v. Dunkirk, W. & P. R. Co. 78 Pa. 177	446
v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559	276	Pierce v. Cunard S. S. Co. 153 Mass. 87	87
v. Clipperty, 101 N. Y. 634	276	v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 145 Mass. 56	398
v. City Bank, 96 N. Y. 32	842	v. Proprietors of Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I. 227, 14 Am. Rep. 667	390
v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 14 L. R. A. 285	159	Pilkington v. Scott, 15 Mees. & W. 657	801
v. Daniels, 6 Utah, 285, 5 L. R. A. 444	82, 83	Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 584	536
v. Davidson, 39 Cal. 379	794	Piper v. Pearson, 2 Gray. 120, 61 Am. Dec. 438	632
v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 25 L. R. A. 704	294	Pitkin v. Frink, 8 Met. 12	451
v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co. 92 Mich. 522, 16 L. R. A. 752	235	Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157	562
v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389	270	Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 35	440
v. Girard, 148 N. Y. 389	270	Plant Seed Co. v. Michel Plant & Seed Co. 23 Mo. App. 579, affirmed, 37 Mo. App. 313	99
v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482, 42 Am. Rep. 477	535	Playford v. United Kingdom Electric Light Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. 706, 10 Best & S. 759	283
v. Havnor, 140 N. Y. 105, 31 L. R. A. 689	276	Police Jury v. Britton, 15 Wall. 566, 21 L. ed. 251	425
v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 328, 337	276	Polling v. Ohio River R. Co. 38 W. Va. 645, 24 L. R. A. 215	153
v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188	446	Pomero v. Mills, 3 Vt. 279, 23 Am. Dec. 207	380
v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 1 L. R. A. 293	519	v. Westfield, 154 Mass. 462	834
v. Lyons, 51 Mich. 215	519	Portland & R. R. Co. v. Deering, 23 Am. Eng. R. Cas. 51, note, 78 Me. 61	643
v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34	270	Portland & Valley R. Co. v. Portland, 14 Or. 188, 58 Am. Rep. 298	447
v. Mortimer, 46 Cal. 114	157	Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575, 7 L. R. A. 474	218
v. New York & M. B. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 685, 569	684	v. Zoph, 93 Tenn. 374	187, 189
v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255	245	Potter v. The Majestic, 23 L. R. A. 746, note, 20 U. S. App. 503, 60 Fed. Rep. 625, 9 C. C. A. 181	387
v. Peacock, 6 Cow. 73	239-241, 245	Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459, 24 L. ed. 525	274
v. Petrea, 92 N. Y. 143	251	Powell v. Missouri P. R. Co. 76 Mo. 80	518
v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 283, 23 L. R. A. 221	251	Powers v. Silberstein, 108 N. Y. 169	688
v. Sickles, 156 N. Y. 547	401	Pratt v. Gardner, 2 Cush. 63, 48 Am. Dec. 652	632
v. Sinell, 34 N. Y. S. R. 898	401	Price, Re 67 N. Y. 231	263
v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250, 2 L. R. A. 494	401	Price v. Great Western R. Co. 16 Mees. & W. 244	636
v. Wagner, 86 Mich. 594, 13 L. R. A. 286, 24 Am. St. Rep. 141	294	Priestley v. Fowler, 8 Mees. & W. 1	348
v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 60 Am. Rep. 452	277	Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 612, 10 L. ed. 1088	415
v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 581, 44 Am. Rep. 20	536	Proctor v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 64 Mo. 119	573
v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 195, 16 Am. Rep. 528	721, 723	Proprietors of Mt. Auburn Cemetery v. Cambridge, 150 Mass. 12, 4 L. R. A. 836	836
People, Bloomington, v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 67 Ill. 118	639	Prospect Park & C. I. R. Co. v. Coney Island & B. R. Co. 144 N. Y. 152, 26 L. R. A. 610	857
Bradley v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 413, 23 L. R. A. 139	159	Protection L. Ins. Co. Re 9 Bias. 188	653
Clauson v. Newburgh & S. Pl. Road Co. 86 N. Y. 6	252	Pruden v. Love, 67 Ga. 100	633
Connor, v. Stapleton, 18 Colo. 568, 28 L. R. A. 787	723	Pruyn v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 368	636
Cooke, v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 374	275	Pulling v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 110	572
Copcutt, v. Yonkers Bd. of Health, 140 N. Y. 23, 2 L. R. A. 481	734	Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Bluhm, 109 Ill. 20, 50 Am. Rep. 601	802
Elmsfeld, v. Murray, 149 N. Y. 367, 376, 32 L. R. A. 841	274	v. State, 64 Tex. 274	617
Fowler, v. Bull, 46 N. Y. 57, 7 Am. Rep. 302	414	Putnam v. Sweet, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 286	99
Henderson, v. Westchester County Supers. 147 N. Y. 1, 30 L. R. A. 74	277
Johnson v. Delaware County Supers. 45 N. Y. 106, 199	683
Kimball, v. Boston & A. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 569	275
Lawrence, v. Westchester County Supers. 73 N. Y. 173	683
Moloney, v. Kirk, 162 Ill. 138	793
Nechamus, v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718	276
O'Connor, v. Queens County Supers. 153 N. Y. 370	683
Ready, v. Syracuse, 144 N. Y. 63	682
Swigert, v. Golden Rule, 114 Ill. 35	651
Wakely, v. McIntyre, 154 N. Y. 628	688
Williams, v. Dayton, 55 N. Y. 367, 378	274
Witherbee, v. Essex County Supers. 70 N. Y. 228	687
Woodhaven Gaslight Co., v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528	675
People's Bank v. Kurtz, 99 Pa. 344, 44 Am. Rep. 112	786
People's Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Billing, 104 Mich. 186	692
Peoria & P. U. R. Co. v. Peoria & F. R. Co. 105 Ill. 110	640
Perkins v. Lawrence, 136 Mass. 305	440
Perry v. Central R. Co. 66 Ga. 746	403
v. State, 0 Wis. 20	251
v. Truett, 6 Beav. 66	100
Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 845	151, 153
v. State, 96 Tenn. 682, 38 L. R. A. 114	293
Petersburg v. Applegarth, 28 Gratt. 321, 26 Am. Rep. 357	440
63 L. R. A.

Q.

Quackenbush v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 458	536
Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 463, 80 L. R. A. 82	187, 188
Quimby v. Vanderbilt, 17 N. Y. 306, 72 Am. Dec. 469	273, 275
Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill. 231, 20 Am. Rep. 243	380

R.

Racho v. Detroit, 90 Mich. 92	575, 577
Rafferty v. Central Traction Co. 147 Pa. 579	559
Rahrer, Re, 140 U. S. 554, 35 L. ed. 574	273
Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Assn. v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 138	651

Ramot v. Schotenfels, 15 Iowa, 458, 83	221
Am. Dec. 425
Ramsey County v. Macalester College, 51
Minn. 437, 18 L. R. A. 278	494
Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 19 L. ed.
285	632
Ratte v. Dawson, 50 Minn. 450	152
Ratzky v. People, 29 N. Y. 124	157
Rawson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. Y.
212, 8 Am. Rep. 543, 142, 143, 273, 275
Read v. Dingess, 8 U. S. App. 526, 60 Fed.
Rep. 21, 8 C. C. A. 389	733, 734
v. Great Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B.
555	571, 572, 573
v. Morse, 43 Wis. 319	516, 518
Reddaway v. Banham [1896] A. C. 199	830
Reed v. Pierce, 36 Me. 455, 58 Am. Dec. 761	193
Reg. v. Taylor, 13 Cox Crim. Cas. 77	535
Reichenbach v. Ellerbe, 115 Mo. 588, 509, 518
Reid v. Norfolk City R. Co. 86 L. R. A. 274,
94 Va. 117	235
v. State, Thompson, 74 Ind. 252, 260	735
Reiff v. Horst, 52 Md. 255	842
Relly v. Albany, 112 N. Y. 80	682
v. Racine, 51 Wis. 526	434
Reinkin v. Fuerhring, 130 Ind. 382, 15 L.
R. A. 624	836
Remington v. Irwin, 14 Fa. 143	204
Renner v. Bennett, 21 Ohio St. 431	700
Reynolds v. Ward, 5 Wend. 501	687
Rhawn v. Pearce, 110 Ill. 350, 51 Am. Rep.
691	825
Rhodes v. Farish, 16 Mo. App. 430	518
v. Rhodes, 3 Sandf. Ch. 279	430, 432
Rice v. National Bank of the Commonwealth, 126 Mass. 300	99
v. Stone, 1 Allen. 569	592
Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467	151
v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 124 Ill. 516	662
v. New York, 10 Jones & S. 315	442
R'chman v. Muscatine County Supers. 77
Iowa, 513, 4 L. R. A. 445	692
Richmond v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 87
Mich. 374	575
v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461	440
v. Taylor, 1 P. Wms. 734	263
Ricketts v. Birmingham Street R. Co. 85
Ala. 604	299
Rigby v. Macnamara, 6 Ves. Jr. 515	148
Riggin v. Magwire, 15 Wall. 549, 21 L. ed.
232	193, 194
Riggs v. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co. 125 N.
Y. 7, 10 L. R. A. 684	667
Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64	562, 563
Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec.
646	621
Riley v. Connecticut River R. Co. 135 Mass.
292	578
Ripley v. Aetna Ins. Co. 30 N. Y. 136, 86
Am. Dec. 362	457
v. Crooker, 47 Me. 370, 74 Am. Dec. 491	165
Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 610	536
Risley v. Phenix Bank, 83 N. Y. 318, 38
Am. Rep. 421	262
Ritter v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 169 U. S. 139,
42 L. ed. 693	539
Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 52 Am.
Dec. 352	107
Robbins v. Potter, 98 Mass. 532	209
Roberts v. Northern P. R. Co. 158 U. S. 1,
27, 29, 39 L. ed. 873, 882, 883	197
Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec.
67	111, 113
v. Greenville, 42 Ohio St. 630, 51 Am.
Rep. 857	296
v. Macdonnell, 5 Maule & S. 228	592
v. Mobley, 1 Bush. 196	554
v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 307	411
Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Shunick,
65 Ill. 223	533
Rockhold v. Canton Masonic Mut. Benev.
Soc. 129 Ill. 440	651
Roddy v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 82 App.
Div. 311	241
Rogers v. Central Loan & T. Co. 49 Neb. 676 626
v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 324	452
v. Squires, 98 N. Y. 49	260
v. Windoes, 48 Mich. 628	570, 576
Rouse v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St.
493, 5 L. R. A. 378	823-826
Rowzee v. Pierce, 75 Miss. 846, 40 L. R. A.
402	154
Ruddell v. Ambler, 18 Ark. 369	522
Ruggles's Report, 4 Bradf. 503, Appx.	390
Rush v. Smith, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 94	678
43 L. R. A.

Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339,
358, 19 L. ed. 955, 961	857
R. W. Rogers Co. v. Wm. Rogers Mfg. Co.
17 C. C. A. 576, and note, 35 U. S.
App. 843, 70 Fed. Rep. 1017	99
Ryan v. Dayton, 25 Conn. 188, 65 Am. Dec.
560	813
v. Duncan, 88 Ill. 144	662

S.

St. Louis v. Gurno, 12 Mo. 414	564
St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Adcock, 52
Ark. 406, 410	369, 375
St. Nicholas Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 128
N. Y. 26, 13 L. R. A. 241	826
St. Paul & N. P. R. Co. v. Bradbury, 42
Minn. 222	845
St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall.
272, 19 L. ed. 74	795, 796
St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bennett, 32 U. S.
App. 621, 69 Fed. Rep. 525, 16 C. C.
A. 300	371
Salinas v. Wright, 11 Tex. 572	220
Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458,
8 Am. Rep. 354	183
Sams v. Sams, 85 Ky. 396	773, 776
San Antonio Rapid Transit Street R. Co. v.
Limbarger, 88 Tex. 79	235
Sanders v. State, 74 Ga. 82	400, 401
Sanfiet v. Toledo, 10 Ohio C. C. 460	235
Sanford v. Gates, T. & Co. 21 Mont.—, 53
Pac. 749	126
San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9
Cal. 453	441
Santa Cruz v. Enright, 95 Cal. 105	132
Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 548	263
Savin, Petitioner, 131 U. S. 267, 33 L. ed.
50	723
Sayre v. Glenn, 87 Ala. 631	194
Seagle v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 83
Iowa, 380	535
Schracherl v. St. Paul City R. Co. 42 Minn.
42	299
Schell v. Plumb, 55 N. Y. 598	535
Schlacker v. Ashland Iron Min. Co. 89
Mich. 253	575
Schloss v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 85
Tex. 601	231
Schmalzried v. White, 97 Tenn. 45, 32 L. R.
A. 782	168
Schneider v. Provident L. Ins. Co. 24 Wis.
28, 1 Am. Rep. 157	695
v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391	89
Schofield v. Walker, 58 Mich. 96	842
Schurtz v. Colvin, 55 Ohio St. 274	784
Scott v. Flablate, 117 N. C. 265, 30 L. R.
A. 696	632
v. Kittanning Coal Co. 89 Pa. 231, 83
Am. Rep. 753	384
v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurlst. &
C. 596	444
v. Manchester, 2 Hurlst. & N. 204	441
v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892	832
Scranton v. Hyde Park Gas Co. 102 Pa.
382	638
Searcy v. Kirkpatrick, Cooke, 211	191
Searls v. Knapp, 5 S. D. 325	289
Sears v. Dennis, 105 Mass. 310, 313	834
Selbert v. Erie R. Co. 49 Barb. 586	518
Selover v. Bryant, 21 L. R. A. 418, note,
54 Minn. 434	677
Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450	202
v. Hill, 5 Sneed. 505	191
Separate School Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Sinton,
41 Ohio St. 504	787
Seyden v. State, 78 Ga. 105	400
Seymour v. Canandaigua & N. F. R. Co. 25
Barb. 305	591
Sharkey v. McDermott, 60 Am. Rep. 270	431
Sharp v. Dunavan, 17 B. Mon. 223	342
v. Lockwood, 12 Conn. 155, 159	836
Sharpe v. Speir, 4 Hill. 82
Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59
Am. Dec. 759	412
Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 358	567
v. First Baptist Church, 44 Minn. 22	845
v. Rigby, 84 Ind. 375, 43 Am. Rep. 96	636
Shawneetown v. Mason, 82 Ill. 337, 25 Am.
Rep. 321	563
Sheehan v. Good Samaritan Hospital, 50
Mo. 155, 11 Am. Rep. 412	836
Sheehy v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 94 Mo.
574	562
Sheffield & T. Street R. Co. v. Rand, 83 Ala.
294	380, 381

Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406.....	157	State v. Howard, 10 Iowa, 161.....	536
Sheridan v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 36	852	v. Jones, 18 Tex. 874.....	447
N. Y. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 490.....	274	v. Kaiser, 20 Or. 50, 8 L. R. A. 584.....	722, 723
Sherman v. Ailing, 93 U. S. 99, 103, 23 L.	569	v. Laverack, 34 N. J. L. 201.....	447
ed. 819, 820.....	581	v. Lewis, 134 Ind. 250, 20 L. R. A. 52.....	293
Sherman v. Western Stage Co. 24 Iowa, 515	842	v. Lockyear, 95 N. C. 633, 59 Am. Rep.	401
Sherwood v. Central Michigan Sav. Bank,		287.....	252
103 Mich. 109.....		v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39.....	575, 581
Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 9, 38 L. ed.		v. Maine C. R. Co. 60 Me. 490.....	488, 489
335.....		v. Maine C. R. Co. 76 Me. 357, 49 Am.	488, 489
v. Semi-Tropic Land & W. Co. 99 Cal. 250		Rep. 622.....	789
Shugart v. Egan, 83 Ill. 56, 25 Am. Rep.		v. Matthews, 37 N. H. 450.....	400
359.....		v. Mercer, 32 Iowa, 405.....
Sillers v. Lester, 48 Miss. 526.....	145	v. Mrozinski, 59 Minn. 465, 27 L. R. A.	293
Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 448, 34	619	76.....	401
L. ed. 1054, 1059.....	235	v. Neils, 108 N. C. 787, 12 L. R. A. 412.....	535
v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. 535.....		v. O'Brien, 7 R. I. 336.....
Simon v. Northup, 27 Or. 487, 30 L. R. A.	447	v. Roberts, 59 N. H. 256, 47 Am. Rep.	293
171.....	735	199.....	494
Simpson v. Edmonst, 23 W. Va. 680.....	853	v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497.....	727
v. Hand, 6 Whart. 311, 36 Am. Dec. 231	789	v. South Penn. Oil Co. 42 W. Va. 102.....	693
Sims, Jr., 54 Kan. 1, 25 L. R. A. 110.....	695	v. Squires, 26 Iowa, 340.....	804
Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co. 3 El.	342	v. Stewart, 59 Vt. 273, 59 Am. Rep. 710	157
& El. 478.....		v. Turner, 8 Bart. 203.....	413
Sing Cheong Co. v. Yung Wing, 59 Conn.	830	State, Atty. Gen. v. McGovney, 92 Mo. 428	159
535, 543.....	100	Atty. Gen. v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629	123
Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co. 163 U. S.	100	Barton, v. McCracken, 51 Ohio St. 123	414, 417
169, 41 L. ed. 118.....	100	Bumsted, v. Govern, 47 N. J. L. 368, 48	80
v. Riley, 11 Fed. Rep. 706.....	100	N. J. L. 612.....	388
v. Stange, 6 Fed. Rep. 279.....	857	Carly, v. Andriano, 92 Mo. 70.....	413, 415
Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Union Button-		Carson, v. Harrison, 113 Ind. 434.....	412
hole & E. Co. Holmes, 253.....	700	Clark, v. Haworth, 122 Ind. 462, 7 L. R.	412
Sinks v. Reese, 19 Ohio St. 306, 2 Am. Rep.	789	A. 240.....	35
297.....	403	Colburn v. Oberlin Bldg. & L. Asso. 35	426
State, 11 Lea. 281.....	403	Ohio St. 263.....	412
Sira v. Wabash R. Co. 115 Mo. 127.....	644	Erwing v. Bell, 116 Ind. 1.....	723
Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Kerr, 45 Barb. 138, 640,	432	Haskell, v. Faulda, 17 Mont. 140.....	251
Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L.	390	Kansas City & S. R. Co., v. Slover, 134	235
ed. 394.....	389	Mo. 607.....	640, 642-644
Slingerland v. Slingerland, 39 Minn. 187,	403	Kennelly, v. Jersey City, 57 N. J. L. 293,	836
432.....	554	26 L. R. A. 281.....	644
Smith v. Bartlett, 6 Ohio C. C. 234.....	261	Lancaster County, v. Chicago, B. & O. R.	644
Smith, Ex parte, 53 Cal. 204.....	733	Co. 29 Neb. 412.....	644
Smith v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 33 L. ed.	218	McClosky, v. Chamberlin, 37 N. J. L.	836
279.....	691	388.....	644
v. Chapman, 10 Gratt. 445.....	222	Minneapolis, v. Minneapolis & St. L. R.	644
v. Goodrich, 187 Ill. 46.....	126	Co. 39 Minn. 219.....	644
v. Hornback, 8 A. K. Marsh. 392.....	837	Minneapolis, v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co.	644
v. McGaughey, 87 Tex. 61.....	735	35 Minn. 131.....	644
v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336.....		Morris, v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co.	644
v. Nelson, 62 N. Y. 268.....		86 Mo. 13, 29 Am. & Eng. R. Cas.	644
v. Tharp, 17 W. Va. 221.....		604.....	401
v. Western U. Tele. Co. 83 Ky. 104.....		Newark, v. Essex Club, 55 N. J. L. 99.....	401
v. Wolf, 55 Iowa, 555.....		New York & L. B. R. Co., v. Drummond,	640
Smithers v. Junker, 41 Fed. Rep. 101, 7 L.		46 N. J. L. 644, 20 Am. & Eng. R.	640
R. 264.....		Cas. 16.....	848
Snead v. Tietjen (Aris.), 24 Pac. 324.....		New York L. Ins. Co., v. Phillips, 96 Mo.	848
126.....		573.....	635
Snow v. Fitchburg, 136 Mass. 183.....		Parrott, v. Ohio Public Works, 36 Ohio	415
Sommers v. Ward, 41 W. Va. 80.....		St. 409.....	412
Southard v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 34		Perry, v. Arrington, 18 Nev. 412.....	415
Conn. 574.....		Pilmer v. Poston, 58 Ohio St. 620, 42	93
Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Price (Md.) 42		L. R. A. 237.....	412
L. R. A. 206.....		Reese, v. Bogard, 128 Ind. 480.....	413
Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 168		Roebling, v. Trenton Pass. R. Co. 33 L.	235
U. S. 1, 50, 42 L. ed. 355, 377.....		R. A. 129, 58 N. J. L. 606.....
South Side Pass. R. Co. v. Trich, 117 Pa.		St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., v. Hennepin	642
390.....		County Dist. Ct. 42 Minn. 247, 7 L.	411
Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38		R. A. 121.....	638
L. R. A. 512.....		Smith, v. McClelland, 138 Ind. 395.....	415
Speir v. Brooklyn, 139 N. Y. 6, 21 L. R. A.		Staff, v. Barlow, 103 Ind. 503.....	836
641.....		Stateler v. Reis, 38 Minn. 371.....	412
Spencer v. Maxfield, 16 Wis. 179.....		Terre Haute, v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 434, 14	638
Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 87 Mo. 74.....		L. R. A. 566.....	789
Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68		Thels, Bowen, 11 Wash. 432.....	419
Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638.....		Van Orden, v. Sauvinet, 24 La. Ann. 119,	730
Springfield v. Gay, 12 Allen, 612.....		13 Am. Rep. 115.....	274
Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville,		Willson, v. Wells, 144 Ind. 231.....	287
148 N. Y. 46, 30 L. R. A. 660.....		State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall.	592
443.....		319, 21 L. ed. 186.....	102
Staats v. Board, 10 Gratt. 400.....		State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 15	648
273.....		Wall. 284, 21 L. ed. 164.....	284
State Case, 85 Ill. 377.....		Staub v. Kendrick, 121 Ind. 226, 6 L. R.	126
Stafford v. American Mills Co. 13 R. I. 310		A. 819.....	85
Stanton v. Maynard, 7 Allen, 335.....		Steele v. Ashenfelter, 40 Neb. 770.....	287
452.....		Stehmeyer v. Charleston (S. C.) 31 S. E.
Stanwood v. McLellan, 48 Me. 275.....		322.....
Stark v. Starr, 94 U. S. 477, 485, 24 L. ed.		Sterling's Appeal, 111 Pa. 35, 56 Am. Rep.	648
276, 278.....		246.....	284
State v. Anderson, 40 Iowa, 207.....		Stevens v. Central Nat. Bank, 144 N. Y. 50	126
v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L. R. A. 498,		v. Pierce, 131 Mass. 207.....
4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694.....		Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. 90 N. Y.	85
v. Frew, 24 W. Va. 416, 49 Am. Rep. 257		583, 43 Am. Rep. 185.....
v. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 439, 33 L. R. A.		Stimson v. Connecticut River R. Co. 98	287
313.....		Mass. 83, 93 Am. Dec. 140.....
v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 61 Me. 114, 14
Am. Rep. 552.....
v. Guenther, 87 Wis. 673.....
v. Heinemann, 80 Wis. 253, 27 Am. St.
Rep. 34.....
v. Horacek, 41 Kan. 87, 3 L. R. A. 687
43 L. R. A.....

Stirling v. Buckingham, 46 Conn. 461....	622
Stoddard v. Winchester, 157 Mass. 567....	440
Stokes v. Frasier, 72 Ill. 428.....	748
v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 173, 13 Am. Rep. 492.....	250
Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 52, 29 Am. Rep. 458.....	138, 139
v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079.....	642, 702
Stones v. Keeling, 5 Call (Va.) 143.....	775
Storey v. People, 79 Ill. 45.....	721
Storms v. Smith, 137 Mass. 201.....	525
Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146.....	447, 585
Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 558.....	536
Stout v. Cook, 41 Ill. 447.....	682
Strader v. Goff, 6 W. Va. 257.....	734
Stranahan Bros. Catering Co. v. Colt, 55 Ohio St. 398.....	784
Strickland v. Stillwater, 63 Minn. 43, 586, 587.....	587
Strong v. Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1.....	447
Stuart v. Nelson, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 200.....	191
v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 189, 30 Am. Rep. 289.....	836
Sturoc's Case (N. H.) 97 Am. Dec. 630.....	722
Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 33 L. ed. 761.....	132, 184
.....	322, 323
Styles v. Tyler, 24 Conn. 432.....	516
Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent, 58 N. J. L. 658, 32 L. R. A. 700.....	127
Sully v. Schmitt, 147 N. Y. 248.....	395
Sulz v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. N. Y. 563, 568, 28 L. R. A. 379.....	141
Summit v. State, 8 Lea, 413, 41 Am. Rep. 637.....	842
Sunderlin v. Mecosta County Sav. Bank (Mich.) 4 Det. L. N. 1115, 74 N. W. 478.....	674
Sun Printing & Pub. Asso. v. New York, 152 N. Y. 257, 265, 37 L. R. A. 788.....	395
Supreme Commandery K. of G. R. v. Alna-worth, 71 Ala. 436, 443, 46 Am. Rep. 332.....	694
Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298.....	776
Sutphin v. Cox, 1 Western Law Monthly, 346.....	431
Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101.....	482
Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall. 254, 19 L. ed. 554.....	395
Swan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 155 N. Y. 9.....	575
Sweet v. Michigan C. R. Co. 87 Mich. 559.....	682
Swift v. New York, 83 N. Y. 528, 533.....	426
v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1-18, 10 L. ed. 863-871.....	801
Sykes v. Dixon, 9 Ad. & El. 693.....

T.

Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. 16 R. I. 668, 7 L. R. A. 205.....	235
Talinter v. Worcester, 123 Mass. 811, 25 Am. Rep. 90.....	440
Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray. 417.....	640
Talcott v. Buffalo, 125 N. Y. 280.....	684
Talty v. Atlantic, 92 Iowa. 135.....	152
Tanner v. Valentine, 75 Ill. 624.....	647
Tate v. Salmon, 79 Ky. 543.....	706
Taylor v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 45 Mich. 74, 40 Am. Rep. 457.....	188
v. Lewis, 2 J. J. Marsh. 400, 19 Am. Dec. 135.....	554
v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 254.....	836
v. Plymouth, 8 Met. 462.....	832
v. Shelton, 30 Conn. 122.....	831
Tebbetts v. Charleston, 33 W. Va. 705.....	733
Teft v. Stewart, 31 Mich. 367.....	567, 568
Templeman v. Steptoe, 1 Munf. 339.....	775
Templeton v. Montpelier, 56 Vt. 328.....	113
Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem, 123 Ind. 15, 7 L. R. A. 538.....	121
Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 40 L. ed. 940, 5 Intern. Com. Rep. 405.....	545, 546
Texas P. R. Co. v. Nicholson, 61 Tex. 491.....	232
Thacker v. Booth, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 747.....	553
Thayer v. Spear, 58 Vt. 327.....	528
Thiel College v. Mercer County, 101 Pa. 530.....	501
Thomas v. Gain, 35 Mich. 162, 24 Am. Rep. 535.....	836
v. Ireland, 88 Ky. 581.....	554
Thompson v. Jackson, 27 L. R. A. 92, 95, 93 Iowa. 376.....	632
v. Lee, 21 Ill. 242.....	656
43 L. R. A. ....

Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061.....	157, 158
Thomson v. Gortner, 73 Md. 475.....	222
Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 114.....	852
Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625.....	294
Thresher v. Dyer, 69 Conn. 404, 408.....	322, 327
Tidewater Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 527, 90 Am. Dec. 634.....	836
Tiernan v. Wilson, 6 Johns. Ch. 411.....	264
Tiffany v. United States Illuminating Co. 19 Jones & S. 280.....	647
Tingley v. Cutler, 7 Conn. 297.....	204
Titus v. Great Western Turnp. Co. 61 N. Y. 287.....	784, 786, 787
Todd v. Davey, 60 Iowa. 532.....	522
Toledo, W. & W. R. R. Co. v. Beggs, 85 Ill. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 613.....	213
Tome v. Parkersburg Branch R. Co. 39 Md. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 540.....	785, 786
Tompkins v. Dudley, 25 N. Y. 272.....	666
Tootell, Ex parte , 4 Ves. Jr. 372.....	220
Torrey v. Bank of Orleans, 9 Paige, 649, 603.....	747
Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294.....	293, 411
Tracy v. New York & H. R. Co. 9 Bosw. 396, 398, 402.....	369
v. Williams, 4 Conn. 107, 10 Am. Dec. 102.....	682
Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547, 557, 65 Fed. Rep. 178, 184, 27 L. R. A. 629, 12 C. C. A. 544, 550.....	371
v. Selden, 42 U. S. App. 253, 78 Fed. Rep. 285, 24 C. C. A. 92.....	519
Traver v. Stevens, 11 Cush. 167.....	452
Tremblay v. Harnden, 162 Mass. 383.....	122
Trottinger v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 11 Lea, 533.....	141, 142
Trow v. Vermont C. R. Co. 24 Vt. 487, 58 Am. Dec. 191.....	113
Truman v. Lore, 14 Ohio St. 154.....	538
Tubbs v. Wilhoit, 73 Cal. 61.....	388
Tucker v. Donald, 60 Misc. 460, 45 Am. Rep. 416.....	535
Tully v. Fitchburg R. Co. 134 Mass. 499.....	569
Turner v. Esselman, 15 Ala. 690.....	194
v. Haar, 114 Mo. 335.....	518
"Turntable Cases" (St. Louis City & P. R. Co. v. Stout) 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745.....	152, 153
Tuttle v. Polk, 84 Iowa. 12.....	692
Twiggs v. Chevalle, 4 W. Va. 463.....	733, 734
Twitchell v. Pennsylvania, 7 Wall. 321, 19 L. ed. 223.....	42
Tyler v. Waddingham, 58 Conn. 375, 386, 8 L. R. A. 657.....	825

U.

Uggle v. West End Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 351.....	515
Ullshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. 170.....	724
Underwood v. McVeigh, 23 Gratt. 409.....	147
Union Inst. for Sav. v. Boston, 129 Mass. 82, 37 Am. Rep. 305.....	636
Union P. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 12 U. S. App. 541, 550, 56 Fed. Rep. 988, 993, 6 C. C. A. 205, 210.....	371
v. Yates, 49 U. S. App. 241, 79 Fed. Rep. 584, 25 C. C. A. 103, 40 L. R. A. 553.....	537
Union Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Gelbach, 8 Wash. 407, 24 L. R. A. 359.....	638
United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 344, 28 L. ed. 170.....	883
v. Boladore, 8 How. 113, 12 L. ed. 1009.....	289
v. Dickson, 15 Pet. 141, 10 L. ed. 689.....	497
v. Insley, 130 U. S. 263, 32 L. ed. 968.....	735
v. Long, 30 Fed. Rep. 678.....	656
v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 211, 34 L. ed. 336.....	635
v. Repentigny, 5 Wall. 267, 268, 18 L. ed. 645.....	733
v. Tynen, 11 Wall. 88, 20 L. ed. 153.....	289
United States, Angarica, v. Bayard, 127 U. S. 251, 32 L. ed. 159.....	635
United States Coal, I. & Mfg. Co. v. Randolph County Ct. 38 W. Va. 201.....	727
United States Mut. Accl. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60.....	695
Usher v. Pride, 15 Gratt. 190.....	733

- V.
- Vale v. Davenport, 6 Ves. Jr. 615..... 148
Valentine, Re, 72 N. Y. 184..... 262
Valentine v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 446..... 586
Van Arnem v. Ayres, 67 Barb. 544..... 116
Van Bracklin v. Fonda, 12 Johns. 467, 7 Am. Dec. 339..... 120
Van Brunt v. Cincinnati J. & M. R. Co. 78 Mich. 530..... 575
v. Flatbush, 123 N. Y. 50, 56..... 674, 675
Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 487..... 152
Vanderplank v. Miller, Moody & M. 189..... 853
Vanderpool v. State, 34 Ark. 174..... 632
Vandine's Case, 6 Pick. 187, 17 Am. Dec. 351..... 188
Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532..... 188
Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 370..... 430
Van Gunden v. Virginia Coal & I. Co. 8 U. S. App. 229, 52 Fed. Rep. 851, 3 C. C. A. 284..... 728
Van Horn v. Van Horn, 52 N. J. L. 284, 10 L. R. A. 184..... 801
Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 249..... 133
Van Skike v. Potter, 53 Neb. 288..... 537
Veenay v. Reeves, 6 Ind. 406..... 220
Vedder v. Fellows, 20 N. Y. 126, 133..... 367, 369, 375
Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 26..... 848
Vere v. Smith, 1 Vent. 121, 2 Lev. 5..... 851
Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Whitthred, 2 N. D. 82..... 692
Vicars v. Wilcocks, 8 East. 1..... 145
Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Phillips, 64 Miss. 693..... 577
Videau v. Griffin, 21 Cal. 302..... 533
Voght v. Buffalo, 133 N. Y. 463..... 681
Von Rosenberg v. Cuellar, 80 Tex. 249..... 604
Vorwerk v. Nolte, 87 Cal. 236..... 203
- W.
- Wagner v. Steffin, 38 Neb. 392..... 592
Walker v. Caywood, 81 N. Y. 51..... 448
v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555..... 801
v. Sauvignet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678..... 45
v. South Eastern R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. 640..... 85
Wall v. State, 23 Ind. 150..... 412
Wallace v. Stone, 107 Mich. 190..... 842
Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724..... 153
Walter v. People, 32 N. Y. 147..... 251
Wantian v. White, 19 Ind. 470..... 844
Ward v. Atlantic & P. Teleg. Co. 71 N. Y. 81, 27 Am. Rep. 10..... 516
v. Southfield, 102 N. Y. 287..... 261
v. Ward, 59 Conn. 188, 197..... 325
Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 42..... 535
Warner v. Blakeman, 4 Keyes. 487, 507..... 261
Warren v. Fenn, 28 Barb. 334..... 553
v. First Nat. Bank, 149 Ill. 9, 25 L. R. A. 748..... 824
v. Kaufman, 2 Phila. 259..... 444
v. Warren, 89 Mich. 127, 14 L. R. A. 545..... 116
Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 37 L. ed. 284..... 299
Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. 852, 8 Am. Rep. 255..... 836
Washington Street Asylum & P. R. Co., Re, 115 N. Y. 442, 447..... 274
Waterhouse v. Kendall, 11 Cush. 128..... 452
Webb v. Demopolis, 95 Ala. 116, 21 L. R. A. 62..... 378
v. Wright, 1 Bush, 107..... 558
Weber v. Board of State Harbor Comrs. 18 Wall. 57, 21 L. ed. 798..... 796
Webster v. Howe Mach. Co. 54 Conn. 394..... 426
Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L. R. A. 642..... 837
Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 8 L. R. A. 640..... 90
Wegman v. Childs, 41 N. Y. 159..... 724
Wells v. Weston, 22 Mo. 384..... 84
Werle v. Long Island R. Co. 98 N. Y. 650, 303 Werth v. Springfield, 78 Mo. 107..... 564
Westerman v. Means, 12 Pa. 97..... 202
Western & A. R. Co. v. Exposition Cotton Mills, 81 Ga. 522, 2 L. R. A. 102..... 214
Western Maryland R. Co. v. Franklin Bank, 60 Md. 38..... 784-786
Western Railway of Ala. v. Alabama G. T. R. Co. 96 Ala. 272, 17 L. R. A. 474..... 235
Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 188, 72 Am. Dec. 730..... 440
43 L. R. A.
- Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 6 L. R. A. 844..... 218
v. Allen, 66 Miss. 549..... 218
v. Barnea, 95 Tenn. 271..... 187
v. Bruner (Tex.) 19 S. W. 149..... 218
v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525..... 283
v. Dubois, 128 Ill. 248..... 218
v. Edeall, 74 Tex. 329..... 218
v. Edeall, 63 Tex. 677..... 283
v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1..... 218
v. Foster, 64 Tex. 220, 53 Am. Rep. 754..... 283, 284
v. Harding, 103 Ind. 505..... 218
v. Rogers, 42 N. J. Eq. 311..... 857
v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Fed. Rep. 423, 429..... 857
Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397..... 116
Wetmore v. Porter, 92 N. Y. 76..... 260
Whalley v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 131..... 832
Whelan v. Kinsley, 26 Ohio St. 131..... 749
Wheeler v. Bolton, 54 Cal. 302..... 389
v. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St. 19, 2 Am. Rep. 368..... 297
White v. Blake, 79 Me. 114..... 194
v. Cushing, 88 Me. 339, 38 Am. Dec. 362..... 453
v. Griffin, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 139..... 850
v. Lyons, 42 Cal. 279..... 638
Whitehead v. Parks, 2 Hurst. & N. 870..... 108
Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 465..... 577
Whitney v. Stone, 23 Cal. 275..... 203
Whitsett v. Ranson, 79 Mo. 258..... 518
Whittlesey v. Delaney, 73 N. Y. 575..... 261
Whitworth v. Gauguin, 3 Hare, 416..... 591
Whitsman v. Hirsch, 87 Tenn. 513..... 192
Wiant v. Hays, 33 W. Va. 68, 23 L. R. A. 82..... 738
Wilcox v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 334, 47 Am. Rep. 434..... 440
Wild v. Serpell, 10 Gratt. 405..... 733
Willey v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 52 Mich. 446..... 840
Wilkins v. Thorne, 60 Md. 253..... 398
Willamette Iron Works v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 26 Or. 224, 29 L. R. A. 88..... 446
Williams v. Burg, 9 Lea. 455..... 192
v. City Electric Street R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 556..... 235, 560
v. Dakin, 22 Wend. 201..... 203
v. Green, 14 Ark. 315..... 202
v. Hays, 143 N. Y. 442, 26 L. R. A. 153..... 256
v. Holland, 6 Car. & P. 23..... 113
v. New York C. R. Co. 18 Barb. 222..... 447
v. Shoudy, 12 Wash. 362..... 638
v. Slaughter, 3 Wis. 847..... 120
v. State, 100 Ga. 511, 39 L. R. A. 269..... 399
v. Williams, 20 Colo. 51..... 116
Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 231, 25 L. R. A. 222..... 726
v. Louisville Industrial School of Reform, 95 Ky. 251, 23 L. R. A. 200..... 704, 706
Willis v. Fry, 13 Phila. 33..... 786, 787
v. Long Island R. Co. 34 N. Y. 670..... 303
Willis v. Mulledy, 78 N. Y. 314, 34 Am. Rep. 536..... 188
Wilmerding v. McKesson, 103 N. Y. 329, 338..... 260
Wilson v. Albert, 89 Mo. 539..... 518
v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580, 35 L. R. A. 544..... 280
v. Carpenter, 91 Va. 192..... 809
v. Cobb, 31 N. J. Eq. 91..... 636
v. Little, 2 N. Y. 443, 51 Am. Dec. 307..... 752
v. Yous, 43 W. Va. 826, 39 L. R. A. 292..... 726
Wimer v. Wimer, 82 Va. 901..... 809
Windsor v. Des Moines, 101 Iowa, 843..... 692
Winning v. Eakin, 44 W. Va. 19..... 736
Winslow v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 4 Met. 306, 38 Am. Dec. 368..... 591
Winsor v. Lombard, 18 Pick. 57..... 120
Winsted Hosiery Co. v. New Britain Co. 69 Conn. 565, 575..... 327
Wise v. Freshley, 3 McCord. L. 548..... 518
Witcher v. Holland Waterworks Co. 66 Hun, 619, Affirmed, 142 N. Y. 626..... 674, 675
Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wall. 210, 18 L. ed. 339..... 730
Wolf v. Stix, 99 U. S. 1, 25 L. ed. 309..... 193, 194
Wolfe v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 197, 75 Am. Dec. 388..... 813
Wolsey v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 83 Ohio St. 227..... 368
Wood v. Gray [1892] A. C. 576..... 573
v. Hitchcock, 20 Wend. 47..... 523

Wood v. Holland, 53 Ark. 69, 57 Ark. 198	522	Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 19 L. R.
v. MacKinson, 2 Moody & R. 273	678	A. 84	406.
v. Macon & B. R. Co. 88 Ga. 539	640	Wyckoff v. Gardner, 4 Cent. Rep. 181	194
v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 177 Pa. 306, 35		Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 896,
L. R. A. 189	403	6 L. R. A. 545	112
Woodard v. Herbert, 24 Me. 358	194	Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378
Woodruff v. Erie R. Co. 93 N. Y. 609	239		240, 250, 275
v. Semi-Tropic Land & W. Co. 87 Cal.
275	203
Woolwine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W.
Va. 329, 16 L. R. A. 271	151,	Y.
Worden v. Humeston & P. R. Co. 76 Iowa,
310	535
Workman v. Worcester, 118 Mass. 168	837	Yates v. Judd, 18 Wis. 119	796.
Works v. Hershay, 35 Iowa. 340	220	v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 407, 19 L. ed.
Wright v. Bircher, 72 Mo. 179, 37 Am. Rep.		984	795, 796
433	590	Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 370, 30
v. Boston, 9 Cush. 283, 234	836,	L. ed. 220, 226	269
v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 76	448	Young v. Butler, 1 Head. 648	191
v. Irwin, 83 Mich. 32	280	v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370,
v. Lore, 12 Ohio St. 619	776	9 L. R. A. 669	218.
v. Miller, 8 N. Y. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 438	263	v. Wittenmyer, 128 Ill. 303	406
v. Miller, 1 Sandf. Ch. 103	363
v. New York C. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562, 569	365	Z.
v. Wright (Mich.) 58 N. W. 54	431
Wulsen v. San Francisco City & County
Supers. 101 Cal. 15	732	Zearing v. Baber, 74 Ill. 409	380
43 L. R. A.

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

ENGLAND.Statutes.*

6 Anne, chap. 31. Abrogation of common-law rule.....	187
3 Geo. II. chap. 25. Juries.....	250
6 Geo. IV. chap. 50. Juries.....	250

UNITED STATES.Constitutions.*

Art. 1, § 8, subd. 3. Power of Congress to regulate commerce.....	271
10. Ex post facto laws.....	156
2, § 2, subd. 1. Power of president to grant reprieves and pardons.....	789
Amend. 14. Equal protection of the laws; due process of law.....	271, 729, 837
§ 1, cl. 1. Citizenship.....	42
2. Privileges and immunities of citizens.....	42
3. Due process of law.....	43
5. Compensation for taking private property.....	82, 732
6. Right of accused in criminal prosecutions.....	41

Statutes.

1841, § 5. Bankruptcy act.....	193
1866, July 26, § 9. Canal right of way.....	132
1887, Feb. 4. Interstate-commerce law.....	386
chap. 46, § 4. Insurance in District of Columbia.....	396

Statutes at Large.

Vol. 1, p. 82, chap. 20, § 16. Limiting suits in equity.....	567
14, p. 251, chap. 262. Canal right of way.....	132
25, p. 369. Insurance in District of Columbia.....	396

Revised Statutes.

§§ 804, 805. Juries; impaneling by-standers.....	250
§ 2339. Canal right of way.....	132
5068. Bankruptcy act.....	190

ALABAMA.Code, 1896.*

§ 1193, subd. 8. Power of street railway companies.....	236
1199. Birmingham Traction Company.....	234
1200. Birmingham Traction Company.....	234

ARKANSAS.Sandels & Hill's Digest.*

§ 4870. License of dramshops or saloons.....	144
4873. Penalty for keeping dramshop without license.....	144
§§ 5096-5098. Acknowledgment of satisfaction.....	524
§ 5111. Right of redemption.....	521

CALIFORNIA.Civil Code.*

§ 1490. Performance of obligation.....	207
1492. Time as essence of contract.....	203
1670. Contracts fixing damages.....	201
1671. Contract fixing damages.....	201
1691. Rescission, how effected.....	205
§§ 3051, 3052. Laborer's lien.....	525
§ 3306. Breach of agreement in conveying real property.....	201
3307. Breach of agreement to purchase real property.....	201
3384. Specific performance of obligation compelled.....	201

43 L. R. A.

§ 3387. Distinction between real and personal property.....	201
3389. Specific enforcement of contract.....	201

Penal Code.

§ 292. Burial of the dead.....	389
--------------------------------	-----

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 18. Statutes inconsistent with repealed Code.....	721
---	-----

CONNECTICUT.Statutes.*

1822, p. 25. Property exempt from taxation.....	495
1882, chap. 98. Exemption of property of Yale College.....	496

Special Laws.

Vol. 10, p. 467. Yale University.....	491
---------------------------------------	-----

Private Laws.

Vol. 1, p. 472. Charter of Wesleyan College.....	496
481. Charter of Yale College, amendment to.....	496

General Statutes.

§ 3820. Exemption of colleges from taxation.....	491
3822. Exemption from taxation of property of Yale College.....	491

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.Compiled Statutes.*

P. 367, § 8. Priority of mortgage over liens.....	626
368, § 11. Right of defendant to file written undertaking.....	629

Revised Statutes.

§ 708. Mechanics' liens.....	629
------------------------------	-----

GEORGIA.Statutes.*

1890-91, p. 190. Power of superior courts to grant charters.....	631
1893, Dec. 1, p. 65. Superior court charters.....	631
Dec. 9, p. 335. Waresboro new charter.....	631

Civil Code.

§ 2999. What agent may do.....	403
3832. False imprisonment under warrant.....	633
§§ 3912, 3918. Damages.....	403

Political Code.

§§ 685-710. Provisions of charter.....	631
§ 752. Personal liability of officers.....	633

Penal Code.

§ 390. Tippling house.....	400
----------------------------	-----

ILLINOIS.Constitution, 1870.*

Art. 2, § 13. Compensation for taking private property.....	562
---	-----

Statutes.

1853, Feb. 12. Right of recovery for death from wrongful act.....	570
1869, March 26. Life insurance.....	651
1872, April 18. Corporations.....	650

1874, March 28. Corporations.....	650
31, § 8. Duty of railroad companies to construct crossings.....	642
1883, May 22. Corporations.....	650
1889, June 4. Corporations.....	650
1893, June 22. Insurance corporations...	650

Revised Statutes, 1874.

P. 228, § 9. Deposit of city funds in regularly organized banks.....	645
--	-----

Starr & Curtiss's Annotated Statutes.

Chap. 30, § 3. Conveyances.....	529
Vol. 1, pp. 1045, 1050, chap. 32, § 120 (ed. 2). Powers of association.....	428
Chap. 59, § 2. Specific performance of contract.....	532

INDIANA.

Constitution.

Art. 2, § 14. Day of general elections....	410
4, § 1. Legislative authority vested in general assembly.....	411
6, § 3. Election of county and township officers.....	412
15, § 2. Term of office.....	410
8. Continuation of term of office.....	412

Statutes.

1869, p. 57. Changing time of annual election.....	414
1889, March 9, p. 344. Elections.....	411
p. 425. Time for holding election....	411
1893, p. 192. Changing time for election of township officers....	410
1897, Feb. 25, p. 64. Changing time for election of township trustees.....	410

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 3879. Right of foreign corporations to acquire real estate..	825
4678. General elections; when held....	414

Revised Statutes, 1894.

§ 5008. Right of foreign corporations to acquire real estate.....	825
6190. General elections, when held....	414
6200. Changing time for election of township officers....	410

IOWA.

Statutes.

18th Gen. Assem. chap. 211, § 2. Attachment of application to insurance policy.....	538
26th Gen. Assem. chap. 85, § 9. Building and loan associations.....	691
27th Gen. Assem. chap. 48. Contracts of building and loan associations.....	692

Code, 1873.

§ 58. Reward for criminals.....	217
61. Duty of secretary of state.....	217
66. Duty of state auditor.....	217
1308. Liability of railway not lessened by contract or rule.....	213
4635. Papers in evidence.....	217
4649. Disposition of papers.....	217
Tit. 9, chap. 6. Mutual building associations.....	691

Code, 1897.

§ 1898. Building and loan associations...	692
4618. Historical and scientific works in evidence.....	536

KANSAS.

Compiled Statutes, 1879.

§ 420. Survival of cause of action.....	571
422. Right of action for death caused by wrongful act....	571

43 L. R. A.

KENTUCKY.

Bill of Rights, 1850.

§ 14. Jeopardy; compensation for property.....	562
--	-----

Constitution.

§ 13. Jeopardy; compensation for property.....	562
114. Qualifications of judges of court of appeals.....	700
184. Granting of franchise or privilege.....	561
215. Freight to be handled on same terms for all persons.....	550
217. Penalties for violating preceding sections.....	550
218. Charges of common carriers.....	542
242. Compensation for property taken for public use.....	561

Statutes.

1891-93, p. 433. Appropriation for World's Columbian Exposition.....	707
1508. State not liable for indebtedness after expenditure of appropriation.....	703

Code.

§ 763. Void judgments.....	554
----------------------------	-----

Statutes.

§ 817. Discrimination.....	550
818. Preference or advantage forbidden.....	551
810. Penalty for discrimination.....	550
820. Long and short haul over same road; penalty.....	542
2858. Lien for unpaid purchase money.....	552
3490. General powers of council.....	701
3519. Jurisdiction of appeals from judgments of circuit courts.....	703
3760. Questioning official acts of officer.....	554

MASSACHUSETTS.

Declaration of Rights.

Art. 24. Ex post facto laws.....	156
---	-----

Constitution.

Chap. 1, § 1, art. 4. Right of legislature to raise money by taxation.....	836
--	-----

Statutes.

1857, chap. 294. Reduction of sentence for good behavior.....	157
1858, chap. 77. Reduction of sentence for good behavior.....	157
1859, chap. 108. Reduction of sentence for good behavior.....	157
1880, chap. 218. Deductions for good behavior.....	158
1884, chap. 152, §§ 1, 2. Reduction of sentence for good behavior.....	156
258. Revocation of permit.....	158
1895, chap. 504. Indeterminate sentences.....	155
1897, chap. 419. Assessments for street sprinkling.....	836
1898, chap. 371. When convict entitled to release.....	160

General Statutes.

Chap. 178, § 47. Reduction of sentence for good behavior.....	157
179, § 51. Record of convict and deduction of sentence.....	158

Public Statutes.

Chap. 3, § 3, cls. 1, 2. Rules for construing statutes.....	160
186, § 17. Improper granting of franchise.....	99
187, § 13. Proceeding on reversal of sentence.....	160

Chap. 203, § 20. Penalty for embezzlement.....	155
40. Embezzlement of property.....	155
218, §§ 12 et seq. Pardons.....	159
222, §§ 20, 22. Permit of liberty for good conduct...	156

MICHIGAN.Statutes.*

1848, p. 81. Right of recovery for death by wrongful act.....	579
1873, No. 94. Right of recovery for death by wrongful act....	579
1885, No. 113. Survival of actions for negligent injuries to persons.....	570

Howell's Statutes.

Vol. 2, § 6814. Jurisdiction of justices of the peace.....	283
§§ 8313, 8314. Right to recover for death caused by wrongful act.....	569
3, chap. 261. Death, marriage, or other disability occurring after commencement of suit.	576
§ 7397. Actions which survive by the common law....	569
7545. Parties excluded from testifying.....	841
9354f. Gambling in grain prohibited.....	284

MINNESOTA.Statutes.*

1861, chap. 1. Right of railroad to construct its road across highway....	438
---	-----

General Statutes, 1894.

§ 4215. Leasing contracts to be in writing.....	429
4216. Specific performance of agreements.....	429
Chap. 45a, tit. 10. Conveyances of real estate.....	432
§ 5155. Time of commencement of civil actions.....	434
6782. Liability for divulging contents of telegram.....	584
7675. Effect of certificates of weighmaster.....	844
7706. Duty of weighmaster to furnish certificates.....	844

MISSOURI.Constitution, 1875.*

Art. 2, § 21. Compensation for property taken for public use.	564
28. Right of trial by jury.....	509

Constitution, 1884.

Amend. 6. Transfer of cause to supreme court.....	848
---	-----

Revised Statutes, 1889.

§ 2181. Trial by jury.....	509
----------------------------	-----

MONTANA.Compiled Statutes, 1887.*

Div. 1, § 361. Nuisance.....	127
------------------------------	-----

NEBRASKA.Constitution.*

Art. 11, § 4. Liabilities of subscribers to stock.....	698
--	-----

43 L. R. A.

NEW JERSEY.Constitution.*

Art. 4, § 7, ¶ 4. Laws shall embrace but one object.....	88
11. Forbidding passage of private local or special laws.....	88

Statutes.

1889, §§ 1-4. Trademarks and labels....	88
1892, March 23. Trademarks and labels..	88

General Statutes.

Vol. 3, pp. 3678 et seq. Protection of trademarks and labels...	88
---	----

NEW YORK.Constitution.*

Art. 1, § 1. No member of the state to be disfranchised.....	269
2. Right of trial by jury.....	250
6. Due process of law.....	250, 269
3, § 1. Legislative powers.....	271
16. Private and local bills shall embrace but one subject.....	860
18. Passage of private or local bills.....	239, 252, 860

Constitution, 1894.

Art. 3, § 27. Local legislative powers....	688
--	-----

Statutes.

1839, chap. 218, § 1. Authority of railroad companies to contract with each other.....	239
1850, chap. 140, § 28, subd. 5. Consents; construction of railroad.....	239
1854, chap. 140, § 1. Consents; construction of railroads...	239
1857, chap. 470. Sale of passenger tickets.	272
1860, chap. 103. Prevention of frauds in sale of tickets on vessels.....	272
1868, chap. 820. Sale of passenger tickets.	272
1872, chap. 161. Taxpayer's act.....	683
1875, chap. 49. Actions for the recovery of public moneys and property.....	684
1870, chap. 201. Prevention of frauds in the sale of state-rooms, etc.....	272
1881, chap. 676. Adoption of Penal Code.	272
1882, chap. 884. Repealing § 615 of Penal Code.....	272
410. Water in tenementhouses	276
1884, chap. 202. Prescribed standard for milk.....	276
252, § 8. Consents; construction of railroads...	241
1885, chap. 183. Manufacture or sale of oleomargarine.	276
1886, chap. 593. Sale of passenger tickets.	272
1887, chap. 84. Tenement houses.....	276
1888, chap. 581. Charges for elevating grain.....	276
1889, chap. 385. Protection of labels of labor unions.....	859
515. Deception in sales of vinegar.....	276
1890, chap. 565, § 78. Railroad law.....	239
1892, chap. 602. Registration of plumbers.	276
662. Fraud in the sale of passage tickets.....	272
676, § 91. Railroads; consent of property owners and local authorities.....	242
1893, chap. 434. Amending railroad law.	242
1895, chaps. 545, 933. Amending railroad law.....	242
chap. 823. Barbering on Sunday....	276
1896, chap. 855. Amending railroad law.	242
1897, chap. 506. Amendment of Penal Code relative to sale of passenger tickets.	271

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 1627. Person liable for payment of mortgage debt may be made defendant....	687
1843. Liability of heirs for debts of decedent.....	687
Chap. 17, art. 4, tit. 7, § 2348. Mortgage on infant's real estate.....	262

Penal Code.

§ 129. Buying lands in suit.....	276
130. Buying or selling titles.....	276
292. Child in theater.....	276
353. Protection of civil and public rights	276
577c. Soliciting life insurance without authority.....	276
577d. Issuance of policy after revocation of certificate.....	276
577j. Acting for insurance company without designation as attorney.....	276
593. Acting for foreign corporation not authorized to do business.....	276
Tit. 15, chap. 12. Frauds in the sale of passage tickets.....	271
§ 615. Limiting sale of passage tickets....	266
616. Restrictions on sales by authorized agent.....	266
626. Sales and exchanges of passenger tickets.....	273

NORTH CAROLINA.Code.*

§§ 3143-3145. Duties of druggists.....	862
--	-----

OHIO.Constitution.*

Art. 4, § 16. Election of clerk of court of common pleas.....	415
5, § 1. Qualifications of electors.....	93
2. Elections shall be by ballot....	93

Statutes.

1805, Feb. 22 (8 Ohio Laws, 281). Legitimizing bastards....	775
1892, Apr. 18. Australian ballot.....	93
1898, Apr. 8 (93 Ohio Laws, p. 93), § 7. Nomination by petition.....	91

Revised Statutes.

§ 2640. Duty of council in regard to streets.....	297
3254. Stockholders entitled to certificates.....	784
4175. Legitimate children.....	776

Bates's Annotated Statutes.

Vol. 2, § 7388-11. "Habitual criminal" defined.....	94
---	----

OREGON.Constitution.*

Art. 1, § 18. Compensation for taking private property.....	445
---	-----

Statutes.

1862, Oct. 16, p. 115, § 1. Legal and contract rates of interest.....	635
1885, p. 97. Portland charter.....	435
Feb. 24. Rights of owners of water ditches.....	131
1891, p. 796. Consolidation of Portland, East Portland, and Albina.....	436
1893, p. 59. Duties of county treasurer....	635
1898, Oct. 14. Reduction of legal rate of interest.....	634

Hill's Annotated Laws.

§ 2465. Duties of county treasurer.....	635
2467. County orders redeemable by county treasurer....	635

43 L. R. A.

§ 3587. Legal rate of interest.....	635
3592. Act not to affect prior contracts..	635
3832. Appropriation of water for mining purposes.....	132
§§ 4057-60. Rights of owners of water ditches.....	131
§ 4178. Recording town plats.....	446
4180. Grants of streets to public.....	446
4184. Title to vacated street.....	446

PENNSYLVANIA.Constitution, 1874.*

Art. 9, § 1. Uniform taxation.....	499
15, § 8. Compensation for taking private property.....	562

Statutes.

1836, March 31 (Pub. Laws, 318). "Duesneque way".....	503
1867, April 6, § 35. Consolidation act....	504
1874, May 14. Property exempt from taxation.....	500

RHODE ISLAND.General Laws.*

Chap. 176, § 7. Increase of capital stock..	99
---	----

SOUTH CAROLINA.Constitution, 1796.*

Art. 9, § 2. Law of the land.....	104
-----------------------------------	-----

Constitution, 1895.

Art. 10, § 5. Municipal taxation.....	104
---------------------------------------	-----

Statutes at Large.

1891 (20 Stat. at L. p. 1372). Assessments for improvements..	102
---	-----

SOUTH DAKOTA.Constitution.*

Art. 5, § 2. Appellate jurisdiction of supreme court.....	288
18. Allowance of writs of error and appeal.....	288
20. Writs of error and appeal allowed.....	288
34. Laws relating to courts shall be general and uniform.....	289
6, § 6. Right of trial by jury.....	289
20. Courts shall be open and justice had.....	289

Statutes.

1890, chap. 78, § 6. Concurrent jurisdiction of county and circuit court.....	289
1897, chap. 55. Appeal.....	288

Compiled Statutes.

§ 5213. Prohibiting appeals from circuit to supreme courts..	288
--	-----

TENNESSEE.Constitution.*

Art. 3, § 1. Supreme executive power of the state vested in a governor.....	789
6. Power of governor to grant pardons.....	789

TEXAS.Constitution.*

Art. 1, § 3. All free men have equal rights. 616
26. Monopolies forbidden.....	617

Special Laws.

1889, p. 76. Power of city council over streets.....	863
1891, p. 16. Power of council to license vehicles, etc.....	863

Revised Statutes, 1879.

Art. 4239.	Duty to furnish switch cars..	231
------------	-------------------------------	-----

Revised Statutes.

Art. 4494.	Railway transportation.....	232
4496.	Railway transportation.....	232
4497.	Duty of railroad to furnish cars.....	230
4498.	Application for cars.....	230
4499.	Penalty for failure to furnish cars.....	230
4500.	Duty of applicant for cars.....	230
4501.	Duty of railroad to deliver loaded cars.....	230
4502.	Duty of party bringing suit against railroad company.....	231
4522.	Duty to furnish switch cars...	231

Penal Code, 1895.

Art. 529k.	Prohibiting oyster catching...	616
529l.	Oyster catching.....	616

UTAH.Constitution.*

Art. 1, § 7.	Due process of law.....	41
10.	Right of trial by jury.....	40
22.	Compensation for taking private property.....	83

Statutes.

1890, p. 94.	Punishment of murder in the second degree.....	41
--------------	--	----

Compiled Laws.

Vol. 2, § 2831.	Statute of frauds.....	431
-----------------	------------------------	-----

VERMONT.Constitution.*

Chap. 1. art. 2.	Compensation for property taken for public use.....	292
5.	Right of governing and regulating internal police.....	292
2, § 40.	Right to fish.....	292

Tolman's Compiled Statutes, 1797.

Vol. 2, 10-24.	Destruction of wild animals	295
----------------	-----------------------------	-----

Statutes.

§§ 2451, 2452.	Right of action for wrongful death.....	111
§ 4502.	"Private preserve," "posted waters," and "public waters," defined...	292
4505.	Powers of fish and game commissioners.....	292
4567.	Public waters, what are.....	292
4568.	Fishing in public waters prohibited.....	296

VIRGINIA.Statutes.*

1781, November.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes.....	730
1782, May.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes.	730
1782, October.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes.....	730
1788, Jan. 7.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes	730
1790, Dec. 27.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes....	730

43 L. R. A.

1791, Dec. 20.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes.....	730
1792, Dec. 13.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes.....	730
1803, Jan. 29.	Forfeiture of lands for unpaid taxes.....	730
1807, Jan. 20.	Forfeiture of lands for unpaid taxes.....	730
1810, Feb. 5.	Forfeiture of lands for non-entry on tax book..	730
1814, Feb. 9.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes.....	730
1831, April 1.	Forfeiture of lands for unpaid taxes.....	730
1832, March, 10.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes.....	730
1835, 1843, Feb. 27.	Sale of land for unpaid taxes.....	730

Hening's Statutes.

Vol. 12, p. 139.	Act concerning course of descents.....	775
------------------	--	-----

WASHINGTON.Constitution.*

Art. 1, § 5.	Freedom of speech.....	720
--------------	------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1891, p. 31.	Adoption of common law....	723
--------------	----------------------------	-----

Hill's Annotated Code.

Vo. 1, §§ 1408, 1409.	Rights of married women.....	116
2, § 778.	Defining contempt.....	720
780.	Persons proceeded against liable to indictment.	720

Ballinger's Codes & Statutes.

§ 5798.	Defining "contempts".....	720
5809.	Persons proceeded against liable to indictment.....	720

WEST VIRGINIA.Constitution.*

Art. 13, § 4.	Sale of forfeited land.....	733
5.	Owner entitled to excess of proceeds after paying taxes.....	733
6.	Duty of owner to enter land for taxation.....	729

Statutes.

1860, March 4.	Forfeiture of land for non-entry for taxation..	730
1893, chap. 24.	Sale of forfeited land.....	735

Code, 1868.

Chap. 31, § 25.	What estate vests in purchaser by deed.....	735
-----------------	---	-----

Code, 1891.

Chap. 29, § 40.	To whom taxes are chargeable.....	727
46.	"Personal property" defined.....	728
54.	Duty of assessor.....	727
§§ 94-97.	Assessment of taxes..	725
35, § 20.	Limitations.....	735

WISCONSIN.Revised Statutes, 1878.*

§ 2853.	Instruction to be given as asked or refused in full...	812
---------	--	-----

LAWYERS' REPORTS

ANNOTATED.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Utah, Respt.,
v.
George BATES, Appt.

(14 Utah, 293.)

*1. The description of the offense in the indictment included murder in the first degree, as well as in the second; but the crime was characterized as murder in the second degree, and the record showed that the defendant was actually tried for and convicted of that offense. Held, a trial by eight jurors did not violate § 10 of art. 1 of the state Constitution, nor did such trial by eight jurors violate § 7 of the same article, which declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

2. Section 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of Utah, which declares that "In courts of general jurisdiction, except in capital cases, a jury shall consist of eight jurors," is not in conflict with article 6 of the amended Constitution of the United States, wherein it says that "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to . . . a trial by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed." The last article does not apply to trials under state laws.

3. Nor is § 10 of the state Constitution repugnant to the 1st section of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution. The 1st clause of that section makes all persons born or naturalized in the *Headnotes by ZANE, Ch. J.

NOTE.—Number and agreement of jurors necessary to constitute a valid verdict.

I. Common-law doctrine.

II. Adoption of common-law doctrine.

a. By constitutional provisions.

b. Construction placed upon constitutional provisions.

1. In general.

2. State Constitutions.

3. United States Constitution.

III. Meaning of the terms "jury" and "jury trial."

IV. In criminal matters.

a. Felony and high-grade offenses.

b. Misdemeanors.

c. Offenses triable in justices' and other inferior courts.

V. In civil actions.

a. Less than twelve valid.

b. Invalid.

VI. The power of the legislature.

a. General doctrine.

b. Under state Constitutions.

VII. The question of consent and waiver.

a. General doctrine.

b. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

c. In cases of felony.

d. In misdemeanors.

e. In civil actions.

f. As affecting appeal jury.

VIII. Absent, sick, or unqualified juror.

a. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

b. Decisions of the court.

IX. Showing of the record.

a. In criminal cases.

1. In general.

2. Consent.

b. In civil cases.

X. Distinction between courts of record and not of record.

XI. Jury of more than twelve.

XII. The question of demand of jury of twelve.

XIII. Agreement of the jury.

a. Unanimity.

b. Majority verdicts.

The question as to the constitutionality of a verdict of less than twelve jurors in proceeding for the assessment of damages for the taking of private property for public uses under the law of eminent domain will form the subject of a future note.

The constitutional right to a jury for the assessment of damages on default will be found treated of in note to Dean v. Willamette Bridge R. Co. (Or.) 15 L. R. A. 614.

The question of jury trial on appeal, as satisfying the constitutional right to trial by jury, will be found in note to Miller v. Com. (Va.) 15 L. R. A. 441.

As to the number of grand jurors necessary or proper to act, see note to State v. Belvel (Iowa) 27 L. R. A. 846.

This note is intended to be exhaustive only as to the number and agreement of jurors necessary to constitute a valid trial jury, and must not be taken as covering the question of the right of trial by jury, or the construction placed upon the state constitutional provisions as to the right remaining inviolate, since many cases are to be found upon those questions which do not include or specifically pass upon the number or agreement of jurors necessary to render a valid verdict upon a trial.

The principal case, STATE v. BATES, in so far as it upholds the change made by the Constitution as not ex post facto, is overruled by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061, which held the same to be ex post facto, although there were two dissentients.

In this case the United States Supreme Court also held that when Magna Charta declared that United States, and subject to its jurisdiction, citizens of the United States, and of the state wherein they reside; and the second clause, which declares that no state shall make or enforce any law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, has no application to jury trials under state laws in state courts. It does not refer to the privileges or immunities of the individual as a citizen of the state; it refers to the privileges and immunities of the individual as a citizen of the United States.

4. Nor does § 10 of the state Constitution conflict with the 3d provision of § 1 of article 14 of the Federal Constitution, which declares that "no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." That provision left the power with the people of the state, by a constitutional provision, to reduce the number of jurors for the trial of a cause in the state courts from twelve to eight.
5. The defendant was tried by eight jurors on April 7, 1896, upon an indictment charging him with murder in the second degree, and convicted. The offense was committed on the 22d day of September, 1895, and the provision of the state Constitution reducing the number of jurors from twelve to eight took effect on January 4, 1896. Held, that the change did not deprive the defendant of a substantial right, and that the constitutional provision making the change was not ex post facto and void.

(December 10, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for the Third District convicting him of murder. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Powers, Straup, & Lippman, and W. I. Snyder, for appellant:

Section 10, art. 1, of our Constitution is repugnant to the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution. It abridges the privileges of citizens, and deprives citizens charged with crime of due process of law.

Thompson, Charging the Jury, 810, and cases cited; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 355; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; Work v.

no free man should be deprived of life, etc., "but by the judgment of his peers or by the law of the land," it referred to a trial by twelve jurors.

The above holding of the court has been severely criticized in an article in vol 32, American Law Review, 634, 635, in which the author contends that "the phrase judicium parium does not point to trial by jury," and that "the barons who won Magna Charta were opposed to the then novel and obnoxious procedure of jury trial."

It is not, however, the province of this annotation to discuss that question; yet the great mass of authority shows that the general construction placed upon the provisions of the United States and state Constitutions that trial by jury shall remain inviolate, is that a "jury" and "trial by jury" mean a trial by twelve men in all cases in which the defendant was entitled to it at the time the Constitution was adopted. Therefore, whether the Supreme Court of the United States erred in its construction of Magna Charta or not, its holding is in keeping with the trend of the decisions of the courts, and with the general acceptance of the terms "jury" and "trial by jury."

I. Common-law doctrine.

In treating of the right of trial by jury under the common law the following passage is to be found in vol. 5 of Bacon's Abridgment, title Juries, p. 308: "The trial per pais, or by a jury of one's country, is justly esteemed one of the principal excellencies of our Constitution; for what greater security can any person have in his life, liberty, or estate, than to be sure of not being devested of, or injured in, any of these, without the sense and verdict of twelve honest and impartial men of his neighborhood? And hence we find the common law herein confirmed by Magna Charta."

So, the same author, in the same volume of his treatise, p. 314, further states that "the grand jury . . . must consist of twelve at least, the petit jury of twelve, and can be neither more nor less; but it is said that particular inquests may consist of a more or less number than twelve. . . . But, on a writ of error, a judgment out of an inferior court was reversed, because, being by default, the inquiry of damages was only by two jurors, and though a custom was alleged to warrant it, yet it was resolved that there could not be less than twelve, though the writ of inquiry saith only per sacra- mentum proborum et legalium hominum, and not duodecim, as in a venire. . . . Also it hath been frequently holden that a custom in an inferior court to try by six jurors is void." Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 23, 27. The above passage is relied upon and quoted by the court, and the same doctrine is to be found stated in 1 Vent. 113.
43 L. R. A.

So, in Coke upon Littleton, book 3, chap. 9, in speaking of the different modes of trial under the English law, it is said: "Of these a trial by twelve men is the most frequent and common. And in ancient time, they were twelve knights. This trial of the fact per duodecim liberos et legales homines is very ancient;" and further: "Usage and ancient course maketh law; and . . . the law in this case delighteth herself in the number of twelve; for there must not only be twelve jurors for the trial of matters of fact, but twelve judges, of ancient time, for trials of matters of law in the exchequer chamber." Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22, 26.

And it is said in Wooddeson's Lectures on the Law of England, vol. 3, p. 199, that "where no challenge is taken, either to the whole array, or to the jurors individually, twelve of them are sworn to well and truly try the issue joined between the parties."

So, in 2 Hale, P. C. pp. 161, 296, it is said: "But in case of a trial by the petit jury, it can be by no more nor less than twelve;" and: "If only eleven be sworn by mistake, no verdict can be taken of the eleven, and if it be, it is error." Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22, 28.

Again, in 2 Bl. Com. p. 349, it is said: "The founders of the English law have, with excellent forecast, contrived that no man shall be called to answer to the King for any capital crime, unless upon the preparatory accusation of twelve or more of his fellow subjects, the grand jury; and that the truth of every accusation, whether preferred in the shape of indictment, information, or appeal, should afterwards be confirmed by the unanimous suffrage of twelve of his equals and neighbors, indifferently chosen, and superior to all suspicion." Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585.

So, in Chitty, Crim. Law, p. 505, it is said: "The petit jury, when sworn, must consist precisely of twelve, and is never to be either more or less on the trial of the general issue;" and this fact it is necessary to insert upon the record. Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22.

State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671; Flint River S. B. Co. v. Roberts, 48 Am. Dec. 186, note, 2 Fla. 102; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232; Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 550.

Section 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of Utah, in so far as it provides for the trial of criminal cases by eight men, is repugnant to and in conflict with § 12, art. 1, of the Constitution of Utah, and is therefore void.

Section 12 guarantees to the accused the right "to have a speedy public trial by an impartial jury." This is without limitation or qualification. It means a jury of twelve men.

State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 46; Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Cruger v. Hudson River R. Co. 12 N. Y. 190.

Being later in position it is a later expression of the legislative will.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 220.

Section 10, art. 1, of our state Constitution, so far as it relates to crimes alleged to have been committed prior to said Constitution going into effect, is retrospective and ex post facto, and is repugnant to and in conflict with subsec. 1, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. chap. 17, p. 603.

Mr. O. W. Powers, also for appellant:

Life, liberty, and property of a citizen may be forfeited and lost, but not without due process of law. This protection is contained in both the National and state Constitutions.

See Utah Const. art. 1, § 7.

"The judgment of his peers" was, by the law of England, the trial of a man by a jury of his equals, and in this country means a trial by jury, who are called the peers of the party accused.

Potter's Dwarrr. Stat. p. 428.

Chancellor Kent defines the term "right in civil society," to be "that which any man is entitled to have, or to do, or to require from others, within the limits prescribed by law."

2 Kent, Com. p. 1.

And again, it has been said that whatever may be the magic of the number "twelve," as legal antiquarians have endeavored to trace it, its unanimity seems always to have been required in criminal cases, although not so certainly settled in questions of property until the reign of Edw. III. 2 Reeves, History of the English Law, p. 270; Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492, 497.

Again, in Hale, P. C., the following passage is found: "But in case of a trial by the jury, it can be by no more nor less than twelve, and all assenting to the verdict; accordingly it was adjudged, M. 42 E. 3 Rot. 16, Suff. Rex, the judgment was reversed, because but eleven indictors." 2 Hale, P. C. p. 161.

So, Magna Charta, by its declaration that no freeman should be deprived of life, etc., but by the judgment of his peers or by law of the land, referred to a trial by twelve jurors. Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061.

And the right of a trial by a jury of twelve men in all capital cases was justly regarded as the great safeguard of personal liberty. Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585.

So, the common-law import of the word "jury" is twelve men impaneled, sworn, and charged according to law. Brazier v. State, 44 Ala. 392.

By common law a jury of twelve men was the only tribunal which the law recognized for the trial of the question of guilt of the accused under an indictment,—especially for a felony and a plea of not guilty. People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674, 675.

It may therefore be stated as a general rule that the common-law jury consists of twelve men. Carroll v. Byers (Ark.) 36 Pac. 499; Larillan v. Lane, 8 Ark. 372, 375; English v. State, 31 Fla. 340, 346; Brown v. State, 8 Blackf. 561; Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496; Jackson v. State, 6 Blackf. 461; Bryan v. State, 4 Iowa, 349, 352; Higgins v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 60 Iowa, 50, 51; Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116; Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 169, 47 Am. Rep. 846; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 135; People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168, 178; Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 674; Bradford v. Territory, 1 Okla. 366; Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492; Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 154, 163; Barlow v. Daniels, 25 W. Va. 512, 517.

43 L. R. A.

Again, it has been said that a jury consists of twelve persons, and a verdict of a less number is of no effect unless the objection is waived. Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 296; Cowles v. Buckman, 6 Iowa, 162.

And a jury must consist of twelve men, and no other number is known to the law. Dixon v. Richards, 2 How. (Miss.) 771.

In the case of a trial by a petit jury it can be no more nor less than twelve. Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492, citing 2 Hale, P. C. p. 161.

Again it has been stated that a petit jury must consist of precisely twelve men, no more, no less,—no other number is known to the law; and they must appear upon the record to have rendered their verdict. State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, 474; Rex v. St. Michael, 2 W. Bl. 719; Dixon v. Richards, 2 How. (Miss.) 771.

The trial by jury has been considered of common right, and one of the most sacred safeguards against oppression under the common law. It has always consisted of twelve men, and a verdict of a less number has ever been regarded in the criminal law as of no validity. State v. Gutierrez, 15 La. Ann. 190, 194; People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674.

So, it has been stated that a jury of twelve is the only legally constituted tribunal of a trial for an indictment of a felony. Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585.

And, at common law, the number of the jury for the trial of all issues involving the personal rights and liberties of the subject could never be less than twelve. Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116.

Again, it has been held that every issue of fact must be tried by a jury of twelve men, although it is not necessary that their names should be recorded. Foote v. Lawrence, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 483.

But a common-law jury can only be had in a court of common-law jurisdiction, both as regards the character of the court and its mode of procedure, and it is not true that simply making a jury to consist of twelve men constitutes a common-law jury trial. People, Booth, v. Fisher, 20 Barb. 652.

If, therefore, the number returned be less than twelve any verdict must be ineffectual and the judgment will be reversed for error, but if more than twelve be accidentally sworn it will not vitiate the proceedings though it is an irregularity to be avoided. 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, p. 505; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, 474.

The absolute rights of individuals are: (1) The right of personal security; (2) the right of personal liberty; (3) the right to acquire and enjoy property.

These rights are natural, inherent, and inalienable.

Citizens' Sav. & L. Assn. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 662, 22 L. ed. 455, 461.

The right to a trial by jury, as known at the common law by one charged with crime, is, in America, an inalienable right, which cannot be restricted by legislative or constitutional enactment. One of the institutions that is an essential part of due process of law is the right of trial by jury.

Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 558, 28 L. ed. 246; Story, Const. § 1779; 1 Palfrey's New England, 340.

The jury guaranteed to a person accused of crime consists of twelve men, no more and no less.

1 Thompson, Trials, p. 4; 2 Hale, P. C. p. 161; 1 Chitty, Crim. L. p. 505; Trials per

If there be eleven agreed, and but one dissenting, who says he would rather die in prison, yet the verdict shall not be taken by eleven, nor yet the refuser fined or imprisoned; and therefore, where such a verdict was taken by eleven, and the twelfth fined and imprisoned, it was upon great advice ruled the verdict was void, and the twelve men delivered and a new venire awarded. For men are not to be forced to give their verdict against their judgment. 41 Assize, 11.

So, if only eleven be sworn by mistake no verdict can be taken of the eleven, and if it be it is error, and so in a presentment, but if twelve be recorded sworn no averment lies that one was not sworn. 2 Hale, P. C. p. 296; Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492.

There can be no question that at common law the only recognized tribunal for the trial of the guilt of the accused, under an indictment for felony and a plea of not guilty, was by a jury of twelve men. Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 685.

And, in Maduska v. Thomas, 6 Kan. 153, 159, which was an action of ejectment, it is said that the verdict of eleven jurors or less than twelve is not the verdict of the jury.

The judgment of the court was reversed as being that of eleven jurors, in Dayton v. Church, 7 Abb. N. C. 367, where a juror was personated by another person without the knowledge of the parties to the action.

In some analogous English cases a question of mistrial by reason of the impersonation of a juror by another person upon a trial by twelve jurors arose. Hill v. Yates, 12 East, 229; King v. Tremaine, 7 Dowl. & P. 684; Norman v. Beaumont, Willes, Rep. 484. These cases, however, do not show whether the objection to the verdict was based upon the ground of the number of legal jurors rendering the same, and only show that a mistrial was claimed. They are important, however, as showing that the jury of twelve must be a legal one.

II. Adoption of common-law doctrine.

a. By constitutional provisions.

Article 3, § 2, of the Constitution of the United States provides: "The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury."

And article 7 of the Amendments to that Constitution provides that, "In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law."

Pais (Anno. 1725), 79; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 319; May v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 3 Wis. 219; State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436; Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671; Brazier v. State, 44 Ala. 387; Turns v. Com. 6 Met. 235; Lamb v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 167; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39; People v. O'Neil, 48 Cal. 257; People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 348, 11 L. R. A. 75; Hurd, Habeas Corpus, p. 108.

Section 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of the state of Utah is repugnant to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and to the fundamental principles underlying our government.

U. S. Const. 14th Amend.

Eight men do not constitute a jury. They are a body of triers unknown to our law in courts of general jurisdiction.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 319; Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 448; Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 550; Ward v. People, 30 Mich. 116;

ceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law."

In the Constitutions of the several states provision is made, impliedly if not expressly, adopting the rules and doctrines of the common law with reference to the right of trial by jury, and the number of jurors upon such trial, and such provisions are construed to imply the right to the common-law jury of twelve.

The state Constitutions upon the subject are not, however, uniform, so far as the actual language used is concerned. In some, and perhaps the larger number, the terms used are "the right of trial by jury" shall remain inviolate. This will be found to be the case in Alabama,—Declaration of Rights, Const. 1875, art. 1, § 12; Arkansas,—art. 2, § 7, Declaration of Rights; California,—art. 1, § 7, Declaration of Rights; Colorado,—art. 2, § 23, adding the words "In criminal cases"; Connecticut,—art. 1, § 21, of the Declaration of Rights; Florida,—§ 3, Declaration of Rights, adding the word "forever"; Georgia,—art. 6, § 18, with the addition of the words "except where it is otherwise provided in this Constitution"; Illinois,—art. 2, § 5, with the use of the special phrase "as heretofore enjoyed"; Indiana,—art. 1, § 20; Iowa,—art. 1, § 9, Bill of Rights; Kansas,—§ 5, Bill of Rights; Kentucky,—§ 7, Bill of Rights, with the addition of the words "Ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred, and the right, etc.," with a special clause subjecting it "to such modifications as may be authorized by Congress"; Minnesota,—art. 1, § 4; Missouri,—art. 2, § 28; Montana,—art. 3, § 23; Nebraska,—art. 1, § 6; Nevada,—art. 1, § 3, adding the word "forever"; New Jersey,—art. 1, § 7; New York,—Const. 1894, art. 1, § 2, adding the words, "In which it has been heretofore used," and "forever"; North Dakota,—art. 1, § 7; Ohio,—art. 1, § 5; Oregon,—art. 1, § 17, with the addition of the words "In all civil cases"; Pennsylvania,—art. 1, § 6, saying that trial by jury "shall be as heretofore, and the right thereof remain inviolate"; Rhode Island,—art. 1, § 15; South Carolina,—art. 1, § 11; Tennessee,—art. 1, § 6; Texas,—art. 1, § 15; Utah,—art. 1, § 10, "In capital cases"; Washington,—art. 1, § 21; Wisconsin,—art. 1, § 5.

The Constitution of Delaware, art. 1, § 4, uses the term "trial by jury shall remain as heretofore."

Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351; Allen v. State, 54 Ind. 461; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. ed. 281.

When one section of a public act limits or abrogates a right existing prior to its enactment, and another section of the same act preserves that right, the courts, in giving force to the act, will disregard the section of limitation or abrogation and enforce the right.

Section 10 must receive a strict construction, for it deprives citizens of pre-existing rights.

Sherwood v. Reade, 7 Hill, 431; Striker v. Kelly, 2 Denio, 323; Sharpe v. Speir, 4 Hill, 76; Potter's Dwarrr. Stat. p. 141; Sutherland, Constr. § 217; The Hickory Tree Road, 43 Pa. 139; Packer v. Sunbury & E. R. Co. 19 Pa. 211; Ryan v. State, Eller, 5 Neb. 276; Gibbons v. Brittenum, 56 Miss. 232; Harrington v. Rochester, 10 Wend. 547; Brown v. Philadelphia County Comrs.

21 Pa. 37; Quick v. Whitewater Twp. 7 Ind. 570; Albertson v. State, 9 Neb. 429; Sams v. King, 18 Fla. 557; Branagan v. Dulaney, 8 Colo. 408; Gee v. Thompson, 11 La. Ann. 657; Farmers' Bank v. Hale, 59 N. Y. 53.

Section 10 must give way to § 12, and § 10 cannot be held to limit or qualify § 12.

Von Holst, Const. L. of U. S. p. 258; Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 301, 59 Am. Dec. 671; Hagany v. Cohnen, 29 Ohio St. 82; Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 179, 20 Am. Rep. 194; Ordranax, Constitutional Leg. p. 261; Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 247, 8 L. ed. 674; Livingston v. Moore, 7 Pet. 469, 8 L. ed. 751; Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. 434, 12 L. ed. 223; Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. 557, 22 L. ed. 492; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 19-410; Pearson v. Yecddall, 95 U. S. 294, 24 L. ed. 436; Miller v. McQuerry, 5 McLean, 460.

"Law of the land" means "due process of law" according to the principles of the common law, rather than to the provisions of the statute law. That is to say, liberty,

The Constitution of Maine, art. 1, § 7, in dealing with the right of trial by jury in criminal cases of a capital or infamous nature, says: "Their usual number and unanimity, in indictments and convictions, shall be held indispensable."

Section 20 of the same article declares that "in all civil suits, and in all controversies concerning property, the parties shall have a right to a trial by jury, except in cases where it has heretofore been otherwise practised."

So, art. 12 of the Declaration of Rights of Massachusetts provides that the legislature shall not make any law that shall subject any person to a capital or infamous punishment, except for the government of the army and navy, without trial by jury.

And art. 15 of the Declaration of Rights of the same state provides that in all controversies concerning property, and in all suits between two or more persons, except in cases in which it has heretofore been otherwise used and practised, the parties have a right to a trial by jury, and this method of procedure shall be held sacred, unless, in cases arising on the high seas and such as relate to mariner's wages, the legislature shall hereafter find it necessary to alter it.

In the Constitution of Michigan the term used is "the right of trial by jury shall remain." Art. 6, § 27.

Article 16 of the Constitution of New Hampshire, Bill of Rights, provides that the legislature shall not "make any law that shall subject any person to a capital punishment (excepting for the government of the army and navy, and the militia in actual service) without trial by jury."

And article 20 of the Bill of Rights of that state is similar in its provisions to the above-mentioned § 15 of Massachusetts Declaration of Rights, with the additional exception of cases "in which the value in controversy does not exceed $100, and title of real estate is not concerned."

By § 13, art. 1, of the Constitution of North Carolina, it is provided that no person shall be convicted of any crime, but by the unanimous verdict of a jury of good and lawful men in open court.

In § 19 of the same Constitution which relates to civil actions, it is said that "the ancient mode of trial by jury is one of the best securities of the rights of the people, and ought to remain sacred and inviolable."

43 L. R. A.

Article 5, § 13, of the Constitution of Texas provides that "petit juries in the district courts shall be composed of twelve men."

Article 10, chap. 1, Declaration of Rights, Vt. Const. provides: "In all prosecutions for criminal offenses a person hath a right to . . . a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the country; without the unanimous consent of which jury he cannot be found guilty."

And article 12 of the same chapter provides that when any issue of fact for the cognizance of a jury is joined in a court of law the parties have a right to trial by jury which ought to be held sacred.

Article 1, Bill of Rights, Va. Const. § 13, provides that in any controversy respecting property, and any suits between man and man, the trial by jury is preferable to any other, and ought to be held sacred.

The Constitution of West Virginia, Bill of Rights, art. 3, § 13, says that in suits at common law, "where the value in controversy exceeds $20 exclusive of interest and costs, the right of trial by jury, if required by either party, shall be preserved."

And art. 3, Bill of Rights, § 14, of that state provides that "trials of crimes, and of misdemeanors, unless herein otherwise provided, shall be by a jury of twelve men."

b. Construction placed upon constitutional provisions.

1. In general.

As it is a general rule that where terms used in the common law are contained in a statute or the Constitution, without an explanation of the sense in which they are employed, they should receive that construction which has been affixed to them by the former; therefore, in order to ascertain in what the right of trial by jury consists, recurrence must necessarily be made to the provisions of the common law defining the qualifications, and ascertaining the number of which the jury shall consist as the standard to which the framers of the Constitution referred. Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116.

And in determining the constitutionality of state statutes changing the law in relation to juries, and providing for the number of jurors required to try a cause, it has been said that it is a well-settled and unquestionable rule of construction, that the language used by the legislature in the statutes enacted by them, and that property, and health shall be placed under the general laws governing society.

Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. p. 475; Embury v. Conner, 3 N. Y. 511, 53 Am. Dec. 325; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 19 L. ed. 285; Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 129, 83 Am. Dec. 728; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 212, 62 Am. Dec. 160; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, 24 Am. Dec. 511; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Den, Murray, v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372.

It means, according to Lord Coke, being brought in to answer according to the "old law of the land."

2 Inst. 50; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274.

The distinction between the abolishment of the grand-jury system and the substitution of prosecutions by information, and the used by the people in the great paramount law which controls the legislature as well as the people, is to be always understood and explained in that sense in which it was used at the time when the Constitution and the laws were adopted. Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 550.

In Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 4th ed. p. 305, it is said, any less than this number of twelve would not be a common-law jury, or such a jury as the Constitution guarantees to accused parties when a less number is not allowed in express terms; and the necessity of a full panel cannot be waived,—at least in a case of felony, even by consent, the infirmity in case of a trial by jury of less than twelve, by consent, would be that the tribunal would be one unknown to the law, created by mere voluntary act of the parties, and it would in effect be an attempt to submit to a species of arbitration the question whether the accused has been guilty of an offense against the state. People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674.

So, the jury referred to in the Federal Constitution, and in the 6th Amendment thereto, is a jury constituted as it was at common law, of twelve persons, neither more nor less. Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061.

And the right of trial by jury as at common law was guaranteed by the Amendment of the United States Constitution, and such a jury was a jury of twelve, and entitled the parties to a unanimous verdict; and as the provisions of the Constitution applied to the territory, any material change takes away a substantial right, and therefore a person convicted by a jury of less than that number of persons is entitled to have the same reversed, and the cause remanded. Bradford v. Territory, Woods, 1 Okla. 366.

In further support of the theory that a jury as constituted at common law was the jury intended by and provided for in the Constitution, the remarks of Justice King in his dissenting opinion in the case of Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 154, 160, are of value. He says that in adopting a Constitution for our government and guidance, our fathers had in mind the great charter of English liberty, and that the right of trial by jury as it was understood at common law was not the least of these rights; and further, that when a jury is mentioned in the organic law of a territory, the term is understood to have reference to it as constituted at common law unless the contrary plainly appears, and 43 L. R. A.

interference with the right of trial by jury, is that the first is largely a method of procedure. The latter is a substantive right.

Bradford v. Territory, Woods, 1 Okla. 366; Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 154; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128.

So far as this defendant is concerned, § 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of Utah is void in that it is ex post facto, and in conflict with subs. 1, § 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 467; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 329, 330; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386-390, 1 L. ed. 648-650; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 138, 3 L. ed. 178; Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95; Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 555; Kennett's Petition, 24 N. H. 139; Willard v. Harvey, 24 N. H. 344.

that such was the construction uniformly put upon the provisions common in all the Constitutions of the several states, that the right of trial by jury should remain inviolate.

And in the same case Justice King distinctly states that the common-law jury imports a jury of twelve men whose verdict must be unanimous to be legal, and that such must be its acceptance to everyone acquainted with the history of the common law, and aware of the high estimation in which that institution so constituted has for so long a period been held.

The trial by jury is by twelve free and lawful men who are not of kin to either party, for the purpose of establishing, by their verdict, the truth of the matter which is in issue between the parties, and it is called the trial by one's peers, that is by men who have that concern for the party on trial which naturally flows from a parity of circumstances common to him and his judges; and such is the trial by jury guaranteed by the Constitution, and originally secured by the Magna Charta of England. Dowling v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 664, 685.

And the "due course of the law of the land" demands a legal conviction by a legal jury, that is to say, it must consist of such "number of jurors as is allowed by the law." Stell v. State, 14 Tex. App. 59, in which case a jury of five in the county court was held unconstitutional, the statutes of the state providing for a jury of six, the court stating that the case was not tried by a legal jury and in conformity with the due course of the law of the land. Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341, to the same effect.

In Larillian v. Lane, 8 Ark. 372, 875, it is said that the trial by jury is a great constitutional right, and that when the convention incorporated the provision into the Constitution of the country they most unquestionably had reference to the jury trial as known and recognized by the common law.

And it will be assumed that the meaning of the term "jury" so far as numbers are concerned, is fixed by the Constitution in accordance with the common law as it existed at the date of the adoption of the Constitution. Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116.

Again, it is said that a petit jury must be composed of twelve men according to the meaning of the term in the common law. United States v. Insurgents of Pennsylvania, 2 Dall. 335, 1 L. ed. 404; Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co. Baldw. 205; Twins v. Com. 6 Met. 231;

Messrs. C. S. Varian and Benner X. Smith, with Mr. A. C. Bishop, Attorney General, for respondent:

Due process of law is process due according to the law of the land. This process in the states is regulated by the law of the state.

Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 92, 23 L. ed. 679; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 517, 28 L. ed. 232; Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 448, 34 L. ed. 524.

The question as to what is an ex post facto law, within the meaning of the Constitution, has received much consideration. At an early day Mr. Justice Chase defined ex post facto laws as those which created or aggravated the crime; or increased the punishment; or changed the rules of evidence for the purpose of conviction.

Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 391, 1 L. ed. 650.

In subsequent decisions the rule was stated generally to be when, "in relation to that offense or its consequences, it (the law) alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage."

Gut v. Minnesota, 9 Wall. 35, 19 L. ed. 573; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356; Cook v. United States, 138 U. S. 183, 34 L. ed. 913; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 382, 38 L. ed. 487; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 589, 28 L. ed. 268; Mathis v. State, 31 Fla. 291; Lybarger v. State, 2 Wash. 552; Re Wright, 3 Wyo. 478, 13 L. R. A. 748; State v. Ah Jim, 9 Mont. 167.

The states have power to provide by their Constitutions for the trial of persons charged with crimes by juries of less than twelve.

Ordronaux, Const. Leg. p. 261; 1 Hare, Am. Const. L. p. 515; 2 Hare, Am. Const. L. p. 860; Kallock v. San Francisco, 56 Cal. 229.

The constitutional provision of this state, in its application to appellant, is not ex post facto.

Cruger v. Hudson River R. Co. 12 N. Y. 190; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 427; Dowling v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 684.

And it is this right which is held sacred and made inviolable by the Constitution of the county. Carson v. Com. 1 A. K. Marsh. 290.

The contention that twelve is the legal number of jurors necessary to render a valid verdict in a criminal action is further supported by the case of People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 689, in which the court stated that when the jury is completed so that there are twelve qualified in the box, and not before, they are to be sworn to try the case. In this case, however, the main question involved was the impaneling of a jury in a criminal case, and the court did not, further than as above stated, pass upon the number requisite to constitute a constitutional jury.

And, in Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 174, 180, the court stated that the right of trial by jury is a right guaranteed to every citizen to have the facts involved in any litigation which he may have tried and determined by twelve good and lawful men.

So, it is a right to which the people have clung with more tenacity than to any other, as securing the mode of trial best calculated to insure a just result. Van Sickle v. Kellogg, 19 Mich. 49, 52.

Again, in McCormick v. Brookfield, 4 N. J. L. 69, 71, which was a civil action to recover the balance of a book account, it is said it is the high privilege of parties to have their rights decided by twelve men, who are free from the suspicion of bias or partiality; who are omni exceptione majoribus, and any aberration from the legal mode of proceeding ought at once to arrest the judgment. This case, however, involved the question of the validity of a challenge to the favor.

And in the dissenting opinion of Justice King in Mackey v. Ensenaperger, 11 Utah, 154, 161, it is said that the origin of the trial by jury, although lost in the dimness of the past, has existed from the earliest period to the adoption of the Constitution, and unanimity of twelve jurors alone has constituted a verdict. Paul v. Detroit, 32 Mich. 108, to the same effect.

And in reversing the verdict of a jury of eleven upon a conviction of felony, the court, in Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341, 842, stated that the law had established certain tribunals, with defined powers and forms of proceeding, for the trial of per- 43 L. R. A.

sons charged with crime, and that security to the defendant and to the public was only found in a strict compliance with the law of the land.

So, in State v. Williams, 35 S. C. 344, 352, 353, the court, in stating that the constitutional provision that the right of trial by jury should remain inviolate, was fully met when the prisoner is vouchsafed, by the law of the land, a fair trial by twelve jurors, men good and true, remarked that as a tribunal to determine all issues of fact the trial by jury was forever inviolably preserved by the paramount law, and quoted with approval the remarks of the court in the cases of Cregier v. Bunton, 2 Strobb. L. 487, and State v. Boatwright, 10 Rich. L. 407.

Again, in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice King in Mackey v. Ensenaperger, 11 Utah, 154, 163, wherein he contended that the jury at common law could never be less than twelve, and that all the jurors must concur in order to authorize a verdict, the justice states that it is to be inferred that trial by jury as imposed by the Constitution has relation to the common law as it was understood in England, and to the right to such trial in the class of cases, and cites Miller, U. S. Const. 492.

And any attempt to reduce the number of jurors in the jury trial should be viewed by the courts as an attempt upon the constitutional rights of a citizen, and should be declared of no effect. State v. Gutierrez, 15 La. Ann. 190, in which the court followed the decision in Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 446, 7 L. ed. 732, 736.

The case of Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 446, 7 L. ed. 732, 736, relied upon in the above case, was not, however, one in which the question of the number of jurors requisite to form a valid verdict was raised, although it did expressly pass upon the right to a trial by jury, and the language of the court may be said to apply equally to a case in which the question of number has arisen. The language in effect is as follows: The trial by jury is justly dear to the American people. It has always been an object of deep interest and solicitude, and every encroachment upon it has been watched with great jealousy. The right to such a trial is, it is believed, incorporated into and secured in every state Constitution in the Union.

But the constitutional provisions only give the right to a trial by a common-law jury of twelve in cases wherein such a jury was customarily used and legally claimed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, as they

State v. Welch, 65 Vt. 50; People v. McNulty (Cal.) 28 Pac. 816; Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15; South v. State, 86 Ala. 617; State v. Cooler, 30 S. C. 105, 3 L. R. A. 181; Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 675, 40 L. ed. 302.

So far as mere modes of procedure are concerned, a party has no more right, in a criminal than in a civil action, to insist that his case shall be disposed of under the law in force when the act to be investigated is charged to have taken place.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 3d ed. p. 272; Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L. ed. 264; Cook v. United States, 138 U. S. 183, 34 L. ed. 913; Re Converse, 137 U. S. 630, 34 L. ed. 798.

Zane, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was tried upon an indictment charging him with the murder of the late John Nordquist, by feloniously and with malice aforethought, striking him upon the head with a wooden pole. In the indictment the grand jury expressly characterized the crime as murder in the second degree. Upon the trial, the petit jury found the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree. The court overruled a motion for a new trial, and sentenced him to confinement in the state prison for the term of ten years. From the order overruling the motion for a new trial, and from the sentence, the case is before this court on appeal.

The trial was by a jury of eight men, to which the defendant objected at the time, and demanded twelve and excepted to the denial of his objection and demand, and now assigns it as error. Section 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of the state of Utah declares that "in capital cases the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate. In courts of general jurisdiction, except in capital cases, a jury shall consist of eight jurors. In courts of inferior jurisdiction a jury shall consist of four jurors. In criminal cases the ver-only secure existing rights. People v. Phillips, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 386; Blanchard v. Raines, 20 Fla. 467; Trigally v. Memphis, 6 Cold. 382; Kimball v. Connor, 3 Kan. 414; Ross v. Irving, 14 Ill. 171; Mead v. Walker, 17 Wis. 187; People v. Murray, v. New York City & County Justices, 74 N. Y. 406, 407; Murphy v. People, 2 Cow. 815; Re Sweatman, 1 Cow. 151; Dean v. Willamette Bridge Co. 22 Or. 167, 15 L. R. A. 614, 615; Kendall v. Post, 8 Or. 146; Tribau v. Strowbridge, 7 Or. 158; Ferrier's Petition, 103 Ill. 367, 374, 42 Am. Rep. 10; Emerick v. Harris, 1 Binn. 416, 428; Flint River S. B. Co. v. Fester, 5 Ga. 194, 48 Am. Dec. 248, 260; Harper v. Elberton Comrs. 23 Ga. 566; Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295; Doebler v. Com. 3 Serg. & R. 237.

2. State Constitutions.

Alabama.

The usages of the common law with reference to juries are adopted by the Constitution of Alabama, and therefore a lawful jury under such Constitution means a jury of twelve as at common law. Woodward Iron Co. v. Cabaniss, 87 Ala. 328, 330; Montgomery & F. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 85 Ala. 546; Collins v. State, 88 Ala. 212, 214; Brazier v. State, 44 Ala. 387, 392.

So, the right to be tried by such a jury extends to all prosecutions instituted by indictment, and it must be secured to the defendant in the court of original jurisdiction, or he must have such right upon appeal. Collins v. State, 88 Ala. 212, 215.

And it is generally conceded that the parties are entitled to have all claims, demands, and contentions so tried under the constitutional guaranty, which embraces all purely legal rights and contentions known to the common law. Montgomery & F. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 85 Ala. 546, 549.

But when a jury of twelve men is not demandable of right by the common law it is not demandable of right under a constitutional provision. Montgomery & F. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 85 Ala. 546, 549.

And the right to be tried by such a jury can only be said to exist in cases in which the right did so exist either at common law or under a state statute at the adoption of the Constitution of the state. Tims v. State, 26 Ala. 165, 168. Arkansas.

The word "jury" as used in the Arkansas Bill of Rights means a jury in the common-law 43 L. R. A. sense twelve men. State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384, 410; State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436; Warwick v. State, 47 Ark. 568.

As the common-law jury consists of twelve men, and as the Constitution is silent upon the subject, the conclusion is irresistible, that the framers of that instrument intended to require the same number. Larillian v. Lane, 8 Ark. 372, 375.

And the constitutional provisions are so construed that a defendant cannot be deprived of his right to a trial by such a jury except by his own consent. State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436, 447.

And so strongly are the constitutional provisions construed in favor of a jury of twelve that the legislature cannot abridge the number. State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384, 410; State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436; Calro & F. R. Co. v. Trout, 82 Ark. 17, 25. California.

The court did not expressly pass upon the number of jurors necessary to constitute a valid jury under the California Constitution in the case of Koppikus v. State Capitol Comrs. 16 Cal. 248, 253, 254, yet, in construing the language of such Constitution as to the right being secured to all and remaining inviolate forever, the court held that the language was used with reference to the right as it existed at common law.

It would therefore seem that if the right as it existed at common law was a right to be tried by twelve men such right would exist under the state Constitution, and the language so used by the court might well be said to warrant such a construction. Connecticut.

The case of Goddard v. State, 12 Conn. 448, 450, passed upon the construction of the same provision in the Constitution of that state, and held that the word "remain" as therein used was a relative term, and referred to the state of things existing at the time the same was adopted, and declared that the right then enjoyed should be enjoyed forever. The question of the number of jurors did not arise in this case, but the construction placed by the court upon the words of the Constitution may be said to be of equal weight in construing the terms of the Constitution in reference to the number of jurors, as, if a jury of twelve was the jury to which a person was entitled at the date of the Constitution, his right to such a jury would under such a construction still continue.

This contention is further supported by the later case of Seeley v. Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 1, dict shall be unanimous. In civil cases three fourths of the jurors may find a verdict. A jury in civil cases shall be waived unless demanded." The punishment of murder in the second degree is imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary, "for not less than ten years, and which imprisonment may be extended to life." Laws 1890, p. 94. While the description of the offense included murder in the first degree, as well as murder in the second degree, the grand jury characterized the crime as murder in the second degree, and thereby expressed an intent to accuse the defendant of that offense, and not with a capital crime. The defendant was tried for murder in the second degree, as the rulings of the court and its charge to the jury show, and he was convicted of and sentenced for that crime. Therefore the crime was within the 2d clause of the above section.

But the defendant insists that § 7 of the same article, which says that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law," secured him the right to be tried by twelve persons. To hold that the authors of the state Constitution intended by the use of the phrase "due process of law" to require a jury of twelve jurors in all cases would be to say, in effect, that they intended to create a repugnancy in that instrument. The rules of construction of constitutional law, as well as statute law, require that both sections shall be allowed to stand, and effect be given to each. We are of the opinion that they can stand together, and that no conflict was intended.

The defendant also claims that § 10, supra, conflicts with the Constitution of the United States, and that it is void for that reason. Article 6 of the Amendment to that instrument declares that "in all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed. . . ."

2, although the number of jurors was not the exact question raised in that case. Florida.

The provision in the original Florida Constitution that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate forever, taken by itself, refers to a jury according to the common law, to be composed of twelve persons. Gibson v. State, 16 Fla. 291, 300.

By the amendment of the Constitution of Florida adopted in 1875, the number of jurors for the trial of causes in any court may be fixed by law. Under this amendment it was held, in Gibson v. State, 16 Fla. 291, wherein the defendant was convicted of larceny by a jury of six, that the right of trial by jury as given by the original Constitution was qualified and controlled without destroying or infringing the right of trial by jury, and the number of jurors had been regulated by law, and six were made sufficient, and that therefore such a jury was constitutional.

The construction placed upon the Florida Constitution by the case of Blanchard v. Raines, 20 Fla. 467, 476, is also in the same line.

And the above provision has been construed as referring only to the number of jurors for the trial of causes in the court of that state. English v. State, 31 Fla. 340, 344. Georgia.

The provision in the Georgia Constitution which declares that "trial by jury as heretofore used in this state shall remain inviolate" contemplates a trial by a jury as at common law, that is by twelve free and lawful men of the body of the county. Jones v. State, 1 Ga. 610, 616. In this case, however, the question turned largely upon the point of the number of challenges that the prisoner was entitled to on an indictment for larceny.

So, the clause in the Georgia Constitution has been held to embrace a trial by jury as at common law in all its essential elements. Costly v. State, 19 Ga. 614, 620.

It includes the right as declared by Magna Charta. Mahan v. Cavender, 77 Ga. 118, 121.

And, although the question of number was not expressly passed upon by the court in Flint River S. B. Co. v. Foster, 5 Ga. 194, 48 Am. Dec. 248, 260, and in Harper v. Elberton Comrs. 23 Ga. 566, yet the general construction placed upon the constitutional provisions by those cases, that it was the right as it existed at common law that was guaranteed, would apply with equal force to a construction thereof with reference to the number necessary to constitute a valid jury.

In construing the Georgia Constitution of 1868, which provides that the right of trial by jury, "except where it is otherwise provided in this Constitution," shall remain inviolate, and the general assembly shall provide by law for the selection of upright and intelligent persons to serve as jurors, the court in Allen v. State, 51 Ga. 264, 266, stated that the exception therein contained had reference to that clause which authorizes the superior court to render judgment without the verdict of a jury in civil cases where no issuable plea is filed, and not to the number of persons who shall compose the jury; and further, that if the Constitution had used the words "trial by jury as heretofore used in this state" there would be ground for supposing that a common-law jury of twelve men as previously used in that state was intended and no other, but such words were omitted and it declared that a jury of seven should be lawful in the district court which was authorized to be organized by it.

So, the Georgia Constitution of 1877, § 18, art. 3, which prohibits a jury of less than twelve men, was not intended to annul the practice in the city courts, under the Georgia statute legislating the practice in such court until some other law was passed to take its place, and therefore a jury of five trying a case in such courts pursuant to the defendant's demand of a jury cannot afterwards be assailed as unconstitutional. Kneeland v. State, 62 Ga. 396.

In Conyers v. Graham, 81 Ga. 615, 619, it was held that art. 6, § 18, ¶ 1, of the Constitution (Ga. Code, § 5174), provides in effect that the trial by jury shall remain inviolate in the city and superior courts, in which courts a jury is composed of twelve men, and it is the trial by twelve jurors which the Constitution declares shall remain inviolate. This case, however, turned more especially upon the question of the application of the provision of the Constitution to acts regulating the mode or manner of selecting the twelve jurors and the number of strikes that each party was entitled to. The court stated that if the act relating thereto provided for a trial by a jury of twelve that was sufficient, and there was no limitation to the power of the legislature to prescribe how the twelve should be selected.

Illinois.

Under the Illinois Constitution a jury of less than twelve is not a common-law jury as guar-

This amendment applies to the United States government, not to the states. Limitations imposed on the powers of government by the Constitution of the United States are upon that government alone, unless the states are mentioned. "The states may, if they choose, provide for the trial of all offenses against the states, as well as for the trial of civil cases in the state courts, without the intervention of a jury, or by some different jury from that known to the common law." Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. pp. 29, 30; Twitchell v. Pennsylvania, 7 Wall. 321, 19 L. ed. 223; Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. 532, 22 L. ed. 487.

Defendant's counsel also insists that § 10, supra, conflicts with § 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as follows: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The 1st clause of the section makes all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, citizens of the United States, and of the state wherein they reside. Citizenship of the United States is distinguished from citizenship of the state. All persons of the description mentioned are clothed with two distinct citizenships,—they are citizens of the United States, and of the state wherein they reside. As to the 2d clause of the section, it may be said that the privileges and immunities of an individual as a citizen of the United States go with him and protect him in any state, and, under treaties and the law of nations, into foreign lands and distant climes. But his privileges and anted to accused parties by that instrument, especially where a less number than twelve is not expressly allowed. People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674, 676.

The following cases, although they do not expressly pass upon the number of jurors, also uphold a construction of the constitutional provisions showing that the common-law jury of twelve men as it had been theretofore enjoyed was the one that was intended to be secured by the terms of such Constitution. Johnson v. Joliet & C. R. Co. 23 Ill. 203; Seavey v. Seavey, 30 Ill. App. 625, 637, 638; Ross v. Irving, 14 Ill. 171; Whitehurst v. Coleen, 53 Ill. 247; Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585, 589-591.

Under the Illinois Constitution of 1870 juries of less than twelve in justices' courts are legal. Indiana.

The jury at common law consists of twelve men, and the same is the case under the Indiana Criminal Code, as it does not speak of a less number. Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496; Jackson v. State, 6 Blackf. 461; Brown v. State, 8 Blackf. 581.

And the constitutional provision was adopted in reference to the common-law right of trial by jury. Allen v. Anderson, 57 Ind. 389. Iowa.

The jury contemplated by the provisions of art. 1, § 19, of the Iowa Constitution, Code 770, is the common-law jury constituted of twelve competent persons. State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 579, 33 Am. Rep. 148, 149; Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 296; Kelsh v. Dyersville, 68 Iowa, 187; Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 385.

It is, however, within the power of the people of the state when forming their fundamental law to provide that a jury shall consist of six in inferior courts, and that such courts shall try inferior offenses leaving the way open to a jury of twelve by appeal. State v. Beneke, 9 Iowa, 203, 206.

And § 9 of art. 1 of the Iowa Bill of Rights was not designed as providing that in no case should a party be deprived of the right of trial by a jury of twelve, as the word "jury," as used in the 2d clause of such article is used in a sense different from the common-law meaning, even with regard to the right of appeal. Higgins v. Farmer's Ins. Co. 60 Iowa, 50, 51.

A municipal corporation is entitled to the benefit of the provisions of § 9 of the Iowa Bill of Rights, which guarantees the right to a trial by a jury, as the law makes no distinction between the two classes of persons, and therefore the provisions for a trial by less than twelve jurors in case of sickness is no more binding upon a municipal corporation than upon any other person. Kelsh v. Dyersville, 68 Iowa, 137. Kansas.

The Constitution of Kansas refers to the right to trial by jury as it existed at common law, and to those cases only in which a party was then entitled to a common jury. Kimball v. Connor, 3 Kan. 414. Kentucky.

In Beatty v. Com. 91 Ky. 313, 321, with respect to the right of trial by jury under the Constitution of the state, it was said that the period of time must be looked to in determining what was the ancient mode of trial by jury, and whether the constitutional guaranty as to it has been violated. This case involved the question of the constitutionality of the Kentucky statute of February 21, 1890, securing a more uniform and equal distribution of jury service, but the question of the number of jurors requisite to try a case did not expressly arise, nor was it absolutely determined.

The following cases, although they do not pass upon the exact number, recognize the theory that a jury as at common law is guaranteed by the Constitution. Enderman v. Ashley, Sneed (Ky.) 53; Ross v. Neal, 7 T. B. Mon. 407, 408. Maryland.

Although the question of number was not before the court in the case of State v. Glenn, 54 Md. 572, 606, yet the court declared that the constitutional provisions declared and made firm the pre-existing rights of the people, as those rights had been established by usage and the settled course of the law, although they were not intended to embrace every species of accusation involving either criminal or penal consequences; and further, that it gives the right to which the parties were entitled by the common law of England, according to the course of that law. State v. Glenn, 54 Md. 572, 599. It would therefore seem that if the established usage and settled course of law recognized the right to a jury of twelve, such a jury was the one declared and made firm by the Constitution of that state. Massachusetts.

In Com. v. Dorsey, 103 Mass. 412, 418, it is said that the jury referred to in article 12 of the Massachusetts Declaration of Rights is what was known as a petit jury, which consisted by immunities as a citizen of the state abroad depend upon courtesy and comity. The provision did not define or create those rights termed the "privileges" and "immunities" of citizens of the state. The power to do so is among those reserved to the people, to be exercised by the states, according to the will of its people, expressed in constitutions and laws. This provision does not limit the power of the state as to the establishment of courts or other tribunals, or as to the modes of procedure in them. It has no application to jury trials in state courts. Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394.

It is further insisted that § 10 of the state Constitution is within the limitation imposed by the 3d clause of § 1, above quoted, which declares that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law;" that this language entitled a person on trial charged with a crime against a state law to a common-law jury—twelve jurors. We have seen that the common law of "twelve good and impartial men of the neighborhood," and undoubtedly the Constitution contemplated a jury of twelve men who should be good and impartial.

Michigan.

By the Constitution of Michigan, art. 7, § 28, the jury may consist of less than twelve in all courts not of record. Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351, 355; Campau v. Detroit, 14 Mich. 276.

And the provisions of Mich. Const. art. 6, § 27, that "the right of trial by jury shall remain, but shall be deemed to be waived in all civil cases, unless demanded by one of the parties, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law," must be construed as meaning the right to trial by jury as it existed before, and as it had become known to the previous jurisprudence of the state. Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443, 448; Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 633; Tabor v. Cook, 15 Mich. 322, 325; Paul v. Detroit, 32 Mich. 108, 114; Van Sickle v. Kellogg, 19 Mich. 49, 52.

The provisions contained in art. 4, § 46, of the Michigan Constitution, that the legislature may authorize the trial by a jury of less than twelve men, even though they give the legislature authority to fix and define a number less than twelve which shall compose the jury, do not authorize the making of provisions for contingencies in which a jury might consist of less than twelve in the discretion of the trial court. McRae v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. 93 Mich. 399, 17 L. R. A. 750.

Minnesota.

A jury as used under art. 1, § 6, of the Minnesota Constitution, which declares that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury," imports a body of twelve men. State v. Everett, 14 Minn. 439, 444; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Grube, 6 Minn. 82, 85.

And although the Constitution does not define trial by jury, yet it must be taken as meaning the right which existed at common law, history showing what the term meant, and to what the Constitution referred. Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 65 Minn. 196, 33 L. R. A. 437, 441.

The right must be taken as the same as that which existed at common law at the time the state Constitution was adopted. Whallon v. Bancroft, 4 Minn. 109.

Mississippi.

The Mississippi Constitution is silent as to the number of jurors, and also as to their qualifications, but it is to be taken that the number, which by the common law was known to be twelve, was contemplated by the Constitution, and therefore it is not competent for the legislature to abolish or change in a substantial manner such jury, although they may prescribe the qualifications attached to a juror. Byrd v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 163.

So, it has been stated that there is no jury for the trial of issues known to the Constitution and laws of Mississippi except that which consists of "twelve good and lawful men who are tried, elected, and sworn." Wolfe v. Martin, 1 How. (Miss.) 30, 31.

And the term "jury" as used in the Mississippi statutes is to be taken as having the fixed and determined meaning ascertained by the paramount law, and the courts will assume that the constituents of the jury, so far as numbers are involved, are fixed by the Constitution according to the common law as it existed at the time of the adoption of the same. Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116.

To the same effect, Dowling v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 664; Lewis v. Garrett, 5 How. (Miss.) 434; Hunt v. State, 61 Miss. 577, 580; Tillman v. Allles, 5 Smedes & M. 373, 43 Am. Dec. 520; Dixon v. Richards, 2 How. (Miss.) 771.

Missouri.

Under the Constitution of the state of Missouri the defendant in a criminal prosecution has a right to twelve jurors, and in civil cases either party has a right to demand a jury of twelve, and such is the settled law of the state. State v. Van Matre, 49 Mo. 268.

So, whenever there is a constitutional guaranty of the right of trial by jury, the jury must be composed of twelve men. State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, 474; State v. Robertson, 71 Mo. 448.

And in all courts of record a jury must consist of twelve, and the defendant has a right to demand such number under the Constitution. Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600.

The terms used in the Missouri Constitution mean the historical jury of twelve men with all its incidents. Kansas City, C. & S. R. Co. v. Story, 96 Mo. 611, 621.

So, in State, St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co., v. Withrow, 133 Mo. 500, it is said that all substantial incidents and consequences which pertain to the right of trial by jury are beyond the reach of hostile legislation, and are preserved in their ancient substantial extent as existing land. Nothing essential can emanate from arbitrary power. The rights of the defendant and the duty of the court are equally under the finger of the law. But the law defining crime, the rules of evidence, or the procedure, may be changed by competent authority, constitutional authority, or common law. It will not be denied that the common law requiring twelve jurors can be changed by the people of the United States by amending their Constitution. And the question is: Have they, by the constitutional provision under consideration, prohibited the people of the state from reducing the number of jurors from twelve to eight? Have they, in using the phrase "due process of law," deprived the people of the state of Utah of the power to reduce the number of jurors in the trial of a felony to eight? They have assumed to do so, and we must presume that they believed the jury they provided most suitable and best calculated, under existing and probable conditions, to discharge the duties of a jury. The purpose of the provision relied upon was to secure the rights to life, liberty, and property, and the benefits of just laws. If a jury of eight men is as likely to ascertain the truth as twelve, that number secures the end. There can be no magic in the number twelve, though hallowed by time. Intelligence, impartiality, and integrity are the qualities that will enable and influence jurors to ascertain and declare the truth. Such a result does not depend upon any particular number. Legal process must submit to reform, in the light of experience and advancing intelligence. True principles must endure, but the methods, modes, and means of securing their application to human conduct, human rights and duties,—the social system,—will change with development and progress and more complicated conditions. We are of the opinion that the people of the state had the power, in the Constitution, to abolish the common-law jury, or to change it as they have done in at common law. This case, however, did not involve the question of the number of jurors requisite, but passed upon the question of the Constitution in methods of drawing a special jury, and it is only here cited as showing the construction put upon the words of the state Constitution.

The above principles are also borne out by State v. Meyers, 68 Mo. 266; Bank of Missouri v. Anderson, 1 Mo. 174, 175; Foster v. Kirby, 31 Mo. 496, 498; Aka v. Anderson, 84 Mo. 74; Hennig v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 35 Mo. 408; Scott v. Russell, 39 Mo. 407, 409.

Montana.
A common-law jury consists of twelve persons, and this is the jury secured and guaranteed by the Constitution, and by the law of the land. A jury of twelve persons forms a part of the tribunal before which a defendant charged with a capital crime is to be tried. Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341.

The provisions of the Federal Constitution which declare that in all suits at common law where the value at controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and that no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined by any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law, has been construed as extending to cases tried in a district court wherein the verdict has not been unanimous, as when rendered by nine jurors only, the others dissenting, the verdict thus rendered being declared void. Kleinschmidt v. Dunphy, 1 Mont. 118, 131.

This decision appears in 11 Wall. 610, 20 L. ed. 223, to have been rendered on the verdict and affirmed on appeal by the supreme court of the territory, but reversed on other grounds by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Nevada.
The provision of Nev. Const. § 3, art. 1, that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever," has reference to the right of trial by jury as it existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. A jury for the trial of a cause was a body of twelve men. State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39, 44; State v. Borowsky, 11 Nev. 119, 127; State v. Potts, 20 Nev. 389, 397.

New Hampshire.
It has been stated that no body of less than twelve men, though they should be by law denominated a jury, would be a jury within the meaning of the Constitution, nor would a trial 43 L. R. A.

by such a body, though called a trial by jury, be such within the meaning of that instrument. Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 550, 551.

In the above case the court said that at the date of the adoption of the Constitution no such thing as a jury of less than twelve men, or a jury deciding by less than twelve voices, had ever been known, or ever been the subject of discussion, in any country of the common law.

The trial by jury as guaranteed by the Constitution is a trial according to the course of the common law, and the same in substance as that which was in use when the Constitution was adopted. State v. Wilson, 48 N. H. 398; East Kingston v. Towle, 48 N. H. 64, 97 Am. Dec. 575, 2 Am. Rep. 174; Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 193, 20 Am. Rep. 194.

New Jersey.
It is the old right, whatever it was, that is to remain inviolate. Howe v. Plainfield Treasurer, 37 N. J. L. 145, 148.

New York.
The provision of the New York Constitution has been construed to mean a common-law jury of twelve, but as not applying to the petty offenses triable before a single magistrate, or a court of special sessions. People, Eckler, v. Clark, 23 Hun, 374, 376; People, Murray, v. New York City & County Justices, 74 N. Y. 406, 407.

And it has been stated that the constitutional provision should be viewed as recognizing and protecting the right to a trial by a common-law jury of twelve in cases in courts of record in which it had been theretofore used. People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168, 178.

In People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 812, 817, it is said that the obvious meaning of the expression "heretofore used" as contained in the New York Constitution was "in use at the time of the adoption of the Constitution" and that the meaning of the term "trial by jury" meant a common-law jury of twelve men.

N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 2, declares a "trial by jury, in all cases in which it has heretofore been used, shall remain inviolate forever," and the Revised Statutes of that state (2 Rev. Stat. 734, § 5, 735, § 14, 420, § 61), provide, in reference to trials in criminal cases, that the twelve first jurors who shall appear on being called and being approved as indifferent, shall constitute the jury.

In Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 135, 138, the above provisions were construed as mean-the section of their Constitution above quoted.

In Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678, the court said: "A trial by jury in suits at common law pending in the state courts is not, therefore, a privilege or immunity of national citizenship, which the states are forbidden by the 14th Amendment to abridge. A state cannot deprive a person of his property without due process of law, but this does not necessarily imply that all trials in the state courts affecting the property of persons must be by jury. This requirement of the Constitution is met if the trial is had according to the settled course of judicial proceedings. Den, Murray, v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 280, 15 L. ed. 376. Due process of law is process due according to the law of the land. This process in the states is regulated by the law of the state. Our power over that law is only to determine whether it is in conflict with the supreme law of the land,—that is to say, with the Constitution and laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof,—or with any treaty made under the authority of the United States." Ordranax, Const. Leg. p. 261; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 517, 28 L. ed. 232.

The defendant was convicted of an offense committed on the 22d day of September, 1895, and § 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of Utah went into effect on the 4th day of January, 1896; and it is also urged that it is an ex post facto law, and of no effect as to that offense. The defendant was tried on April 7, 1896; and the question is: Did the reduction of the number of jurors from twelve to eight, on the 4th of January, after the offense was committed, deprive the defendant of a substantial right? The law defining the offense, imposing the punishment, or the rules of evidence, was not changed. The tribunal for the trial was altered. Whether the alteration was prejudicial to the defendant cannot be known. We cannot ing that where issue was joined upon an indictment the trial must be by the tribunal and in the mode which the Constitution and laws provide, without any essential change, and that in such cases the jury cannot be less than twelve men by consent of all the parties.

So, it has been construed as extending to cases triable by a jury of twelve prior to time of adoption of the state Constitution. Wynhamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 458; People, Murray, v. New York City & County Justices, 74 N. Y. 406, 407; Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, 143; Dater v. Loomis, cited in 37 How. Pr. 142; People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168; Cruger v. Hudson River R. Co. 12 N. Y. 190, 198; Greason v. Keteltas, 17 N. Y. 498; People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 317, 321; People v. Carroll, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 22; Warren v. People, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 544; Duffy v. People, 6 Hill, 77, 78; People v. Goodwin, 5 Wend. 253; Murphy v. People, 2 Cow. 815.

In Clark v. Utica, 18 Barb. 451, 454, it is said that when the framers of the original Constitution of 1777 ordained that "trial by jury in all cases in which it hath heretofore been used in the colony of New York shall be established and remain inviolate forever," they spoke as the very words import, of a thing well known, and in common use, and they were to be understood as ordaining that it was to continue to be used in its ordinary and well-known attributes and functions, and further, that when it was said that all proceedings according to the common law were to be by jury what was indicated was clearly understood, and the necessary functions and accessories were clearly implied.

In People v. Johnson, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 322, the right to a trial by a jury of twelve for a misdemeanor was held a constitutional right which could not be interfered with by state legislation.

So, the constitutional right to be tried by a jury of twelve men extends to misdemeanors even though the offense of that grade is constituted by subsequent statute. People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 312, 317.

The qualifying words of the New York Constitution imply that there were, and had been, trials otherwise than by a common-law jury, and the framers of the Constitution of that state must be presumed to have had knowledge of previous legislation, and the use as to trials otherwise than by a jury of twelve in inferior courts of local jurisdiction, and must be presumed to 43 L. R. A.

have recognized, and adopted, the principle which had dictated the legislature, and which originated and undertook to authorize the usage. People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168, 175.

It was not the purpose of the provisions of the New York Constitution to enlarge the practice or use of trials by a jury of twelve men. People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168; Lee v. Tillotson, 24 Wend. 337, 35 Am. Dec. 624; Rathbun v. Rathbun, 3 How. Pr. 139; Sands v. Kimbark, 27 N. Y. 147; United States Trust Co. v. United States F. Ins. Co. 18 N. Y. 199.

So, a jury of six in a justice's court is constitutional, especially where it is the method resorted to in that tribunal prior to the adoption of the state Constitution. Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 16, 20.

The jurisdiction of justices' courts under the New York Laws of 1879, chap. 390, is not in conflict with the constitutional right to be tried by a jury of twelve men. People, Comaford, v. Dutcher, 20 Hun, 241; People, Stetzer, v. Rawson, 61 Barb. 619.

And, there is nothing in the New York state Constitution which prohibits the legislature from enlarging the jurisdiction of justices' courts in the mode contemplated by the act of 1861, Laws of 1861, chap. 158, and the increase of jurisdiction thereby given is not obnoxious to the constitutional provision for the reason that it transfers a class of cases from courts of record, where juries are composed of twelve, to justices' courts in which they consist of six, and the right to a trial by a jury therefore remains unimpaired in such courts. Dawson v. Horan, 51 Barb. 459, 464, 466.

In Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 16, 25, in answer to the contention that the provision in the state Constitution meant a common-law petit jury of twelve men and nothing else, the court stated that the provision did not say this in terms, but what it did say was "a trial by a jury as it has been heretofore used," and therefore a jury of six men in a justice's court was as much a jury in the eye of the law as a jury of twelve men in a court of record, as the law had made it the jury of that tribunal, and also for the reason that it was the jury which had been "heretofore used" in that tribunal.

And in that case the court further stated that the provision in the New York Constitution (Constitution of 1777) must have intended to secure the right of trial by jury in justices' infer that the jury who tried the case did not understand the evidence and the charge of the court, and impartially decide; that they did not reach as correct a verdict as twelve jurors would have reached. The law in force at the time of the trial threw around the defendant all the substantial protection that the law at the time of the commission of the offense did. The change complained of related to an instrumentality employed in the pursuit of the remedy. To investigate the evidence, the law employed a jury. We are of the opinion that the provision of the state Constitution complained of was not ex post facto, and inapplicable to the offense charged against the defendant.

Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed. pp. 326, 327, lays down the law in these words: "But, so far as mere modes of procedure are concerned, a party has no more right in a criminal than in a civil action to insist that his case shall be disposed of under the law in force when the act to be investigated is charged to have taken place. Remedies must always be under the control of the legislature, and it would create endless confusion in legal proceedings if every case was to be conducted only in accordance with the rules of practice, and heard only by the courts, in existence when the facts arose. The legislature may abolish courts, and create new ones, and it may prescribe altogether different modes of procedure, in its discretion, though it cannot lawfully, we think, in so doing, dispense with any of those substantial protections with which the existing law surrounds the person accused of crime. Statutes giving the government additional challenges, and others which authorized the amendment of indictments, have been sustained and applied to past transactions, as, doubtless, would be any similar statute, calculated merely to improve the remedy, and, in its operation, working no injustice to the defendant, and depriving him of no substantial right." In his work on Statutory Construction (§ 469), Judge Sutherland says:

courts, as it had been theretofore used in the colony, as well as in any other court, and such language is certainly broad enough to include all trials in all courts, and should be so construed unless there is something to give it a special or exceptional application. Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 16, 25. Ohio.

The constitutional right of trial by jury comprehends the right as it was recognized by the common law. Sovereign v. State, 4 Ohio St. 489; Hagany v. Cohen, 29 Ohio St. 82, 84; Inwood v. State, 42 Ohio St. 186.

The institution of the jury referred to in the Ohio Constitution, and its benefits secured to every person accused of crime, "is precisely the same, in every substantial respect, as that recognized in the great charter, and its benefits secured to the freeman of England, and again and again acknowledged in fundamental compacts as the great safeguard of life, liberty, and property; the same, brought to this continent by our forefathers, and perseveringly claimed as their birth-right in every contest with arbitrary power, and finally, an invasion of its privilege prominently assigned as one of the causes which was to justify them in the eyes of mankind, in waging the contest which resulted in independence." Such right was made a corner stone in erecting the state governments; and after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, without a provision securing it, an amendment was proposed and carried giving to every person accused of crime in the courts of the Union "the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime should have been committed." Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 302, 59 Am. Dec. 671, 672.

So, the true characteristics and essential features of the institutions and proceedings named and established by the Constitution must be sought from the system of law from which it is taken. Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671, 672; Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 573, 630.

In Lamb v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 176, 177, it is said that the above clause of the Constitution had reference to a body of twelve men.

Yet the constitutional right of trial by jury does not apply to trials before justices of the peace, and therefore an act allowing a jury of six in such courts is constitutional. Work v. 43 L. R. A.

State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 308, 59 Am. Dec. 671; Norton v. McLeary, 8 Ohio St. 205; Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 31 Ohio St. 268.

So, wherever facts are to be found in any proceeding, in which a jury was not required by the common law, a jury of any number may be authorized within the discretion of the legislative body. Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 308, 59 Am. Dec. 671.

Juries did not belong to inferior courts, such as courts of justices of the peace, at common law, and so long as an appeal is provided for to the common-law courts from their determination no constitutional objection can arise whether facts are found by the magistrate or by the aid of a jury of any number of men. Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 308, 59 Am. Dec. 671; Emerick v. Harris, 1 Blinn. 416.

Oregon.

A trial by jury is secured to a party by the Constitution in all criminal prosecutions, and is understood to mean the common-law trial by jury, which must be by twelve good and lawful men. Wong v. Astoria, 13 Or. 538, 545.

But the constitutional provisions do not apply or give a right to a jury of twelve in proceedings for violations of city ordinances. Wong v. Astoria, 13 Or. 538.

And a similar construction has been placed upon the constitutional provisions relative to civil cases, and the right of trial by jury remaining inviolate therein. Dean v. Willamette Bridge Co. 22 Or. 187, 15 L. R. A. 614, 615; Kendall v. Post, 8 Or. 146; Tribau v. Strowbridge, 7 Or. 158.

Pennsylvania.

Trial by jury at the adoption of the Pennsylvania Constitution of 1790 contemplated, where trial by jury was had, that the jury should consist of twelve, that twelve should be sworn, and that the same twelve should return the verdict, and this being the jury trial contemplated by the fundamental law of the commonwealth, it follows that if any other trial by jury be had there must be some authority shown for it. Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295.

And no less number than twelve can satisfy the requirements of the bill of rights. Com. v. Saal, 10 Phila. 496.

The trial on an indictment must be by a jury of twelve men lawfully sworn, and a verdict by eleven jurors is illegal. Doeblor v. Com. 3 Serg. & R. 237; Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295.

"Acts for transferring criminal cases to another court, or providing a new tribunal, or giving a new jurisdiction, to try offenses already committed, do not abridge any right, and are not ex post facto. When the offense was committed, the jury was, by statute, judge of the law. This act was repealed before the trial. Such change, as applied to that case, was held not ex post facto. Nor are treaties which provide for surrender of persons charged with previous offenses; nor statutes giving additional challenges to the government; statutes reducing the defendant's peremptory challenges, or modifying the grounds of challenge for cause; statutes authorizing amendments to indictments; statutes regulating the framing of indictments, with a view to exclude redundancies, and reduce them to essential allegations; statutes to generally facilitate the routine of procedure, and preclude defendants from taking advantage of mere technicalities, which do not prejudice them. Where there has been a legal conviction, but an erroneous judgment thereon, which resulted, according to the law, in a discharge of the convict on reversal of the judgment, a law enacted subsequent to the commission of the crime, that, on such a reversal, the court in which the conviction was had should, on return of the record, pass such sentence thereon as the appellate court should direct, was not an ex post facto law." Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 233; Gut v. Minnesota, 9 Wall. 35, 19 L. ed. 573; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648.

Upon examination of the record, we find no error in the ruling of the court admitting evidence objected to by the defendant, or in the portions of the charge excepted to. We do not deem it necessary to particularly examine in this opinion such alleged errors. We find no errors against the defendant in this record. Therefore the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Bartch and Miner, JJ., concur.

If the number returned be less than twelve any verdict may be ineffectual, and the judgment will be reversed on error. Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittab. 492; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, p. 505.

Yet the constitutional provision that trial by jury shall be as heretofore only refers to such cases as were triable by a jury under the common law. Rhines v. Clark, 51 Pa. 96, 101; Haines v. Levin, 51 Pa. 412; Re Pennsylvania Hall, 5 Pa. 204, 208.

Trial by jury as "heretofore," had not been known in the forum of the justices' courts. Emerick v. Harris, 1 Binn. 416, 428; Biddle v. Com. 13 Serg. & R. 405, 411; Com. v. Seamans, 3 Law Times, N. S. (Pa.) 133; Lavery v. Com. 101 Pa. 560.

South Carolina.

The right to a trial by jury under the South Carolina Constitution is fully satisfied, when the prisoner is vouchsafed, by the law of the land, a fair trial by twelve jurors, men good and true, and there is no infringement of such constitutional right so long as the right to a jury of twelve is prescribed. State v. Williams, 35 S. C. 344, 352; Cregier v. Bunton, 2 Strobb. L. 487; State v. Boatwright, 10 Rich. L. 407.

And the provisions of the Constitution of 1868 do not prohibit a jury of less than twelve in inferior courts in this state, and therefore a jury of six under a then existing law in cases of smaller misdemeanors is not contrary to the constitutional provisions, "however evasive of jury trial" it may seem to be. State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 373, 377.

Tennessee.

The settled meaning of art. 1 of § 6 of the Tennessee Constitution is that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate as it existed at common law at the time of the formation of the Constitution. Neely v. State, 4 Baxt. 174, 180; Trigally v. Memphis, 6 Coldw. 382; McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 43, 49 Am. Dec. 697.

And so state statutes which provide for the trial of an offense are to be considered in reference to the principles of the common law. The rule applies alike to a provision of the constitutional or fundamental law, and for the same reason. The framers of the law in either case are not to be presumed to have intended to make any change or innovation on the common law further than is expressly declared. McGinnis v. State, 9 Humph. 43, 49 Am. Dec. 697, 699. 43 L. R. A.

Utah.

In Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 154, 160, the term "jury," as used in the state Constitution, was construed to mean a jury of twelve men.

The Constitution of this state declared that "in capital cases the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate," but in courts of general jurisdiction, except in such cases, a jury shall consist of eight men, and in inferior courts of four men, with a unanimous verdict in all criminal cases, and a three-fourths verdict in all civil cases, and a waiver of a jury in such cases unless demanded. Art. 1, § 10.

The principal case of STATE V. BATES held that these constitutional provisions do not contravene the United States Constitution, as that, in its provisions for jury trials, does not apply to trials under state laws, and its provisions as to the privileges and immunities of citizens and as to due process of law do not prevent the people of the state from providing by their Constitution for a jury of less than twelve.

This case was approved and followed by the court in the case of State v. Thompson, 15 Utah, 488, wherein a conviction of larceny by a jury of eight was upheld although the crime was committed prior to the admission of Utah as a state of the Union.

But this decision was reversed by the United States Supreme Court in Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061, wherein the substitution of a jury of less than twelve (8) in cases of crimes committed before the territory was admitted as a state of the Union, and before the passing of the state Constitution, was held to be an ex post facto law.

The case of STATE V. BATES was also cited with approval in State v. Carrington, 15 Utah, 480, wherein the offense was also committed prior to the date of the state's admission to the Union. But in that case the question was whether or not the constitutional provision for a grand jury of seven was ex post facto, where the offense was committed before the Constitution went into effect. This decision would also seem to be overruled by the above case of Thompson v. Utah.

Vermont.

In the provisions in the Vermont Constitution of 1793, and subsequent Constitutions, the word "jury" means a jury of twelve men. State v. Peterson, 41 Vt. 504; Pilbinton v. Somerset, 38 Vt. 283, 293.

And so strongly is the constitutional provision construed that any act which destroys or materially impairs the right of trial by jury according to the course of the common law in cases proper for its cognizance is unconstitutional. Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 283, 290. Virginia.

The right of trial by jury which is secured by the state Constitution is the right as it existed at the time the Constitution was adopted. Miller v. Com. 88 Va. 618, 15 L. R. A. 441, 443; Ex parte Marx, 86 Va. 40. West Virginia.

The provisions in the 13th section of art. 3 of the Constitution of West Virginia, that no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any case than according to the rules of the common law, apply to cases tried in the justice's court before a jury of six. Barlow v. Daniels, 25 W. Va. 512; Hall v. Wadsworth, 30 W. Va. 55, 56.

And in State v. Cottrill, 31 W. Va. 162, 183, it was held that where a person is indicted for a crime or misdemeanor, and a plea of not guilty is entered, the trial of such issue, under the mandate of § 14 of the Bill of Rights, must be by a jury of twelve. In this case, however, there was an equal division of the court upon the question whether the constitutional provision applied to misdemeanors so as to prevent a waiver of the right by the defendant. Wisconsin.

The trial by a jury as secured by the Wisconsin Constitution means a jury of twelve good and lawful men according to the common-law understanding. Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22.

The term "trial by jury shall remain inviolate," has reference to the law which existed prior to the adoption of the state Constitution. Gaston v. Babcock, 6 Wis. 503; Stillwell v. Kellogg, 14 Wis. 462; Mead v. Walker, 17 Wis. 190.

8. United States Constitution.

The provision in the United States Statutes at Large that no party has been or shall be deprived of the right of trial by jury in cases cognizable at common law implies, not merely that the form of a jury trial should be preserved, but also all its substantial elements. Walker v. New Mexico & S. P. R. Co. 165 U. S. 593, 41 L. ed. 837; American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S. 464, 41 L. ed. 1079.

The provision of the Federal Constitution which secures to every party, where the value in controversy exceeds $20, the right of trial by jury, does not apply to trials in the state courts. Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. 532, 22 L. ed. 487; Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 248, 8 L. ed. 674; Twitcheil v. Pennsylvania, 7 Wall. 326, 19 L. ed. 224; Livingston v. Moore, 7 Pet. 469, 8 L. ed. 751; Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. 434, 12 L. ed. 223; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. 76, 15 L. ed. 271.

A substitution of a jury of eight persons in place of a common-law jury, in case of a crime committed before the change in the law, constitutes an ex post facto law. Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061.

The provisions of the Constitution of Utah, providing for the trial in courts of general jurisdiction in criminal cases not capital by a jury composed of eight persons, is ex post facto in its application to felonies committed before the territory became a state. Ibid.

III. Meaning of the terms "jury" and "jury trial."

In Reece v. Knott, 3 Utah, 451, 454, it is said that, when the framers of the Constitution of the United States used the word "jury," they 43 L. R. A.

used it with reference to its signification at common law, which was a jury of twelve men and householders.

So, it has been stated that it must be taken that the word "jury" and the words "trial by jury" were placed in the Constitution of the United States with reference to the meaning affixed to them in the law as it was in this country, and in England, at the time of the adoption of that instrument, and therefore secures the right to a trial by a jury of twelve. Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061.

The expression "trial by jury" is as old as Magna Charta, and has obtained a definite historical meaning well understood by the English-speaking race, and for that reason no American Constitution has ever assumed to define it, and therefore the common law must be looked to in order to ascertain its meaning, and from such time it is found that its essential elements have always been number, impartiality, and unanimity; it must consist of twelve men who must act impartially and indifferently between the parties, and give a unanimous verdict. Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 65 Minn. 196, 33 L. R. A. 437, 441.

And although the language used by the courts is not identically the same in the numerous cases that have passed upon this question, yet the above meaning is adopted and asserted as that universally given to the terms "jury" and "jury trial" in the following cases: Times v. State, 26 Ala. 165; Brazier v. State, 44 Ala. 392; Montgomery & F. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 85 Ala. 549; Woodward Iron Co. v. Cabaniss, 87 Ala. 328, 330; Foot v. Lawrence, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 483; Carroll v. Byers (Ariz.) 36 Pac. 499; Warwick v. State, 47 Ark. 568; People v. Williams, 6 Cal. 207; Koppikus v. State Capitol Comrs. 16 Cal. 248; Flint River S. B. Co. v. Foster, 5 Ga. 195, 48 Am. Dec. 248; Costly v. State, 19 Ga. 614, 629; Mahan v. Cavender, 77 Ga. 118, 121; Ross v. Irving, 14 Ill. 171; Whitehurst v. Coleen, 53 Ill. 247; Bryan v. State, 4 Iowa, 352; Higgins v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 60 Iowa, 50, 51; Campau v. Detroit, 14 Mich. 276; Paul v. Detroit, 32 Mich. 108; Whallon v. Bancroft, 4 Minn. 109; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Grube, 6 Minn. 82, 85; State v. Everett, 14 Minn. 439, 444; Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116; Redus v. Wofford, 4 Smedes & M. 579, 592; Dowling v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 664; Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600; Kleinschmidt v. Dumphy, 1 Mont. 118, 131; State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39, 46, 60; State v. Potts, 20 Nev. 389, 397; Opinion of The Justices, 41 N. H. 550, 551; East Kingston v. Towle, 48 N. H. 64; State v. Wilson, 48 N. H. 398; Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 179, 20 Am. Rep. 194; Howe v. Plainfield Treasurer, 37 N. J. L. 145; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 424; Cancemi v. People, 10 N. Y. 504; People, Murray v. New York City & County Justices, 74 N. Y. 406; People, Eckler v. Clark, 23 Hun. 374, 376; Clark v. Utica, 18 Barb. 451, 454; People, Booth v. Fisher, 20 Barb. 652; Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 16, 27; Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, 145; Dater v. Loomis, cited in Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 142; People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 30+; Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 34, 47 Am. Dec. 216; People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 317; People v. Carroll, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 22; Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 307, 59 Am. Dec. 571; Lamb v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 176, 177; Smith v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. 25 Ohio St. 91; Williard v. Hamilton, 7 Ohio, pt. 2, p. 111, 30 Am. Dec. 195; Wong v. Astoria, 13 Or. 538; Re Pennsylvania Hall, 5 Pa. 204, 208; Byers v. Com. 42 Pa. 89; Rhines v. Clark, 51 Pa. 96; Haines v. Levin, 51 Pa. 412; Staup v. Com. 74

Pa. 458; Com. v. Saal, 10 Phila. 496; Doebler v. Com. 3 Serg. & R. 237; Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295; Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492; Com. v. Mead, 5 Law Times, N. S. (Pa.) 123; Emerick v. Harris, 1 Binn. 416, 428; Trigally v. Memphis, 6 Coldw. 382; Cooley v. State, 38 Tex. 637; Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 154, 160; State v. Peterson, 41 Vt. 504; Ingersoll v. Wilson, 2 W. Va. 59; May v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 3 Wis. 219; Stilwell v. Kellogg, 14 Wis. 462; Mead v. Walker, 17 Wis. 190.

IV. In criminal matters.

a. Felony and high-grade offenses.

As the common-law doctrine would seem to have been impliedly, if not expressly, adopted by the Constitutions of most of the states of the Union, and the constructions placed upon such provisions show that they were meant to declare that the right to a common-law jury of twelve men should always exist and remain inviolate in all cases in which that right existed at common law at the time of the adoption of the state Constitutions, and as the meaning of the terms "jury" and "trial by jury" or "jury trial" as declared by the courts is construed to mean a jury of twelve men, it necessarily follows that the question of the validity of a verdict by less than twelve jurors depends largely upon the question whether the particular crime with which the defendant was charged is one on the trial of which he was entitled to a jury of twelve men by the common law as adopted by the state Constitution.

The grade of the offense charged must therefore be considered in the determination of the question whether the defendant is entitled to the verdict of a full common-law jury, or whether he is legally convicted by a jury of less than twelve men.

The general rule deducible from the decision of the courts upon the question in this respect would seem to be that if the offense is of a capital nature, or a felony, or other high-grade offense, the defendant is entitled to a full jury of twelve men, as such a jury is secured to him by the common law and by the constitutional provisions in criminal offenses of that degree. Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341; McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 228, 234; People v. Guidici, 100 N. Y. 503; People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674, 675; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470; Brazier v. State, 44 Ala. 387, 392; Collins v. State, 88 Ala. 212, 214; Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585, 589, 591.

And in such cases the Constitution guarantees to the defendant the right to a trial by twelve competent jurors, and this number must continue throughout the trial. People v. Deegan, 88 Cal. 608, Dissenting opinion of De Haven, J. Again, it has been stated that the number of jurors must be twelve, they must be impartially selected, and must unanimously concur in the guilt of the accused before a conviction can be had. McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 228, 254.

So, under the Illinois statute as shown by the Criminal Code, questions both of law and fact are for the jury, and therefore the only tribunal possessing the legal power under the laws of that state to determine the question of guilt of an accused upon an indictment for felony and a plea of not guilty, is a jury of twelve men, and the determination of that matter by any other tribunal or functionary is not due process of law. People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674; Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585.

In Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 171, 13 Am. Rep. 492, the defendant, convicted of murder in the first degree, contended that the right of 43 L. R. A.

trial by jury was secured to persons accused of felony by the Constitution, and that he was also entitled to a trial by an impartial jury. The court stated that any act of the legislature providing for the trial otherwise than by a common-law jury composed of twelve men would be unconstitutional and void, and any act requiring or authorizing such trial by a jury partial and biased against either party would be a violation of one of the essential elements of the jury referred to and secured by the Constitution.

In Rich v. State, 1 Tex. App. 206, 210, the defendant, indicted in the district court of the city for murder, was convicted of murder in the second degree. The record showed that a certain jury were impaneled, but eleven names only were mentioned. The court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for a new trial, as it could not be inferred or presumed that the trial was by a fully constituted jury.

This decision was based upon the provisions of art. 5, § 13, of the Texas Constitution, and of art. 595 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of that state under which the number necessary to constitute a jury in the district court was specifically fixed at twelve. The cases of Huebner v. State, 3 Tex. App. 458, a conviction of theft, and Jester v. State, 26 Tex. App. 369, a conviction of burglary, are the same in effect, and uphold the doctrine there set forth.

The case of Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, also upholds the rule that in such cases the jury must be twelve in number.

This case was commented upon in Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 429, 430, 35 Am. Rep. 524, and was distinguished from the case then before the court as in that case the prisoner was tried by a common-law jury of twelve, and all the jurors possessed the qualifications prescribed by statute, and the withdrawal of the challenge was the main question before the court.

And in Iowa the courts have said that in trials for criminal offenses the defendant has a right to a trial by a jury of twelve men. Bryan v. State, 4 Iowa, 349, 352.

In Mississippi it has been held that in criminal proceedings there can be no valid verdict by less than twelve men. Hunt v. State, 61 Miss. 577, 580; Byrd v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 163; Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116; Lewis v. Garrett, 5 How. (Miss.) 434.

So, a verdict by a jury of less than twelve has been held unconstitutional in prosecutions for the following offenses, upon the ground that the defendant in such cases is entitled to a full jury of twelve. Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671, assault and battery; Sovereign v. State, 4 Ohio St. 489, larceny; Com. v. Bridge, 7 Dane's Dig. 159, forgery; State v. Meyers, 68 Mo. 266, embezzlement; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, felony; Huebner v. State, 3 Tex. App. 458, theft; Jester v. State, 26 Tex. App. 369, burglary; People v. O'Neil, 48 Cal. 257, 258, rape; Jackson v. State, 6 Blackf. 461, riot; Collins v. State, 88 Ala. 212, obscene language; Brown v. State, 8 Blackf. 561, 18 Ind. 406, malicious trespass.

As larceny was a crime only triable at common law by a jury of twelve, and this before the adoption of the state Constitutions, it follows that a conviction by a jury of less than twelve is unconstitutional. Thus, where it is sought to recover the costs of a prosecuting witness in a case of a prosecution for larceny under § 45 of the Ohio Probate Court Code, it must appear that the person accused of the offense was acquitted, either by the judge, or by a constitutional jury of twelve, and such a person cannot be tried before a jury of six men, especially after the demand of a jury of twelve. Sovereign v. State, 4 Ohio St. 489.

So, in Com. v. Eagles, 7 W. N. C. 324, wherein the defendant was indicted for larceny, pleaded not guilty, and a jury was sworn, the former trial and acquittal of the defendant for the same offense before a justice of the peace and a jury of six persons, under Pa. act of May 1, 1861, was held to be a nullity, as the act was unconstitutional in so far as it constituted a justice and a jury of six a court for the trial of the crime of larceny.

In Com. v. Bridge, 7 Dane's Dig. 159, there was a variance between the indictment and the judgment in a prosecution for forgery, which the court held to be material, whereupon a juror was withdrawn by the commonwealth, and on the call only eleven jurors answered, and therefore a grand jury found a new indictment.

The presence of only eleven jurors in court at the time of receiving a verdict upon a conviction in the circuit court for embezzling United States bonds is fatal, and the verdict will be reversed. State v. Meyers, 68 Mo. 266; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470.

In Brown v. State, 8 Blackf. 561, a verdict by eleven jurors in a prosecution for larceny was held to be a nullity, and was set aside.

And the same decision was rendered in Allen v. State, 54 Ind. 461, 462, wherein the defendant was convicted by a jury of ten for a similar offense.

A similar decision was also rendered by the court in Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496, wherein the defendant was convicted of malicious trespass by a jury of eleven.

In People v. O'Neil, 48 Cal. 257, 258, the court reversed the verdict, and remanded the case for a new trial, in a conviction of assault with intent to commit rape, where a verdict was rendered by a jury of eleven, as a jury in a criminal action must, within the meaning of the Constitution, consist of twelve men.

In Jackson v. State, 6 Blackf. 461, a conviction upon an indictment for riot by a jury of eleven men was held a fatal defect, as twelve were required by law, and the cause was therefore remanded for a new trial.

In some cases, however, a conviction of an offense of the higher grade by a jury of less than twelve has been upheld, but where such is the case it will be found that the validity of the verdict is based upon the provisions of the state Constitution and some special act of the legislature passed in pursuance of the same.

The case of State v. Worden, 46 Conn. 349, 33 Am. Rep. 27, was one wherein the validity of a statute providing that the accused might elect to be tried by the court instead of a jury was involved. The court drew a distinction between cases occurring under such a statute, and those arising under statutes providing that the accused shall be tried by a jury of less than twelve, and also pointed out the distinction which existed between higher and lower grades of crimes in such cases, and stated that such statutes had in many cases been held constitutional.

The amended Constitution of Florida, which provides that "the number of jurors for the trial of causes in any court may be fixed by law," is to be taken as qualifying and controlling the provision in the original Constitution, which declares that the right shall remain inviolate, without destroying or infringing the right of trial by jury, and therefore a jury of six in all offenses, other than capital cases, prosecuted by indictment, presentment, or information, as fixed by law, is constitutional. Gibson v. State, 16 Fla. 291, a prosecution for larceny.

Laws giving exclusive jurisdiction to courts 42 L. R. A.

of special sessions to hear and determine charges of petit larceny not charged as a second offense are not unconstitutional as depriving the accused of the right of trial before a common-law jury of twelve, although only six jurors are allowed in courts of special sessions. People, Comaford, v. Dutcher, 20 Hun. 241; People, Stetzer, v. Rawson, 61 Barb. 619.

b. Misdemeanors.

In misdemeanors and other minor offenses, upon the trial of which the defendant was not entitled to a full jury of twelve at common law, the courts have generally held that the right to a jury of twelve men is not an absolute right secured by the state Constitutions. There are cases, however, in which the courts have held that the right to a full jury of twelve men exists even in such cases.

The Alabama statute, which confers on a county court jurisdiction of all misdemeanors committed in the county, and provides for the transfer to that tribunal of all indictments pending and untitled in the circuit court, and providing for a trial of such cases by a jury of eight instead of twelve persons, with the right to appeal directly to the supreme court only, is contrary to the provision in the declaration of rights of that state, which provides that in all prosecutions by indictment the defendant should have a right to a jury, and that such right shall remain inviolate, as such declaration provides for a jury of twelve men. Collins v. State, 88 Ala. 212, 215.

And in People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 312, 317, it is said that the constitutional right to a trial by jury of twelve applies in the case of a misdemeanor, as at the time of the adoption of the Constitution the right existed and extends to any offense of that grade, even though it may be constituted by a statutory enactment subsequently passed.

But in State v. Borowsky, 11 Nev. 119, 127, a case of misdemeanor, the court distinguished the cases of Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 354, and Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, upon the ground that in those cases the crime charged against the prisoner was that of murder, which was a felony, and the weight of authority showed that in prosecutions for misdemeanors the court might, with the defendant's consent, try him with less than the full number of jurors.

The provision of the South Carolina act of December, 1866, relating to the trial of misdemeanors in the district court and inferior courts by a petit jury of eight, which provides: "that the juries in the district court shall consist of one jury of eight at each quarterly session, and the venire therefore shall consist of a panel of sixteen," passed pursuant to the provisions of art. 9, § 7, of the Constitution of South Carolina of 1865, is constitutional and within the power of the legislature to pass. State v. Starling, 15 Rich. L. 120, 185.

So, an act of the legislature providing for a jury of less than twelve in a recorder's court upon the trial of minor offenses is in accordance with the common law, and also with the provisions of La. Const. art. 103. State v. Gutierrez, 15 La. Ann. 190.

And the constitutional right to a common-law jury of twelve does not apply to prosecutions for violation of municipal ordinances. Wong v. Astoria, 13 Or. 538.

Other courts hold that the right extends to all cases of crimes, and that the right was secured to the offender by the provisions of the state Constitution in all criminal cases.

The case of Moore v. State, Clegg, 72 Ind. 358, was a misdemeanor prosecuted before a justice of the peace and a jury of six, in which the justice granted a new trial, and in his return to the alternative writ which issued set out the proceedings had before him showing a verdict by six jurors; the demand of the state for judgment on the verdict, and the setting aside of the verdict and the dismissal of the case by him. The court held the proceedings of the justice in the case as tried by a jury of six to be an absolute nullity, and followed its prior decision in Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496, and Allen v. State, 54 Ind. 461.

In Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671, 675, wherein the defendant was tried for assault and battery by a jury of six, the Ohio statute of March 14, 1853, defining the jurisdiction and regulating the practice of probate courts, was held unconstitutional and void, as it was beyond the powers of the general assembly to impair the right or materially change the character of jury trial, and that the number of jurors could not be diminished, or a verdict authorized, short of a unanimous concurrence of all the jurors.

By the Indiana statute a criminal case must be tried by the court upon an agreement by the parties, or by a jury of twelve men. Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496, wherein the prisoner was convicted of malicious trespass by a jury of eleven, and the court reversed the judgment, and remanded the cause for a new trial.

And by the West Virginia Bill of Rights, art. 3, § 14, of the state Constitution, the trial of misdemeanors is to be by twelve men unless otherwise provided.

c. Offenses triable in justices' and other inferior courts.

In many cases the legislature has conferred jurisdiction upon inferior courts to try misdemeanor and other minor offenses, not triable by a jury of twelve under the common law as adopted by the state Constitutions, by a jury of less than twelve, and the validity of convictions under such statutes has often been contested.

These statutes are generally held to be constitutional and within the power of the state legislature to enact.

The validity of a jury of six in a county court as constituted by the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, arts. 395, 708, was not denied in the case of Marks v. State, 10 Tex. App. 334, 336, but the case turned upon the question of the showing of the record, which recited the name of only one juror. On this account, and not on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the statute, the verdict was set aside upon a conviction for an aggravated assault.

In Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 676, 677, wherein the court declared against the constitutionality of the jury of six in proceedings for the offense of assault and battery in the probate court, the court stated that it did not intend to imply a doubt as to the constitutionality of an act allowing juries before justices of the peace composed of six men, for the reason that, where facts were to be found in any proceeding in which a jury was not required by the common law, a jury of any number might be authorized within the discretion of the legislative body, as juries do not belong to inferior courts at common law, and that so long as an appeal was provided for to common-law courts from their determination no constitutional objection could arise where the facts were found by the magistrate or by the aid of a jury of any number of men.

So, in Biddle v. Com. 18 Serg. & R. 405, 411, it is said that laws giving jurisdiction to magistrates, and justices of the peace in certain cases, are made for the purpose of promoting justice 43 L. R. A.

and leave the substance of the trial by jury unimpaired, which is all that is required by the expression in the Constitution "trial by jury shall be as heretofore."

An act of the state legislature making offenses not triable by a full jury of twelve men at the time of the adoption of the New York Constitution triable by a justice of the peace and a jury of six, is constitutional. People, Murray, v. New York City & County Justices, 74 N. Y. 406, 407.

The case of Com. v. Seamans, 3 Law Times, N. S. (Pa.) 133, also supports the constitutionality of an act authorizing the trial of certain offenses before a justice of the peace and a jury of six.

In Bryan v. State, 4 Iowa, 349, 352, a trial by a jury of twelve was claimed before a justice of the peace in proceedings under the Iowa act for the suppression of intemperance, of January 22, 1855; but the right was denied and the conviction affirmed on the ground that the state law might make offenses of inferior grades originally cognizable by inferior courts, and the state Constitution might provide, as in § 9, art. 1, of the Constitution of that state, that the general assembly might authorize trial by a jury of a less number than twelve men in such inferior courts.

A similar decision was rendered in State v. Beneke, 9 Iowa, 203, 206, in another prosecution before a justice of the peace for the sale of intoxicating liquors in violation of the Iowa laws, Dec. 22, 1858.

The provisions of the New York laws of 1855, for the prevention of intemperance, pauperism, and crime, which require the party charged with the unlawful sale of intoxicants to be tried by a court of special sessions without the right to give bail and transfer the cause to another court, deprive him of a right to trial by a jury as guaranteed by the Constitution, as the offense therein charged is of a class triable by jury at the time the present Constitution was adopted, although not so when the earlier Constitution was adopted. Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 458.

The above case overrules the case of People, Booth, v. Fisher, 20 Barb. 652, which held the statute to be constitutional.

Several later cases hold that the Constitution does not guarantee a jury of twelve in courts of special sessions for the reason that no jury was provided for such courts until the year 1824, but these cases do not mention the above case of Wynehamer v. People. They are, however, cases in which the accused had the option of giving bail and transferring his case to another court in which he had the right to a common-law jury of twelve. They are therefore distinguished from the case of Wynehamer v. People, although in these cases there is a broad statement to the effect that the constitutional provisions do not apply to courts of special sessions.

It has been stated that the term "jury" as used in the New York Constitution means a common-law jury of twelve men, and cannot be taken away by state legislation, and therefore a statute giving justices of the peace the right to try and determine a complaint of assault and battery in a summary manner, whether the party charged requests to be so tried or not, is unconstitutional, in so far as it denies the person the right to give bail for his appearance and to demand a jury trial in a criminal court having jurisdiction of the cause. People v. Carroll, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 22. People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 317, followed.

So, in People, Murray, v. New York City and County Justices, 74 N. Y. 406, 407, wherein the defendant, when taken before a police justice on a charge of assault and battery, elected to be tried by a court of special sessions of the peace, the court denied that he had the constitutional right of trial by jury for the reason that the Constitution did not apply to the petty offenses triable before a court of special sessions, because the provision of the Constitution was that "the trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolate forever," and the right to a trial by a jury in the courts of special sessions did not exist until the year 1824, when the legislature provided for a jury of six.

N. Y. Laws 1834, chap. 78, which provides for the trial by a jury of six on the trial and punishment of persons disturbing religious meetings, does not conflict with the provisions of the New York state Constitution, as prior to its adoption such cases were not triable by a jury. People, Eckler, v. Clark, 23 Hun, 374, 376.

The Oklahoma act providing for justices' courts a jury of six men, and giving the right of appeal to a district court where a jury of twelve may be had, is not unconstitutional. Collins v. Territory, 2 Okla. 444.

Again, in Lavery v. Com. 101 Pa. 560, in a conviction for assault and battery, the court upheld the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania statute of May 1, 1861, which changed the mode of criminal procedure in Erie and Union counties, and gave jurisdiction to a justice of the peace and a jury of six in certain offenses.

Upon a conviction for carrying a deadly weapon concealed upon his person the defendant is not entitled to an absolute right to a trial by a jury of twelve, as, under the provisions of § 19, art. 1, S. C. Const. 1868, cases of that class may be tried without a jury. State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 373. It would, however, appear that this case was tried by a justice without a jury.

So, a trial before a recorder and a jury of three slave holders under the Louisiana statute for the prevention and punishment of the offense of selling liquors to slaves is constitutional, as the trial is not one of the ordinary cases of trial by jury under the constitutional guaranty of an impartial trial by jury of the vicinage. State v. Gutierrez, 15 La. Ann. 190.

In the above case the court stated that as the mode of trial prescribed by the statute had none of the forms and solemnities of an ordinary trial by jury, and did not fall under the operation of the constitutional clause, it was unnecessary to express any opinion on the question as to the number of jurors required to constitute that body, either at common law or by the state Constitution. There was, however, a dissenting opinion holding that the act was unconstitutional for the reason that the law neither entrusted the decision of the cause to the recorder alone nor provided him with an impartial jury of the vicinage as known to the common law and the then existing and prior Constitutions of that state. And the same conclusions were reached on rehearing with the same dissenting opinion.

On a trial in the county court upon an indictment for gambling, transferred from the superior court, the accused is not entitled to a jury of twelve, but to a jury of six. Grant v. State, 89 Ga. 393.

So, in Allen v. State, 51 Ga. 264, a conviction by a jury of five in the county court for vagrancy under § 31 of the Georgia act of 1872, establishing that court, and the amendatory act of 1873, was upheld as constitutional for the reason that the Georgia Constitution of 1868 did not declare that the right of trial by jury, 43 L. R. A.

"as heretofore used in this state, shall remain inviolate," but did declare that the right of trial by jury "except where it is otherwise provided in this Constitution shall remain inviolate," and that the general assembly shall provide by the law for the selection of upright and intelligent persons to serve as jurors.

The Georgia Constitution of 1868 expressly declared that a jury of seven shall be a lawful jury in the district court authorized to be organized by it, and demonstrated that it was not intended that there should be a jury of twelve in all cases, and therefore the act of the general assembly establishing the county court, which provided that the sheriff should summon a jury of twelve men who were subject to jury duty, from whom the defendant and the state should alternately strike until but five jurors remained, who should compose the jury, is constitutional. Allen v. State, 51 Ga. 264. In this case the court expressed no opinion as to the right of trial by a common-law jury of twelve men on an indictment for murder or in cases of felony under the Georgia Constitution of 1868.

And a jury of five in a city court under the Georgia statute regulating the practice in city courts in a prosecution for keeping a faro table, after the defendant's demand of a jury trial, cannot be assailed as unconstitutional upon the ground that the provisions of the state Constitution subsequently adopted prohibit a jury of less than twelve, especially where no act of the legislature has been passed to carry it into effect by any practical machinery providing for a jury of twelve. Kneeland v. State, 62 Ga. 395, 397.

The same conclusion was reached in the later case of Downing v. State, 66 Ga. 110, 66 Ga. 164, in which the prisoner was tried in the city court for selling kerosene oil contrary to the statute, the court holding a jury of five constitutional, as the Constitution of 1877 was not intended to operate upon the then existing system of the city courts, until some other law provided otherwise.

The Illinois act to aid industrial schools for girls, May 20, 1879, Laws 1879, p. 309, which makes provision for dependent infant girls who beg or receive alms, or frequent the streets and become wanderers or vagrants or resort to improper houses, and provides for a jury of six, does not violate the constitutional provision that the right of trial by jury as heretofore enjoyed shall remain inviolate, as it is not a proceeding according to the course of the common law in which the right of trial by jury is guaranteed, but the proceeding is a statutory one under a statute enacted since the adoption of the Constitution, for which offense the enjoyment of a jury trial did not exist at that time. Ferrier's Petition, 103 Ill. 867, 374, 42 Am. Rep. 10.

These statutory provisions must, however, be strictly complied with, and no verdict will be upheld upon a conviction under the same unless it is shown that the statutory provisions with respect to the number of such jury have been acted up to.

So, in Stell v. State, 14 Tex. App. 59, a case of assault and battery with a deadly weapon, the court reversed the judgment in the county court, which recited a trial by "a jury of good and lawful men," naming one and four others, but failed to disclose how such a jury was impaneled, upon the ground that it was the express provision of the Constitution of that state, art. 1, § 15, "that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate," and that "the legislature shall pass such laws as may be needed to regulate the same and to maintain its purity and efficiency," and upon the further ground that § 17 of art. 4 provided that "a jury in the county court shall consist of six men," and art. 595 of the Code of Criminal Procedure declared, inter alia, that "in the county court and inferior courts the jury shall consist of six men," and that "in the county court, in all criminal actions, the jury consists of six men, and the verdict must be concurred in by each of them."

So, whenever any of such statutes contravene the express provisions of the state Constitutions they will be declared void, and the proceeding had under them will be set aside. Thus, a conviction upon an indictment for using abusive and obscene language in the presence of a female, under the Alabama statute of February 20, 1889, which gave jurisdiction to county courts in all misdemeanors, and provided for their transfer thereto from the circuit court, and allowed a trial by eight jurors, was declared unconstitutional in Collins v. State, 88 Ala. 212, as depriving the defendant of his right to trial by jury guaranteed by the Constitution.

The statute in question in the above case clearly infringed the provisions of the state Constitution inasmuch as such Constitution declared the right of trial by jury to be inviolate, and that in all prosecutions by indictment the accused shall have a right to a speedy trial by an impartial jury. Ala. Const. 1875, art. 1, §§ 7, 12.

In State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436, 441, which was a conviction of assault and battery, the constitutionality of the act of December 16, 1846, defining the jurisdiction and regulating the proceedings of justices' courts in cases of breach of the peace, and which provided that the cases mentioned in the Constitution might be prosecuted and punished in a summary manner before justices of the peace, and limited the jury in such courts to six, was involved. The act rested for support upon the 3d amendment of the Arkansas Constitution adopted in 1846, which gave the general assembly power to confer such jurisdiction as it might deem proper on justices of the peace in all matters of contract, covenant, and actions for the recovery of fines, and forfeitures when the amount claimed did not exceed $100, and in actions and proceedings for assault and battery, and other penal offenses less than felony punishable by fine only. The court upheld the constitutionality of the act except so far as the 11th section declared that the trial "shall" be by a jury of six men, and made a jury of six compulsory, thereby leaving the defendant without a right to demand a full jury of twelve men as at common law if he thought fit to exercise that option.

In this case also the court's opinion was founded upon the theory that the defendant's constitutional right to a full jury of twelve could not be taken away from him except by his own consent, and as he was not shown to have waived the right or to have consented to the verdict of a less jury than twelve, but, on the other hand, demanded a full jury, the verdict was set aside as unconstitutional.

A trial for a misdemeanor by a jury of six in a justice's court under a state statute giving the defendant a right to appeal only upon finding sureties is not a trial by jury as guaranteed by the Minnesota Constitution. State v. Everett, 14 Minn. 430, 444.

So, in Pennsylvania it has been held, in proceedings before justices of the peace in criminal matters, that such a justice has no power to hear a charge of an aggravated assault and battery before a jury of six, and that in such a case he is to hear the case on the complaint of the prosecutor, and either bind the prisoner over to court or discharge him. Com. v. Mead, 5 Law Times N. S. (Pa.) 123; 3 Brightly's Digest, pt. 1, p. 4210.
43 L. R. A.

The Pennsylvania statute of May 24, 1871, which gives concurrent jurisdiction to justices of the peace and a jury of six with the quarter sessions in liquor cases, was held unconstitutional in Com. v. Saal, 10 Phila. 496, as the offense was made a misdemeanor punishable upon an indictment by a jury of twelve under the colonial laws as they existed at the time of the adoption of the first Constitution in that state.

V. In civil actions.

a. Less than twelve valid.

The constitutionality of a verdict in civil cases by less than the common-law jury of twelve men has, however, been upheld, especially in cases in inferior and justices' courts under the statutes of some of the states, notwithstanding that the Constitutions of the same have provided that the right shall remain inviolate.

The constitutionality of such statutes has generally been upheld upon the ground that juries did not form any part of the machinery of such tribunals at common law, and upon the further ground that in such cases there is an appeal to the courts of common law where the parties are entitled to a trial by jury unless the same is waived.

This doctrine will be found admitted by the court in the case of Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600, 605, although that case was founded upon the constitutionality of a verdict of a jury of six in a court of law commissioners, a court of record in which a jury of less than twelve could not sit.

In Miller v. Lampson, 66 Conn. 432, 438, the court upheld the provisions of the Connecticut statute, § 1356, Gen. Stat., which provides for a jury of six in cases of summary process in a justice's court between landlord and tenant, although the defendants requested a jury of twelve and claimed that the Constitution guaranteed the right, and that before and at the time the Constitution of the state was adopted he could not be deprived of his property unless upon the verdict of a jury of twelve.

In Kreuchl v. Dehler, 50 Ill. 176, 178, the court stated that a statutory provision that "the verdict of the jury" should be an indemnity in an action in trover before a justice of the peace to recover personal property alleged to have been taken by the defendant as a constable under execution, and directing that the jury shall consist of not less than six nor more than twelve persons, must be understood as absolutely prescribing that number only in cases where the parties were not present to agree upon a less number; and, further, that the provisions of the statute authorizing the constable to summon not exceeding twelve jurors by consent was not to be considered as prohibiting the parties from agreeing upon less than six, as the legislature undoubtedly intended to prevent more than twelve persons being called from their business to serve upon a jury, but to allow the parties to take any number under twelve upon which they could agree.

So, in proceedings before justices of the peace a jury may consist of less than twelve men, as the constitutional provision was not meant to apply to cases wherein the right to a common-law jury did not exist prior to the adoption of the Constitution. Ward v. Farwell, 97 Ill. 593, 614.

And a statute providing for a jury of six in a justice's court, instead of a jury of twelve, is a valid enactment. Rhodes, Burford Furniture Co., v. Mattox, 135 Ind. 372, 376.

So, an act of the legislature which provides for a jury of six in superior courts, but does not prohibit the right to a jury of twelve, and only provides that certain conditions, such as a deposit of money to pay expenses, shall be complied with by the party seeking such a jury, does not conflict with the provisions of the Constitution of Iowa, § 9 of the Bill of Rights. Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 383.

The provisions of Iowa Laws 1880, chap. 163, limiting the right of appeal from justices' courts and a jury of six to the circuit court where the amount in dispute is more than $25, was attacked in the case of Higgins v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 60 Iowa, 50, 51, upon the ground that they were contrary to the Constitution, and contravened the right to a trial by jury which was thereby declared to be inviolate; but the court upheld the same as, although the word "jury" as used in the 1st clause of art. 1, Bill of Rights, was used in the sense of a common-law jury, yet it was qualified by the language which followed it, which gave the general assembly power to authorize a "jury" of less than twelve in inferior courts, thus implying that the word was used in a different sense in such last paragraph.

And a state statute which creates a court of small claims or causes, and provides that in cases where property levied upon is claimed by another person a jury of six may be summoned to try the title, is constitutional. Berry v. Chamberlain, 53 N. J. L. 463.

The New York act of 1857, relating to district courts in the city of New York which give jurisdiction in such courts to a justice and a jury of six in actions upon the charter, ordinances, and by-laws of the corporation of the city of New York, or the statutes of the state, where the penalty does not exceed $250, does not violate the constitutional right to a trial of the issue by a common-law jury of twelve, for the reason that by subdiv. 3, § 3, of the act, the defendant has a right at any time after issue joined and before trial to remove the cause to the common pleas, and to have a trial by a jury of twelve upon executing an undertaking with one or more sureties to pay any judgment recovered against him in the court. People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168, 178. Under the act mentioned in the above case the justice only had jurisdiction to summon a jury of six.

So, it has been held that § 53 of the New York Code of 1861, as amended, which extended the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace to actions of replevin, is constitutional, although it transfers such cases from courts of record, in which the jury consists of twelve men, to justices' courts, wherein only six jurors are required. Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 16. In this case, however, there was a dissenting opinion by Mullin, P. J.

In the above case it is said that the fact that all three of the Constitutions of the state of New York contained similar provisions respecting the right to trial by jury, and to its remaining inviolate forever, together with the fact that nothing had been more common than for the legislature, under each and all of such Constitutions, to exercise the power of altering and enlarging the jurisdiction of inferior tribunals, such as justices' courts, and of authorizing them to try actions and classes or kinds of actions with a jury of six men, which before were triable only in a court of record by a jury of twelve men, was of great weight in favor of its constitutionality, and one which ought to be conclusive as to the true construction and meaning of the constitutional provision in this regard.

And in Norton v. McLeary, 8 Ohio St. 203, 208, a civil action brought before a justice of the peace on a promissory note, the court upheld the constitutionality of the Ohio statute 43 L. R. A.

of May 1, 1854, which extended the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases, and purported to give such justices concurrent jurisdiction with the court of common pleas, although it made no provision for a trial by a jury of twelve.

Where, by the provisions of the act in force at the time the jury was selected and served with process in the case, a jury of twelve men was legal before a justice of the peace, and after the jury had been selected and served, but before the day of trial, an act was passed abolishing a jury of twelve, and substituting a jury of six men as a legal jury before a justice, the court held that it was settled in that state that the constitutional provision in reference to the trial by jury did not apply to trials before justices of the peace, and it was therefore a subject over which the legislature had control, and that the legislative power to reduce the number of jurors from twelve to six, as was done by the Ohio statute of March 4, 1876, could not be questioned. The court therefore reversed the judgment, as the justice had no legal authority to impanel a jury of twelve. Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 31 Ohio St. 265, 268.

A statute authorizing the appointment of a jury of six men to ascertain and determine out of court the amount of damage to property done by a mob is constitutional. Re Pennsylvania Hall, 5 Pa. 204.

In this case, the court based its decision upon the ground that although the state Constitution guaranteed that the right to trial by jury should be 'as heretofore' in all civil and criminal cases in court, and should remain inviolate, yet the mode of ascertaining damages in cases similar to the one then before the court had been used by the legislature both before and since the adoption of the state Constitution, and in a great variety of cases, and therefore there was no change in the right of trial by jury.

The 3d section of the Colorado statute of February 13, 1874, provides that "all issues of fact in said probate courts shall be tried by a jury of six men, unless both parties waive a trial by jury," etc., and "section 4 of said act further provides that if at any time before the calling of the cause for trial, and before any venire shall have issued, either party shall demand a trial by a jury of twelve men, a jury of twelve men shall be summoned and impaneled, but the party demanding the same shall be required to advance and pay into court the sum of $20 at the time of making such demand."

In No. 5 Min. Co. v. Bruce, 4 Colo. 293, 296, an action to recover for work done, the court construed the above provisions of the statute as implying that the trial should be had by a jury of six men, unless a trial by jury should be waived by both parties, or unless one party or the other demanded a trial by a jury of twelve, and that as the record did not show that a jury was waived, nor that a jury of twelve was demanded by either party, the case was properly tried by a jury of six.

In Rhodes Burford Furniture Co. v. Mattox, 135 Ind. 372, 375, it was sought to enjoin a judgment recovered before a justice of the peace, upon the ground that the cause was tried by a jury of twelve instead of six, as required by § 209 of Elliott's Supp. Ind. Stat., and that the judgment was therefore void, but the court refused the relief, as such a judgment could not be collaterally attacked in that manner, for the reason that so long as the irregularity did not deprive the court of jurisdiction over the subject or the parties, its judgment, though the proceedings leading up to it, and the judgment itself, were erroneous, nevertheless if jurisdiction remained, was not void.

In Clark v. Spicer, 6 Kan. 440, 447, an action of trespass to recover damages against the defendant, a justice of the peace, for alleged error in trying the plaintiff criminally for misconduct in office as school director before a jury of six men, the court stated the question depended upon whether § 2 of chap. 49 of the Kansas Laws of 1867, p. 81, was constitutional or not, but it did not decide the question, as the jurisdiction of the justice did not depend upon the constitutionality of the section, for the reason that he had jurisdiction of both the defendant and the subject-matter of the action whether the section was constitutional or not, and that in determining the question whether the plaintiff should be tried by a jury of six or by a jury of twelve men, he acted judicially, and therefore, no matter whether he erred or not, he was not liable.

An action in debt to recover $40, wherein plaintiff files a demand for $6, and defendant files a plea setting out a note for $33, may be tried by a jury of twelve men instead of six, as required by N. J. Rev. Laws, p. 634, and the Supplement, § 4, p. 772, known as the small cause act, as the plaintiff's demand is less than $16, and the defendant's more than that amount. Jones v. Oliver, 7 N. J. L. 149.

b. Invalid.

In civil actions also the state Constitutions make twelve jurors necessary for a jury trial where a party was entitled to a common-law jury of twelve at the time of the adoption of such Constitutions.

This construction was adopted by the court in the case of Enderman v. Ashby, Sneed (Ky.) 53, wherein an act of the general assembly of Kentucky of 1792, which prohibited the dealing with slaves without the consent of their owners, and gave an action before a justice of the peace for the recovery of four times their value, was held to be unconstitutional as depriving the defendant of a right to a trial by a jury in a case in which prior to the Constitution he was entitled to it.

And in Ross v. Neal, 7 T. B. Mon. 407, 408. It was held that a jury of less than twelve would vitiate a verdict in an action for malicious prosecution.

So, in Tabor v. Cook, 15 Mich. 322, 325, the provision of the state Constitution was construed as showing the intention to preserve to parties the right to have their controversies tried by jury in all cases where the right then existed, and as showing that suitors could not be constitutionally deprived of the right, except where, in civil cases, they voluntarily waived it by failing to demand the same as pointed out by the legislature.

The doctrine declared in this case is also borne out by the later cases of Van Sickle v. Kellogg, 19 Mich. 49, 52; Paul v. Detroit, 32 Mich. 108, 114; Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443, 448.

And in such cases it is the common-law jury of twelve men that is meant. McRae v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. 93 Mich. 399, 405, 17 L. R. A. 750.

And a statute authorizing courts to discharge some of the jurors who have been impaneled in a cause if they are unable to attend, and to proceed with the trial, and take a verdict with less than twelve jurors, but which does not authorize a jury of less than twelve to be impaneled in the first instance, violates the Michigan constitutional right of "trial by jury," and is not within another provision of the Constitution that "the legislature may authorize a trial by a jury of a less number than twelve," since the legislative power cannot be delegated to the court. Ibid.

45 L. R. A.

In Mississippi a jury of less than twelve in civil actions on contracts is void. Tillman v. Ailles, 5 Smedes & M. 373, 43 Am. Dec. 520.

And in Dixon v. Richards, 2 How. (Miss.) 771, which was an action in assumpsit, the court reversed a judgment on a verdict by eleven jurors, and remanded the cause on the ground that a jury must consist of twelve men.

And the same construction is placed upon the provisions of the Missouri Constitution, the constitutional provision meaning a jury of twelve men whose verdict must be unanimous.

This was early decided in that state, in the case of Bank of Missouri v. Anderson, 1 Mo. 174, 175, in which the right to a jury of twelve men was upheld in proceedings by way of motion in a summary manner, under § 27 of the bank charter, which provided the summary remedy.

The above decision was followed in Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600, 603, in which the court reversed the verdict of six jurors, in an action for damages, in the law commissioner's court, which was a court of record.

So, in Foster v. Kirby, 31 Mo. 496, 498, which was an action originally commenced in a justice's court and appealed to the law commissioner's court, where a jury of twelve was refused, the court reversed the judgment on the ground of such refusal, and followed its prior decision in Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600, as a court of law commissioners is a court of record in which the defendant is entitled to a jury of twelve.

The above decisions were followed by the court in the subsequent case of Aka v. Anderson, 34 Mo. 74; and also in Henning v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 35 Mo. 408, and Scott v. Russell, 39 Mo. 407, 409, which latter cases hold that on appeals from justices of the peace to the circuit court the defendant there should be entitled to a trial by twelve men.

So, a trial by a jury of six under the provisions of the New Jersey seizure laws was held unconstitutional in the unreported case of Holmes v. Walton, cited in State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. L. 549.

And under the New Jersey laws of June 5, 1782, a demand for $6 must be tried by a jury of twelve, and a verdict of six will therefore be reversed, even though the parties consent to a trial by six. Parker v. Munday, 1 N. J. L. 70. This decision is based on the fact that the statute expressly says that the jury must consist of twelve men.

So, in Briant v. Russell, 2 N. J. L. 135, the court ordered the judgment reversed on certiorari as the record showed that the cause was tried by eleven jurors.

And in Mitten v. Smock, 3 N. J. L. 470, it is held that a verdict rendered by six jurors is invalid, even if the parties consent.

Again, the court reversed the judgment in Ashcroft v. Clark, 5 N. J. L. 577, as the demand was for over $50 and the trial was by a jury of six men.

Prior to the New York Constitution of 1846, replevin was one of the causes of action in which a justice of the peace had no jurisdiction, and which was only cognizable by a court of record and a jury of twelve; and therefore under the New York Laws of 1860, giving jurisdiction in justices' courts wherein the jury is limited to six men, if a jury is demanded by a defendant in an action of replevin, the justice must dismiss such action as he is without jurisdiction, and cannot summon a jury of six. Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, 143.

So, in Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 16, 26, which was an action of a similar nature, the same question arose, and it was stated that as justices' courts were a well-known and established part of the judicial system at the adoption of the Constitution of New York, it was scarcely possible, and quite improbable, that the Constitution was not intended to embrace juries in justices' courts as "heretofore used."

A judgment was reversed where the case had been tried by eleven jurors, in Whitehurst v. Davis, 8 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 113.

A verdict of less than twelve jurors in the county court in a contested will case, although not void, is erroneous, and may be appealed from, where the record shows only eleven jurors. M'Donald v. M'Donald, 5 Yerg. 310.

Upon a petition by an insolvent debtor under chapter 143 of the Washington Code, for his discharge, which is objected to on the ground of fraud, a jury must be composed of twelve men, and a verdict rendered by six men or any number less than twelve is of no effect whatever; and § 2033, which provides for submission of such a question to a jury of less than twelve, is unconstitutional. Thomas v. Hilton, 8 Wash. Terr. 365, 367.

In this case, however, there was a dissenting opinion by Justice Langford, to the effect that the section in question provided that the trial should be by a jury of not less than six, and did not in terms provide that the jury should be of six, and that by construing the section to mean that the trial might be by six jurors, unless twelve were demanded, the section might stand with the Constitution, as the statute was capable of two different constructions, one of which was consistent with the Constitution and the other not, and therefore the consistent construction ought to stand.

And the Wisconsin statute, giving the county court jurisdiction, and providing for a jury of six, is unconstitutional and void, as the constitutional right to a trial by a jury of twelve extends to cases within the jurisdiction of the county court, and cannot be waived either directly or indirectly. May v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 8 Wis. 219; Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22.

In Tredymmock v. Perryman, Cro. Car. 259, it was held that a custom to try causes in an inferior court by six jurors instead of twelve was bad. In this case the action was in debt.

And the same decisions are arrived at in construing the provisions of the 7th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to trial by jury in civil cases.

The Arizona statute of 1891 (Sess. Laws 1891, p. 71, § 1) has been held to conflict with U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1868, which authorizes in the territories a commingling of common law and chancery jurisdiction in the territorial courts, and a uniform course of proceeding in all cases legal or equitable, and also provides that "no person shall be deprived of the right of trial by jury in cases cognizable at common law." It was also said to be in conflict with the 7th Amendment to the Constitution, which provides that "in suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved," as that means twelve jurors and unanimity in finding a verdict. Carroll v. Byers (Ariz.) 36 Pac. 499.

The Montana statute of January 15, 1869, which provides that "in all civil cases, if three fourths of the jurors agree upon a verdict, it shall stand, and have the same force and effect as if agreed upon by the whole of the jurors," was held unconstitutional in Kleinschmidt v. Dunphy, 1 Mont. 118, as in conflict with the provisions of the United States Constitution relating to the trial by jury of suits at common law where the value is over $20. This decision was reversed on other grounds in Dunphy v. Kleinschmidt, 11 Wall. 610, 20 L. ed. 223.

But a similar territorial statute authorizing 43 L. R. A.

a verdict by the concurrence of nine or more members of the jury was afterwards held by the Supreme Court of the United States to violate the constitutional right to a trial by jury. American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S. 464, 41 L. ed. 1079, Reversing 10 Utah, 147.

And in cases where the legislature has conferred jurisdiction upon inferior courts to try civil causes by a jury of less than the common-law number, it will be found that the provisions thus made must be strictly complied with, and they will not be taken as conferring jurisdiction or power to try with a jury of less than twelve, upon courts not expressly named or designated by the statute giving the power.

In Helvenstine v. Yantis, 88 Ky. 695, it was held that the Kentucky act of February 11, 1880, providing "that juries in justices', police, and quarterly courts may consist of six men," did not embrace county courts, and therefore the county judge erred in forcing a defendant to be tried with six jurors for violation of the local-option law, but as the error was judicial, and entitled the appellant, under § 362 of the Kentucky Criminal Code, to an appeal to the circuit court, where the case would be tried de novo by twelve jurors, it would not be treated as void in a proceeding to enjoin its enforcement.

In Jackson v. J. A. Coates & Sons (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 24, the court held that where the Constitution prescribes that the jury shall be composed of a certain number of men, and does not give authority for a verdict by a less number, the trial court has no right to authorize such a course over the protest of either of the parties litigant.

So, such statutes have in some cases been construed as meaning a jury of the number specified therein, and no more nor less.

In Rhodes Burford Furniture Co. v. Mattox, 135 Ind. 372, 376, it is said that a trial before a justice of the peace in a civil cause with a jury of twelve instead of six, as required by Ind. Stat. § 299, Elliott's Supp., is an irregularity, and therefore an error.

Where a sealed verdict by six jurors was returned, but one of them failed to appear when court convened, the court held that except by consent the verdict could only be rendered by a full jury, and that the verdict of the five jurors was not valid, and could not be received by the court. Bishop v. Mugler, 33 Kan. 145. In this case a mandamus to compel the justice was refused.

VI. The power of the legislature.

a. General doctrine.

The control of the legislature over the number of jurors requisite to form a legal verdict depends upon the question whether the right to a trial by a jury of twelve men in the particular case existed at the date of the adoption of the state Constitution, and also upon the provisions of the state Constitution regarding the same. The Constitution in some states gives express power to the legislature, and makes provision for the number of jurors requisite to constitute a jury, and to render a valid verdict.

The general doctrine, however, would seem to be that, if the case is one in which the defendant had at the time of the adoption of the state Constitution a legal right to be tried by a common-law jury of twelve men, then the legislature cannot by any legislative enactment interfere with or abridge the right which was fully secured to him by the common law at the time of the approval of the state Constitution, and which right was further guaranteed to him by such Constitution. If, on the other hand, the right to a trial by a common-law jury of twelve men was not so secured to him, and did not ex-let at the time the state Constitution was adopted, then it is within the power of the state legislature to control and make provisions for regulating the trial by jury in such cases, and any statutes or enactments dealing with the number and agreement of jurors in such cases will be upheld.

And in deciding upon questions involving such a right the Constitution itself must be looked to as the paramount law, and such an operation must be given to the acts of the legislature as shall accord with its clear and obvious import. Carson v. Com. 1 A. K. Marsh. 290.

The above statement of the extent of the legislative power is fully supported by the Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 550, 551, wherein it is stated that the legislature has no power so to change the law in relation to juries, and to provide that petit juries may be composed of a less number than twelve, nor to provide that a number of the petit jury less than the whole number can render a verdict, in any case, where the Constitution gives to the party a right to a trial by jury.

It is further supported by the ruling of the court in People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 312, 318, and in People v. Carroll, 8 Park. Crim. Rep. 22, 24, wherein it is said that it is no answer to say that his offense did not exist at the time the Constitution took effect, but had been since created by statute, and if the offense be such that it would have been entitled to a trial by jury, if created before the Constitution was adopted, he cannot be deprived of the same right when created afterwards.

In passing upon the constitutionality of the Ohio act of March 14, 1853, relating to a jury of six in the probate court, the court, in Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671, 685, stated that whenever the Constitution names and establishes institutions or proceedings, its true characteristics and essential features must be sought from the system of law from which it is taken, and it cannot be materially changed by the general assembly; and further, that it is beyond the power of such assembly to impair the right, or to materially change the character of the right, to trial by jury as provided for by the state Constitution.

In this case the court declared the above-mentioned statute unconstitutional, and the conviction of the defendant of the offense of assault and battery by a jury of six was therefore set aside.

These principles were further upheld by the same court in the later case of Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 573, 680.

And in such cases any act of the legislature which provides for a trial by any other than a common-law jury of twelve men is unconstitutional, and any act which requires or authorizes such trial is a violation of one of the essential elements of the jury referred to in, and secured by, the Constitution. McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 228, 254.

The same in effect are the decisions in Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 172, 13 Am. Rep. 492, and Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 283, 293.

The same construction has been placed upon the legislative power to abridge the number of jurors by the cases of State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 486; State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384, 410; and Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Trout, 32 Ark. 17, 25, in which the court declared that the Constitution used the word "jury" in its common-law sense, and that the number cannot be abridged by the legislature.

So, in securing the rights of trial by a jury, the Iowa Constitution gives no authority to the legislature to provide for a less number than twelve jurors. Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 296, 43 L. R. A.

So, the provision in the Ohio Constitution was intended to limit the power of the legislature with reference to interference with the right of trial by jury, and prohibited it from depriving the accused of the right to have a jury of twelve impartial men to pass on his guilt or innocence. Dailey v. State, 4 Ohio St. 57, 59.

The same declaration of the legislative power is to be found in the following cases: Kleinschmidt v. Dunphy, 1 Mont. 118, 131; Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492; Emerick v. Harris, 1 Binn. 424; Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, 143; Dater v. Loomis, cited in this case and unofficially reported; Byrd v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 163; Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116.

So, the state of Utah did not acquire, upon its admission into the Union, the power to provide, in respect of felonies committed within its limits while it was a territory, that they should be tried otherwise than by such a jury as is provided by the Federal Constitution. Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061.

Yet, the legislature has the general power to constitute new tribunals, and to provide new modes of trial for future cases, provided the right of trial by jury such as the Constitution intends is secured to everyone in the court of last resort in every case where it is guaranteed by the Constitution, and has not been waived by the party himself. Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 550, 551.

And any legislation which does not rob it of any of its essential elements or ingredients cannot be said to infringe thereon. Dowling v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 664, 685.

But, in those cases which formerly were not triable by jury, if the legislature provides for such a trial subsequently, they may doubtless create, for the purpose, a statutory tribunal composed of any number of persons, and no question of constitutional power or right can arise. Re Ferrier, 103 Ill. 367, 374, 42 Am. Rep. 10, Quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 319.

So, in Tims v. State, 26 Ala. 185, 168, which involved the power of the legislature to declare a certain misdemeanor triable in a justice's court, the court supported the doctrine that the constitutional provisions had no application to cases which were unknown either to the common or statute law at the time the state Constitution was adopted.

And in such cases a trial by jury different from that contemplated by the Constitution may be provided for. Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295.

In mere cases of misdemeanor the legislature may provide for a prosecution in a summary manner, and without the formality of an indictment, and the accused may waive a jury or agree to a certain number. State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470.

But a contrary opinion would seem to have been formed by the court in People v. Johnson, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 322, wherein the legislature are said to have no power to interfere with the right of trial by a jury of twelve in cases of misdemeanor.

So, it is competent for the legislature to create new tribunals without common-law power, and to authorize them to proceed without a jury, but a change in the forms of action will not authorize submitting common-law rights to a tribunal in which no jury is allowed. Montgomery & F. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 85 Ala. 546, 549.

So, the legislature may provide for a less jury than twelve in county and other inferior courts in cases of misdemeanors, as provided in the Georgia Constitution of 1868. Allen v. State, 51 Ga. 264.

And under the provisions of art. 1, § 9, of the Iowa Bill of Rights, the legislature may provide for a jury of less than twelve in inferior courts, even upon appeal. Higgins v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 60 Iowa, 50, 51.

Again, in minor offenses, as shown in § 124, La. Const., triable summarily before a recorder, magistrate, or justice of the peace, and in other cases, the legislature has power to act except in cases where the Constitution provides otherwise; and further, that the legislature has power to cause a jury of twelve persons to be sworn before the recorder for the trial of minor offenses, for the reason that it is in accordance with the common law, and the general provisions of art. 103 of the Constitution of Louisiana. State v. Gutierrez, 15 La. Ann. 190.

So, under the Michigan Constitution the legislature may authorize a trial by a jury of less number than twelve, but it cannot delegate such power to the court. McRae v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. 93 Mich. 399, 17 L. R. A. 750.

In a case wherein the justices had refused to try a case to recover a penalty of $100 before a jury of six upon the ground that the defendant had demanded a jury of twelve and the act gave him no power to empanel such a jury, and that the defendant was entitled to a full jury of twelve, the court in granting a mandamus to compel the justice to try the case before a jury of six said that in its opinion the legislature could, without violating the provision of the New York Constitution, give courts of justices of the peace jurisdiction of actions in which the amount claimed did not exceed $100, other than such as those courts had jurisdiction of when the New York Constitution of 1846 was framed, or when it was adopted, and provide for a compulsory trial at the option of either party, by a jury of six, of such additional actions committed to the jurisdiction of courts of justices of the peace; and the legislature could also extend the jurisdiction of the assistant justices' courts in the city of New York by amending the Code so as to give such courts jurisdiction of similar actions for similar amounts, and provide for a compulsory trial by a jury of six, at the option of either party, and the legislature constitutionally, by the act relating to the district courts of the city of New York, provides for compulsory trials by a jury of six at the option of either party as to actions within the jurisdiction of such courts in which penalties, debts, damages, or other amounts claimed did not exceed $100, and irrespective of the question whether such district courts should be regarded as new inferior courts of local civil jurisdiction, established under the Constitution of 1846, or as substantially the same courts as the former assistant justices' courts. People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168, 176, 177.

A similar question as to the constitutionality of the New York statute of 1860 arose in the case of Crouse v. Walrath, 41 How. Pr. 86, an action of replevin before a justice of the peace, in which the defendant, after issue joined, demanded a jury of twelve men. The court held that under subdiv. 10, § 53, N. Y. Code Proc. the justice had jurisdiction, and that it could not be successfully claimed that if the legislature had the power to enlarge the jurisdiction of justices' courts in its discretion, from time to time, to any amount, and to give such courts jurisdiction in all civil actions so that causes might be tried before a justice of the peace, when a jury of twelve men is not called for, that in an action for the delivery of personal property of the value of $100, or under, the section of the Constitution (§ 2, art. 1) is violated, because the cause must be tried, if it can be tried in justices' court, by a jury of six men, for the reason that the Constitution vested the power 43 L. R. A.

in the legislature to establish, in their discretion, the jurisdiction, and the manner of the proceedings in justices' courts in all cases, where not prohibited from so doing, and therefore the section referred to was not intended to limit the power to that class of cases where justices' courts had jurisdiction by law at the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

And a similar opinion was passed by the court in the case of Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 16, 20, 27, 28, wherein the question of the power of the legislature to enlarge the jurisdiction of a justice and deprive the defendant of the right to have his cause tried by a jury of twelve men and compel him to be tried by a jury of six men was raised. The court held that the power of the legislature was general and unlimited with reference to subjects of legislation, especially where such power had not been abridged by the state or Federal Constitution.

The South Carolina act of December, 1866, which directs "that the juries in the district court shall consist of one jury of eight jurors at each quarterly session, and the venire therefor shall consist of a panel of sixteen," is constitutional and within the power of the legislature as delegated by the Constitution. State v. Starling, 15 Rich. L. 120, 135.

In a case wherein it was contended that the right of trial by a jury secured by the Constitution meant a trial by a common-law jury of twelve men, and that the legislature had not any power to provide for the trial of a person charged with any criminal offense by a jury composed of any less number than twelve, the court stated that in determining what the several constitutional provisions referred to meant, and keeping in mind the fact that the present Constitution was not the beginning of the law of the states, but that it assumed the existence of a well-understood system, still to remain in force, excepting in so far as it was altered by the provisions of the Constitution of 1868, it was but natural to inquire what was the system previously in existence so far as the right of trial by jury was concerned, and whether any alterations therein had been made by the provisions of that Constitution, and as, under the Constitution that previously existed in that state, the general assembly had power to determine the number of persons who shall constitute a jury in the inferior and district courts, and pursuant to such a power did, by acts of the legislature of 1865-66, provide for juries of less than twelve in district courts, the court held that the provisions of the Constitution were not invalidated, and further, that the general assembly had power to provide for the trial of any person accused of an offense within the jurisdiction of the trial justice by a jury of less than twelve. State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 373.

And the legislature may provide for a jury of less than twelve in inferior courts, wherein a jury is not required at common law, and where an appeal lies from such courts to courts of common law wherein a jury must be on hand, and no constitutional provisions are infringed. Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671, 675, 677.

So, the legislative power to reduce the number of jurors from twelve to six in justices' courts, as provided in the Ohio act of March 4, 1876, cannot be questioned, as the constitutional provisions in reference to the trial by jury do not apply to trials before justices of the peace, and the method of procedure in such courts is therefore one over which the legislature has control. Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 81 Ohio St. 265, 268.

The legislature of Pennsylvania has by local laws provided for trial by jury different from that contemplated by the Constitution in cases relating to the liquor law (Act May, 1861, Pamph. Laws, 682, act 1871, known as the Mercer County Liquor Law), and such acts have been upheld. Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295.

b. Under state Constitutions.

The Constitution of some of the states gives express power to the legislature to deal with the question of jury trials, and to prescribe rules and regulations for the holding of the same, and for the verdict of the jury in such cases.

In the Constitution of Colorado there is a provision that the jury, "in civil cases in all courts, or in criminal cases in courts not of record, may consist of less than twelve men, as may be prescribed by law." Millis's (Colo.) Anno. Stat. § 296, p. 195.

And a provision is to be found in the amended Constitution of Florida of 1875, art. 5, § 38, by which the number of jurors in any court may be fixed by law, but shall not be less than six in any case.

Under this provision a jury of six on a conviction of larceny was held constitutional in Gibson v. State, 16 Fla. 291.

So, the Constitution of Georgia, by art. 6, § 18, gives power to the general assembly to "prescribe any number, not less than five, to constitute a trial or traverse jury in courts other than the superior and city courts." Code 1895, vol. 2, § 5876.

And a provision is also contained in the Constitution of Illinois that "the trial of civil cases before justices of the peace by a jury of less than twelve men may be authorized by law." Const. 1870, art. 2, § 5.

Again, the Iowa Constitution provides that the "general assembly may authorize trial by a jury of a less number than twelve men in inferior courts." Bill of Rights, art. 1, § 9.

And although the Constitution of Kentucky, by § 7 of the Bill of Rights, provides that the ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred and the right thereof remain inviolate, yet it is subject to such modifications as may be authorized by Congress.

So, La. Bill of Rights, art. 7, provides: "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury, except that, in cases where the penalty is not necessarily imprisonment at hard labor or death, the general assembly may provide for the trial thereof by a jury less than twelve in number."

The Declaration of Rights of Massachusetts, art. 12, provides that the legislature shall not make any law that shall subject any person to a capital or infamous punishment, except for the government of the army and navy, without trial by jury. It would seem that under such a provision the legislature could not control the number or agreement of jurors necessary in such cases at common law.

And by article 15 of the Declaration of Rights of the same state power is given to the legislature in cases arising on the high seas, and such as relate to mariners' wages, to alter the law regarding the trial by jury in such cases if they find it necessary so to do.

By art. 4, § 46, of the Constitution of Michigan it is provided that a legislature may authorize a trial by a jury of a less number than twelve men.

Art. 1, § 4, of the Constitution of Minnesota, as amended November 4, 1890, provides that the legislature may provide that the agreement of five sixths of any jury in any civil action or proceeding, after not less than six hours' deliberation, shall be a sufficient verdict therein.

So, by the Constitution of Missouri a jury 43 L. R. A.

on the trial of criminal or civil cases in courts not of record may consist of less than twelve men as may be prescribed by law.

And by the Constitution of Montana provision is made that "In all civil cases, and in all criminal cases not amounting to felony, upon default of appearance or by consent of the parties expressed in such manner as the law may prescribe, a trial by jury may be waived, or a trial had by any less number of jurors than the number provided by law." Declaration of Rights, art. 3, § 23.

Again, the Nebraska bill of rights provides that "the legislature may authorize trial by a jury of a less number than twelve men, in courts inferior to the district court." Art. 1, § 6.

Power is given to the legislature by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each branch thereof to require a unanimous verdict notwithstanding the provisions of the state Constitution of Nevada relating to majority verdicts in civil cases as contained therein. Nev. Declaration of Rights, art. 1, § 3.

The Constitution of New Hampshire expressly prohibits the legislature from making "any law that shall subject any person to a capital punishment (excepting for the government of the army and navy, and the militia in actual service) without trial by jury." N. H. Const. Bill of Rights, art. 16. It would seem that this provision would also bar the legislature from making any law in any way interfering with the number or agreement of jurors in such cases.

By art. 20 of the same, the legislature may, if it shall think fit, alter the method of procedure in cases arising on the high seas, and such as relate to mariners' wages. The article in question providing that in all other cases the right of trial by jury shall be held sacred.

The Constitution of New Jersey, Declaration of Rights, art. 1, § 7, provides that "the legislature may authorize the trial of civil suits, when the matter in dispute does not exceed $50, by a jury of six men."

And art. 1, § 7, of the Constitution of North Dakota, Declaration of Rights, declares that "a jury in civil cases in courts not of record may consist of less than twelve men, as may be prescribed by law."

Section 7 of art. 9 of the Constitution of South Carolina of 1865, after preserving the right to trial by jury, states that "the general assembly shall have power to determine the number of persons who shall constitute the jury in the inferior and district courts."

So, the Constitution of Texas, art. 1, § 15, gives the legislature power to pass such laws as may be needed to regulate the same and to maintain its purity and efficacy.

And Tex. Const. art. 5, § 13, provides that "in civil cases, and in trials of criminal cases below the grade of felony in the district courts, . . . the legislature may change or modify the rule authorizing less than the whole number of the jury to render a verdict."

Again, Wash. Const. art. 1, § 21, provides "that the legislature may provide for a jury of any number less than twelve in courts not of record, and for a verdict by nine or more jurors in civil cases in any court of record, and for waiving of the jury in civil cases where the consent of the parties interested is given thereto."

VII. The question of consent and waiver.

a. General doctrine.

In the consideration of the question of the validity of a verdict of less than the common-law number of jurors the point has often been raised as to whether or not the fact that the defendant waived a trial by the full jury of twelve and consented to a verdict by less than the constitutional number of jurors will render the trial and the verdict rendered thereat valid and constitutional.

In criminal cases the trend of the decisions leads to the conclusion that in capital cases and felonies there can be no waiver of the right, and the consent of the defendant to be tried by less than the common-law number cannot bind him. (See c. infra.) This conclusion is also borne out by the constitutional and statutory provisions of many of the states of the Union whose Constitutions and statutes make special provision for such cases. See cases in b. infra.

There are, however, some few cases wherein the consent of the defendant to a verdict by less than the common-law number of jurors in a case of felony has been held to bind him when entered on the record, but it may be doubted whether such cases can be considered good law inasmuch as they place no distinction between crimes of the higher grade on the trial of which the party was entitled to a jury of twelve men at common law, and by the state Constitution, which made the right to trial by jury inviolate, and misdemeanors. Such cases seem to base their opinion upon the ground that there is no distinction, and that if the consent of the defendant in a case of misdemeanor is binding upon him the same result must follow his consent in cases of felony. See Iowa cases infra, c.

Yet in cases of misdemeanor and other crimes of a lower grade the decisions show that there may be a waiver of a trial by a full jury of twelve men, and that the defendant's express consent to a verdict by a less number of jurors will bind him when accepted and consented to by the court and prosecution. The Constitutions and statutes of many of the states make express provision for such a verdict, and if the conditions are strictly observed the verdicts rendered under such laws are constitutional and will be upheld.

So, in minor offenses the jurisdiction in which is given to justices of the peace and a jury of less than twelve, the courts have held that such juries do not contravene the provisions of the state Constitutions, and that the consent of the defendant will bind him. In such cases, however, as in others, it has been held that it must be shown that the right to be tried by a jury of less than twelve did not exist at common law, or was not a right to which the defendant was entitled under some state law existing prior to the adoption of the state Constitution. See Com. v. Saal, 10 Phila. 496, infra, d.

In civil cases the rule would not seem to be so stringent, and a defendant may be allowed to waive a hearing by a full jury of twelve men, and to consent to a trial and verdict by a less number provided his assent is shown to have been given thereto. There must, however, be a consent shown. See e. infra.

As to consent to proceed with less than the full jury in cases of absent, sick, or unqualified jurors, see Tram Lumber Co. v. Hancock, 70 Tex. 312; State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 579, 33 Am. Rep. 148, 149; Prentice v. Chearning, 1 Rob. (La.) 71, 72; Com. v. Dailey, 12 Cush. 80; Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341; Silsby v. Foote, 14 How. 219, 14 L. ed. 394; Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492; Com. v. Byers, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 295; Glindrat v. State, 3 Tex. App. 573; People v. Deegan, 88 Cal. 608; State v. Allen, 46 Conn. 531, 548; McCampbell v. State, 9 Tex. App. 124, 35 Am. Rep. 726; infra, VIII. b.

b. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

The state Constitutions which make express 43 L. R. A provisions for the waiver of a jury of twelve in cases therein mentioned are as follows:

The Arkansas Constitution, art. 2, § 7, of the Declaration of Rights, provides that "the right of trial by jury shall extend to all cases at law without regard to the amount in controversy; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all cases in the manner prescribed by law."

A clause is contained in the Constitution of California, art. 1, § 7, with respect to civil actions and cases of misdemeanors, whereby the jury may consist of twelve, or of any number less than twelve, upon which the parties may agree in open court.

So, the Constitution of Kansas, ed. 1897, vol. 2, chap. 103, § 119, p. 485, contains a provision with regard to civil actions whereby the parties may agree to a less number than six, which is the number of jurors requisite to try a cause in that court upon a demand for a jury by either party.

And by art. 6, § 27, of the Michigan Constitution the right of trial by jury remains, but is deemed to be waived in all civil cases unless demanded by one of the parties in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

Again, under § 4, art. 1, of the Bill of Rights of Minnesota a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all cases in the manner prescribed by the law.

So, a similar provision is to be found in § 3, art. 1, of the Declaration of Rights of Nevada, as to waiver of a jury in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law.

And art. 1 of the Constitution of Utah, § 10, declares that a jury in civil cases shall be waived unless demanded.

In Indiana, however, whenever the right to trial by jury under art. 1, § 5, of the Constitution is claimed by either party, the court is bound to grant it, and therefore a waiver of such right can only take place where both parties consent. State v. Mead, 4 Blackf. 309, 30 Am. Dec. 661.

And the Constitution of Pennsylvania does not permit a waiver of the constitutional right to a trial by a jury of twelve in either civil or criminal cases, and no consent can alter or modify the known, certain, uniform, permanent, prescribed rules of trials in criminal cases, and therefore, to try a case with eleven or thirteen jurors is to create a new tribunal unknown to the Constitution or law, and this no counsel, or citizen, or court, or all three, can do. Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492. To the same effect, Mitten v. Smock, 3 N. J. L. 470; Briant v. Russell, 2 N. J. L. 35.

With respect to a statutory provision, however, it has been said that a defendant in a criminal action may waive the benefit of a statutory provision made for his benefit, and with the consent of the state and court may waive a statute made for his benefit, and silence will constitute such waiver or consent, and therefore a trial by eleven jurors with such consent is not unconstitutional. State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 579, 33 Am. Rep. 148, 149.

The statutes of several of the states make provision for consent to try with a less number of jurors than twelve.

In Arizona under Rev. Stat. 1887, title 39, chap. 1, § 2165, p. 384, in civil cases the parties may consent to try with a less number than twelve and not under three, the consent to be entered by the clerk in the minutes of the trial.

And § 2166 of the same statute makes a similar provision for a jury in courts of justices of the peace.

So, under the Revised Statutes of Arkansas, Sandels & Hill's ed. 1894, § 4349, in cases before justices of the peace, if a jury is demanded by either party the justice must order the same to be impeached, and such jury shall be composed of six jurors, but a less number may be agreed upon by the parties.

And by § 2219 of Mansfield's (Arkansas) Digest, provision is made for the trial of cases other than felonies, by agreement of the parties, by a jury of less than twelve.

By § 2376 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Ark. Stat. 1884) it is provided that issues of law and fact may be tried by the justice, unless the defendant demands a trial by jury, in which case the same shall be tried by a jury of twelve men unless the defendant shall consent to be tried by a less number.

By the Code of Civil Procedure of California (3 Deering's Anno. Codes & Stats. § 194, p. 60) the jury in civil actions and in cases of misdemeanor may consist of twelve or of any number less than twelve upon which the parties may agree in open court.

So, by the Penal Code of the same state (4 Deering's Anno. Codes & Stats. § 1042, p. 225), issues of fact may be tried by a jury, unless a trial by jury be waived in criminal cases not amounting to felony by the consent of both parties expressed in open court and entered in the minutes, and in cases of misdemeanor the jury may consist of twelve, or any number less than twelve, upon which the parties may agree in open court.

Under the General Statutes of Connecticut of 1888, title 18, chap. 76, § 1103, p. 258, a legal verdict may be given by any number of jurors not less than nine in any civil cause in which the parties agree in writing before such verdict is rendered that such portion of the jury may render it.

So, under Idaho Rev. Stat. ed. 1887, title 3, § 3939, a trial by jury in the district court shall consist of twelve, and in probate and justices' courts of six, men, unless the parties to the action or proceedings agree upon a less number.

And by § 7781, chap. 6, of the same statutes (Penal Code) issues of fact must be tried by a jury unless a trial by jury be waived in criminal cases not amounting to a felony by the consent of both parties expressed in open court and entered in its minutes, and in cases of misdemeanor the jury may consist of twelve or any less number than twelve upon which the parties may agree in open court.

So, under § 48, § 13, art. 5, chap. 79, Starr & C. (Ill.) Anno. Stat. vol. 2, ed. 1896, relating to trials before justices of the peace, the number of jurors shall be six or any greater number not exceeding twelve as either party may desire.

And by Ind. Rev. Stat. vol. 1, Meyers' Anno. ed. § 521, relating to the Code of Criminal Procedure, in a trial by jury in civil actions, the parties may determine the number of jurors by agreement, and in case of their disagreement the number shall be twelve. Under this section, however, the number shall not be less than three.

And by § 1483 of the same statutes, relating to proceedings before justices of the peace, the number may be less than twelve by consent of the parties.

So, under Mo. Rev. Stat. ed. 1889, vol. 2, § 6262, p. 1480, relating to the practice in justices' courts, a jury is to be composed of six unless the parties agree to a less number, in which case the jury is to consist of the number agreed upon not exceeding six.

And by § 2690 of the Code of Montana relating to proceedings in justices' and police courts, the defendant is entitled to a jury of six, but may consent to a less number.

43 L. R. A.

And under § 319, Anno. Comp. Stat. ed. 1897, § 7044, Crim. Code Neb. in cases relating to the criminal procedure before magistrates, if the defendant consent, a cause may be tried by a jury of any number of men not more than two nor less than six, to be selected as therein stated.

And under § 972, Code Crim. Proc. Neb. Comp. Stat. 1897, § 6495, Anno. ed. in civil actions either party may demand a jury which shall be composed of twelve men unless the parties agree to a less number.

The Code of Civil Procedure of Nevada with reference to proceedings in civil cases and justices' courts (Nev. Gen. Stat. ed. 1885, § 3568) provides that the jury, by consent of the parties, may consist of any number not more than twelve or less than four.

And by the justice's Code of North Dakota (Rev. Stat. 1895, § 6686) the jury may be composed of six or any number less than six if the parties shall agree.

Under § 139, N. Y. Rev. Stat. ed. 1896, Birds-eye's Anno. ed. p. 1801, vol. 2, in proceedings before justices, the parties may elect to try the cause by a less number than six jurors at any time before a witness is sworn.

So, by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 6547, with respect to a trial before justices of the peace, a jury shall be composed of six, unless the parties agree on a less number.

And in the trial of civil cases before justices of the peace, under Okla. Stat. § 4737, ed. 1893, in all civil actions the jury shall be six, unless the parties agree to a less number.

And by S. C. Rev. Stat. ed. 1895, § 885, in civil cases the parties may agree on a jury. When they do not agree, and also in criminal cases, a jury shall be selected in the manner pointed out by the section, six jurors constituting the number.

Under art. 3227, chap. 11, title 62, Texas Rev. Stat. ed. 1895, p. 625, "the parties may by consent agree in a particular case to try with a less number" than twelve.

By Sayles's Texas Civ. Stat. vol. 2, title 57, chap. 11, art. 3100, a jury of less than twelve in district courts is allowed by consent.

By Utah Rev. Stat. ed. 1898, § 1295, a trial by jury, in every criminal case other than capital, and in civil cases in the district court, shall consist of eight jurors, provided that in civil cases and in cases of misdemeanor the jury may consist of any number less than eight upon which the parties may agree in open court, and the trial jury in a justices' court, both in criminal and civil cases, shall be four, or any number less than four upon which the parties may agree in open court.

And under § 1501, Hill's Anno. Code and Statutes of Washington, vol. 2, title 16, chap. 8, p. 593, relating to the practice in criminal actions in justices' courts, the defendant or the state may demand a jury which shall consist of six or a less number agreed upon by the state and accused.

And by § 1510 of the same statutes with respect to the trial of civil actions in justices' courts a jury is to be composed of six unless the parties agree upon a less number.

c. In cases of felony.

In the leading New York case upon the question of the right of a prisoner to waive his constitutional right to a full jury in cases of felony, and in those cases in which the right was guaranteed to him by the Constitution, the court stated that criminal prosecutions involve public wrongs, a breach and violation of public rights and duties, which affect the whole community considered as a community, in its social aggregate capacity, and the end such suits have in view is the prevention of similar offenses, not atonement or expiation for crime committed, and the penalties or punishments, for the enforcement of which they are a means to the end, are not within the discretion or control of the parties accused, for no one has a right by his own voluntary act to surrender his liberty or part with his life; the state, the public, have an interest in the preservation of the liberties and the lives of the citizens, and will not allow them to be taken away "without due process of law" when forfeited as they may be as a punishment for crimes. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 137.

In that case the people contended that the defendant might waive his constitutional right to a jury of twelve, but the court pointed out the wide and important distinction which existed between civil suits and criminal prosecutions, as to the legal right of a defendant to waive a strict substantial adherence to the established, constitutional, statutory, and common-law mode and rules of judicial proceedings, and observed that such distinction arose from the great difference in the nature of such cases, in respect to the interests involved, and the objects to be accomplished.

So, in Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341, which was a case of felony, the court said that if a deficiency of one juror might be waived, there would appear to be no good reason why a deficiency of eleven might not be, and it was difficult to say whether upon the same principle the entire panel might not be dispensed with, and the trial committed to the court alone, yet it would be a highly dangerous innovation in reference to criminal cases upon the ancient and invaluable institution of trial by jury, and the Constitution and laws establishing and securing the mode of trial, for the court to allow of any number short of the full panel of twelve jurors, and such an act could not be tolerated.

And the courts have denied the right in such cases upon the ground that the substantial constitution of the legal tribunal and the fundamental mode of its proceeding are not within the power of the parties. Upon this ground, therefore, the verdict in the case of felony where the jury, though by the consent of the accused, consists of less than twelve, is void. People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674, 676.

So, if, with the consent of the court and prosecution, the defendant might consent to a trial with one juror more than the constitutional jury, and if by such acts he might have a trial with one juror less, yet in either case there would be a failure of jurisdiction because jurisdiction attaches and makes valid a verdict when rendered by a jury, and a jury is of twelve men. Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341.

In this case it is stated that as the denial of the right to consent or to waive a full jury in such cases is based upon the fact that as jurisdiction comes by following the law, and disorder and uncertainty follow a departure therefrom, it follows that neither the prosecution nor the defendants by any act of their own, can change or modify the law by which criminal trials are controlled.

So, the denial of the right arises from the fact that the substantial constitution of the legal tribunal, and the fundamental mode of its proceeding, are not within the power of the parties. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128.

And it is further based upon the theory that it is the duty of the courts to see that the constitutional rights of a defendant in a criminal case shall not be violated, however negligent he may be in raising the objection; it is in such cases, emphatically, that consent should not be allowed to give jurisdiction. Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 173, 47 Am. Rep. 341. To the same effect, People v. O'Neill, 48 Cal. 258; Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116; Jackson v. State, 6 Blackf. 461; Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496; Bowles v. State, 5 Sneed, 360; Bell v. State, 44 Ala. 393; Williams v. State, 12 Ohio St. 622; Allen v. State, 54 Ind. 461; State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39, 60; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351, 357, 358.

Again, the courts have refused the right, owing to the principle that when issue is joined upon an indictment the trial must be by the tribunal, and in the mode, which the Constitution and laws provide without any essential change, and the public officer prosecuting for the people has no authority to consent to such a change, neither has the defendant; and further, upon the ground that criminal prosecutions proceed on the assumption of a forfeiture of the liberties and lives of the citizens by due process of law, which, to sustain them, must be ascertained and declared as the law has prescribed. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 138.

For the reasons expressed above, the weight of authority holds that in felony, the constitutional right to a trial by a common-law jury of twelve cannot be waived, even by consent, and a verdict by a jury of less than that number must be set aside as a nullity. Territory v. Ortiz, 8 N. M. 154; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436; Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 59 Am. Dec. 671; Brazier v. State, 44 Ala. 387; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 471; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351; People v. O'Neill, 48 Cal. 257; Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496; Allen v. State, 54 Ind. 461; State v. Van Matre, 49 Mo. 268; State v. Meyers, 68 Mo. 266; State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 41; Williams v. State, 12 Ohio St. 622; Murphy v. Com. 1 Met. (Ky.) 365; Tyra v. Com. 2 Met. (Ky.) 1; Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 550; Dowling v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 664; State v. Everett, 14 Minn. 447; People v. Deegan, 88 Cal. 608, dissenting opinion of De Haven, J.; People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674; Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492; Hunt v. State, 61 Miss. 577, 580; Byrd v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 163; Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116; Lewis v. Garrett, 5 How. (Miss.) 434.

So, such consent upon a trial for murder will not give the court jurisdiction, or authorize a substantial change in its fundamental mode of proceedings which can be neither enlarged nor restricted, even though the defendant may waive his right of challenge to the jury. People v. Guidici, 100 N. Y. 503.

And, under a plea of not guilty in a prosecution for a felony it is not competent for the prisoner to consent to dispense with a jury of twelve men, as, in the absence of a jury, the court in such an issue has no jurisdiction. And it cannot sit as a substitute for the constitutional tribunal of twelve men, as such a jury was the only one known to the common law in such cases. People v. Lyons (Ill.) 5 Crim. L. Mag. 674.

So, it is not in the power of one accused of felony by consent expressly given, or by his silence, to authorize a jury of only eight persons to pass upon the question of his guilt instead of the constitutional jury of twelve. Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061.

And the consent of the defendant, indicted for murder, to the withdrawal of one juror, and to the rendering of a verdict by the remaining eleven jurors, cannot lawfully be recognized by the court, and is a nullity. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 138.

So, in Allen v. State, 54 Ind. 461, a conviction of larceny by a jury of ten, where two of the jurors had been discharged with the defendant's consent, was overruled, as the trial of a criminal cause by a jury consisting of less than twelve is unauthorized by law, and the verdict in such a case is void. The court followed its prior decision in Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 406, and relied upon the authority of Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351.

And in Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351, 357, 358, a conviction of murder was set aside as one of the jurors was an alien, and not a citizen of the United States or of the state,—which fact was unknown to the defendant or his counsel until after the verdict was rendered,—upon the ground that the defendant could not waive such constitutional right, and that the case must be taken as though it had been a trial by eleven jurors, and that it was the court's duty to see that such constitutional rights, especially in a criminal case, were not violated, no matter how negligent the defendant might have been in raising his objection.

Again, in State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, 474, a conviction of felony was set aside as one of the twelve men called to try the case failed to answer on the next morning, and it was stated that he was sick, although it was then agreed, the prisoner consenting, that the trial should proceed with the eleven jurors who rendered the verdict.

So, in Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341, the prisoner was held not to be bound by his consent to be tried by the remaining eleven jurors on a trial for murder, where one of the twelve jurymen was excused on account of sickness in his family.

And in Arnold v. State, 38 Neb. 752, 754, it is stated that the consent of the prisoner cannot change the law; that the rights given him by statute he cannot waive, and, even by agreement of the state's prosecutor, the tribunal which the law provides for the trial of the issue cannot be set aside and some other tribunal substituted.

In State v. Allen, 46 Conn. 531, 548, it is said that even if the defendant, upon a trial for murder, can under any circumstances consent to allow the case to proceed with a jury of eleven, and thus make the verdict binding and effectual, it must be made with the consent and approval of the prosecution, otherwise the verdict of eleven jurors will be no verdict at all. The question whether the consent of counsel for accused and of the prosecution would be sufficient to uphold a verdict in a capital case by less than a full panel was, however, not expressly decided in this case.

In the above case, a prosecution for murder, defendant's counsel asked for a suspension of the trial after witnesses had been examined, in order that the question as to the disqualification of one of the jurors, by reason of his having expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the prisoner, might be determined. The court found the disqualification justified, and the defendant then offered to waive such disqualification and to proceed with eleven jurors. The action of the court below in discharging the jury was upheld, as the person disqualified thereupon ceased to be a juror, and the number was reduced to eleven, and the record did not show that the offer of the counsel of the accused to proceed with the eleven jurors was accepted by the state. Without such consent at least the court intimated that eleven jurors could not render a verdict.

In a case where there were thirteen jurors in the box, and the defendant when he discovered the same objected to proceed, and the court 43 L. R. A.

ordered the thirteenth juror to retire, whereupon the case was submitted to the remaining twelve, the verdict of the twelve jurors was upheld as they were accepted by the defendant and the thirteenth juror was one stricken out by the defendant. Davis v. State, 9 Tex. App. 634.

But in State v. White, 33 La. Ann. 1218, wherein the defendant was convicted on a charge of stabbing with intent to kill and murder, it was held that the constitutional provisions guaranteeing the trial by jury might be waived by the defendant.

And the same conclusions were reached in the case of State v. Askins, 33 La. Ann. 1253.

The last two cases, however, were both decided upon the theory that although a defendant in a criminal action had, under the Constitution of that state, the right to a trial by an impartial jury,—that is a jury of twelve men as at common law,—yet in cases where the penalty was not necessarily hard labor or death, a trial by a less number than twelve might be provided for by the state legislation, and also upon the ground that the Constitution contained no language by which the legislature were precluded from providing any other mode of trial at the option of the accused. See State v. White, 33 La. Ann. 1220.

The court upheld a conviction upon an indictment for assault with intent to rape by a jury of eleven in a case where one of the twelve jurymen impaneled was excused on the second day on account of serious illness, and, with the consent of the defendant duly recorded on the record, the trial proceeded under an agreement, also made on the record, that the verdict of the eleven jurors should "be as valid and binding as though rendered by the full jury." State v. Grosshelm, 79 Iowa, 75, 77.

In this case the court followed its previous decision in State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 578, 33 Am. Rep. 148, and distinguished the case from State v. Carman, 63 Iowa, 130, 50 Am. Rep. 741; and State v. Larrigan, 66 Iowa, 426, upon the ground that the two latter cases were authority for the rule that a jury cannot be waived in a criminal case for the reason that the statute provides that issues of fact in such cases shall be tried by a jury, and for the reason that the essentials of a legal jury were not considered in those cases.

The case of State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 578, 33 Am. Rep. 148, which was relied upon in the above case of State v. Grosshelm, 79 Iowa, 75, 77, was one of forgery, in which a juror was taken sick and the defendant's consent to be tried by the eleven remaining jurors, with the consent of the state and the court, was held to bind him.

In this case the court relied upon the cases of Com. v. Dalley, 12 Cush. 80; Murphy v. Com. 1 Met. (Ky.) 365; and Tyra v. State, 2 Met. (Ky.) 1,—wherein the court upheld convictions for misdemeanors by a jury of less than twelve upon the defendant's consent to be so tried, and observed that it was unable to see how it was possible to draw a distinction in that respect between misdemeanors and felonies, because the Constitution did not recognize any such distinction.

This decision would seem to be in direct opposition to the majority of the decisions upon the question, and to the contrary to the construction generally placed upon the meaning of the words "shall remain inviolate" as used in the Constitution of the states of the Union, according to which the term has been declared to mean that the right should remain the same as it was at common law at the time of the adoption of such Constitution, and that in cases where, by such law, the defendant was entitled to a full jury of twelve men, he was still to be held entitled to such a jury, and that a conviction by a less jury could not bind him, although in cases where he was not so entitled by law he might waive such right and consent to a less jury than twelve, thus generally drawing a distinction between felonies and misdemeanors in this respect.

The case of State v. Carman, 63 Iowa, 130, 50 Am. Rep. 741, which was distinguished by the court in the case of State v. Grosshelm, 79 Iowa, 75, 77, was a conviction of assault with intent to murder, in which a jury trial was waived by the defendant; but the court set aside the conviction and remanded the cause for a new trial upon the ground that the defendant could not waive the rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution. The opinion in chief in that case does not, however, pass upon the number of jurors necessary to secure a conviction, but in the dissenting opinion of Justice SeEVERS on page 133, the case of State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 578, 33 Am. Rep. 148, is relied upon, and comments are made upon the question of the defendant's right to consent to a less jury than twelve.

In the case of State v. Larrigan, 66 Iowa, 426, also cited and distinguished by the above case of State v. Grosshelm, a conviction by the court of a felony was reversed by the court on the ground that the right to be tried by a jury of twelve men could not be waived in such a case.

And in Alfred v. State, 6 Ga. 483, a criminal proceeding in the nature of a felony, and a capital offense committed by a slave, his master, who was acting as his counsel, upon his trial was allowed to waive the number of jurors required by the statute to be impaneled, and agree that the first twelve jurors answering to their names should try the cause.

d. In misdemeanors.

In cases of misdemeanor a distinction has been made between those cases and felonies, and the rule in such cases would seem, to be that the defendant may, by his express consent, waive a jury of twelve, and accept the verdict of a jury of a less number, for the reason that the right to trial by a full jury of twelve was not in all such cases fully guaranteed to him by the Constitution, as it did not exist as an absolute right at common law. This is so especially in petty offenses triable in justices' courts under statutes giving jurisdiction to such courts. There must, however, be a waiver of the right, and the defendant's consent to such jury must be shown.

This distinction has been recognized by the courts in the various decisions below, and was also pointed out by the court in State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, 474.

In the case of Stell v. State, 14 Tex. App. 59, a case of aggravated assault and battery, the verdict in the court below was reversed, where there was nothing indicating a waiver, or consent on the part of the defendant to be tried by a full jury of six in the county court, as provided for in § 17, art. 4, of the state Constitution, and his motion for a new trial showed that he did not consent, as he made it one of the grounds thereof.

A jury may be waived in trials for misdemeanors, and the defendant may consent to be tried by less than twelve jurors, and an agreement to a trial by a jury of less than twelve in a trial for a misdemeanor is valid, and a judgment on the verdict is not erroneous. Darst v. People, 51 Ill. 286, 2 Am. Rep. 301; Tyra v. Com. 2 Met. (Ky.) 1, 2; Murphy v. Com. 1 Met. (Ky.) 365; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 476.

Rut, even in cases of misdemeanor where the 43 L. R. A.

right has not been waived in any respect, and a jury is impaneled to try the cause, it must be a constitutional and a legal one composed of the number required by the state Constitution, and the record must show that fact. Stell v. State, 14 Tex. App. 59; Marks v. State, 10 Tex. App. 334.

An agreement by a defendant to be tried by a jury constituted of a less number than twelve in cases of misdemeanors where the penalty is merely a fine is not inconsistent with any rule of law or with public policy, neither does it tend to defeat public justice, but, on the contrary, tends to promote it by facilitating the despatch of business in court, and prevents unnecessary and embarrassing delay. Murphy v. Com. 1 Met. 365; Tyra v. Com. 2 Met. (Ky.) 1, 2.

In the case of Tyra v. Com. 2 Met. (Ky.) 1, the record showed that the defendant, indicted for maliciously stabbing with intent to kill, was found guilty of a misdemeanor by a jury of eleven with the consent of the prisoner, although under § 258 of the Criminal Code he might have been found guilty either of the felony as charged, or of any lower degree of that offense. The court refused to reverse the conviction under § 334 of the Criminal Code of that state, although it was contended that the record presented a case of felony and not of misdemeanor, especially as no objection was made in the court below.

In this case the court laid down the above rule with respect to misdemeanors, and stated that it existed whatever might be the rule in cases of felony, and that therefore the rule contended for, which was that in cases of felony the prosecution and the defense could not agree to a verdict by less than a full number of jurors, could not properly apply in that case.

So, it has been stated that there is no sufficient reason in principle for denying the defendant, except in criminal cases of the highest grade, the power to waive his right to be tried by a jury of twelve, when he does so deliberately with the knowledge of his counsel, and no advantage is taken of him to induce his action. Com. v. Sweet, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 136.

An argument in favor of the defendant's right to waive a full jury of twelve in cases of misdemeanor is found in the fact that a prisoner waives his right to a trial by jury of twelve when he pleads guilty to the indictment, and thereby produces a result which is certainly disastrous to him, whereas by consenting to submit his case to a jury of even less than twelve he preserves his chance for a favorable verdict, and he should therefore in such cases be treated as a reasonable being, responsible for his acts, and permitted the free action of his judgment, and held accountable. Com. v. Sweet, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 136.

So, no departure from established forms of trial in criminal cases, even in prosecutions for misdemeanor, can take place, as by waiving a full jury of twelve and consenting to be tried by eleven jurors without permission of the judge. Com. v. Dalley, 12 Cush. 80, 83.

An agreement of the parties that the jury after agreeing on their verdict may seal the same and separate, where only eleven jurors return such verdict, is a waiver of all exceptions because of such separation, and places the cause in the same situation as though the twelve jurors had delivered it. Woods v. Van Buren County Comrs., Morris (Iowa) 441.

The parties upon an indictment for betting on an election may agree, after the jury have been sworn, to one of the jurors being withdrawn, and to submit the case to the remaining eleven, and the validity of it cannot be questioned. Murphy v. Com. 1 Met. (Ky.) 365.

In Com. v. Sweet, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 136, the court upheld a conviction for a misdemeanor in obtaining money under false pretenses by eleven jurors, where one of the twelve jurors, upon consultation of counsel and with the consent of defendants, was excused by the court.

The above case was said not to be distinguishable from the prior case of Lavery v. Com. 101 Pa. 560, in which the conviction of the defendant by a justice of the peace and a jury of six under Teller's act (act May 1, 1861), was, upon certiorari, held legal, as the defendant could avail himself of the privilege of the statute, and demand a trial by a justice and a jury of six, rather than in a court of quarter sessions with a jury of twelve, and that under such act the jury of six was not a violation of the constitutional provision that "the trial by jury shall be as heretofore," and that the act of assembly which gave such jurisdiction did not authorize a trial by a jury except upon demand, which demand was held to be a waiver of a right of trial by a jury of twelve.

The cases of Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492, and Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295, were, however, excepted to by the court in that case although the court stated that the opinions of the judges in those cases were entitled to great respect, and if there were no opposing decisions the court would hesitate before expressing a contrary one, but an examination of the authorities cited in such case showed that only one case was in point, namely the New York case of Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 135, 138. The court further pointed out that in none of the other authorities was the power to waive the constitutional right considered, and that the point decided by them was that a verdict by a greater or less number than twelve was not such a verdict as was guaranteed by the law, it not appearing in any of such cases that the accused consented.

So, the verdict of eleven jurors, upon a conviction for a misdemeanor in assaulting an officer and aiding a prisoner to escape, taken by consent of all parties and the court, and so shown on the record, was upheld in Com. v. Dailey, 12 Cush. 80, in which case a juror was discharged owing to sickness in his family.

And in State v. Borowsky, 11 Nev. 119, 127, wherein the defendant was convicted of misdemeanor in the office of public administrator, the court relied upon the above case of Com. v. Dailey, 12 Cush. 80, and sustained the theory that, although the defendant was entitled to be tried by a jury of twelve if he demanded such a jury, yet that by consent he might be tried by a jury of less than twelve, upon a charge of misdemeanor, although his consent would not work a waiver of a jury trial.

Again, it has been said that if a party goes to trial without objection before a justice of the peace and six jurors in criminal proceedings, two days after the jury are struck, he cannot afterwards complain of the proceedings. Griffen v. Com. 1 Wilcox (Pa.) 261, 8 Brightly's Digest, pt. 1, p. 4210.

So, a defendant in misdemeanor before a justice of the peace may waive the right to a trial by a jury of twelve, and subject it to a decision of six men, and even to that of a justice of the peace himself; but in all cases where he may require it, it is the duty of a justice to impanel an even jury of twelve men for the trial of a cause. State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436, 447.

In passing upon the 11th section of the Arkansas statute of December 16, 1846, giving jurisdiction to justices of the peace and limiting the number of a jury to six men, the court in the above case stated that the constitutional provision secured the right of trial by jury to twelve according to the known technical meaning of the term, of which right the defendant could not be deprived, except by his consent, but he might waive the right and submit to a decision of six men, and even to that of the justice himself; but that in all cases where he required it, it was the duty of the justice to impanel an even jury of twelve. The question, however, did not properly present itself in that case, and the court stated that its remarks were made for the guidance of justices.

From the above dictum of the court it would seem that it would be unconstitutional for the court to try the defendant under the act by a jury of six men in cases where he demanded a full jury of twelve, but that in cases where he waived his right and consented to a jury of six, his consent would bind him, and therefore the conviction by such jury would not be contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. The court upheld the constitutionality of the act in so far as it gave jurisdiction to the justices of the peace in cases therein mentioned. State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436, 447. In this case the defendant was charged with assault and battery.

In Warwick v. State, 47 Ark. 568, it was held that § 2219 of the Arkansas Statutes was not unconstitutional, in so far as it provided for a trial by less than twelve jurors upon the giving of consent, and therefore in the case of a misdemeanor a verdict rendered by less than twelve jurors after an agreement to abide by their finding should be allowed to stand.

And there was held to be no error upon a trial in the county court by a jury of six for an aggravated assault, where by agreement of the parties one of the jurors was excused on account of his wife's sickness, and a verdict was rendered by five jurors only. Gindrat v. State, 8 Tex. App. 573. This case was decided under § 19 of the act to regulate grand juries and juries in civil and criminal cases in the state of Texas, Gen. Laws 15th Legislature, 82.

Again, the voluntary consent of a defendant, tried in a municipal court for assault and battery, to a jury of eleven will be upheld, where he waives a jury of twelve, and there is no omission or neglect on the part of the state to furnish such a jury if demanded, even though the record shows no reason why a jury of eleven was agreed upon. State v. Sackett, 39 Minn. 69.

In Kneeland v. State, 62 Ga. 395, 397, the defendants, tried in a circuit court for keeping a faro table, demanded jury trials. The usual jury in such court was impaneled, and five were left as a traverse jury by whom the prisoners were found guilty. The act regulating the practice in the city court did not require a trial by jury, but if the defendant required it, it was his privilege to demand it, and in such case the act provided only for a jury of five men to be stricken from a jury of twelve. The act was passed prior to the Georgia Constitution of 1877, which by the 18th section of the 3d article thereof, prohibits a jury of less than twelve men. The trial was had subsequent to the Constitution of 1877, going into effect by reason of its ratification, and no law had been passed by the general assembly to carry it into effect by any practical machinery providing for a jury of twelve. The court held that the defendants' demand for a jury trial must be understood as the demand for that sort of jury which the court could give them, and that when they had their rights passed upon by such a jury of their own seeking and choosing, and the issue was found against them, it would be allowing them to speculate upon the chances of the trial sought by themselves if they were permitted to object to the jury of their own choice.

But in the case of Com. v. Saal, 10 Phila. 496, wherein the defendant claimed a full jury of twelve, a conviction upon an information for violation of the liquor laws tried before a justice and a jury of six without the defendant's consent under the Pennsylvania statute, was set aside as unconstitutional as contrary to the provision of the bill of rights, as prior to the adoption of the state Constitution he was entitled to a jury under the colonial laws.

Yet it must affirmatively appear that the defendant consented to be tried by a less jury than that required by the law, even though he may have objected to take the case from them, as his actions may amount to nothing more than a mere waiver not sufficient to constitute an agreement to be tried by a less number than twelve. Warwick v. State, 47 Ark. 568, wherein defendant was convicted of participating in the offense of selling intoxicating liquors to a minor.

In the above case, the bill of exceptions showed that the defendant, when asked if he would agree to try the cause with a less number of jurors than twelve, declined to make the agreement, and a full jury was ordered into the box but by mistake a jury of eleven were sworn without his objection. The mistake was discovered while the jury were being instructed, whereupon the court ordered another juror into the box for the purpose of completing the panel and wanted the case gone over again. To this the defendant objected, and the court then directed the jury of eleven to retire and consider the verdict.

So, a waiver of a jury of twelve by a defendant's attorney in a trial for malicious trespass, without the consent of his client who was present in court, was held a nullity in Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496, as such waiver could not bind the defendant.

e. In civil actions.

In considering the right of a defendant to waive a full jury and consent to a verdict by a less number than twelve, a distinction is drawn between criminal actions and civil suits, upon the ground that civil suits relate to and affect, as to the parties against whom they are brought, only individual rights which are within their individual control, and which they may part with at their pleasure. So, the law recognizes the doctrine of waiver to a great extent in civil suits, in some instances even to the deprivation of constitutional private rights. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 137.

And a departure from legal rules in the conduct of civil suits with the consent of a defendant is a voluntary relinquishment of what belongs to the defendant exclusively, and there is manifest propriety in the law allowing such consent to have the effect designed by it in most cases, as to matters within the jurisdiction of the court. Ibid.

And therefore it has been held that in civil cases the parties may waive the right to trial by a jury of twelve. Marlin v. Stockbridge, 14 Tex. 165; Flint River S. B. Co. v. Foster, 5 Ga. 194, 43 Am. Dec. 248, 260; Scott v. Russell, 39 Mo. 407; Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 37 Mo. 298.

And it is competent for the defendant to waive the right of a trial according to the common law, even if without such waiver he would be considered as entitled to it. People v. Murray, 5 Hill, 468, 472. In this case the defendants had acted under a state statute, and could not therefore object to the unconstitutionality of its provisions relating to the assessment of the damages incurred through their acts.

So, in an action before a justice where a trial proceeds with a jury of less than twelve men, and no exception is taken or motion in arrest made, the point is waived. Sappington v. Elrod, 9 Mo. App. Appx. 581.

And an agreement by the parties in a justice's court for the trial of a cause by a jury of less than six jurors is good, though not made until after the return of the venire, and when the jury is drawn, if the parties proceed to trial pursuant to such agreement. Carman v. Newell, 1 Denio, 25.

Where it was shown that after the jury were impaneled one was excused on account of sickness, with the consent of all parties, the court refused to find any error. Tram Lumber Co. v. Hancock, 70 Tex. 312.

So, in Cravens v. Grant, 2 T. B. Mon. 117, an action for deceit in the sale of a mare, there was held to be no error in a verdict by eleven jurors, as the parties had assented to try the cause by eleven jurors only, after one had been withdrawn, and their assent was apparent as well from the entry of withdrawal as from that of the subsequent proceedings had on the trial, although had there been no such assent the verdict would have been erroneous.

And in Roach v. Blakey, 89 Va. 767, an action in ejectment, in which the record showed that the trial by eleven jurors was by consent of parties in open court, the court refused to hear the defendant's claim that he was entitled to have twelve persons on the jury as by consent he waived this right and consented to a trial by eleven jurors.

Yet the trial court has no authority in law to withdraw a juror during the progress of the trial, and continue the trial with the remaining eleven jurors, without the consent of all the parties. Cloud County Comrs. v. Morgan (Kan. App.) 52 Pac. 896.

And the provisions of the New Jersey statute relating to the trial of small causes, the 59th and 60th section of which provide, in effect, that where property levied upon is claimed by any person, other than the defendant, by notice in writing delivered to the constable, the latter must delay the sale for ten days, so that within the period the claimant may apply to a justice for a venire to summon a jury of six lawful men as jurors to try the claimant's right to such property, and the verdict of such jury is to be a protection to the constable from any action in the taking and seizing of such property, are constitutional in respect to such jury, and such procedure does not deprive the plaintiff of his trial by a constitutional jury of twelve men, as the statute offers the parties a mode of trial at once inexpensive and facile, which neither the one nor the other was compelled to resort to: but the parties can waive such rights and at their option accept such method of litigation, and in such event the rule volenti non fit injuria applies. Berry v. Chamberlain, 53 N. J. L. 463.

In civil cases the Indiana statute (2 Rev. Stat. § 308, p. 106) authorizes the parties to agree upon a less number, and a jury consisting of twelve may be waived. Brown v. State, 16 Ind. 496; Durham v. Hudson, 4 Ind. 501.

In Kreuchl v. Dehler, 50 Ill. 176, 178, the court construed a statute providing for a jury of six on a trial of the right of property before a justice as absolutely providing that number only in cases where the parties were not present to agree to a less number, and as not intended to require them to have at least six, or to prevent their excusing a juror by consent after the trial had commenced.

And where a statute provides for a jury of more than six, and also that by consent a jury may be composed of less than that number, there is no reason why the parties may not agree to a jury of more than six. Rhodes Burford Furniture Co. v. Mattox, 135 Ind. 372, 376.

Where, however, a verdict is rendered in a justice's court by twelve jurors instead of six, as provided by the statute, if a party against whom such errors may have been committed sees fit not to appeal from the justice's judgment, he must be deemed to have waived all such errors, and if instead of so appealing he seeks to enjoin the judgment he stands in no better attitude than if he had consented to each and every one of the irregularities complained of. Rhodes Burford Furniture Co. v. Mattox, 135 Ind. 372.

So, if in an action in assumpsit the record shows a trial by eleven instead of twelve jurors, and the defendant and his counsel were present at the impaneling of the jury and during the trial, and made no objection, and neglected to mention the fact in their motion for setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial, even if there are but eleven jurors, the defendant will be taken as having consented to that number, and his consent in a civil cause will cure the error. Durham v. Hudson, 4 Ind. 501, 504.

And a similar decision was arrived at by the court in Mitchell v. Stephens, 23 Ind. 466, a suit brought before a justice and tried by a jury of eleven, in which the record showed that the issues were joined and the causes submitted to a jury of eleven, but in the motion for a new trial this was not assigned as a cause.

So, even if it be true that the record does not show a submission by the consent of the parties to a jury of eleven, still the full jury may be waived by an error to assign it as and for a new trial. Durham v. Hudson, 4 Ind. 501; Mitchell v. Stephens, 23 Ind. 466.

When the objection to a jury of less than twelve jurors is first made upon appeal it must be taken that the parties waived such a jury. Marlin v. Stockbridge, 14 Tex. 165.

So, if, in a civil action, the judgment recites only eleven jurors as rendering the verdict, and it is only signed by the foreman and not by the eleven, if no objection is made to the form of the verdict or to the manner of signing it in the court below, or insisted upon as a ground for a new trial, the question cannot be considered upon appeal for the first time, as the proper place to make the objection is in the court below. Flanagan v. Pearson, 61 Tex. 302.

And in an action in a justice's court if the return set forth that "defendant asked for a venire which was issued and returned with the names of the jurymen personally summoned (six names being given)," but only five persons appeared and were sworn as a jury to try the cause "by the agreement of the parties," the court will presume that the venire issued for twelve men, although only six are returned, and the defendant, by reason of his agreement, will be estopped to deny the question and the authority of the jury to try the case. Clagus v. Hodgson, 16 Minn. 320.

Again, the court of law commissioners is a court of record having common-law jurisdiction, and proceeds according to the course of the common law, and in trials in that court a party is entitled to a jury of twelve men when he demands it, but if the case proceeds with a less number, and he takes no exception on that ground, he cannot afterwards avail himself of that error, except by motion in arrest of judgment within the time prescribed by law or by the rules of court. Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 300, 304.

So, in Huron v. Carter, 5 S. D. 4, 8, wherein the city charter gave the police exclusive jurisdiction over offenses against the ordinances of 43 L. R. A.

the city, and also allowed an appeal in such cases as were tried without a jury, and in no others, an action, brought for the violation of a city ordinance relating to health, in which by an agreement in open court between the parties the case was with the court's consent tried by a jury of six selected from twelve names provided by the court, was considered as a civil one in which it was competent for the parties to agree to a jury of less than the regular number, although the law could not compel a litigant to accept less than a constitutional jury.

And in a case of a civil action on a promissory note where the record recited that a jury of twelve good and lawful men appeared, but eleven only were named, and the parties made no objection to the verdict but received it as a good and lawful one, the court refused to notice the objection and affirmed the judgment. Foster v. Van Norman, 1 Tex. 636.

Yet it is stated that in civil cases, in the absence of waiver, the defendant is not to be held responsible for the right construction of the jury in point of numbers, and is not to be charged with the fault of the proper officer in that respect. Cowles v. Buckman, 6 Iowa, 161.

So, it is settled that even in civil cases consent will not confer jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and where such jurisdiction exists, a change, by consent, of the mode of proceeding, may be so extensive as to convert the case from a judicial proceeding into a mere arbitration. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 130.

And in Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341, it is said that by the consent of the court, prosecution, and defendant, a criminal trial ought not to be converted into a mere arbitration, although in civil cases the Montana statute expressly provides that, in case a jurymen becomes sick and is excused, the trial, with the consent of the parties, may proceed by the remaining eleven jurymen; yet even in civil actions this cannot be done except by virtue of a statute authorizing it, and for this reason the statute was enacted, and in the absence of such a statute consent would not confer jurisdiction.

Again, in an action in assumpsit tried by a jury of six in conformity with the Wisconsin county court act, § 16, chap. 86, Rev. Stat. the defendant cannot avail himself of the objection that the same is unconstitutional, as by the 17th section of the act the selection of the jurors is given to both parties in the manner prescribed, and if either party refuses or neglects to take part in choosing the jurors the court or the clerk may act for such party, and especially is such the case where it is not shown that the defendant objected to the jury; and in such case the court will presume that he took part in the selection, and if he does not demand a jury, and does not participate in selecting it, it is incumbent upon him to show such a state of facts, and in the absence of any objection or refusal it must be presumed that he consented to submit the case to the jury allowed by the statute. Millett v. Hayford, 1 Wis. 401.

Yet, even though under a statute providing for a jury of six in a justice's court, and for a jury of less than six in cases of consent, it may not be true that the parties may not agree to a jury of more than six, and that notwithstanding an agreement to a jury of more than six the jury might not be a legal jury, it amounts only to an error in the proceedings, and does not affect the jurisdiction; but whether such a verdict is erroneous or not, or even void, is not material, and the court will not decide the question for the reason that it does not affect the jurisdiction. Rhodes Burford Furniture Co. v. Mattox, 135 Ind. 372.

And the court refused a new trial and considered the defendant's conduct as a waiver of a jury in an action before a justice of the peace, in which, after an adjournment only five jurors answered, the other being sick, and the defendant refused to try the case before the remaining jurors, objected to a new venire, and refused a talesman, whereupon the justice dismissed the five jurors, and defendant declined a new venire, and requested an adjournment owing to the absence of witnesses whose attendance he had made no effort to procure. Babcock v. Hill, 35 Barb. 52.

Yet it has been held that it must be shown that there was an agreement or consent to have the action tried by a jury of less than twelve, and that there was a waiver of the full jury of twelve. Van Sickle v. Kellogg, 19 Mich. 49, 52.

And if a jury of twelve in a civil action is not waived by consent recorded the judgment will be set aside. Scott v. Russell, 39 Mo. 407; Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 37 Mo. 298.

So, consent is the only thing that will waive the verdict of a full jury. Bishop v. Mugler, 33 Kan. 145, 147.

It has been stated that the substantial constitution of the legal tribunal and the fundamental mode of its proceeding are not within the power of the parties, and for this reason the provision was inserted in the New York Constitution to the effect that "a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases and the manner prescribed by law." In order to authorize even the legislature to confer a right to dispense with that mode of trial. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128.

It is to be regarded as in the province of the court and its officers to impanel a full jury, and when a party is asked if he has any objection to the jury it refers to the persons constituting it, and as to challenges, and he should not be held responsible for the right constitution of the jury in point of numbers, and he is not to be charged with the fault of the proper officer in that respect; and therefore the defect of only eleven jurors upon the panel is to be regarded as fatal in criminal cases without hesitation, and the same rule will apply in civil cases unless the right has been waived. Cowles v. Buckman, 6 Iowa, 161, an action upon a promissory note.

The objection to a jury of less than twelve is not waived by a defendant by a motion for judgment upon a special verdict, especially where the defendant objected to the jury at the proper time, because of the absence of a juror, and his objection was overruled, as he was not then required to abandon the defense, but was authorized to contest it even before an unlawful jury, and to insist upon all objections raised upon the trial. Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 296.

There is no valid agreement to try an action upon an attachment bond by less than a full jury where it is shown by the bill of exceptions that both parties agreed to try a case with ten jurors, and in another place that the plaintiff demanded a full jury unless the defendant would consent to try with the eleven who were present, and also that the court ordered a new jury to be struck and organized after filling up the panel to two full juries or twenty-four names, and in such a case, in summoning additional jurors to complete the panel before the process of rejection or striking out commences, the court commits no error. Adams v. Thornton, 82 Ala. 260, 263.

So, the consent of the adverse party to a jury of less than twelve must be express and entered at the time in the minutes of the court, and cannot be inferred from the mere absence of the adverse party, and his absence is a consent under 43 L. R. A.

the statute to a trial by the court but nothing further, and therefore the court will reverse the judgment and order a new trial in a civil action in which the plaintiff is not present, and the defendant, who pleads a set-off, consents to a trial with four jurors. Gillespie v. Benson, 18 Cal. 409, 411. Ayres v. Barr, 5 J. J. Marsh. 286, to the same effect.

And where, in an action in a justice's court for the recovery of a sum of money, the parties consented to take a majority verdict, the express consent of both parties was not shown by the return of the justice, which only showed that "at the suggestion of the counsel for the defense the counsel for the plaintiff consented to accept a majority verdict." The court reversed the judgment as there was no agreement or consent shown on the part of defendant's counsel to accept such a verdict, neither was there any such consent shown on the part of the counsel for plaintiff,—especially as the return also showed that the consent was obtained in ignorance of certain facts in possession of defendant and unknown to plaintiff or his counsel. Snow v. Hardy, 3 Minn. 77, 80.

There are authorities that hold that the defendant's consent to be tried by a less jury than twelve cannot prevail over the express words of the legislature.

In Falkenburgh v. Cramer, 1 N. J. L. 81, the court reversed the judgment upon the ground that the consent of the parties could not avail against the express words of the legislature, in a case removed to the supreme court by certiorari, on the return of which it appeared that the demand was for more than $11, and a venire had issued for a jury of twelve men, and at the trial six of the jurors only appeared and were sworn by the consent of the parties, and the plaintiff recovered a verdict for $8.

So, in Parker v. Munday, 1 N. J. L. 70, the court reversed the judgment entered upon a verdict in a justice's court by a jury of but six men sworn to try the cause by consent of the parties, upon the ground that by the act of assembly of June 5, 1782, a demand for £6 was to be tried by a jury of twelve men, and that the proceeding was therefore contrary to the express provisions of the law, and that the consent of the parties could not cure the want of jurisdiction or supersede the express words of the act of assembly.

And a similar decision was rendered by the court in the case of Mitten v. Smock, 3 N. J. L. 470, a civil action for debt in which a jury of twelve was moved for, ordered, and duly summoned, but upon the trial the parties consented to have the case tried by six, for the reason that the parties could not by consent change the legal mode of trial, and dispense at their pleasure with the law, although they might have legally left their cause to the reference of six or any other number, but as this was not done it was a trial by jury, the legal number of which could not be dispensed with even by consent.

Some old authorities, however, seem even to deny the right of a party to waive his right to a full jury and to consent to a less jury than twelve even in civil actions.

In Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22, it is said that the common-law right of trial by jury of twelve cannot be waived either directly or indirectly, and if a trial by jury is demanded and refused the right is not waived by the subsequent trial by the court.

So, upon the authority of the above case the court, in May v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 3 Wis. 219, a civil action in the county court by a jury of six men, upheld the defendant's claim to be tried by a jury of twelve, as the Constitution guaranteed him such right, and the statute which gave the county court jurisdiction and provided for a less number of jurors was unconstitutional and void, and as the right could not be waived either directly or indirectly.

The fact that the defendant has demanded a jury of twelve is decisive, and a verdict rendered by a less number is no waiver of his objection to such verdict upon appeal. May v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 3 Wis. 219.

1. As affecting appeal jury.

Jurisdiction conferred upon justices' courts in criminal causes to try offenses before a justice himself or before him and a jury of six does not entitle the defendant to a jury upon appeal where he has waived his right in the court below, and the Constitution does not secure such right. Wanser v. Atkinson, 43 N. J. L. 574.

And if the record shows that the verdict was rendered by a jury of more than twelve without objection in the court below it will be taken to be waived upon appeal. Ross v. Neal, 7 T. B. Mon. 407, 408.

So, if the objection to the jury in a civil case is first made in the court upon appeal, the party must be taken to have waived a jury of twelve. Marlin v. Stockbridge, 14 Tex. 165.

The express language of the New Jersey Constitution does not require the legislature to furnish a trial by jurors to suitors on appeal from justices' courts, in actions brought under the New Jersey statutes for the trial of criminal causes, which give a right to trial either before the justice himself or before a jury of six, where they have chosen to try their cause without a jury in the first instance. Wanser v. Atkinson, 43 N. J. L. 571, 574.

In an action brought before a justice for damages for cattle killed, and appealed to the circuit court, where a verdict for plaintiff was rendered by a jury of six, and defendant moved for a new trial on the ground that such trial was without consent, and no consent appeared on the record, the court allowed the defendant's objection on motion in arrest of judgment, as such consent when given must always be entered on record, as on appeal from justices' courts to courts of common law, the parties are entitled to a trial by twelve men unless the right is expressly waived. Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 37 Mo. 298, following Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600.

When an appeal lies from a justices' court to a district court where the defendant has a right to a full jury of twelve a legislative enactment giving the justice power to try the case with a jury of six is not unconstitutional. Collier v. Territory, 2 Okla. 444. Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 296, 308, 59 Am. Dec. 671, and Emerick v. Harris, 1 Binn. 416, to the same effect.

But where a defendant, prosecuted before a justice of the peace under Minn. Stat. §§ 68, 69, chap. 13, for obstructing a highway, demanded a jury of twelve, but the only trial permitted before the justice was a trial by a jury of six men, and the defendant was, under the Laws of 1867, chap. 81, permitted to appeal to the district court and there obtain a jury of twelve men only upon entering with surety into the recognizance therein mentioned, it was held that he was deprived of the constitutional right of trial by jury. State v. Everett, 14 Minn. 489, 442.

Yet if upon a trial the jury did not really consist of twelve men, and the defendant in the court below did not intend to waive his constitutional rights, he should reserve the point in the mode pointed out by law, and he will then be entitled to the consideration of the court upon appeal. Larillian v. Lane, 8 Ark. 372, 375.

43 L. R. A.

So, if there is judicial error in allowing a case to be decided in the county court by a jury of six under the Kentucky statute of February 11, 1880, the remedy is by appeal to the circuit court where the case will be tried de novo before a jury of twelve. Helvenstine v. Yantis, 88 Ky. 695.

The fact, however, that the defendant has demanded a jury of twelve in a county court is decisive, and a verdict rendered by a less number is no waiver of his objection to such a verdict upon appeal. May v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 3 Wis. 219; Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22.

The question of a jury trial on appeal as satisfying the constitutional right of trial by jury will be found discussed in note to Miller v. Com. (Va.) 15 L. R. A. 441.

VIII. Absent, sick, or unqualified juror.

a. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

Express provision is made by the Constitution of some states with reference to the mode of procedure to be adopted in case of a trial by less than the full number of jurors where the number has been reduced by the sickness of one or more of the jurors.

An express provision to this effect is to be found in the Constitution of the state of Texas, Rev. Stat. art. 5, § 13. This provides that "when, pending the trial of any case, one or more jurors not exceeding three may die or be disabled from sitting, the remainder of the jury shall have the power to render the verdict, provided that the legislature may change or modify the rule authorizing less than the whole number of the jury to render a verdict."

So, by express provision contained in the Codes and statutes of some states the verdict of the remaining jurors is rendered valid.

By § 4391, title 8, chap. 4, Idaho Rev. Stat. the court may order a juror to be discharged if, after the impaneling of the jury and before verdict, he becomes sick so as to be unable to perform his duty and the trial may proceed with the other jurors or another may be sworn, and the trial begin anew, or the jury may be discharged, and a new jury then or afterwards impaneled.

And a similar provision is to be found in § 3713, title 19, chap. 9, Iowa Anno. Code, ed. 1897, p. 1444, except that in such cases the continuance of the trial by the remaining jurors must be by consent entered by the court or shorthand reporter as a part of the record, otherwise the jury shall be discharged.

And in Michigan, under the act of 1861, § 1, if from any cause subsequent to the impaneling of a jury any of the jurors are unable to attend, the court may enter that fact upon their journal or docket, setting forth the cause of such inability, and the proceeding shall then continue in the same manner, and with the same effect, as if the whole panel were present, provided that the number of jurors so absent shall not be greater than three in a jury of twelve.

In McKae v. Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. 98 Mich. 399, 17 L. R. A. 750, however, the above statute was held unconstitutional, as art. 4, § 46, of the state Constitution did not authorize the making of contingencies in which a jury might consist of less than twelve in the court's discretion.

Section 1086, Montana Anno. Code, vol. 3, ed. 1895, p. 264, also contains provisions similar to those of the Idaho and Iowa statutes when a juror cannot perform his duty, and the trial may proceed with the other jurors, or another juror may be sworn and the trial begun anew, or the jury may be discharged and a new jury then or afterwards impaneled.

The North Dakota Code of Criminal Procedure, §§ 8213, 8226, and the Code of Civil Procedure, § 5489, also contain like provisions, except that the sections of the Criminal Code do not provide for the continuance of the trial by the remaining jurors.

And the Code of Civil Procedure of Nevada (Nev. Gen. Stat. ed. 1885, art. 2, § 3188, p. 789), contains a similar provision.

Again, § 199, Hill's Anno. Laws of Oregon, ed. 1892, p. 297, contains a similar provision for the discharge of the jury under like circumstances; and unless the parties agree to proceed with the other jurors a new juror may be sworn and the trial begun anew, or the jury may be discharged and a new jury then or afterwards formed.

And a provision to the like effect is found in Texas Rev. Stat. ed. 1895, title 62, chap. 11, art. 3229, with reference to trials pending in the district court where one or more of the jurors not exceeding three die or are disabled from sitting; but in such a case the verdict of the remainder of the jury shall be signed by every remaining member. 2 Sayles's Civ. Stat. art. 3101, title 57, chap. 11.

The provisions of the Iowa Code which authorize a verdict by the eleven remaining jurors in such cases have been held unconstitutional. See infra, b.

b. Decisions of the courts.

It has been held that the whole trial, and not merely a part thereof, must be by a jury of twelve. Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295.

So, § 2793 of the Iowa Code, which authorizes a verdict from eleven out of twelve jurors when the jury has been reduced to that number by sickness, has been held to be in conflict with the Constitution, § 9 of the Bill of Rights of the state. Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 296; Kelsh v. Dyersville, 68 Iowa, 137. See, however, State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 579, 33 Am. Rep. 148, and State v. Grossheim, 79 Iowa, 76, infra.

The above section of the Code makes no provision for consent, but expressly declares that the "trial shall proceed with the remaining jurors." It is therefore to a certain extent imperative and unlike the provision contained in the amended Code of 1897, which provides for the continuance of the trial with the consent of the parties.

In Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 296, the record showed that, after the evidence and the arguments of counsel were submitted, the jury were permitted to separate until the beginning of the week, when one of them was sick and unable to attend court, and was discharged. The court against defendant's objection submitted the cause to the remaining eleven jurors. It was held that the court erred in submitting the cause for the verdict of eleven jurors. In this case the action was civil to recover compensation for cattle killed upon the defendant's railroad.

And a similar decision was rendered in the case of Kelsh v. Dyersville, 68 Iowa, 137, an action to recover damages for injuries sustained through a defective sidewalk, where after the court adjourned and the jurors were again called into the box, one of their number was so sick as not to be able to perform his duties, and was discharged, and the trial proceeded with eleven jurors over the defendant's objection.

So, the court has held that the moment a juror is withdrawn there is a mistrial unless the parties consent to his place being filled. Prentice v. Chewnine, 1 Rob. (La.) 71, 72, an action on promissory notes in which the record showed that one of the jurors was sick, and that 43 L. R. A.

the court, against the defendant's wishes, substituted another juror in his place, and the evidence already taken was read to him instead of the trial commencing de novo.

And where, after the jury had rendered a sealed verdict, one of the jurors became insane, and only eleven jurors appeared in court when the sealed verdict was opened and delivered, a new trial was ordered, as a jury in a court of record must consist of twelve men. Norvell v. Deval, 50 Mo. 272, 11 Am. Rep. 418, an action for assault and battery.

In Montana it has been held that, in the absence of a statute providing that in civil cases a sick juror may be excused, and that the defendant may consent to a trial by the remaining eleven jurors, such trial cannot be allowed. Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341.

And a conviction for murder by eleven jurors will be set aside and a new trial ordered when one is removed owing to sickness, even though the prisoner consented to be tried by eleven jurors. Territory v. Ah Wah, 4 Mont. 149, 47 Am. Rep. 341.

Again, the court ordered a new trial in Den, Denman, v. Baldwin, 3 N. J. L. 501, an action of ejectment, tried by a jury, where, upon their retiring to deliberate, one jurymen was taken seriously ill, and was not able to deliberate or assist in the deliberations of the remainder of the jurymen, as it was in effect a trial by eleven jurymen.

So, in Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492, the court arrested the judgment upon a verdict of eleven jurors against the defendant convicted in the court of sessions of an attempt to kidnap a negro, where one of the jurors was taken sick, and by consent of counsel the court allowed the trial to proceed with the remaining eleven jurors, as contrary to the Constitution and laws.

And in Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295, an indictment for forgery, where a sick juror was excused and the defendant consented to proceed with the trial by the remaining eleven jurors with the sanction of the commonwealth, but upon conviction he contended that his trial was a nullity and contrary to his constitutional right, the court upheld his contention upon the ground that he could not waive his constitutional rights.

A similar decision was also rendered by the court in Jackson v. J. A. Coates & Sons (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 24, an action in the county court on an itemized verified account submitted to a jury of six in which as one was discharged owing to sickness a verdict was, over defendant's protest, rendered by the remaining five, as the law did not sanction the action of the court in discharging the juror and forcing the issues to be decided by five men as a jury, as § 17, art. 5, of the Constitution provides that a jury in the county court shall consist of six, but there is no provision made for verdicts being rendered by less than six.

In Com. v. Gibson, 2 Va. Cas. 70, the verdict in a case of felony was declared to be a nullity where it was agreed upon, reduced into writing in the jury room, and read in court as the verdict, and the jury stated that it was their verdict, and the same was amended in open court in an immaterial point, but before the amendment was read one of the jurors was taken sick, and retired to the jury room, and the amended verdict was read without the knowledge of the remaining jurors or of the court of his retirement, and only the eleven agreed to such verdict.

The case of State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, was also one in which the court reversed the conviction of a felony by a jury of eleven, where one of the jurors was discharged owing to sickness and the trial proceeded before the remaining eleven jurors.

But the defendant's consent to be tried by a jury of less than the common-law number was held to bind him in a case where, with his consent, a sick juror was discharged, and, with the like consent, and that of the court, the trial was resumed and concluded by eleven jurors. State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa, 579, 38 Am. Rep. 148, 149. This case was followed by the court in the later case of State v. Grossheim, 79 Iowa, 76, where the defendant consented to the trial being continued by the remaining eleven jurors upon one juror being taken sick. The agreement that the verdict of the eleven jurors should "be as valid and binding as though rendered by the full jury" was entered on the record.

And under circumstances showing that after the trial had commenced, and the evidence had been given to the jury, one of the jurors was withdrawn at his request, by consent of defendant's counsel, the district attorney, and the court, on account of the dangerous sickness of his father, and the verdict was returned by the remaining eleven, which facts were all stated on the record, the court refused to set the verdict aside, as the question did not affect the jurisdiction of the court. Com. v. Dalley, 12 Cush. 80. In this case the defendants were convicted in the municipal court of an assault upon an officer and aiding a prisoner to escape.

So, where, after the plaintiff's counsel had begun his opening address to the jury, and before any evidence had been given, a juror became ill, and applied to be, and was, discharged from the panel on account of physical inability to sit for the residue of the trial, and the court ordered another juror to be drawn and sworn, and the trial proceeded, to which proceeding plaintiff assented, but the defendant objected and excepted to the order of the court, it was held not to be erroneous for a presiding judge to proceed in such manner, especially as it was the practice in the courts of the state of New York to so treat such a withdrawal of a juror when the presiding judge, in his discretion, has thought proper to do so, and that under the act of July 20, 1840 (5 Stat. at L. 394), a circuit court might properly conform to that practice, although such practice must be confined to cases like the one then before the court, in which it was apparent that the party objecting received no injury. Silsby v. Foote, 14 How. 219, 14 L. ed. 394, an action upon the case for a violation of a patent right.

The ground of the decision in the above case was that the defendant could not be supposed to be prejudiced by the failure of the twelfth juror to hear a part of the opening argument for the plaintiff, as no evidence had been given, and the defendant did not make known to the court that he desired to attempt to exercise any right of challenge of the other eleven jurors, to which he might have resorted if any cause existed, the matter in the case resting in the discretion of the court whether the withdrawal of the juror should be treated merely as an occasional vacancy, or as the breaking up of the panel, and in the exercise of such discretion the court committed no error.

A somewhat similar decision was rendered in Ray v. State, 4 Tex. App. 450, a conviction of murder in the second degree in the district court, where before any evidence was introduced by either party the defendant consented to discharge a sick juror and have another called in his place, but as it was found by a physician that unless he became worse he would be able to sit, the trial proceeded until such juror became worse and was discharged by the court, which also refused the defendant's request for 43 L. R. A.

the discharge of the whole jury, and overruled his objection to be tried by eleven men, as there was no error in overruling such objection.

Again, where the record, in the manner prescribed by § 19 of the Texas Laws of the 15th Assembly relating to jury trials, showed the consent of the parties to proceed with the trial in the county court of one accused of an aggravated assault before a jury reduced to five by reason of sickness in the family of one juror, the court affirmed the verdict, as there was no error shown. Gindrat v. State, 3 Tex. App. 573.

And in Tram Lumber Co. v. Hancock, 70 Tex. 312, no error was found in the fact that the court proceeded to try the cause by eleven jurors when after the jury were impaneled one of them was excused by consent of all parties on account of serious illness in his family.

The discretion, as to the discharge of a juror by reason of sickness, vested in the court by the Texas statutes regulating grand juries, and juries in civil and criminal cases in the courts of that state, is one within the sound discretion of the court, and will not be questioned upon appeal unless an abuse of such discretion appears. Ray v. State, 4 Tex. App. 450.

The case of Babcock v. Hill, 35 Barb. 52, was also one in which one of the jurors failed to appear after an adjournment of the court owing to sickness, and in which the defendant's actions were taken as amounting to a waiver of his right.

The same result is found in cases of absent jurors.

Thus, in Steck v. State, 28 Ark. 113, the point was the right of a court to discharge a juror, and order a new panel, when by reason of the sickness of a witness with the consent of parties the jury were permitted to disperse, and when again called together it was found that all did not appear, the court upholding the constitutionality of such proceedings and the power of the court to impanel a new jury. Although in this case the question as to the validity of a verdict as found by less than the full number of jurors was not strictly passed upon by the court, yet the case is here cited as upholding the right of a court, in cases where the whole number of the jury is not present, to dispense with them and impanel a new jury. It would therefore seem to hold that the principle that a verdict by less than the number of jurors impaneled to try the cause would not be upheld.

So, in State v. Hall, 9 N. J. L. 819, a new trial was ordered where after a jury had retired to consider their verdict, upon which they were unable to agree, and were sent to their room to further deliberate thereon, one of them left the room without permission, and returned home, eleven only remaining.

In People v. Deegan, 88 Cal. 608, the defendant, convicted of larceny, sought a new trial upon the ground of intoxication of a juror, and the opinion of the court intimated that if the juror was in an intoxicated condition at the trial, the objection subsequently raised was waived because not made before the retirement of the jury to consider their verdict. From this opinion, however, De Haven, J., dissented, and stated that whatever might be the rule in civil cases in which only the parties thereto were interested in the verdict, the principle of waiver of the right to object to misconduct which would disqualify a juror for the performance of his duties as such had no application to a criminal trial for felony, as the Constitution guaranteed to the defendant the right to a trial by twelve competent jurors, and his express consent to be tried by a less number would not bind him, and that there must be this number of competent jurors throughout the trial.

In Dayton v. Church, 7 Abb. N. C. 367, the court reversed the judgment as that of eleven jurors where one of the jury in an action upon a contract failed to appear, and was personated by another who answered to his name and served, of which fact the parties had no knowledge.

Somewhat similar in their nature are the English cases of King v. Tremaine, 7 Dowl. & R. 684, and Norman v. Beaumont, Willies' Rep. 484, in both of which the verdict was set aside upon the ground that one of the jurors personated another and thereby caused a mistrial. It does not expressly appear, however, whether the question of number was raised.

In another case, however, the court refused to set aside a verdict rendered by a jury where one personated his father. Hill v. Yates, 12 East, 229.

So, in Pennell v. Percival, 13 Pa. 200, it is said that where a juror, after being sworn, fails to appear, the course the court ought to pursue is obvious, either to compel his appearance, or dismiss the jury and impanel another to try the cause.

Where during the examination of witnesses for the prosecution upon a trial for murder it was discovered that one of the jurors was disqualified by reason of his having expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the accused, the court discharged the jury after ascertaining the facts of such disqualification, and the proceedings of the court below in so discharging the jury were upheld, as the court's announcement of such disqualification reduced the number to eleven, which number could render no verdict without the consent of both the defendant and the prosecution. State v. Allen, 46 Conn. 531, 548.

And in Younger v. State, 2 W. Va. 579, 98 Am. Dec. 791, upon an indictment for felony the court set aside the verdict as not rendered by a full jury of twelve, although the record showed that the jury were properly sworn, as the fact appeared that the one signing the verdict was not one of the jurors named as having been sworn, and it was not averred that he had been sworn.

Again, in McCampbell v. State, 9 Tex. App. 124, 35 Am. Rep. 726, wherein the defendant was convicted of theft, the court reversed the judgment, and remanded the cause upon the ground that five of the jurors who tried the case could not speak the English language, and were accepted by the court over his objections and challenges.

In Foreman v. Hunter, 59 Iowa, 550, wherein the defendant had been committed by a justice of the peace and convicted upon a judgment on an information for violating the liquor laws and tried before a jury, two of whom were aliens, the court refused a writ of habeas corpus, although it was conceded that it was the duty of the state to put legal jurors in the box to try a cause, yet the judgment rendered by such disqualified jurors was held only erroneous, and not void.

And in a case where a verdict was objected to as that of eleven jurors upon the ground that a member of the jury was also a witness before the grand jury and his name was indorsed upon the indictment as such, and his relation to the case was known when he was accepted as a juror, and neither party asked any questions concerning his qualifications to sit, and at the conclusion of the examination of a witness the court, after asking if any of the jurors had any personal knowledge respecting the fact in controversy, directed such juror to be sworn as a witness, which was done against objections and his testimony was taken, the court affirmed the judgment, as there was no force in the claim that because the juror took the witness stand and gave testimony, the proceeding was a trial by eleven jurors, for the reason that the testimony was as much to the juror who was a witness as to the others, and the purpose was to have all act upon sworn evidence and evidence that was the same. State v. Cavanaugh, 98 Iowa, 688, 691.

In State v. Johnson, 11 Nev. 148, defendant was indicted for murder, and the jury were impaneled under the Nevada act of November 26, 1861, which was approved on March 2, 1875, and regulated proceedings in criminal cases in courts of justice. It was shown that nine of the jurors drawn had formed and expressed opinions as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and the court followed the principles laid down in the prior case of State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39. In this case, however, it does not appear whether objection was taken to the number of jurors or to their agreement upon the verdict.

IX. Showing of the record.

a. In criminal cases.

1. In general.

The record in felony cases must show that the verdict was rendered by a jury of twelve, and the court will look into the record, and if error appears will reverse the judgment. State v. Van Matre, 49 Mo. 268; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, 474; Rex v. St. Michael, 2 W. Bl. 719; Dixon v. Richards, 2 How. (Miss.) 771; Jackson v. State, 6 Blackf. 461; Brown v. State, 8 Blackf. 561.

The record must show that the jury was a legal one. Stell v. State, 14 Tex. App. 59.

So, if it appear that less than twelve or more than that number were sworn, and delivered the verdict, it is error. Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492; Doebler v. Com. 3 Serg. & R. 237; King v. St. Michael, 2 W. Bl. 719; Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295.

And the above rule implies that the trial—the whole trial, and not a part—must be by twelve jurors. Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295.

And when a juror withdraws from the trial the fact must be noted of record, as the record must show that the twelve jurors were sworn, and that neither less nor more than twelve delivered the verdict. Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492.

In Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116, a prosecution for perjury, the verdict of eleven jurors was set aside and a new trial ordered, as the record showed that the issue was submitted to eleven persons impaneled and sworn as a jury, which verdict could not be considered as that of a jury upon which the court was warranted in pronouncing a judgment.

So, in Hunt v. State, 61 Miss. 577, a trial of felony, the court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for a new trial, as the record entry made by the clerk affirmatively showed that the defendant was tried by a jury of good and lawful men, but named only eleven men as composing the panel.

Again, conviction for assault and battery shown by the record as by "a jury of good and lawful men" naming one "and four others" without disclosing how such a jury was impaneled, was declared unconstitutional in Stell v. State, 14 Tex. App. 59.

And where it is shown by the record that a prisoner was only tried by a jury of eleven, and the clerk of the court attempts to explain such error by parol evidence by showing that the judge omitted the name of the twelfth juror from the record, such error is not sufficient to entitle the prisoner to be discharged upon habeas corpus, but he will still be held for a new trial upon the same indictment; and in such a case parol evidence cannot be given to prove that the trial was by a jury of twelve. Scott v. State, 70 Miss. 247.

In State v. Meyers, 68 Mo. 266, wherein defendant was indicted in the circuit court, under § 35, art. 2, chap. 42, Wag. Stat., for embezzling certain United States bonds, the judgment was reversed as the record showed that only eleven jurymen were present when the verdict of the jury was received by the court, which was a fatal defect. State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470, followed.

So, in Bowles v. State, 5 Sneed, 360, upon an indictment for murder, where the conviction was manslaughter, the court reversed the judgment as the record showed the jury consisted of that number only, and the case was not one of a mere clerical error in the transcript of the record, the omission existing in the original entry.

Again, a verdict of murder in the second degree was reversed in Rich v. State, 1 Tex. App. 206, 210, wherein the record showed that a certain jury were impaneled, but eleven names only appeared, and the presumption was that the trial was not by a whole jury.

In Huebner v. State, 3 Tex. App. 458, upon a verdict of guilty of theft in proceedings in the district court, where the record showed that twelve jurors came, etc., but only named eleven, the court reversed the judgment and remanded the cause for a new trial, as, where the record sets forth the names of the jurors, and upon examination there are less than twelve, unless such record discloses that a less number than twelve were accepted by both parties, or that one or more of the jury were excused under some subdivision of the law, it is fatal to the judgment.

So, in Marks v. State, 10 Tex. App. 384, a conviction in the county court of an aggravated assault, the court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for a new trial, as the recital of the judgment showed that the defendant pleaded not guilty, and also that there was a jury who were also impaneled and sworn according to the law, but only mentioned one juror, as the record must show that when one accused of crime is tried by a jury the jury is a legal one.

And in Jester v. State, 26 Tex. App. 369, a conviction of burglary, where the record showed that the defendant was tried by a jury of six, the conviction was set aside, as the trial was not in accordance with law as declared by art. 5, § 13, of the Constitution, and art. 595 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of that state.

Again, the record of a trial by a jury of six under the Pennsylvania act of May 1, 1861, must show how the jurors were impaneled, that they were selected in the manner required by the statute, and that they were citizens having the qualifications of electors. Laughney v. Com. 4 Lanc. L. Rev. 298, 3 Brightly's Digest, pt. 1, p. 4210.

The justice's record of a trial in a criminal proceeding before him and six jurors on a charge of assault should show each step taken on the trial, and pursue strictly the act of assembly. Agnew v. Com. 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 75, 3 Brightly's Digest, pt. 1, p. 4211.

Yet the record of a conviction before a justice of the peace and six jurors need not show affirmatively that the jurors were in no wise of kin to the parties, nor in any manner interested. Griffen v. Com. 1 Wilcox (Pa.) 261, 3 Brightly's Digest, pt. 1, p. 4210.

The case of Com. v. Morey, 10 Phila. 460, involved the question of the mode of procedure 43 L. R. A.

in cases before justices of the peace with a jury of six men, and as to what the record in such cases must show, but it did not pass further upon the constitutionality of the statute.

Yet the conviction of one accused of assault and battery by a jury of six under the Pennsylvania statute, May 1, 1861, which changed the mode of criminal procedure in certain counties and gave jurisdiction to a justice of the peace and a jury of six, was upheld, although the record showed that he demanded a jury of twelve. Lavery v. Com. 101 Pa. 560.

So, in State v. Ball, 27 Mo. 324, in which the defendant was convicted of murder, the fact that the entry showed and stated that the jury were "twelve good and lawful men," and the names were given, the name of one being inserted twice, was looked upon as a clerical error which could do no harm, upon the ground that it showed a trial by thirteen jurors.

In Townsend v. State, 182 Ind. 315, a case of conviction of assault and battery with intent to commit a felony, and of the crime of malicious mayhem, a new trial was sought upon the ground that during the progress of the cause two of the twelve jurors were discharged by the court by reason of illness, and the verdict was rendered by the remaining ten. The clerk's entry signed by the presiding judge showed that twelve jurors were impaneled, and no reference was made in the motion for a new trial to any affidavit in support of the charge. The bill of exceptions showed that the defendant filed his motion and reasons for a new trial, and on the pages of the record there was what purported to be an affidavit in support of the reasons for a new trial copied by the court into the record, and the affidavit appeared in the record in no other manner. The court held that the affidavit, not being embraced in the bill of exceptions, could not be considered, and that the court had no means of knowing whether it was ever presented to the court in support of the motion for a new trial, or that the court ever saw it, and that in order to authorize that court to consider it, it should be embodied in a proper bill of exceptions and signed by the judge. The judgment was therefore affirmed and the motion dismissed.

2. Consent.

So, if the record does not show that the defendant, in a criminal prosecution, consented to a jury of six, the court will reverse the judgment and remand the case for a new trial, as, in criminal cases, under the Constitution of Missouri the defendant has a right to twelve jurors, and so in civil cases either party has a right to a jury of twelve. State v. Van Matre, 49 Mo. 268.

The above case was a prosecution for assault and battery before a justice of the peace, appealed to the common pleas where the defendant was tried by a jury of six without his consent being shown on the record, and the court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for a new trial, as in criminal cases the court will look into the record, and if an error appears will reverse the judgment, and also upon the ground that under the Constitution of the state the defendant in a criminal case had a right to the panel of twelve jurors, so in civil cases either party had the right in common-law courts to demand a jury of twelve, and such was the settled law of the state.

Where upon a trial for murder the record did not show that the offer of the defendant to continue the trial with eleven jurors was accepted by the state, the proceedings in the court below in discharging the jury were upheld upon the ground that such offer must be consented to by the state, otherwise eleven jurors would not render a valid verdict. State v. Allen, 46 Conn. 531, 548.

And where the record did not show that the parties in a trial for theft agreed to accept the verdict of a jury of less than twelve jurors, or that one or more of the jurors were excused under some rule of law, the court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for a new trial. Huebner v. State, 3 Tex. App. 458. In this case the record showed that twelve jurors came, etc., but named only eleven.

But where, upon a trial in the county court of one accused of an aggravated assault, it was shown that the parties agreed to continue the trial before a jury of five instead of six, owing to sickness in the family of one juror, the court affirmed the judgment as the record showed no error. Glndrat v. State, 3 Tex. App. 573.

And in Com. v. Dalley, 12 Cush. 80, the verdict was upheld, as the record of the municipal court showed the consent of all parties, and of the court, to a verdict by eleven jurors.

Again, in State v. Sackett, 39 Minn. 69, the defendants waived a jury of twelve upon a charge of assault and battery in the municipal court, and agreed to try the case before a jury of eleven. The court affirmed the conviction, and upheld the constitutionality of the trial, although the record did not show why a jury of eleven was agreed upon, as it did not appear that there was any omission or neglect on the part of the state to furnish an impartial jury of twelve if the defendants had chosen to avail themselves of it, and as the agreement on their part was wholly voluntary.

b. In civil cases.

And with reference to the showing of the record in civil actions it has been held that it must show a legal jury of twelve men. Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22; Dixon v. Richards, 2 How. (Miss.) 771.

With respect to such actions it has been said that in all trials in courts of record it is the constitutional right of a party to demand a jury of twelve men, and if no exceptions are taken to the action of the court in proceeding to trial with a less number the party may still take advantage of the error by a motion in arrest of judgment and a defect will not be considered as waived or consent presumed unless entered of record. Scott v. Russell, 39 Mo. 407, 409; Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600.

And it has been held that the term "jury" is well understood to be twelve men, and when the record shows that a jury of good and lawful men came to try the issue joined, it is as well understood as if it gave the names of the jurors, at least in civil cases. Foot v. Lawrence, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 483.

In the above case, an action upon a covenant, it was assigned as error that the record only showed that a jury was duly sworn and did not afford evidence that there were more than eleven jurors to try the issue between the parties, but the court affirmed the verdict as the record showed a trial by "a jury of good and lawful men," and it was therefore to be presumed that twelve men constituted the jury.

In Larillan v. Lane, 8 Ark. 372, 375, the record stated that twelve good and lawful men returned the verdict, but upon inspection it appeared that there were but eleven names recorded. The court affirmed the judgment, as the legal presumption was that the statement on the record that there were twelve men upon the jury was true, and that the clerk omitted to place their names upon it, and in such a case the statute was explicit that no such mistake should cause a reversal of the judgment. 43 L. R. A.

So, in Hitchcock v. Caruthers, 82 Cal. 523, 526, a new trial was sought in an action for slander tried with only eleven jurors, and the court stated that it would not presume the extraordinary spectacle of a court compelling a party to go to trial against his consent with less than twelve jurors, upon a record which not only failed to show any objection or exception on the point, but which stated that "a jury of eleven persons was regularly impaneled and sworn to try the said action."

Where the record showed that there were twelve, and gave a number of names as composing the twelve, but the clerk in making up the record might by accident have omitted one, or might not have done so, the court held that such a presumption could not be allowed to prevail against the positive statement of the record, and it was therefore to be understood there were twelve jurors. Durham v. Hudson, 4 Ind. 501.

So, in Foster v. Van Norman, 1 Tex. 636, an action in the district court on a promissory note, the court affirmed the judgment although it was alleged that the record showed the names of but eleven jurors, and it stated that the parties appeared by their attorneys and thereupon came a jury of twelve good and lawful men, upon the ground that after verdict under such circumstances it was a fair inference that there were in truth twelve jurors on the jury, but that the clerk in entering the names omitted one, and as the parties did not object to the jury and received it as a good and lawful one, after verdict and judgment, without any objection at the time.

And in Marlin v. Stockbridge, 14 Tex. 165, an action of trespass to try title, the court overruled the defendant's objection that the names of but eleven jurors were recited in the entry of the verdict, holding that it was entitled to no weight as it was a mere clerical omission, and even if it were not such an omission the parties might waive the right to a trial by a jury of twelve. In this case the court further stated that in civil cases, especially after a trial when the objection was first made in the court upon appeal, the parties ought to be held to have waived a full jury.

Where the record showed a consent to a verdict of eleven jurors in a civil action the court refused to reverse the judgment and to order a new trial. Roach v. Blakey, 89 Va. 767.

But in Oldham v. Hill, 5 J. J. Marsh. 300, as it was shown on writ of inquiry that only nine jurors were sworn, and there was no waiver on the record, express or implied, of the objection to the number, the court reversed the judgment.

So, where the record only showed that the case was tried before a jury of eleven the court reversed the judgment on certiorari. Briant v. Russel, 2 N. J. L. 135.

And where the record showed that, upon the jury being polled, eleven answered and found a verdict for the defendant, that one was in favor of the plaintiff, which matter was entered of record, the court held that the proceedings as fully set out in the record showed that the judgment was entered on the verdict of eleven jurors, and it was therefore reversed. Scott v. Scott, 110 Pa. 387, 390.

Again, in Wolfe v. Martin, 1 How. (Miss.) 30, 31, an action of assumpsit, the court reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial as the record showed that the case was tried by thirteen jurors instead of twelve, upon the ground that there is no jury for the trial of issues known to the Constitution and laws of that state except that which consists of "twelve good and lawful men who were tried, elected, and sworn."

As to the showing of the record in cases of absent, sick, or unqualified jurors, see Gindrat v. State, 3 Tex. App. 573; Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 296; Prentice v. Chewing, 1 Rob. (La.) 71, 72; Com. v. Dalley, 12 Cush. 80; Younger v. State, 2 W. Va. 579, 98 Am. Dec. 791, supra.

X. Distinction between courts of record and not of record.

The degree of the court has also been made a question for consideration in determining the constitutionality of a verdict by a less number of jurors than those constituting a jury at common law.

If the court is one of record, it has been generally held that it has only jurisdiction over the offense triable therein by a jury of twelve men, as that number constituted the legal jury in those courts at common law, and therefore a verdict in those courts by a less number of jurors is unconstitutional. Norvell v. Deval, 50 Mo. 272, 11 Am. Rep. 413; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351, 355; Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600, 604; State, Kansas City Auditorium Co., v. Allen, 45 Mo. App. 551, 566; Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, 143; People v. Luby, 56 Mich. 551; Dawson v. Horan, 51 Barb. 450, 464, 466; Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 21, 25; People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168, 178; Foster v. Kirby, 31 Mo. 496, 498.

So, the provisions of the New York Constitution must be taken as meaning a jury of twelve in all courts of record. People, Metropolitan Bd. of Health, v. Lane, 55 Barb. 168, 178; Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, 143.

In People v. Luby, 56 Mich. 551, a conviction in the recorder's court of a criminal assault and battery by a jury of six, after a demand of a jury of twelve, was quashed, as twelve is the constitutional number of jurors in that state, even though the Constitution made an exception for courts not of record, as the state statute (Local Acts 1883, No. 337, pp. 676, 694), creating the recorder's court of Kalamazoo, expressly declared the court to be a court of record.

If, however, the court is one of inferior degree, not of record, in which the defendant was not entitled to the right by the common law as it existed at the date of the state Constitution, it has generally been held that such courts may have jurisdiction over the offense with a less number of jurors than required at common law. These latter courts have in most cases acquired the right to try the matters assigned to them before a jury of less than twelve by the express provision contained in the state Constitution, or under statute passed either before or after the adoption of such Constitution, and therefore for this reason the right to a full jury of twelve cannot be said to have existed at the time of the adoption of the state Constitution. Dawson v. Horan, 51 Barb. 450, 464, 466; Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 21, 25; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351, 355; and cases sub supra.

In courts not of record it is competent for the legislature to provide for a jury of less than twelve men, and power is given to the legislature by the Missouri Constitution to so provide. State, Kansas City Auditorium Co., v. Allen, 45 Mo. App. 551, 566.

The Constitutions of some of the states make express provision for a jury of less than twelve in courts not of record.

The Colorado Constitution declares that there may be a jury of less than twelve in criminal cases in courts not of record. 1 Millis's Anno. Stat. Colorado, § 296, p. 195.

A similar provision is to be found in the Missouri Constitution in criminal and civil cases in courts not of record.

No court recognizes the fact that in all courts 43 L. R. A.

not of record a jury may consist of less than twelve, except in cases where it requires such a jury. State, Kansas City Auditorium Co., v. Allen, 45 Mo. App. 551, 566.

So, a like clause is to be found in art. 1, § 7, of the North Dakota Constitution in civil actions in courts not of record.

And art. 1, § 21, of the Constitution of Washington provides for a like jury in courts not of record.

The New York statute of 1861, § 53, extending the jurisdiction of justices' courts and a jury of six in actions of replevin, is constitutional, although it transfers such cases from courts of record and a jury of twelve. Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. 16, McMullin, P. J., dissenting.

XI. Jury of more than twelve.

Upon the question of the validity of a jury of more than twelve, the opinions of the courts show that the number of the jurors may be rectified and their verdicts set aside upon prompt application being made, but that the right may be waived by not excepting at the proper time, in the court below.

In Carpenter v. State, 4 How. (Miss.) 163, 34 Am. Dec. 116, it is said that at common law the number of the jury for the trial of all issues involving the personal rights and liberties of the subject could never be less than twelve, though there are some precedents that show that a verdict by a greater number would not on that account be void.

And in 2 Hale, P. C. p. 296, it is stated that if thirteen are by mistake sworn the swearing of the last of the thirteen is void, and the other twelve should serve.

From the case of Bullard v. State, 38 Tex. 504, 19 Am. Rep. 30, wherein the defendant was convicted of horse stealing by a jury of thirteen, it would seem that if more than the legal number of jurors are permitted to deliberate on the verdict it should be set aside and a new trial granted, when the mistake that there are more than the requisite number of jurors sworn is discovered; that the practice in the English courts has been to allow the last juror sworn to be discharged from the panel, and the case to proceed where the mistake is discovered before the jury retire to consider the verdict, but in Texas the courts have held that where the fact is discovered before the verdict is rendered the cause should be withdrawn from the jury, and a lawful jury impaneled and sworn to try it, or if the last juror sworn can be pointed out he can be dismissed from the panel, and the trial proceed by the legally constituted jury.

By the Constitution and laws of the state of Mississippi there is no jury known upon the trial of issues in civil cases in that state other than a jury of twelve good and lawful men, tried, elected, and sworn, and therefore a verdict in assumpsit by thirteen jurors will be reversed and a new trial ordered. Wolfe v. Martin, 1 How. (Miss.) 30, 31.

If a party has more than twelve jurors, and alleges that the verdict is liable to be influenced by at least one more person than the law allows to be in the jury room acting upon the case, such an exception to the verdict if taken in the inferior court will vitiate the verdict, but where such exception is taken for the first time in the court above it must be taken as a waiver. Ross v. Neal, 7 T. B. Mon. 407, 408; Berry v. Kenny, 5 B. Mon. 120, 122.

Where, in a prosecution for an assault with intent to murder, thirteen jurors were sworn and placed in the jury box, and after evidence had been given by the state, the defendant declined to proceed upon discovering the error, and the court ordered the thirteenth juror to retire, and the case was submitted to the remaining twelve, the judgment was affirmed, as the thirteenth juror, the one dismissed by the court, was one whom the defendant had stricken from the list, and the remaining jurors were accepted by him. Davis v. State, 9 Tex. App. 634.

So, where, during the examination of the first witness, it was found there were thirteen in the box, and twelve of the same jury were afterwards resworn under the direction of the judge, and the case recommended over the objection of the defendant's counsel, but it did not appear that the jury who tried the cause were not the twelve who first answered to their names, the court refused a venire de novo. Multhead v. Evans, 6 Exch. 447, 2 Lowndes, M. & P. 294, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 211, 15 Jur. 385.

And in Tillman v. Allies, 5 Smedes & M. 378, 43 Am. Dec. 520, in an action upon a note, a jury of thirteen was held not ground of error, the court stating that although a verdict of a less number than twelve in issues of that kind would be void, yet a verdict of a greater number than twelve was not so on that account.

But in McCormick v. Brookfield, 4 N. J. L. 69, 72, it is said that if there were fourteen men to be sworn on a jury, and to render a unanimous verdict, no hesitation would be felt in setting it aside for the reason that twelve only are to be sworn on a jury, and because the two who had been improperly sworn might have influenced the rest and procured a verdict which they would not otherwise have rendered.

And in Whitehurst v. Davis, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 113, the court reversed the judgment rendered upon the verdict of a jury of thirteen and ordered a new trial upon the ground that any innovation amounting in the least degree to a departure from the ancient mode of trial by jury might cause a departure in other instances, and in the end endanger or pervert the institution of trial by jury from its usual course.

Again, in State v. Hudkins, 35 W. Va. 247, the court set aside a verdict of thirteen jurors as shown by the record, and ordered the new trial of one charged with throwing stones and other missiles at a railroad car, as under art. 3, § 14, of the Bill of Rights, "trials of crimes and misdemeanors, unless herein otherwise provided, shall be by a jury of twelve men, public, without unreasonable delay, and in the county where the alleged offense was committed, unless upon petition of the accused, and for good cause shown, it is removed to some other county," and for the reason that even if the benefit of this provision could be waived by the prisoner in a felony case, such waiver would have to appear clearly and affirmatively by the record.

In King v. Fitch, Cro. Car. 414, which was an action for waste in which upon a writ of inquiry thirteen jurors were returned to be sworn, it was held that on an inquest of office there might be more or less than twelve jurors.

XII. The question of demand of jury of twelve.

Generally it may be said that the right to demand a trial by a jury of twelve is based upon the same doctrine as the right to a trial by such a jury, namely the common-law rule and the provisions contained in the state Constitutions.

In cases, therefore, where the common law and state Constitutions have secured the defendant the right absolutely and without demand, as in capital offenses and cases of felony, it would seem to follow as a natural consequence that the defendant would have the same right upon demand. And the same rule would seem to prevail in some courts with respect to trials for misdemeanors.

43 L. R. A.

There are also decisions in favor of the defendant's common-law and constitutional right upon his demanding such a trial in justices' courts, although other cases hold that he is only entitled to such a jury as the court has power to impart in such cases.

And with respect to civil cases some courts uphold the right to a full jury upon demand, especially in courts of record and in cases where the right existed prior to the adoption of the state Constitution. Yet decisions are to be found wherein the right to a full jury of twelve upon demand has been denied, in actions of replevin, where jurisdiction has been given to inferior courts and a less jury, and in actions before justices of the peace under state statutes relating to summary procedure, and in other actions in superior courts.

In some cases the failure to make the demand for a full jury of twelve has been taken to be a waiver of the constitutional right in civil cases.

In criminal cases it has been held that the defendant's demand for a jury must be taken as a demand for a full jury of twelve men as guaranteed to him by the common law and the state Constitution. State v. Van Matre, 49 Mo. 268.

In People v. Carroll, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 22, a conviction of assault and battery before a justice of the peace, whether the defendant elected to be so tried or not, was reversed, as the statute was unconstitutional as depriving the defendant of his right to a full jury of twelve upon demand. People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 317.

And it has been held that a defendant on a trial for a misdemeanor is entitled to a jury of twelve if he demands the same. State v. Borowsky, 11 Nev. 119, 127; Com. v. Dailey, 12 Cush. 80; State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436, 447.

With reference to a demand of a jury of twelve in a justice's court, it has been said that in all cases where a prisoner requires it, it is the duty of a justice to impanel an even jury of twelve men for the trial of the case, even though under the state statute the justice may have jurisdiction with a jury of six, but the prisoner may waive the right to a trial by a jury of twelve and subject the case to a decision of six men, and even to the justice of the peace himself. State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436, 447.

In the above case a conviction of assault and battery in a justice's court by a jury of six was set aside, as the act giving jurisdiction to such court made such a jury compulsory even after a demand for a jury of twelve.

So, the mere fact that the defendant, in proceedings before a justice of the peace and a jury of six, has a right of appeal to the district court and to a trial by a jury of twelve, does not affect his constitutional right to a full jury upon demand in the court below. State v. Everett, 14 Minn. 439, 444,—a prosecution before a justice of the peace for obstructing a highway, under §§ 68, 69, of Minn. Gen. Stat. chap. 13.

The defendant's demand for a jury in inferior courts, such as city courts, is to be taken as a demand for that kind of a jury which the court has power to give, and in such cases, when the case is passed upon by a jury of their own selection, they cannot object to a verdict found against them by such a jury, for the reason that they cannot speculate on their chances of success. Kneeland v. State, 62 Ga. 395, 397.

And the Pennsylvania act of 1861, giving jurisdiction to a justice of the peace and a jury of six, does not authorize a trial by a jury except upon demand, and a demand for a jury under the statute will be deemed a waiver of the right to a full jury of twelve. Lavery v. Com. 101 Pa. 560; Com. v. Sweet, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 136.

So, in prosecutions under the Iowa laws of 1858, relating to Intemperance, the constitutional provision was construed as meaning that the defendant was not entitled to a jury of twelve at all times and under all circumstances, nor for all offenses in the first instance nor in all courts, but only upon demand. State v. Beneke, 9 Iowa, 203, 208.

Section 702 of the New York Code of Criminal Procedure provides that before the court hears the testimony upon the trial, the defendant may demand a trial by jury, and § 107 of the same provides that, upon a plea other than a plea of guilty, if the defendant does not demand a trial by jury, the court must proceed to try the issue.

In People v. Cook, 45 Hun, 84, 87, the defendant was convicted of petit larceny upon a judgment of the court of sessions which affirmed a judgment of the court of special sessions held by a police justice. The court held that, the defendant not having demanded a trial by jury, the proceedings without a jury were authorized by the provisions of the act.

And either party has a right to demand a jury of twelve in civil cases, under the Constitution of Missouri. State v. Van Matre, 49 Mo. 268.

So, he is entitled to a full jury in cases in the court of law commissioners upon demand. Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600, 604.

So, in Scott v. Russell, 39 Mo. 407, a civil action in the circuit court, it was held that the jury must be twelve if demanded. To the same effect, Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 37 Mo. 298; Aka v. Anderson, 34 Mo. 74; Henning v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 35 Mo. 408.

And the fact that a defendant has demanded a jury of twelve in the county court is decisive. May v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 3 Wis. 219; Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22.

If a jury of twelve men is demanded by a defendant in an action of replevin in the justice's court it must be granted, as, prior to the New York Constitution of 1846 and the Laws of 1860, the action was only triable by a full jury of twelve. Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, 143.

In Dater v. Loomis, cited in Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, 141, and unofficially reported, in speaking of the jurisdiction of justices' courts it is said, there is no doubt as to the power of the legislature to enlarge the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to any amount it may deem proper. These courts will have full power to hear, determine, and try all such cases, unless either of the parties shall demand a trial by jury. That done, it may not be in the power of a court to proceed, as it cannot impanel a jury of twelve men, but until that objection is taken the court may proceed and its judgment will be unquestionably valid.

The case of Crouse v. Walrath, 41 How. Pr. 86, which was also an action of replevin in a justices' court with a jury of six, would seem, however, to be contrary to the holding of the above case of Baxter v. Putney, 37 How. Pr. 140, inasmuch as the court affirmed the judgment and refused to set aside the verdict, although it was shown that the defendant demanded a full jury of twelve men, as the section of the Code giving justices of the peace jurisdiction was constitutional, and within the power of the legislature to enact.

But in Miller v. Lampeon, 66 Conn. 432, 438, the court upheld the constitutionality of a statute giving jurisdiction to a justice of the peace and a jury of six in summary proceedings between landlord and tenant, even though the defendant demanded a full jury of twelve men and claimed them as his constitutional right.

And a state statute giving jurisdiction to the superior courts and a jury of six unless twelve is demanded, and the statutory provisions relating thereto are complied with, was upheld in Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 383.

So, in Flint River S. B. Co. v. Foster, 5 Ga. 194, 208, 48 Am. Dec. 248, it was held that if a defendant has a right to demand a full jury, and does not do so, the fault is his own, and he cannot afterwards be heard to complain.

The failure to demand a full jury of twelve is a voluntary waiver of the constitutional right to a jury of twelve in civil cases, as pointed out by the legislature, under the Michigan Constitution, although it was the intention of the Constitution to preserve to parties the right to have a jury in all cases where the right existed. Tabor v. Cook, 15 Mich. 322, 325; Van Sickle v. Kellogg, 19 Mich. 49, 52; Paul v. Detroit, 32 Mich. 108, 114; Swart v. Kimball, 48 Mich. 443, 448.

So, it has been held that under the New York act to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, of April 10, 1818, where the demand exceeds $25, either party has the right to demand that the jury shall consist of twelve, but he must make his demand for that purpose before the venire issues, in order that twenty may be summoned; if he waits until a venire is returned with twelve, six of whom are sworn, he is too late, and must conclude. Strong v. Beardslee, 18 Johns. 130.

Under the Constitution of Kansas the parties may agree to a jury of less than six in civil actions, which is the requisite number upon a demand for a jury. 2 Kan. Rev. Stat. 1897, chap. 103, § 119, p. 485.

And under art. 6, § 27, of the Michigan Constitution a jury is deemed waived in civil cases unless demanded.

So, the Constitution of Utah contains a similar provision.

The South Carolina Constitution of 1868, and prior laws, made provision for the trial of small misdemeanors, and petty offenses before a justice of the peace and a jury of six, and under them a defendant is not entitled to a full jury of twelve, even upon demand. State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 373.

And under the South Carolina act giving jurisdiction in a summary manner to justices of the peace over certain actions, and providing for the trial thereof by a justice and a jury of six, or by the justice himself in case a jury is not demanded, the justice has a right to try the defendant in the absence of such demand. Ibid.

In actions before justices of the peace, under Rev. Stat. Ark. 1894, § 4349, the justice must impanel a jury upon demand, and it must consist of six jurors, unless a less number be agreed to.

And in civil actions under the Nebraska statute of 1897, § 6495, the jury must be twelve if a jury be demanded.

Section 8 of the Colorado Statutes of 1874, February 18, makes provision for a full jury of twelve in the probate court upon a trial of all issues of fact before the calling of the cause and before a venire issues, upon payment of the fees herein stated. See No. 5 Min. Co. v. Bruce, 4 Colo. 293, 296, supra. Less than twelve in civil actions is valid.

XIII. Agreement of the jury.

a. Unanimity.

The question of the constitutionality of a verdict by less than twelve jurors will be found in note to Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Adams (Fla.) 24 L. R. A. 272.

In considering the validity of the verdict of a jury the question often arises, whether such verdict must be the unanimous conclusion of the whole jury, or whether the verdict of three fourths or of a majority of the jurors is valid and constitutional.

Blackstone and other writers define a verdict to be the unanimous decision of a jury; and further, a trial by a jury is a sacred right. Com. v. Byers, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 295.

In 10 Bacon, Abr. title Verdict, p. 306, it is said, the "verdict is the unanimous decision made by a jury, and reported to the court, on the matters lawfully submitted to them in the course of the trial of a cause." Ford v. State, 12 Md. 514, 549.

From the earliest period down to the time of the adoption of the United States Constitution unanimity of twelve jurors alone constituted a legal verdict. Kleinschmidt v. Dunphy, 1 Mont. 118, 131.

The unanimity of twelve men in finding a verdict is an essential attribute to a verdict of a jury at common law. Carroll v. Byers (Ariz.) 36 Pac. 499; Work v. State, 2 Ohio St. 206, 59 Am. Dec. 671, 674; Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585; Com. v. Shaw, 1 Pittsb. 492, 497; Com. v. Gibson, 2 Va. Cas. 70; Barlow v. Daniels, 25 W. Va. 512, 517; American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S. 464, 41 L. ed. 1079, Overruling same case, 10 Utah, 147; Bradford v. Territory, Woods, 1 Okla. 366, supra, II. b, 1; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dunleavy, 129 Ill. 132, 144; Maduska v. Thomas, 6 Kan. 153, 159; McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 228, 254; Com. v. Saal, 10 Phila. 496; Ford v. State, 12 Md. 514, 549.

In Springfield v. Thomas, 166 U. S. 707, 41 L. ed. 1172, it was held that the 7th Amendment of the Constitution secured unanimity in finding a verdict as an essential feature of a trial by jury in common-law cases, and that the act of Congress of September 9, 1850 (9 Stat. at L. 453, chap. 51, § 6), could not impart the power to change the constitutional rule, and could not be treated as attempting to do so.

So, in State v. Barker, 107 N. C. 913, 10 L. R. A. 50, it is said that a valid jury in that state consists of twelve men, and that the concurrence of a less number is unconstitutional.

In Ford v. State, 12 Md. 514, the verdict of murder in the first degree was set aside because the jury were not unanimous, as under art. 19 of the declaration of rights there must be unanimity in the verdict.

And in Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Sanford, 23 Mich. 418, 422, it was said that if the term "jury" as used in the Michigan Constitution authorizes anything else than a unanimous verdict it means what it does not signify in any part of the Constitution or in any of the old statutes of that state. This was a case of condemnation proceedings in which the verdict was rendered by eight only of the jurors.

The same doctrine was upheld by the court in State v. Holt, 90 N. C. 749, 47 Am. Rep. 544, 548, a conviction under §§ 2482, 2483, of the Code prohibiting cruelty to animals, in which there had been an agreement between the state and the defendant to submit the question to the judge, but the court was held not only irregular, but wholly without the sanction of the law, as there was no statute authorizing such procedure, and the state Constitution forbade it by reason of its provisions that no person should be convicted of any crime, but by the unanimous verdict of a jury of good and lawful men in open court. This case, however, turned upon the question of the right to consent to a conviction by the court without a jury.

43 L. R. A.

So, in Mackey v. Ensenberger, 11 Utah, 154, 160, it is said that under the terms of the Constitution of that state, that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, the verdict of a jury must be unanimous in order to be legal.

Art. 1, § 10, of the Constitution of Virginia provides that in all capital or criminal prosecutions a man hath a right, inter alia, "to a speedy trial by an impartial jury of his vicinage without whose unanimous consent he cannot be found guilty." Mays v. Com. 82 Va. 550. In this case, however, the defendant was indicted for violating a city ordinance relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the question really turned upon the validity of the defendant's waiver of a trial by jury of matters of law and fact where no state statute provided for such a trial.

Under § 17, art. 13, of the Constitution of Texas, the verdict in the county court must be rendered as the unanimous verdict of the six jurors. Jackson v. J. A. Coates & Sons (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 24; Marks v. State, 10 Tex. App. 334.

So, in an inquest of lunacy the unanimous verdict of twelve men is sufficient, although under the provisions of N. J. Laws 1887, Pamphlet Laws, 248, only twelve jurors are summoned. Re Lindsley, 46 N. J. Eq. 358.

In Temple v. Com. 14 Rush, 769, 771, 20 Am. Rep. 442, it is said that the defendant has a right not only to see and know that the whole jury is present assenting to the verdict, but also by polling, to demand face to face of each juror whether the verdict is his verdict, and to object to it unless each member of the jury shall answer for himself that the verdict is his. Although the question involved in this case was the right of the prisoner to be present when the jury returned their verdict, yet it is here cited as showing that he must be satisfied to know that the verdict is that of the whole jury, and not merely a portion.

So, a somewhat similar decision was arrived at in Maduska v. Thomas, 6 Kan. 153, 159, wherein the court stated that a party has in all cases a right to know whether a supposed verdict is the verdict of each juror, or of only one or more of the jurors, and even if §§ 283 and 284 of the Kansas Civil Code (Gen. Stat. 1898, p. 683), do not apply where the juror decided without retiring from the jury box, still the common law gives each party the right to know the verdict of each juror.

And in Dorr v. Fenno, 12 Pick. 521, 526, a case involving the question of a quotient verdict, it is stated that, even after the verdict has been affirmed and recorded, it may be important, to the due administration of justice, or to prevent unnecessary litigation, to ascertain whether certain points have been determined, and how they have been determined. It is not uncommon to have several grounds relied upon in a trial when it cannot be ascertained from the verdict itself upon which ground it was found. In such cases the court will make the proper inquiries of the jury, that if it appear to be found upon an illegal principle, or if the jury did not all agree upon any one ground, the verdict will be set aside.

But it has never been held that they must all reach their conclusions in the same way, and by the same method of reasoning. To require unanimity, not only in their conclusions, but in the mode by which those conclusions are arrived at, would in most cases involve an impossibility, and would be practically destructive of the entire system of jury trials. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dunleavy, 129 Ill. 132, 144.

So, it is not necessary that a jury, in order to find a verdict, should concur in a single view of the transaction disclosed by the evidence, and if the conclusion may be justified upon either of two interpretations of the evidence, a verdict cannot be impeached by showing that part of the jury proceeded upon one interpretation, and the rest upon another. Murray v. New York L. Ins. Co. 96 N. Y. 614, 622, 48 Am. Rep. 658.

And, in Henderson v. State, 12 Tex. 525, 533, the court said that while the law respected individual judgment, and would not receive a verdict to which every juror has not yielded his voluntary consent, yet it could not prevent him from yielding, if he would, his own judgment, in deference to the opinions of his fellows. In this case the court passed upon and showed the old practice to compel the jury to agree, and to give a unanimous verdict.

Again, in Bushell's Case, Vaughan, 150, it is said that the legal verdict of the jury to be recorded is finding for the plaintiff or defendant, but that what they answer, if asked, to questions concerning some particular fact, is not of their verdict essentially, nor are they bound to agree in such particulars; if they all agree to find their issue for the plaintiff or defendant, they may differ in the motives therefor, as well as judges in giving judgment for the plaintiff or defendant, may differ in the reasons wherefor they give their judgment which is very ordinary.

In State v. Harden, 1 Ball. L. 3, upon an indictment for murder, by consent a sealed verdict was delivered to the judge at chambers by the foreman of the jury, and upon the poll of the jury in open court four of the jurors dissented from the verdict. The court held that the concurrence of the whole jury was necessary to a conviction in the most petty misdemeanor which falls under the cognizance of the court, and granted a new trial.

So, in Devereux v. Champion Cotton Press Co. 14 S. C. 396, a civil action for personal injuries, at the trial below "the jury had been authorized to seal up their verdict and render it next morning." Before rendering it the foreman stated that the jury had agreed on a verdict which had been sealed as directed, but subsequently in the morning some of them had notified him that they did not assent to the verdict. The court reversed the judgment, and ordered a new trial upon the ground that the only judgment that could be received was an open and public one, given and assented to in open court as the unanimous act of the jury.

And in Weeks v. Hart, 24 Hun, 181, a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff upon the verdict of a jury which was entered after the jury were polled and one of them had stated that he was not satisfied with the verdict. The court reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial, as such expression of dissent before the entry of the verdict upon the record destroyed the unanimity which was essential to make the verdict valid.

Again, in Rothbauer v. State, 22 Wis. 468, a conviction of murder in the second degree, the court reversed the judgment upon the ground, inter alia, that upon the jury returning into court one of them made a statement to the effect that he had assented to the verdict, but it had been and still was his conviction that the verdict should be for manslaughter in the first degree, and not for murder, and that he had reluctantly assented to the verdict for the sake of an agreement, and that such juror, upon being polled, replied, "I assent to it as I stated before," and in answer to the court stated, "I assent to the verdict." The assent must be the assent of a mind to the fact found by the verdict.

But in Clark v. Read, 5 N. J. L. 486, the court refused to set aside the verdict rendered in the 43 L. R. A.

usual form as that of twelve jurymen, upon the ground that the justice added: "Some time after the jury was dismissed one of the jurors sworn stated he was not agreed to the verdict previous to judgment being entered,"—for the reason that a juror who came into court and publicly assented to the verdict given in by the foreman ought not afterwards to be permitted to gainsay or deny that assent so as to invalidate the verdict.

So, in Henderson v. State, 12 Tex. 525, 533, the court refused to consider the validity of a verdict upon a conviction of an assault with intent to murder, upon the ground that when the jury were polled one of them who had assented to the verdict said that he had doubts as to the intention of the defendant to kill at the time of the commencement of the assault, although he thought he did intend to kill before the assault was ended, but neither declined to consider the question further nor to disagree to the verdict.

And in Jack v. State, 26 Tex. 1, the court refused to set aside a verdict upon the ground that the jury were not unanimous, upon a conviction of murder, whereupon, the jury being polled, one of them remarked, in answer to the question whether the verdict was his or not, that he did not think the defendant ought to be hanged or punished with death.

Again, in Suttrel v. Dry, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 94, the court refused to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial upon the ground that, after verdict, one of the jurors swore that he did not assent to the verdict, as such a practice would open the door to corruption.

So, also, in Williams v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 32 S. W. 533, the defendant was convicted of forging a check, and the verdict was as follows: "We, the jurors, find the defendant guilty." It was contended that such verdict did not purport to be the act of the entire jury for the reason that the word "jurors" was used instead of the word "jury," but the court upheld the verdict.

In some states the Constitution expressly provides for a unanimous verdict, and in others provision is made for the same in the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure; thus—

The Maine Declaration of Rights, art. 1, § 7, of the Constitution, provides by express stipulation that the verdict shall be unanimous in indictments and convictions. In this Constitution the word "indispensable" is used in connection with the question of unanimity of the jury.

And Md. Declaration of Rights, art. 21, expressly states that in criminal prosecutions the prisoner cannot be found guilty without the unanimous consent of the jury.

The Minnesota Statutes, ed. 1894, § 5597, chap. 71, p. 1522, of vol. 2, expressly provide the verdict of a petit jury in a district court must be unanimous in any civil or criminal actions or proceedings.

So, under Nevada Declaration of Rights, art. 1, § 3, the legislature has the power to provide for unanimity in a verdict in civil cases, although the article makes provision for a three-fourths verdict.

Section 9 of the Bill of Rights of North Carolina provides that no free man shall be convicted of any crime but by the unanimous verdict of a jury of good and lawful men in open court as heretofore used. State v. Moss, 47 N. C. (2 Jones, L.) 66, 68. In this case, the act of North Carolina giving jurisdiction to the lieutenant of police to try causes of assault and battery without a jury was held unconstitutional.

By the Louisiana act 116 of 1890, p. 141, § 527, Garland's Rev. Code of Pr. of La. ed. 1894, it is provided that after the reading of the verdicit he (the judge) shall ask the jury if the verdict has been agreed to, and if the foreman answers affirmatively he shall enter the verdict on the record of the court, unless one of the parties require that the jurors be called and each of them asked if he has agreed to the verdict, and if it appear that all the jurors have agreed to the verdict the same shall be recorded.

So, under § 8138 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of North Dakota the verdict of the twelve jurors must be unanimous.

And § 5159 of the Oklahoma Statute of 1898, p. 965, contains a similar provision.

Article 743, Tex. Code Crim. Proc. (Rev. Stat. 1895, title 8, chap. 6, p. 103), in defining a verdict, states that it must be concurred in by each member of the jury.

And arts. 3102, 3103, Texas Civ. Stat. (Sayles's Stat. vol. 2, title 57, chap. 11), provide that the jury in the county court and in courts of justice of the peace shall be six men whose verdict must be concurred in by all. Texas Rev. Stat. ed. 1895, title 62, chap. 11, art. 3230.

Under art. 1, § 10, Utah Const. Declaration of Rights, in criminal cases the verdict must be unanimous.

So, a like provision is contained in art. 10, chap 1, Vt. Const. Declaration of Rights.

b. Majority verdicts.

In considering the question of the agreement of the jury, and the unanimity of their verdict, some cases have turned upon the point whether or not a verdict of the majority, or three fourths or other proportion of the jury, would be valid and within the constitutional provisions.

Upon this question it has been said that it will be presumed that proper instructions are given to a jury, and that such instructions imply that a jury cannot act by a majority, and that each must act upon his own conviction. Com. v. Ford, 146 Mass. 131.

In Carroll v. Byers (Ariz.) 36 Pac. 499, which was a civil action, termed by the Arizona statute "claim and delivery," the verdict of the jury was signed by nine of them only, and entered upon the minutes of the court, and the record presented the question, whether or not in such a form of action unanimity was required of the jury in order to return a valid verdict. The court held that the defendant had been deprived of a right to the trial by a jury by the acceptance of the verdict of nine jurors, and that such verdict was contrary to the provision of the Constitution.

So, in Welder v. Hunt, 34 Tex. 44, as the jury in the district court failed to agree upon a verdict as usually required by law, the parties agreed to receive the opinions of the majority as the verdict, but the court set it aside as it could not be regarded as entitled to the sanctity ordinarily attached to verdicts of juries, and as it was not supported by the weight of evidence.

And in Ryerson v. Kitchell, 3 N. J. L. 551, the court reversed the judgment as unlawful, as the question had been left to the determination of two or more of their number who were to agree on the verdict, and if they could not so agree, they were to choose a third person as umpire, and two of the number retired and chose an umpire, and the verdict was then agreed upon and returned to the remaining jurymen, who returned the verdict in court according to the finding of such third man.

But in Northern Bank v. Buford, 1 Duv. 335, the action was on a protested bill of exchange, and it was objected in limine to the revisability of the judgment, that, the jury not being able to concur in a unanimous verdict, the parties made an agreement of record by which it was 43 L. R. A.

ordered that "the verdict of the majority of the jury" should "be made the judgment of this court." Under this, the majority returned a verdict on the judgment now sought to be reversed. The court held that considering the occasion, and presumed object of the order, it was disposed, in the absence of any other meaning of interpretation than the isolated entry itself, not to construe it as a submission to arbitrators, whose award, right or wrong, should be final, and perceived no reason for presuming any other object than to facilitate a verdict, by agreeing to dispense with a unanimous concurrence of the jury, and to let the finding by the agreed majority be in all respects as effectual as if the entire jury had concurred.

And in Bowen v. Davis, 48 Tex. 101, an action upon promissory notes, it was contended that judgment rendered upon a verdict of ten out of twelve jurors was invalid, but the court affirmed the judgment as the Texas statutes regulating grand juries and juries in civil and criminal cases, enacted August 1, 1876, only referred to cases decided after it became a law, as the 13th section of art. 5 of the Constitution of 1876, which provided that in civil and criminal cases below the degree of felony in the district court, nine jurors concurring might render a verdict, presented a rule which took effect immediately as the organic law of the state. In this case the Constitution took effect some months prior to the statute.

In some states the legislature has provided for majority verdicts, but such statutes have not always been held constitutional. In Utah there are a number of cases upholding the constitutionality of the statute of the territory making a verdict of three fourths of the jury in civil cases valid, but these cases would seem to be overruled by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S. 464, 41 L. ed. 1079, in which the court reversed the decision of the court below (10 Utah, 147) and declared the act unconstitutional. See these cases, infra.

The Declaration of Rights of California, art. 1, § 7, of the Constitution of that state, provides that "in civil actions three fourths of the jury may render a verdict."

By title 18, chap. 9, Anno. Code Iowa, ed. 1897, p. 1419, § 3099, relating to trial and judgment it is enacted that "the parties, at any time before the final submission, may agree to take the verdict of the majority, which agreement, being stated to the court, and entered upon the record, shall bind the parties, and in such case a verdict, signed by any seven or more, and duly rendered, when read and not disapproved by said majority, shall in every particular be as binding as if made by a full jury, or, when both parties require it, a struck jury may be ordered, whereupon eighteen jurors shall be called into the box, and the plaintiff first, and then the defendant, shall strike out one juror in turn until each has struck six, and the remaining six shall try the cause."

Section 248 of the Constitution of Kentucky gives power to the general assembly to provide that in any or all trials of civil actions in the circuit court three fourths or more of the jurors concurring may return a valid verdict, but such a verdict must be signed by all the jurors who agreed to it.

Under the provision of the above Constitution the state legislature passed an act (Ky. Rev. Stat. ed. 1894, chap. 74, art. 4, § 2268, p. 818), which re-enacts the Constitution.

So, Minn. Const. art. 1, § 4, of the Bill of Rights, as amended in November, 1890, gives power to the legislature to provide that the agreement of five sixths of any jury in civil actions or proceedings after not less than six hours' deliberation shall be a sufficient verdict therein.

Section 23, art. 3, of the Declaration of Rights of Montana provides that, in civil actions, and in all criminal cases not amounting to a felony, two thirds in number of the jury may render a verdict, and such verdict so rendered shall have the same force and effect as if all of such jury concurred therein.

And § 1084 of the Annotated Code of this state, vol. 3, ed. 1895, p. 263, provides that two thirds of the jury must agree upon a verdict.

So, the Nevada Declaration of Rights, art. 1, § 3 (Stat. of 1885, § 48, p. 24), makes provision in civil cases for a verdict of three fourths of the jury having the same effect as a verdict by the whole jury, provided the legislature by a law passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to such branch thereof may require a unanimous verdict notwithstanding this provision.

But in State v. Barker, 107 N. C. 913, 919, 10 L. R. A. 50, it is said that, in that state, it had never been contended that a smaller number than twelve could make a constitutional petit jury, and therefore an act making the concurrence of nine jurors sufficient was unconstitutional.

So, the provisions of the territory of Oklahoma Civil Code, authorizing nine jurors to return a verdict where the panel consists of twelve persons, is in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and is therefore void. Bradford v. Territory, Woods, 1 Okla. 366.

Article 5, § 18, of the Constitution of Texas makes provision for a verdict concurred in by nine jurors in civil cases and in trials of criminal cases below the degree of felony in the district courts, such verdict to be signed by each member concurring therein.

Again, Texas Code Crim. Proc. art. 746, title 8, chap. 6, p. 103, Rev. Stat. ed. 1895, provides that in the county court in all criminal actions the jury of six must render a unanimous verdict.

Article 745, Texas Code Crim. Proc. (Tex. Rev. Stat. ed. 1895, title 8, chap. 6, p. 103), provides in cases of misdemeanor in the district court where one or more of the jurors have been discharged from serving after the cause has been submitted to them, if there be as many as nine of the jurors remaining those remaining may render and return a verdict, but in such case the verdict must be signed by each one of the jurors rendering it.

And in civil cases a three-fourths verdict may be rendered under art. 1, § 10, of the Constitution of Utah.

The question of the validity of a territorial statute providing for a verdict of three fourths of the jury in civil cases was raised in the case of Hess v. White, 9 Utah, 61, 24 L. R. A. 277. It was held that such a statute did not violate the clause of the Federal Constitution.

This case was followed by a long line of cases all of which upheld the constitutionality of the statute. American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 10 Utah, 147; Tucker v. Salt Lake City, 10 Utah, 173, 179; Fred W. Wolf Co. v. Salt Lake City Brewing Co. 10 Utah, 179; Riley v. Salt Lake Rapid Transit Co. 10 Utah, 428; Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 154.

In Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 154, there was a dissenting opinion by Justice King, in which he considered that the case of Hess v. White, 9 Utah, 61, 24 L. R. A. 277, and the more recent decisions, and the act of the legislature of 1892, were in violation of the provisions of the 7th Amendment to the Constitution, and therefore void.

43 L. R. A.

And the court passed upon a similar question in Leedom v. Earls Furniture & Carpet Co. 12 Utah, 172; Smith v. Salt Lake City R. Co. 13 Utah, 33; Pratt v. Parsons, 13 Utah, 31; Scott v. Provo City, 14 Utah, 31.

But this long line of cases in the Utah courts have been reversed, as the case of American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, supra, was appealed to the United States Supreme Court, 166 U. S. 464, 41 L. ed. 1079, and there it was held that unanimity was one of the peculiar and essential features of trial by jury at common law, and the constitutional right of trial by jury was violated by a territorial statute authorizing a verdict by the concurrence of nine or more members of the jury.

In that case, however, the supreme court stated that in order to guard against any misapprehension, it was proper for it to say that the power of a state to change the rule in respect to unanimity of jurors was not before it for consideration.

This decision would therefore seem to place the above cases on the same footing with those of the Arizona and Oklahoma courts which declared the statutes of those states containing similar provisions unconstitutional. Carroll v. Byers (Ariz.) 86 Pac. 499; Bradford v. Territory, Woods, 1 Okla. 366.

Under art. 1, § 21, of the Constitution of Washington, Declaration of Rights, in civil cases in any court of record the legislature may provide for a verdict by nine or more jurors.

Upon the constitutionality of a verdict by less than all the jurors, see note to Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Adams (Fla.) 24 L. R. A. 272.

E. W.

City of KAYSVILLE, Appt.,

v.

Ephraim P. ELLISON, Resp't.

(.....Utah.....)

*1. A municipality has no power to collect a tax upon property or business situated so that it cannot receive any protection or benefit from it, and the legislature cannot extend or maintain the limits of a city for such purpose, and which has such an effect.

2. Section 22 of article 1 of the state Constitution is a limitation on legislative authority, and embraces all kinds of private property, including money.

(December 8, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Davis County in favor of defendant in a proceeding against him for violation of a city ordinance requiring him to obtain a license before doing business as a merchant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. B. Critchlow, for appellant:

If deemed to be applicable to the case at bar, the doctrine of the cases of People v. Daniels, 6 Utah, 288, 5 L. R. A. 444, and Ellison v. Linford, 7 Utah, 166, ought to be re-examined and the cases disapproved.

*Headnotes by ZANE, Ch. J.

NOTE.—For municipal taxation of rural lands, see note to Briggs v. Russellville (Ky.) 34 L. R. A. 193; also Farwell v. Des Moines Brick Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 35 L. R. A. 63.

All lands within city limits are taxable by the city regardless of the question of protection or benefits.

Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78, 26 L. ed. 658; Frankfort v. Scott, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1068; Nicholasville v. Rarick, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1415; Shepard v. Kaysville City, 16 Utah, 340; Ogden City v. Crossman, 17 Utah, 66.

We have here the case of an exercise of power by a municipal corporation under a grant specific in its terms, which power is expressly conferred by laws ratified and adopted by the people of the state in adopting the Constitution.

Const. art. 24, § 3; State v. Norman, 16 Utah, 457.

The power of the city to pass the ordinance in question is given by the terms of 1 Comp. Laws 1888, § 1755, subsec. 89.

It is competent for the legislature to delegate to municipal corporations the power to make by-laws and ordinances, with appropriate sanctions, which when authorized have the force, in favor of the municipality and against persons bound thereby, of laws passed by the legislature of the state.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 308; Eureka City v. Wilson, 15 Utah, 53.

Messrs. Brown & Henderson and Edward S. Ferry, for respondent:

The large cities as organized in Utah are illegal and contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

People v. Daniels, 6 Utah, 288, 5 L. R. A. 444.

The city of Kaysville had no jurisdiction over Mr. Ellison, nor power to collect taxes from him or his property nor from any person situated as he was.

Ellison v. Linford, 7 Utah, 166.

When the territory of a county has been distributed among de facto corporations, whether in regular or irregular forms, the law upholds the corporations to the extent to which they extend and exercise their powers. They are de facto corporations so far and have the power to act within themselves, and no further.

Clement v. Everest, 29 Mich. 20.

The creation of a new corporation out of an old one, as Layton was created out of the old city of Kaysville, if it ever had any legal existence, does not impose upon the new territory any part of the common debt, even where it is a common debt.

Laramie County Comrs. v. Albany County Comrs. 92 U. S. 307, 23 L. ed. 552.

Where the subject-matter of a litigation has once been finally passed upon by a court of competent jurisdiction it has become res judicata and binding upon the parties to the action, and the same matter cannot be subsequently opened to be considered by the same parties.

2 Van Fleet, Former Adjudication, § 569; Cannon v. Nelson, 83 Iowa, 242; Dicken v. Morgan, 59 Iowa, 160; Lyman v. Faris, 53 Iowa, 498; Harmon v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 123 Ill. 122.

The board of county commissioners of Davis county adopted a resolution in March, 1889, by the terms of which a portion of 43 L. R. A.

Kaysville city was set off into a precinct to be known as Layton precinct.

By this action a corporation at least de facto has existed for these eight years, and the validity of its corporate existence cannot be questioned.

Clement v. Everest, 29 Mich. 20.

Before the city would be allowed to exercise any jurisdiction over the precinct it must proceed directly to oust the precinct of its legal existence.

State v. Winter Park, 25 Fla. 371.

Zane, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was charged with violating an ordinance of Kaysville city in doing business as a merchant without obtaining a license, tried before a justice of the peace, and fined in the sum of $50, from which he appealed to the district court, which found him not guilty, and entered a judgment dismissing the suit. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed to this court, and assigns it as error.

The limits of Kaysville city, fixed by an act of the legislature of the late territory of Utah, embraces 14,320 acres of land. The city, so far as indicated by dwellings or other buildings, or by streets, alleys, or lots, occupies but comparatively a small portion of the area, and has a population of 700. The defendant's store, where he was doing the business for which he was required to take out the license, is situated 2 miles away. Around this store, the railway station, and United States postoffice, near by, are a number of dwellings in which 400 people reside. The place is called Layton. On March 12, 1889, the board of county commissioners of Davis county, in which it is located, adopted a resolution creating Layton precinct, which elected a justice of the peace and a constable. No part of Layton is platted into blocks or lots, nor does Kaysville furnish it police protection, or expend any portion of its revenues for its benefit. The lands between Kaysville and Layton for the distance of about 2 miles are used for grazing or agricultural purposes. The money collected for licenses to merchants, which is, in effect, a tax upon their business, constitutes a portion of the revenues of Kaysville. The revenue from such taxes, whether upon the business or property of the people of Layton, is appropriated to the use and benefit of the people of Kaysville, and lessens the amount of their taxes. No part of such revenue is appropriated, as it appears from the evidence, for the benefit of the residents of Layton. This brings us to the question, Was Kaysville city authorized to require the defendant to pay the tax in dispute? In the case of People v. Daniels, 6 Utah, 288, 5 L. R. A. 444, the supreme court of the late territory held the assessment and collection of a tax upon a farm situated 2 miles from Moroni city, as indicated by buildings, streets, or other improvements, though within its limits as defined by its charter, when no part of its revenues went to benefit the farm or its occupants, was a violation of the last prohibition of article 5 of the Constitution of the United States, as follows: "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." That was a limitation upon the powers of the Federal government, and, of course, upon the territorial government, created by it, but not upon the states, and therefore not upon Utah since statehood; but § 22 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state declares that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation." This is a limitation upon the state legislature, and, if it embraces all kinds of private property, as its language imports, without regard to its nature or form, it includes money; that being a species of property. The right of property in money is as valuable and important as that of real estate, and also requires protection. The real estate of the individual may be taken from him, and transferred to the public, for its use, by condemnation under the right of eminent domain, upon making just compensation; or it may be assessed under the taxing power, seized, sold, and transferred to another, and the money received may be taken by the public, and used in paying its officers, in making public improvements, or used for other public purposes. The method differs, but the effect upon the individual's right to his property is the same. By the former process the public gets the use of the individual's real estate; by the latter it gets the use of the money into which the individual's real estate is converted. The owner cannot be deprived of his property by either method without just compensation. By one method he is compensated in money, by the other he receives his compensation in the protection the state or city affords him in such benefits. When the land is taken by the public in pursuance of the right of eminent domain, compensation can be determined by the standard of market value. While there is no standard by which the pecuniary value of a just government to the individual can be accurately estimated, we know its benefits exceed in value the taxes he pays. That value compensates the individual for them. The merchant's business, as in this case, is not appropriated to the use of the public, but the money he pays for the license is. Undoubtedly Kaysville city has the power to require any merchant doing business within the range of its protection and benefits to pay for a license, but it has no authority to require those doing business outside of such limits to do so, when the sole purpose and effect of a tax upon their property or business is the lessening of the taxes of its people. A municipality has no power to collect a tax upon property or business situated so that it cannot receive any protection or benefit from it. In such case there is no compensation for the property taken, though it may be a species of property termed money. And the legislature cannot extend or maintain the limits of a city for such purpose, and which has such an effect.

From the evidence the probability is the defendant's business would be more valuable, and the people of Layton would be better off, if there was no such city as Kaysville. It may be said that the state has the power 43 L. R. A.

to collect a tax upon all the property within its limits, but in such case the state is supposed to give protection to all its people, and to benefit all the property within its borders. The same may be said of the county. But in this case the defendant, and others situated as he is, are included in its limits for the sole purpose of benefiting others. Their money is given to others without their consent, without any compensation in municipal benefits or otherwise. In the case of People v. Daniels, 6 Utah, 288, 5 L. R. A. 444, after quoting the provision of the Federal Constitution, and stating that it applies to that government, and to the territories, but not to the states, it was said: "The government may appropriate the property of the individual, when necessary, in one of three ways: First, by taking in the mode prescribed, after paying the owner for it; second, by estimating the benefits to the owner's property from the improvements to be made, and taking the amount estimated in money; third, by taking the property in the form of money by the methods of taxation for which the benefits of protection and other advantages are furnished by the government. The same principle underlies all these methods. When the property is taken under the right of eminent domain, the public pays the owner in money; when money is exacted by means of a special assessment, the owners are compensated in special benefits to their property by public improvements made in its expenditure; and when money is exacted by a general tax the payer is compensated in the benefits received from the government in any and all of the ways that a government may benefit society." Later, in the same opinion, is found the following: "But they also say that the constitutional provision in question has reference to the taking of private property for public use under the right of eminent domain. They concede, however, that taxation and eminent domain rest on the same foundation,—the principle of compensation,—and that such compensation in case of taxation is in benefits. The constitutional provision in question was designed, doubtless, to give effect to that principle; but, if the provision simply forbids the taking of private property for public use without just compensation, under the right of eminent domain, then its authors made the constitutional rule narrower than the principle upon which they intended to base it, because the principle requires compensation in all cases, whether real estate, money, or any other kind of property is involved; whether it is taken by the methods adopted under the right of eminent domain, or under the right of taxation, or by any other means. The principle lies deeper than mere forms or methods. It would be unreasonable to say that the authors of the provision in question intended to forbid the taking under one right without just compensation, and intended to allow such appropriation under another right; that they intentionally closed one gap, but intentionally left another down by which the same wrong, in effect, could be accomplished." The above case was relied upon and followed in Ellison v. Linford, 7 Utah, 166. The defendant in the case at hand was plaintiff in that case, and the collector of this plaintiff was the defendant. The following authorities support the conclusions we have reached: Bradshaw v. Omaha, 1 Neb. 16; Morford v. Unger, 8 Iowa, 82; Cheaney v. Hooser, 9 B. Mon. 330; Covington v. Southgate, 15 B. Mon. 491; Arbegust v. Louisville, 2 Bush, 271; Sharp v. Dunavan, 17 B. Mon. 223; Langworthy v. Dubuque, 13 Iowa, 86; Fulton v. Davenport, 17 Iowa, 408; Wells v. Weston, 22 Mo. 384;

Bueli v. Ball, 20 Iowa, 282; Decds v. Sanborn, 26 Iowa, 419; Deiman v. Ft. Madison, 30 Iowa, 542. There is a conflict in the authorities which cannot be reconciled, but we are of the opinion those supporting the view we have taken rest upon better reason.

The judgment is affirmed with costs.

Bartch and Miner, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing overruled.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Wilson J. HAVER, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

(.....N. J.....)

A common carrier is liable for a malicious assault made by its employee upon a passenger.

(November 14, 1898.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court at Circuit in Hudson County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for an assault committed by defendant's employee upon plaintiff. Reversed.

Statement by Depue, J.:

The declaration in this case is in tort. It avers that the plaintiff boarded one of the trains of the defendant, the Central Railroad Company, a common carrier for the transportation of passengers and baggage between the city of Elizabeth and Bayonne, and that he did thereupon pay the said defendant his fare for passage; that while a passenger as aforesaid, and traveling in the train of the said company, he was then and there insulted and abused by one Simeon D. Apgar, a baggage master in the employ of the defendant, and with force and arms was, without cause or provocation, assaulted by the said employee of said company, whereby the plaintiff was injured, wherefore he claims damages in the sum of $10,000. The facts as they appeared in evidence were that the plaintiff in December last took passage in the defendant's cars at Elizabethport for Bayonne, Bergen Point; that he took his seat in the passenger compartment of the baggage car; that the baggage master immediately demanded his fare, which the plaintiff refused to give to him, and so the baggage master passed along and called the conductor, and the conductor came in; that, as soon as the conductor came in, he paid him his fare. Then the plaintiff testified: "As I was paying my fare the baggage master stood by the door, and the conductor went out of the door; and he passed along and said, 'You son of a bitch! I am notioned to punch the face off you;' and he grabbed hold of me and shook me, where I sat in the seat. The other passengers interfered, and he broke away from me. He was in the center. He tackled me again, and struck me with all the vengeance he had. I avoided the blow by keeping close to him, and he ran me along the aisle, and slammed me against the water cooler. Finally he let go of me, and threw me into the aisle of the car, against the other seats." On this evidence on the part of the plaintiff the court granted a nonsuit, whereupon the plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

Messrs. Roberson & Demarest for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John L. Conover for defendant in error.

Depue, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A master is liable for the trespass of his servant committed within the scope of his authority, even though in exercising his authority he use unnecessary violence; but for a trespass committed by the servant wilfully, or of his own malice, under color of discharging the duties of his employment, or where he has gone beyond the line of his duty to commit a trespass, the master will not be liable. This rule of law, where the relation of master and servant exists, uncontrolled by other circumstances, is well settled. It was so decided by this court in Brokaw v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. 32 N. J. L. 328, 90 Am. Dec. 659. The action in that case was in trespass, for ejecting the plaintiff with force and arms out of the car of the railroad company "while he was traveling in said car," and the case was before the court on demurrer. Whether the plaintiff was lawfully a passenger in the company's car, and entitled to the privileges and protection due from the carrier to its passengers, does not appear in the case. The plaintiff in this case became a passenger in the defendant's car and at the time of this occurrence had paid his fare to the conductor, and was entitled to all the rights, privileges, and protection which the law accords to passengers, and subject to the duties and liabilities which the law imposes on a carrier for the safety of its passengers. The case now before the court depends, not upon the law of liability of a master for the acts of his servants, but upon the duty imposed on the railroad company in the carriage of the plaintiff as a passenger. The duty of a carrier of passengers is to safely and securely carry persons who bear to it the relation of passengers. The carrier is under obligation to use the utmost care and diligence in providing suitable and sufficient vehicles for the conveyance of its passengers, to carry the passenger therein to the end of his route, to protect him against assault and other ill treatment by those employed by and under the carrier's control while on the way, and to exercise the utmost vigilance and care in maintaining order and guarding the passenger against violence, from whatever source arising, which might reasonably be anticipated or naturally expected to occur in view of all the circumstances, and the number and character of persons on board. Cooley, Torts, p. 644; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 541. In the application of this principle, the grade of the employee by whom the injury was done, or the scope of his employment, is immaterial. The courts of England seem to apply to such a situation the ordinary rule that prevails as between master and servant. Allen v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 65; Walker v. South Eastern R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. 640; Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Broom, 6 Exch. 314. In Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. 47 N. Y. 122, 7 Am. Rep. 418, the court of appeals of New York held that the defendant was not liable for the act of the conductor in pushing a passenger from the car while it was in motion. The decision was put upon the ground that the act of the conductor was a wanton and wilful trespass, not in the performance of any duty to, or any act authorized by, the defendant, and therefore the defendant was not liable. This case was overruled in Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185. In that case the plaintiff, while a passenger on one of the defendant's street cars, was unjustifiably attacked and beaten by the driver, who also acted as conductor. It was held by the court that the rule relieving the master from liability for a malicious injury inflicted by his servant when not acting in the scope of his employment did not apply as between a common carrier of passengers and a passenger, and the principle was affirmed that a common carrier undertakes to protect the passenger against any injury arising from the negligence or wilful misconduct of its servants while engaged in performing a duty which the carrier owes to the passenger. Isaacs v. Third Ave. R. Co. was set aside, in the decision of this case, on the ground that that case had been determined by the court upon the assumption that the rule of the master's liability for the assault of a servant committed upon a person to whom the master owed no duty was applicable to that case. Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. was affirmed and followed in Ducinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 120 43 L. R. A.

NOTE.—As to the liability of a carrier for assault upon a passenger by its servant, see note to Davis v. Houghteln (Neb.) 14 L. R. A. 737; also St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Jones (Ark.) 39 L. R. A. 784; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barger 43 L. R. A.

(Md.) 26 L. R. A. 220; Goodloe v. Memphis & C. R. Co. (Ala.) 29 L. R. A. 729; and Krants v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. (Utah) 30 L. R. A. 297.

N. Y. 117, 8 L. R. A. 224, in which it was held that, whatever be the motive that incites the servant to commit an unlawful and improper act towards the passenger during the existence of the relation of carrier and passenger, the carrier is liable for the act, and its natural and legitimate consequences. This liability was deduced from the obligation of the carrier to protect the passenger against any injury from negligence or wilful misconduct of its servants while it performed its contract to carry. In some of the cases, in defining the liability of a carrier of passengers for the wilful acts of his servants, the expression "within the scope of employment," or "in the line of duty," is used. Neither of these expressions, in the usual sense, is applicable to this subject, except as descriptive of circumstances under which the liability of the carrier is unchallenged. Thus in New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 638, 30 L. ed. 1050, the court held that a common carrier undertakes absolutely to protect his passengers against the misconduct or negligence of his own servant employed in executing the contract of transportation, and acting within the general scope of his employment. In that case the action was founded upon an assault committed by a servant upon a passenger in enforcing rules and regulations of the company, and consequently the act was done while the servant was acting within the general scope of his employment. The case did not call for the consideration of the liability of the master under other circumstances; and it will be observed that Mr. Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion of the court, quotes with apparent approbation the principle adopted in Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. T. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 588-591, 43 Am. Rep. 185, that a common carrier is bound, as far as practicable, to protect his passengers, while being conveyed, from violence committed by strangers and copassengers, and undertakes absolutely to protect them against the misconduct of his own servants engaged in executing the contract. The expressions above quoted, used in the cases, seem to mean nothing more than that the carrier is not liable for the acts of the servant when he is off from the duties of his employment, and consequently not employed in executing the carrier's contract of transportation. In Pendleton v. Kinsley, 3 Cliff. 416, the suit was against the owner of a steamboat on which the plaintiff was a passenger. A dispute arose between the plaintiff and the clerk about the payment of fare. Subsequently the plaintiff was assaulted by the clerk on board the vessel, and during the same trip. The defense was that the clerk was not at the time of the assault acting in the course of his employment, and therefore the owner of the vessel was not responsible for his acts. Mr. Justice Clifford, in overruling the defense, said that "the principles of law applicable in litigations growing out of the relations of principal and agent or master and servant are not the principles which fully define the rights, duties, obligations, and liabilities of the parties to this controversy." Speaking of the defense, the learned judge said: "Adjudged cases may be referred to which support that proposition without qualification, but they do not give full scope and effect to the obligation which the carrier assumes towards his passenger, nor to the rights and duties which those relations create and imply. Passengers do not contract merely for ship room and transportation from one place to another, but they also contract for good treatment, and against personal rudeness and every wanton interference with their persons, either by the carrier or his agents employed in the management of the ship or other conveyance, and for the fulfilment of those obligations the carrier is responsible as principal; and the injured party, in case the obligation of good treatment is broken, whether by the principal or his employees, may proceed against the carrier as the party bound to make compensation for the breach of the obligation." The above extract from Pendleton v. Kinsley is quoted with approbation in Bryant v. Rich, 106 Mass. 180-189, 8 Am. Rep. 311. The liability of the carrier in such cases rests upon the principle that he has engaged to perform certain duties, and has selected his own servants for the performance of those duties, and hence an assault by an employee is a breach of the duty of the carrier to his passenger. This subject is discussed by Mr. Elliott as follows: "There is much apparent conflict among the authorities upon this subject, but we think some of it is due to the use of the term 'scope of employment,' or 'line of duty' in a different sense in different cases, or to a failure to place the decision upon the correct ground. It is not merely a question of negligence in such cases, nor is it strictly a question depending upon the scope of the servant's particular employment. It is a question of the absolute duty of a railroad company to its passengers as long as that relation subsists, and a breach of that duty on its part, whether caused by the wilful act of an employee or not. . . . Either the company or the passengers must take the risk of infirmities of temper, maliciousness, and misconduct of the employees whom the company has placed upon the train, and to whom it has committed the discharge of its duty to protect and look after the safety of its passengers. A passenger has no control over them, and the company alone has the power to select and remove them. It is therefore but just to make the company, rather than the passengers, take this risk, and to hold it responsible." 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1638. The cases on this subject in the courts of our sister states are not harmonious, but the great weight of authority is in favor of the doctrine declared by the New York cases which have been cited. The decisions are collected in an elaborate note to 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 541-548. It is quite unnecessary to reproduce them here. The doctrine that a common carrier of passengers undertakes to carry a passenger safely and securely is nowhere impugned, and to apply to assaults upon a passenger by one of its employees the doctrine that rests solely upon the relation of principal and agent is to overlook the peculiar obligation that rests upon the carrier of passengers, and the liability which results from the failure to discharge that obligation. In actions against common carriers, the plaintiff may sue in assumpsit on the contract to carry, or in case on the common-law duty. 1 Saunders, Pl. & Ev. p. 325.

Under the evidence appearing on the record, the nonsuit should not have been granted, and the judgment should be reversed.

Frederick W. SCHMALZ, Suing for the Use of Union Hat Makers' Association of Newark, Appt.,

v.

Edwin WOOLLEY et al., Respts.

(.....N. J.....)

- *1. The "Act to Provide for the Adoption of Labels, Trademarks, and Forms of Advertising by Associations or Unions of Workmen, and to Regulate the Same," passed in the year 1889, and the acts on the same subject passed in 1892 and 1895 (3 Gen. Stat. pp. 3678 et seq.), do not violate the constitutional interdict against the passage of special laws granting exclusive privileges.
2. The title of an act passed March 23, 1892, is, "A Further Supplement to an Act Entitled 'An Act to Protect Trademarks and Labels,' " Held, that the title constitutionally expressed the object of the law,—the protection of trademarks and labels,—although in fact there was no prior act entitled "An Act to Protect Trademarks and Labels."
3. According to general principles, a workman, or a number of workmen, engaged in the same branch of industry, and banded together for their mutual profit in the pursuit of their common vocation, may acquire a right of property in a trademark designed to distinguish their workmanship from that of other persons; and a trademark so owned is entitled to the same protection as other trademarks.

(November 14, 1898.)

A PPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Chancery Court sustaining a demurrer to a bill filed to enjoin defendants from wrongfully using the complainant's trade label. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. A. Beecher & Son, for appellant:

Independent of any statute, the facts shown by the bill entitle the complainant to relief on principles upon which equity ordinarily interferes in cases of this kind.

Hetterman Bros. v. Powers (Ky.) 39 L. R. A. 211.

The law may be justly invoked by organized labor to protect from piracy and intrusion the fruits of its skill and handiwork;

*Headnotes by DIXON, J.

NOTE.—For trademark or label of trade union, see note to State v. Bishop (Mo.) 29 L. R. A. 200; also Glazer v. Hubbard (Ky.) 39 L. R. A. 210; and Tracy v. Banker (Mass.) 39 L. R. A. 508.

and that brain and muscle may be the subject of trade-law rules as well as tangible property.

Strasser v. Moonelis, 23 Jones & S. 197; People v. Fisher, 50 Hun, 552; Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 266, 39 L. R. A. 408; State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167; Godillot v. Harris, 81 N. Y. 263; Carson v. Ury, 39 Fed. Rep. 777, 5 L. R. A. 614; Allen v. McCarthy, 37 Minn. 349; Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conhaim, 40 Minn. 243, 3 L. R. A. 125; Cigar Makers' Union No. 6 v. Link (Baltimore Cir. Ct. 1886); Renkert v. Bamberger (Ohio C. P. Hamilton County, 1887); Bloete v. Simon, 19 Abb. N. C. 88; Hudson v. Bell-Rock Cigar Co. (Cir. Ct. Kansas, 1887); Meyer v. Haak (Scott County Dist. Ct. Iowa, 1889); Coyle v. Haight (Ohio, Stark C. P. 1890); note to the case of State v. Bishop, 29 L. R. A. 200, 128 Mo. 373; Perkins v. Roedel (Buffalo Super. Ct. 1894); Gilbrath v. Phillipson (14th Jud. Dist. Ct. Dallas County, Tex. 1891); Strauss v. Scheinmann (Cir. Ct. Chancery Wayne County (Ohio) 1895); Stirmel v. Berriman (Cir. Ct. Cook County (Ill.) 1886); Gaddes v. Waterhouse (R. I. 1886); Sacramento Cigar Makers' Union v. Poska (1888); Bulens v. Newman, 10 Misc. 460.

An injunction will be granted to restrain the false and fraudulent use of a label irrespective of whether it is technically a trademark.

Coleman v. Flavel, 40 Fed. Rep. 854; Trask Fish Co. v. Wooster, 28 Mo. App. 408; Miller v. Scheuer, 45 U. S. App. 184, 74 Fed. Rep. 225, 20 C. C. A. 161; Listman Mill Co. v. William Listman Mill Co. 88 Wis. 334; Reddaway v. Bentham Hemp-Spinning Co. [1892] 2 Q. B. 639; Cleveland Stone Co. v. Wallace, 52 Fed. Rep. 431; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assn. v. Piza, 24 Fed. Rep. 149; Coats v. Holbrook, 2 Sandf. Ch. 586.

It is not the corporate property of a corporation, but the common property of a voluntary association in which all its members are equally interested.

Browne. Trademarks, § 521.

A voluntary association can own property, in a certain sense, just as well as a partnership.

Mears v. Moulton, 30 Md. 142. See 2 Gen. Stat. § 325, p. 2588, § 343, p. 2592.

A man may have property in his body, life, fame, labors, and the like, and, in short, in anything that can be called his.

Millar v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2303.

Injunctions against the counterfeiting or unauthorized use of trades union labels have been granted in—

Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 67 Fed. Rep. 73; Welch v. Maine C. R. Co. 86 Me. 552, 25 L. R. A. 658; Hetterman Bros. v. Powers (Ky.) 39 L. R. A. 211; Re Humboldt Lumber Mfrs. Assn. 60 Fed. Rep. 428, Affirmed, 44 U. S. App. 434, 73 Fed. Rep. 239, 19 C. C. A. 481.

The Acts of 1889 (Pub. Laws, 107), 1892 (Pub. Laws, 187), 1895 (Pub. Laws, 270), and 1897 (Pub. Laws, 215, 3 Gen. Stat. 3678)—are constitutional, and of themselves entitle the complainants to the relief 43 L. R. A.

sought, and are only declaratory of the common law.

The Constitution leaves it to the judgment of the legislature as to what may be provided for by general laws.

Moore v. State, 43 N. J. L. 203, 39 Am. Rep. 558; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 105, *87.

A class is complete, not only when it includes all the objects to which a common rule is to be applied, but when, as was said by Mr. Justice Knapp in State, Randolph, v. Wood, 49 N. J. L. 88, it embraces all, and excludes none whose condition and wants render such legislation necessary and appropriate to them. The court takes judicial notice of general acts and their effects.

Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Consumers' Water Co. 44 N. J. Eq. 427; Calvo v. Westcott, 55 N. J. L. 78; Field v. Silo, 44 N. J. L. 355.

It seems impossible to suppose that any person who has a right to adopt a label as an individual, whether a working man, a manufacturer, an association, or a corporation, would wish to make any use of the acts in question when there would be no occasion for it, inasmuch as they are already sufficiently protected.

State, Rutgers, v. New Brunswick, 42 N. J. L. 51; State v. Bishop, 29 L. R. A. 200, and note, 128 Mo. 373; Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 486, 23 L. R. A. 821; Perkins v. Heert, 5 App. Div. 335; Bloete v. Simon, 19 Abb. N. C. 88; State, Harris, v. Herrmann, 75 Mo. 340.

The acts in question are not unconstitutional on the ground that the original act of 1889 is defective in its title, or that those of 1892 and 1895 are defective in the same respect,—especially in view of the amendment of their titles by the act of 1897.

Atlantic City Waterworks Co. v. Consumers' Water Co. 44 N. J. Eq. 427; Bradley & C. Co. v. Loving, 54 N. J. L. 227; Stockton v. Central R. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 17 L. R. A. 97; State, Walter, v. Union, 33 N. J. L. 350; Easton & A. R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 52 N. J. L. 267; Mortland v. State, Christian, 52 N. J. L. 521; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Haugh, 142 Ind. 254; State v. Woolard, 119 N. C. 779; Kimberly v. Morris, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 592.

Messrs. Guild, Lum, & Sommer, for respondents:

The averments of the bill would not, independent of the statutes, entitle the complainant to relief.

Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391; Cigar-Makers' Protective Union v. Conhaim, 40 Minn. 243, 3 L. R. A. 125; Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 8 L. R. A. 640; McVey v. Brendel, 144 Pa. 235, 13 L. R. A. 377.

Chapter 73 of the Laws of 1889, p. 107, contravenes the provision of our state Constitution which prescribes that the legislature shall not pass private, local, or special laws granting to any corporation, association, or individual any exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise whatever.

State v. Post, 55 N. J. L. 264; State, Alexander, v. Elizabeth, 56 N. J. L. 71, 23 L.

R. A. 525; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 127; State, Rutgers, v. New Brunswick, 42 N. J. L. 51; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163; 29 L. R. A. 257; Cox v. Truitt, 57 N. J. L. 635.

The acts of 1892 and 1895 are unconstitutional because the object is not expressed in the title.

Jersey City v. Elmendorf, 47 N. J. L. 283; Falkner v. Dorland, 54 N. J. L. 409.

The acts of 1892 and 1895, considered as supplemental to the act of 1889, are inoperative in so far as they attempt to extend the object of that act beyond the object stated in its title.

State, Dobbins, v. Northampton Twp. Committee, 50 N. J. L. 499; Falkner v. Dorland, 54 N. J. L. 409; Coutieri v. New Brunswick, 44 N. J. L. 58.

The action should have been instituted in the name of the United Hatters of North America.

Dixon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case was filed in February, 1897, by the president of the Union Hat Makers' Association of Newark, for the use and benefit of all the members thereof, to enjoin the defendants from using a counterfeit trademark and label made in imitation of a trademark and label which had been adopted and filed by the said association in accordance with the provisions of the several acts of the legislature passed in the years 1889, 1892, and 1895 (3 Gen. Stat. pp. 3678 et seq.). The defendants demurred to the bill, and, the demurrer having been sustained, the complainant appeals.

The act of 1889 is entitled "An Act to Provide for the Adoption of Labels, Trademarks, and Forms of Advertising by Associations or Unions of Workingmen, and to Regulate the Same." It provides (§ 1) that it shall be lawful for associations and unions of workingmen to adopt, for their protection, labels, trademarks, and forms of advertisement, announcing that goods manufactured by members of such associations or unions are so manufactured; (§ 4) that every such association or union adopting a label, trademark, or form of advertisement, as aforesaid, shall file the same in the office of the secretary of state, by leaving two copies, counterparts, or facsimiles thereof, with said secretary; and (§ 5) that every such association or union adopting, etc., may proceed by suit in the courts of this state to enjoin the manufacture, use, display, or sale of any counterfeit of their label, trademark, or form of advertisement; and that all courts having jurisdiction thereof shall grant such an injunction. The demurrants do not deny that the bill presents a case in conformity with this act, except in this respect: That under the act the bill should be filed by the association, or all its members, and not by one member alone. In our opinion, the act empowers the association to proceed by suit, making it for this purpose a quasi corporation, and therefore does not of itself entitle a single member to maintain the action. But this objection is obviated by § 4 of the act of 1892, if valid, which provides for the bringing of such proceedings in the name of any member duly authorized by the association or union for that purpose. We are therefore brought to the main question raised as to these statutes.

The demurrants contend that the act of 1889 violates that provision of the Constitution (art. 4, § 7, ¶ 11) which forbids the passage of private, local, or special laws granting to any association, corporation, or individual any exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise whatever. Their position is that, as the privileges of this act are confined to associations or unions of workingmen for the protection of goods manufactured by their members, and are not offered to other workingmen who may not choose to form associations or unions, or to persons generally, the privileges are therefore exclusive, and the act is special. We do not agree to this conclusion. All the legislation of the state respecting societies, associations, and corporations is based upon the idea that privileges which are denied to single individuals may be conferred upon groups of persons; and nothing in the Constitution was intended to subvert this doctrine. If the legislature offers to any class of persons privileges peculiarly appropriate to their class, on condition that several of them shall unite for the purpose of accepting and exercising them, the Constitution will not thereby be infringed. The privileges of this act are offered to all workingmen engaged in the manufacture of goods, who thus unite, and they relate to goods of every description manufactured by them. Certainly workingmen engaged in the manufacture of goods constitute a distinct class of persons, and there is a manifest appropriateness in enabling any of them who comply with the act to provide and protect a mark distinguishing the products of their labor and skill. Nor is it at all necessary that a similar privilege should be given to those who are not workingmen, but are only employers of workingmen. Such persons stand in a different class with respect to the exercise of those faculties which the legislature intended to foster. We think this act is constitutional.

The act of 1892, with its amendment of 1895, seems not to be exposed to the objection just considered; for their provisions extend to any persons and any association or union of workingmen adopting a label or trademark to distinguish any merchandise or product of labor made, packed, or put on sale by such persons, association, or union. But these acts are assailed on the ground that their titles do not comply with that provision of the Constitution (art. 4, § 7, ¶ 4) which declares that "to avoid improper influences which may result from intermingling in one and the same act such things as have no proper relation to each other, every law shall embrace but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title." The title of the act of 1892 is, "A Further Supplement to an Act Entitled 'An Act to Protect Trademarks and Labels.'" That of the act of 1895 is, "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled 'A Further Supplement,'" etc. (quoting the title of the act of 1892). The objection urged is that there existed no act entitled "An Act to Protect Trademarks and Labels," and therefore entitling these acts as supplements or amendments of such an act was misleading. But, conceding this, the inquiry is not concluded. The question still remains, Was the title misleading as to the object of the act? Did not the title, in spite of its false assumption of the existence of a prior statute, fairly express the object of the proposed legislation? On reading the act it will be perceived that its object is to protect trademarks and labels, and that for this purpose it is a complete and independent enactment. To express that object in the title, no particular form of words is required, nor is it necessary that the object should be expressed with precision. It is enough if the title be so phrased as to inform the legislators and the public of the subject-matter of the act. As was said by Mr. Justice Depue in Grover v. Ocean Groves Camp-Meeting Assn. 45 N. J. L. 399, 404. "The standard uniformly adopted for determining whether the legislature has complied with the constitutional requirement is whether the title of the act is such that by it members of the legislature are informed of the subject to which the act relates, and the public notified of the kind of legislation that is being considered. State, Ex rel. v. Governor, 47 N. J. L. 368, on error, 48 N. J. L. 612. Tested by this standard, these titles seem to be sufficient. They clearly indicate that the subject of legislation is trademarks and labels, and that the purpose is to protect them. True, they state that this is to be done in the form of supplements, but that does not affect the object of the statutes. In our legislation a formal supplement to an act is not necessarily a statute which supplies defects in its predecessor. It may be one that abrogates the preceding enactments, and substitutes radically different provisions. Hence the mere calling of an act a supplement to another designated act expresses nothing of its object. Thus, if the title were, "A Supplement to Assembly Bill No. 10. Which Became a Law on July 4, 1876," the constitutional requirement would not be satisfied, because the title would not at all express the object, while the title, "An Act to Define More Accurately the Crime of Murder of the First Degree," would fully express the object, although the act, in form and substance, were only a supplement to § 68 of the crimes act. Entitling an act a supplement to a former act complies with the Constitution only when so much of the original title is recited as expresses the object of the proposed law; and, if that object be expressed, the Constitution does not defeat the statute merely because it is erroneously styled a supplement. We therefore conclude that these acts are valid, so far as they are necessary to sustain the complainant's bill.

We also think that upon general principles the substance of the bill is sufficient. It alleges: That a company of journeymen hatters, calling themselves "The Union Hat Makers' Association of Newark, New Jersey," have, in common with similar associations formed elsewhere, adopted a certain label or trademark, of which the following is a copy:

That for ten years last past they have used said label or mark to designate and distinguish the hats made by members of the association by affixing it upon each of those hats, and that for about three years last past the defendants have used a fraudulent imitation of that mark upon the hats made and sold by them, thereby deceiving the public, violating the rights of the members of the association, and depriving them of large profits which they would otherwise have gained. These allegations seem to present a case of inequitable infringement of the association's right of property in its trademark or label. In McAndrew v. Bassett, 4 De G. J. & S. 380, Lord Westbury said: "The essential ingredients for constituting an infringement of that right probably would be found to be no other than these: First, that the mark has been applied by the plaintiffs properly (that is to say, that they have not copied any other person's mark, and that the mark does not involve any false representations); secondly, that the article so marked is actually a vendible article in the market; and, thirdly, that the defendants, knowing that to be so, have imitated the mark for the purpose of passing in the market other articles of a similar description." These views received the approval of Lord Cairns, sitting in the court of appeals, in Maxwell v. Hogg, L. R. 2 Ch. 307-314, and accord with the great weight of authority on this much-litigated subject. The present bill clearly sets out the adoption and proper application of the mark by the association, and its fraudulent imitation for the interdicted purpose by the defendants. It is not so explicit as to the second ingredient mentioned by the lord chancellor, but the court does not need to be told that hats made by a company of journeymen hatters during ten years were actually vendible articles in the market. So much will be inferred.

But the objection urged by the defendants against the bill is that it does not allege, and the court cannot infer, that the journeymen owned the hats made by them; and it is insisted that ownership of the article to which the trademark is affixed is necessary to the acquisition of a right in the mark. To support this claim, Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391, is cited. Some expressions in the opinion of the able jurist who decided that case certainly give countenance to the present objection, but on consideration I think those expressions will appear to be unwarranted. Thus, in defining the means by which a person will acquire an exclusive right to a trademark, he says: "First, he must select or adopt some mark or sign not in use to distinguish goods of the same class or kind already on the market, belonging to another trader; second, he must apply his mark to some article of traffic; and, third, he must put his article, marked with his mark, on the market." Now, it is undisputed that this association has complied with the first two of these requirements. Only in respect to the third has it failed. It did not itself put upon the market its own articles marked with the label. But it is doubtful whether the learned judge intended this third requisite to be so strictly read, for he immediately added: "Mere adoption of a mark or sign, and a public declaration, by advertisement or otherwise, that a person will at a subsequent time put a particular thing on the market, marked or distinguished in a certain way, create no right. Until the thing is actually on the market, marked by the particular mark of the person intending to acquire a title, no property right in the mark arises." This seems to indicate that it was the actual marketing of the marked article, and not the person by whom it was marketed or owned, on which stress was laid. And why should this specific personal element be deemed important? The public object sought in the protection of trademarks is to bring upon the market a better class of commodities, and the means for attaining that object is by securing to those who are instrumental in supplying the market whatever reputation they gain by their efforts towards that end. The workman by whose handiwork the commodity is made is one of these instruments, just as is his employer who furnishes the raw material and owns and sells the finished product; and if the former is permitted by the owner to place upon the commodity a mark to indicate whose workmanship it is, and thereby commend his workmanship to other employers, this license from the owner should be deemed a right against everybody else. His aptitude in his trade is his property, and, if by a mark he can have it identified as his in the market, he may enhance its salable value, and thus secure the same sort of advantage as his employer, by similar means. No reason exists why this advantage should not be protected by the courts in the same manner and to the same extent as is the like advantage of the employer. The mere fact that one rather than the other of these persons has placed the product upon the market has no rational bearing upon the matter; for both alike have had the market in view in the efforts they have made, and through those efforts the market is supplied. A different objection to a suit of this nature was sustained in Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 8 L. R. A. 640, namely, that the label did not indicate by what persons the articles labeled were made, but only indicated that they were made by one of many persons who were not connected with each other in any business. The first clause of this objection would unduly restrict the law of trademarks as everywhere recognized; for it is established that, whatever be the quality indicated by a trademark, the mark need not point out the particular person from whom that quality is derived. The law has placed no limit upon the number of persons who may unite for business purposes and jointly acquire property in a trademark; and yet it is evident that, if there be many, some of them may have no personal share in producing the article identified by the mark. The second clause in the objection assumes what does not appear to be true in the case before us. We understand from the bill that the members of the association represented by the complainant are connected together as journeymen hatters; that their skill in this trade, and their mutual assistance in profiting by its practice, form the motive and chief aim of their association. This connection is as clearly one for business purposes as is that of members in a partnership, or of stockholders in a corporation. Although it is a comparatively novel species of relationship, it has become an established one, and therefore calls for the application of those general principles of law and equity which are applied to other species of business associations. According to these principles, we think a workman, or a number of workmen engaged in the same branch of industry and banded together for their mutual profit, in the pursuit of their common vocation, may acquire a right of property in a trademark designed to distinguish their workmanship from that of other persons, and that a trademark so owned is entitled to the same protection as other trademarks.

The decree below should be reversed, and the demurrer overruled.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Ohio, ex rel. Richard PLIMMER,
v.

James D. POSTON et al.

(.....Ohio.....)

*The requirement of section 7 of the

*Headnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—The decision in the above case seems to be the first that has been rendered respecting the validity of a provision that signers to a 43 L. R. A.

amendatory act of April 8, 1898 (93 Ohio Laws, p. 93), that papers to secure the nomination of candidates for public offices "shall contain a provision to the effect that each signer thereto pledges himself to support and vote for the candidate or candidates whose nominations are therein requested," operating uniformly and impartially upon all classes of electors, and interposing no unreapetition for the nomination of a candidate must pledge themselves to vote for him.

sonable impediment to the exercise of the elective franchise, is valid.

(Spear, Ch. J., and Minshall, J., dissent.)

(November 1, 1898.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to receive and file a nomination paper which was alleged to contain the requisite number of signatures to make it valid. Refused.

Statement by Shauck, J.:

The petition of the relator alleges that he is a qualified elector of Franklin county, Ohio; that defendants compose the board of election of the city of Columbus, and are charged with the duties of deputy state supervisors of election of Franklin county; that on the 19th day of September, 1898, the relator presented to the defendants a nomination paper, signed by more than 300 qualified electors of said county, containing a list of nominations for the several offices of said county to be filled at the general election in November, 1898, including the nomination of the relator for the office of county commissioner. The allegations of the petition show that the paper conforms in all respects to the acts of the general assembly to provide for the mode of conducting elections, etc., except that it does not comply with the requirement of § 7 of the amendatory act of April 8, 1898 (93 Ohio Laws, p. 93), that "such nomination papers shall contain a provision to the effect that each signer thereto thereby pledges himself to support and vote for the candidate or candidates whose nominations are therein requested." The petition shows that, because the paper did not comply with the requirement of the statute in the respect indicated, the defendants refused to receive and file it, and to have the names of said nominees printed on the ballots to be voted at said election. The defendants demurred to the petition, and, for the purpose of final judgment, admit that its allegations are true.

Mr. F. M. McCartney, for relator:

It is the right, and consequently the duty, of the judicial tribunals to determine whether a legislative act drawn in question in a suit pending before them is opposed to the Constitution of the United States, or of this state, and if so found, to treat it as a nullity.

Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs., 1 Ohio St. 81; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. ed. 60.

The constitutionality of a law is determined by its application.

State, Atty. Gen., v. First Judicial Dist. C. P. Court Judges, 21 Ohio St. 1; State v. Hipp, 38 Ohio St. 199.

The general assembly, like the other departments of government, exercises only delegated authority, and it cannot be doubted that any acts passed by it, not falling fairly within this scope of legislative power, are as clearly void as though expressly prohibited.

Parker v. Com., 6 Pa. 511, 47 Am. Dec. 480; State, Evans. v. Dudley, 1 Ohio St. 437; Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 607; Varick 43 L. R. A.

v. Smith, 5 Paige, 137, 28 Am. Dec. 417; Powers v. Bergen, 6 N. Y. 358; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648; Rogers v. Bradshaw, 20 Johns. 735; People v. Platt, 17 Johns. 195, 8 Am. Dec. 382; People, Fountain, v. Westchester County Supers. 4 Barb. 64; Benson v. New York, 10 Barb. 223; People, Morris, v. Edmonds, 15 Barb. 520; Hatch v. Vermont C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49; Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 451.

The general assembly is precluded from enacting any law whose operation and effect shall be to take away the elective franchise from any male citizen of the United States having the prescribed age, and residence in the state, and having such residence in the county, township, or ward, as it may provide by law, and who has not been convicted of bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime, and not being an idiot or insane person, or not being in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States.

Opinion of the Judges, 30 Conn. 591; Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 621; People v. Barber, 48 Hun. 198; Paine, Elections, 301; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 682, 752; State, Evans. v. Dudley, 1 Ohio St. 450; Hendershot v. State, 44 Ohio St. 209.

This statute is equivalent to requiring that no elector or electors, except those who may have certain theories of governmental policy, or belong to a political organization casting over 1 per cent of the total vote at the next preceding general election, shall be eligible to office or have the right to vote at all elections, unless they first secure 308,640 qualified electors to sign their county and state petitions, respectively, and to pledge themselves to support the candidates so nominated. In any case the fulfillment of the requirements of this act would be impracticable, and in most cases impossible.

That cannot be called an election or the expression of the popular sentiment where part only of the electors have been allowed to be heard, and the others, not being guilty of fraud or negligence, have been excluded.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 775; Fort Dodge City School Dist. v. Wakkansa Dist. Trwp. 17 Iowa, 85; Barry v. Lauck, 5 Coldw. 588; Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 665; Daggett v. Hudson, 43 Ohio St. 548, 54 Am. Rep. 832; Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 488, 23 Am. Dec. 632; Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 345, 98 Am. Dec. 272.

Regulations are to be subordinate to the enjoyment of the right, the exercise of which is regulated. The right must not be impaired by the regulation.

Byler v. Asher, 47 Ill. 101; State, Wood, v. Baker, 38 Wis. 88; State v. Butts, 31 Kan. 554; Dells v. Kennedy, 49 Wis. 558, 35 Am. Rep. 786; Atty. Gen., Conely, v. Detroit, 78 Mich. 545, 7 L. R. A. 99; Davis v. Haverhill School Dist. 44 N. H. 398; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 775.

The act requiring signers to pledge themselves to vote and support the candidates nominated in the petition is a flagrant violation of the secrecy of the ballot as guaranteed by § 2, art. 5, of the Constitution, and for which the very subject of the act pretends to provide.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 760.

Sections 6 and 7 of the act passed April 18, 1892 (89 Ohio Laws, 434), as amended April 8, 1898 (93 Ohio Laws, 94), grant to a citizen or class of citizens privileges which, upon the same terms, do not equally belong to all citizens.

Section 6 grants privileges to some citizens, viz., those belonging to the parties casting more than 1 per cent of the total vote at the preceding general election, which, upon the same terms, are not equally enjoyed by other citizens of like qualifications, as to voting.

Section 7 imposes burdens upon a class of citizens, viz., those belonging to parties which did not cast 1 per cent of the total vote at the next preceding general election, which burdens are not equally shared by all citizens of like qualifications.

It is not competent for the legislature to divide those polling 1 per cent of the total vote at the next preceding general election into one class, and those polling for their candidates on the head of their ticket for a state office less than 1 per cent of the total vote at the next preceding general election, into another class, and enact one law granting the privilege of nominating candidates by certificates of nomination to the former, and another act imposing the burden of nominating by petition on the latter.

Costello v. Wyoming, 49 Ohio St. 208; Bo parte Falk, 42 Ohio St. 638; Ayar's Appeal, 122 Pa. 266, 2 L. R. A. 577; Nichols v. Walter, 37 Minn. 264; State, Richards, v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 435; Bronson v. Oberlin, 41 Ohio St. 476, 52 Am. Rep. 90.

Mr. Mahlon Rouch, also for relator:

In all cases where the Constitution has conferred a political right or privilege, and where the Constitution has not particularly designated the manner in which that right is to be exercised, it is clearly within the just and constitutional limits of the legislative power to adopt any reasonable and uniform regulations in regard to the time and mode of exercising that right, which are designed to secure and facilitate the exercise of such right, in a prompt, orderly, and convenient manner. Such a construction would afford no warrant for such an exercise of legislative power, as, under the pretense and color of regulating, should subvert or injuriously restrain the right itself.

Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 489, 23 Am. Dec. 632.

The present state legislature amended the election law to provide for secrecy, etc., by inserting into § 7, which provides for nomination by petition, these words: Such nomination papers shall contain a provision to the effect that each signer thereto thereby pledges himself to support and vote for the candidate or candidates whose nominations are therein requested.

That is, the title of the statute, which should express its object clearly, is, to insure secrecy of the ballot, and yet in the 7th section of the same statute the person who asks for a candidate or ticket by nomination papers must state in that petition that he pledges himself to vote for the candidate named therein.

If these provisions can stand together, then the title to the statute is a fraud, and the pretended claim for secrecy is also a base fraud and a delusion.

There cannot be one law governing the Republican and Democratic parties in primaries and elections, and another to control the minor parties, whatever they may be.

The safeguard of secrecy is thrown around all parties which at the next preceding election polled more than 1 per cent of the whole vote cast, but the same law forces publicity and pledges on any party which casts less than 1 per cent of the whole vote. This is certainly an unlawful discrimination.

Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272; Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 665.

The number of tickets put into the field can, and must, be left to the discretion and judgment of those entitled to vote. And this discretion and judgment will not often be abused. If any party, no matter how small, represents a just and vital issue, it should be given the privilege, with other parties, to maintain it on equal footing with them. If it represents a false idea, or one of prejudice or hate, it will not stand long.

Where is the safeguard to our freedom of the ballot as guaranteed by both state and National Constitutions, if encroachments such as now stand on our statute books are upheld by the courts?

If parties are prohibited by these laws from getting a ticket on the official ballot they must either vote for the candidates of one of the old parties or refrain from voting entirely. This is disfranchisement of the citizen.

Daggett v. Hudson, 43 Ohio St. 548, 54 Am. Rep. 832.

Mr. G. T. Stewart also for relator.

Messrs. Charles W. Voorhees, Florisel Smith, and William J. Ford, for defendants:

A writ of mandamus will not be awarded in the absence of a clear legal right to the object sought.

State, Baen, v. Yeatman, 22 Ohio St. 546.

The petition fails to set forth the fact that the nomination paper that was rejected contains a provision to the effect that each signer thereto thereby pledges himself to support and vote for the candidate or candidates whose nominations are therein requested.

The Constitution does not inhibit this regulation.

De Walt v. Bartley, 146 Pa. 525; State, Ransom, v. Black, 54 N. J. L. 446, 16 L. R. A. 769.

Mr. F. S. Monnett, Attorney General, also for defendants.

Shauck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is admitted that by the express provision of the act of April 8, 1898, a pledge in a nomination paper that those who sign it will vote for the candidates whose nomination is requested is a condition to their right to have the names of the nominees printed on the ballot. If the prescribed condition is valid, the law does not enjoin upon the defendants the duty of performing the act which the relator asks us to command. It is said, however, that the provision of the act which prescribes this condition is void, because it restricts the right of suffrage as guaranteed by §§ 1 and 2 of article 5 of the Constitution, ordaining:

"Sec. 1. Every male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township, or ward in which he resides such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector, and be entitled to vote at all elections.

"Sec. 2. All elections shall be by ballot."

It is not doubted that the power of the legislature over the subject is restricted to laws regulating the exercise of the right, nor that such laws "must be reasonable, uniform, and impartial, and calculated to facilitate and secure, rather than to subvert or impede, the exercise of the right to vote." The implied limitation was so defined in Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 685, and its enforcement is obviously a judicial duty, to the end that the right may not be defeated by indirect means. The application of the limitation to this enactment is the subject of contention. It does not seem to be doubted that the provision in question operates uniformly and impartially on all political parties and sections of voters. Whatever discrimination it makes is on account of numbers solely. It is said, however, that it unreasonably impedes the exercise of the right to vote of the sections of voters to whom it applies. In State, Plimmer, v. Poston, 58 Ohio St. 620, 42 L. R. A. 237, we decided that the requirement of § 8, that certified nominations must represent a party which at the next preceding election had polled at least 1 per cent of the entire vote cast in the state, is valid. This was in view of the alternatives providing for procuring nominations on the ballot by means of petitions or nomination papers, and of every voter to supply the names of all persons for whom he may desire to vote, whether nominees of any party or not. Obviously the same constitutional considerations apply to the requirement as to the number of electors who shall sign nomination papers. The pledge required by the amendment now under consideration is a provision by the legislature to secure good faith on the part of the electors who sign such nomination papers. It was required, in view of the facts that at the preceding election six tickets were printed upon the blanket ballot, which required, to secure their places on the ballot, an aggregate of more than 102,000 votes at the prior election, or signatures to nomination papers, and which six tickets received at the election an aggregate of but 16,321 votes. One nomination paper was signed as it was required to be, by more than 10,200 electors for the nomination of a state ticket, which at the election received but 477 votes in the entire state. It can hardly be necessary to say that it is not practicable for the state to provide a ballot large enough to afford places for tickets for each of such small sections of its voters, who number more than a million. If the general assembly is without power to enact such provisions as will maintain the practicability of the Australian ballot, it must have been without power to pass the act of April 18, 1892, which provided for it; and the denial of the validity of the amendment now under consideration is a denial of the validity of the original act. This does not seem to conflict with the views of counsel for the relator, for one of them, after speaking of the election of 1897, says: "The next session of the general assembly witnessed the closing plot of a revolution in the voting system commenced in April, 1892, and concluded in April, 1898." In view of the uniformity of the decisions upon the subject of the validity of laws providing for the system, the general acquiescence in it, and the number of cases in which we have enforced it, it does not now seem necessary to enter upon a discussion of the general subject.

It is said that this provision of the act destroys the secrecy of the ballot. The secrecy of the ballot is not preserved or required by the section of the Constitution which ordains that all elections shall be by ballot. In some of the states similar constitutional provisions are carried into effect by statutes which require all ballots to be so marked as to identify the persons by whom they are cast. Nor does this provision require any elector to disclose his purpose with reference to the character of his vote, unless he voluntarily does so as a petitioner on a nomination paper. The act merely defines the conditions on which the state will cause tickets to be printed upon the ballot, leaving every elector entirely free to vote a ticket that has otherwise acquired a place on the ballot, or to supply in secrecy the names of the persons for whom he desires to vote, or become a petitioner by giving the required pledge.

Nor can this requirement be held void because it is not logically consistent with the provisions of the act which prohibit the marking or exposing of his ballot by an elector. The original act and its amendments seem to be the result of a very sincere desire of the legislature to prevent the repetition of frauds upon the elective franchise which were notorious, and the moral coercion of electors which some believed to have been practised. Can it be said to be inconsistent, in an act passed for such a purpose, that an elector is forbidden to exhibit or mark his ballot for the purpose of showing that he has complied with the condition upon which he is to receive a bribe, and a petitioner is required to give such pledge as to his intention as will show that he signs a nomination paper in good faith? Moreover, the logical inconsistency of the provisions of a statute has never been regarded as a reason for declaring any of them void. Much that is said in the briefs of counsel and most of the cases cited relate, as does Monroe v. Collins, to enactments which impede and restrict the exercise of the right to vote. The provisions now under consideration, defining the conditions under which the state will provide tickets and thus facilitate the exercise of the right, and leaving to every elector an opportunity to vote according to his preference, are within the power of the legislature. In view of the evils to be remedied, and the ends to be attained, we cannot say that any of them is unreasonable.

Writ refused.

Spear, Ch. J., and Minshall, J., dissent.

STATE of Ohio

v.

Harry MARTIN, alias Jim Anderson.

(.....Ohio.....)

*If imprisonment for a felony is terminated by an unconditional pardon, it is not to be regarded as one of the two former imprisonments for felony required by § 7388-11, 2 Bates's Anno. Stat., to place the accused in the category of habitual criminals.

(November 29, 1898.)

EXCEPTIONS by the state to rulings of the Court of Common Pleas for Franklin County made during the trial of an indictment charging defendant with grand larceny in which it was sought to secure his imprisonment as an habitual criminal. Overruled.

Statement by the Court:

One Martin was indicted for grand larceny committed on the 22d day of December, 1896. The indictment also charged that at the December term, 1877, of the court of common pleas of Wayne county, the defendant, as Elbert J. Anderson, had been convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary, and that he was actually imprisoned in the penitentiary under that sentence, and that at the April term, 1893, of the common pleas court of Franklin county, he was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for burglary and grand larceny, and underwent the imprisonment imposed by the sentence. The defendant specially pleaded in bar of the allegations of the indictment charging him as an habitual criminal that on the 25th day of June, 1879, the said Elbert J. Anderson "was given an unconditional pardon for said conviction, sentence, and imprisonment by the governor of Ohio." A demurrer to this plea was interposed by the prosecuting attorney, and overruled by the court, to which ruling the prosecuting attorney excepted.

Messrs. F. S. Monnett, Attorney General, and George C. Blankner, for the State:

The pardon relieved defendant of the entire penalty incurred by his offense, but nothing more.

Mount v. Com. 2 Duv. 93.

*Headnote by the Court.

NOTE.—For enhanced penalty for crimes committed by habitual offenders, see note to Re Miller (Mich.) 34 L. R. A. 398; also, with respect to the constitutional provision against cruel and unusual punishments, note to State, Garvey, v. Whitaker (La.) 35 L. R. A. 579. 43 L. R. A.

Mr. J. E. Sater, for defendant:

Where complete power to pardon is conferred upon the executive, it may be doubted if the legislature can impose restrictions under the name of rules or regulations.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 138, *116; Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St. 392, 48 Am. Rep. 462; State, Whiteman, v. Chase, 5 Ohio St. 528; Diehl v. Rodgers, 169 Pa. 316; Singleton v. State, 38 Fla. 297, 34 L. R. A. 251; State v. Sloss, 25 Mo. 291, 69 Am. Dec. 467; State v. McIntire, 59 Am. Dec. 572, note, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 1.

The pardoning power of the governor is subject to no limitations other than those found in the Constitution, and the consequences attaching to a pardon granted by the governor cannot be enlarged or curtailed by legislative enactment or judicial construction.

1 Bishop, New Crim. L. 1892, § 998, defines pardon as "a remission of guilt."

Hay v. Tower Division Justices, L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 561; Leyman v. Latimer, L. R. 3 Exch. Div. 15, 352, 13 Cox, C. C. 632, 14 Cox, C. C. 51; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366; Hildreth v. Heath, 1 Ill. App. 82; Edwards v. Com. 78 Va. 39, 49 Am. Rep. 377.

Another class of authorities defines pardon as a "remission of the punishment of guilt."

Bishop sustains the reasoning and theory of the Edwards Case and disapproves of the doctrine announced in Mount v. Com. 2 Duv. 93.

The doctrine of the Garland Case was but a reiteration of that previously announced by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Armstrong's Foundry v. United States, 6 Wall. 766, 18 L. ed. 882; Knote v. United States, 95 U. S. 149, 24 L. ed. 442; Lilly, Abridgment, 270, quoted in Ex parte Hunt, 10 Ark. 288; 5 Bacon, Abr., title Pardon, sub. H.

The Ohio law relating to the effect of a pardon follows the Garland and Knote Cases.

Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St. 381, 48 Am. Rep. 462.

The pardon makes "the offender a new man." A new man is an innocent man.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 325; Singleton v. State, 38 Fla. 297, 34 L. R. A. 251; Diehl v. Rodgers, 169 Pa. 316; State v. Foley, 15 Nev. 64, 37 Am. Rep. 458; Carlisle v. United States, 16 Wall. 147, 21 L. ed. 426; 4 Bl. Com. p. 402; United States v. McKee, 4 Dill. 128; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 137.

Pardoned crimes should not be taken into consideration in applying the habitual criminal act.

Edwards v. Com. 78 Va. 39, 49 Am. Rep. 377; Com. v. Morrow, 9 Phila. 583.

Per Curiam:

It is provided in § 7388-11, 2 Bates's Anno. Stat., that "every person who, after having been twice convicted, sentenced, and imprisoned in some penal institution for felony, whether committed heretofore or hereafter, and whether committed in this state or elsewhere within the limits of the United States of America, shall be convicted, sentenced, and imprisoned in the Ohio penitentiary for felony hereafter committed, shall be deemed and taken to be an habitual criminal, and on the expiration of the term for which he shall be so sentenced, he shall not be discharged from imprisonment in the penitentiary, but shall be detained therein for and during his natural life," etc. The question presented by the exception is whether a former conviction and imprisonment for a felony, on account of which the governor has granted an unconditional pardon, may be regarded as one of the former convictions necessary to place the accused in the category of habitual criminals, as defined by the act. It may be that the criminal habit is as certainly indicated by the commission of felonies for which unconditional pardons have been granted as by those whose penalties have been suffered to the end. But we must presume that the legislature enacted this section intending that the language should be construed according to the commonly received view as to the effect of a pardon. That view with reference to legislation of this character is that: "If a second offense is made by statute more heavily punishable than the first, then, if the first is pardoned, it is obliterated. The consequence of which is that a like offense afterward committed is not a second, and is punishable only as a first." 1 Bishop, New Crim. L. § 919; Edwards v. Conn. 78 Va. 39, 40 Am. Rep. 377. The case of Mount v. Com. 2 Duv. 93, has not been accepted as a correct statement of the law.

Exception overruled.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Pardon ARMINGTON

v.

Julius PALMER et al.

Gardiner C. SIMS

v.

SAME.

(.....R. I.....)

1. An injunction against the wrongful assumption and use by a corporation of the name of an individual, or of another corporation, may be granted in a suit by the owner of the name without the intervention of the state, if there is no statute to the contrary.
2. A suit to restrain the use of its name by a corporation is not in effect a suit to annul the corporation, which must be brought by the state.
3. A corporation which still has assets consisting of accounts, bills, and notes receivable, which were excepted from a sale of the remainder of the corporate property, can, without showing actual damage, restrain the use of its name by another corporation which has purchased the plant and is continuing the business of the former.
4. The absence of fraudulent intent is no defense to a corporation in a suit for wrongfully assuming and using a name belonging to another.
5. A purchase of the plant, machinery, stock, and such visible property of a manufacturing corporation, although it carries the right to use the name of the articles manufactured, does not give the purchaser the right to take the name of the corporation.
6. A vote of a corporation which is purely voluntary and without consideration, to give the use of the corporate name to a new corporation which has previously purchased the plant of the former, is ineffectual as against a minority who do not consent.

(December 27, 1898.)

SUITS to enjoin defendants from using a name which was alleged to be an unlawful interference with the rights of complainants. Judgment for complainants.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Archibald C. Matteson and Amasa M. Eaton, for complainants:

The illegal use of a corporate name will be restrained by a court of equity upon the principles applicable to trademark cases.

Putnam v. Sicoet, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 286; Newby v. Oregon C. R. Co. Deady, 609; Holmes, D. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Merchant Bkg. Co. v. Merchants' Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 560; Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 748; Guardian Fire & Life Assur. Co. v. Guardian & General Ins. Co. 43 L. T. N. S. 791; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers & S. Mfg. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 495; Goodyear Rubber Co. v. Goodyear's Rubber Mfg. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 276; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 94; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 21 Abb. N. C. 104; LePage Co. v. Russia Cement Co. 5 U. S. App. 112, 51 Fed. Rep. 941, 2 C. C. A. 555, 17 L. R. A. 354; Saunders v. Sun Life Assur. Co. [1894] 1 Ch. 537; DeLong v. DeLong Hook & Eye Co. 10 Misc. 577; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. R. W. Rogers Co. 66 Fed. Rep. 56; Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42; Investor Pub. Co. v. Dobinson, 72 Fed. Rep. 603; R. W. Rogers Co. v. Wm. Rogers Mfg. Co. 35 U. S. App. 843, 70 Fed. Rep. 1017, 17 C. C. A. 576; 1

NOTE.—The rights of corporations in respect to names, which are very elaborately considered in the briefs and opinion in the above case, are also considered in the following cases in this series. American Order of S. C. v. Merrill (Mass.) 8 L. R. A. 320; International Trust Co. 43 L. R. A.

v. International Loan & T. Co. (Mass.) 10 L. R. A. 758; Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A. 42; Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Graham (Iowa) 31 L. R. A. 133; and Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Improved Order K. of P. (Mich.) 38 L. R. A. 658.

Thomp. Corp. § 296; Boone, Corp. § 32; 2 High, Inj. 3d ed. § 907; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 296, 357; Angell & A. Corp. 11th ed. 432, 433; Plant Seed Co. v. Michel Plant & Seed Co. 23 Mo. App. 579.

If the corporation refuses to bring suit, a stockholder may bring it, making such corporation a party defendant.

Newby v. Oregon C. R. Co. Deady, 609.

Under a statute forbidding the carrying on of the business of banking by a foreign corporation under a name previously in use by a domestic corporation, the proper party to petition for injunction is the party aggrieved, i. e. the domestic corporation.

International Trust Co. v. International Loan & T. Co. 153 Mass. 271, 10 L. R. A. 758.

The question whether the names are so nearly identical as to mislead must be settled by the application of the principles which apply to analogous cases respecting trademarks.

Ibid.; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 21 Abb. N. C. 104; Reeves v. Denicke, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 92.

It is fraud on a person who has established a trade and carried it on under a given name that some other person should assume the same name.

Lee v. Haley, L. R. 5 Ch. 155; Clark Thread Co. v. Armitage, 67 Fed. Rep. 896, 45 U. S. App. 62, 74 Fed. Rep. 936, 21 C. C. A. 178.

Demand upon the party committing the wrong to cease doing so, before proceeding against such a party by a bill for an injunction, is not necessary if it is plain that it would be of no avail.

Brewer v. Proprietors of Boston Theatre Co. 104 Mass. 378; Mussina v. Goldthwaite, 34 Tex. 125, 7 Am. Rep. 281; Heath v. Erie R. Co. 8 Blatchf. 347; Rogers v. Lafayette Agri. Works, 52 Ind. 296; Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 88 N. Y. 52; Currier v. New York, W. S. & B. R. Co. 35 Hun, 355; Eaton v. Robinson, 18 R. I. 396; Loftus v. Farmers' Shipping Asso. 8 S. D. 201; Ziegler v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 46 U. S. App. 242, 76 Fed. Rep. 662, 22 C. C. A. 466.

Intending incorporators may be prevented by injunction from using a name similar to that of a corporation already in existence.

Hendriks v. Montagu, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 638; Tussaud v. Tussaud, 62 L. T. N. S. 633.

A charter may be refused upon the ground that the name applied for is too much like the name of a corporation already in existence.

First Presby. Church, 2 Grant, Cas. 240; Re Sons of Progress, 14 W. N. C. 31; Ex parte Walker, 1 Tenn. Ch. 97.

Should the Armington & Sims Engine Company procure a dissolution of its charter, these complainants would have the right to resume the same business, in their own names, theretofore carried on by the Armington & Sims Engine Company, and to authorize others to use it.

McCardel v. Peck, 28 How. Pr. 120. See also Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324.

Where one trader has taken a substantial part of another's trademark or tradename, 43 L. R. A.

the onus of proving that purchasers would not be deceived rests upon the former.

Orr Ewing v. Johnston, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 434, 40 L. T. N. S. 307; Johnston v. Orr Ewing, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 219; Ford v. Foster, L. R. 7 Ch. 611; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, L. R. 2 Ch. Div. 434, Reversed in L. R. 3 App. Cas. 376.

No one engaged in business, whether an individual, copartnership, association, or corporation, can use his own name with the intention or result of injuring another or imposing upon the public.

Sykes v. Sykes, 3 Barn. & C. 541; Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84; Holloway v. Holloway, 13 Beav. 209; Clark v. Clark, 25 Barb. 76; Howe v. Howe Mach. Co. 50 Barb. 236; De Youngs v. Jung, 7 Misc. 56.

No maker of Armington & Sims engines, except Armington & Sims themselves or their authorized successor, can hold himself out to the world as being Armington & Sims.

Wotherspoon v. Currie, L. R. 5 H. L. 508; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 376; Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 748.

Everyone, irrespective of any question of damages has a right to the exclusive use of his own name in the honest pursuit of his own business.

Reeves v. Denicke, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 902; Meneely v. Meneely, 62 N. Y. 427, 20 Am. Rep. 489; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828; Johnston v. Orr Ewing, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 219; Browne, Trademarks, 3d ed. § 508.

Neither injury to the complainant nor actual fraud is necessary to entitle him to relief.

Davis v. Kendall, 2 R. I. 566; Glenny v. Smith, 2 Drew. & S. 476; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 39 Conn. 450, 12 Am. Rep. 401; Hookham v. Pottage, L. R. 8 Ch. 91; LePage Co. v. Russia Cement Co. 5 U. S. App. 112, 51 Fed. Rep. 941, 2 C. C. A. 555, 17 L. R. A. 354; Saunders v. Sun Life Assur. Co. [1894] 1 Ch. 537.

Ignorance of the complainant's rights, and absence of intention to defraud, on the part of the respondent, are immaterial.

Coffeen v. Brunton, 4 McLean, 516; Davis v. Kendall, 2 R. I. 566; Peterson v. Humphrey, 4 Abb. Pr. 394; Dale v. Smithson, 12 Abb. Pr. 237; Carter v. Carlile, 31 Beav. 292; Edelsten v. Edelsten, 1 DeG. J. & S. 185.

Equity will restrain the wrongdoer by injunction, upon the grounds of protection of the complainant in the exercise of a legal right, the suppression of fraud, the prevention of irreparable mischief, or the misleading of the public.

Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 599; Glenny v. Smith, 2 Drew. & S. 476; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324.

The remedy against the illegal or fraudulent use of complainant's name is by injunction.

Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Spear, 2 Sandf. 599; Holloway v. Holloway, 13 Beav. 209; Wotherspoon v. Currie, L. R. 5 H. L. 508; Thompson v. Montgomery, L. R. 41 Ch. Div. 35; Russia Cement Co. v. LePage, 147 Mass. 206; Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 540, 35 L. ed. 247; Pillsbury v. Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. 24 U. S. App. 395, 64 Fed. Rep. 841, 12 C. C. A. 432; Clark Thread Co. v. Armitage, 67 Fed. Rep. 896; Klotz v. Hecht, 73 Fed. Rep. 822; Investor Pub. Co. v. Dobinson, 72 Fed. Rep. 603.

No one by dressing in another man's garments, or by assuming another man's name, shall be allowed to deprive the other of the gain or fame to which he is fairly entitled.

Knott v. Morgan, 2 Keen, 213; Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84; Howard v. Henriques, 3 Sandf. 725; Marsh v. Billings, 7 Cush. 322, 54 Am. Dec. 723; Christy v. Murphy, 12 How. Pr. 77; Colton v. Thomas, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 308; Meyer v. Dr. B. L. Bull Vegetable Medicine Co. 18 U. S. App. 372, 58 Fed. Rep. 884, 7 C. C. A. 558; Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 540, 35 L. ed. 247; Coats v. Merrick Thread Co. 149 U. S. 562, 37 L. ed. 847.

Where one palms off his own manufactures as those of another, he may be enjoined.

Holloway v. Holloway, 13 Beav. 209; Wotherspoon v. Currie, L. R. 5 H. L. 508; Radde v. Norman, L. R. 14 Eq. 348; Hirat v. Denham, L. R. 14 Eq. 542; Hookham v. Pottage, L. R. 8 Ch. 91; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wilson, L. R. 2 Ch. Div. 434, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 376; Siegert v. Findlater, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 801; Braham v. Beachim, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 848; Metzler v. Wood, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 606; Orr Ewing v. Johnston, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 434; Johnston v. Orr Ewing, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 219; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828; Somerville v. Schembri, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 453; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cello-nite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 94; Thompson v. Montgomery, L. R. 41 Ch. Div. 25; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 138 U. S. 537, 34 L. ed. 997; Chadwick v. Covell, 151 Mass. 190, 6 L. R. A. 839; Genesee Salt Co. v. Burnap, 67 Fed. Rep. 534, 43 U. S. App. 243, 73 Fed. Rep. 818; Buck's Stove & Range Co. v. Kiechle, 76 Fed. Rep. 758.

The goodwill of a copartnership or of a corporation is an asset or property, may be sold, etc., and will be protected in equity.

Williams v. Wilson, 4 Sandf. Ch. 379; Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 22 Beav. 84; Remick v. Emig, 42 Ill. 342; Peltz v. Eichle, 62 Mo. 171; Sheppard v. Boggs, 9 Neb. 257; Beebe v. Hatfield, 67 Mo. App. 609; Washburn v. National Wall Paper Co. 51 U. S. App. 380, 81 Fed. Rep. 17.

An assignment by a member of a manufacturing firm of all his right, title, and interest in and to the business and its assets, profits, and emoluments, without making any mention of any trademark or tradename, is not enough to show a relinquishment by the assignor of his right to use his own name in connection with similar manufactures, afterwards made by him.

Hazelton Boiler Co. v. Hazelton Tripod Boiler Co. 137 Ill. 231, 142 Ill. 494.

43 L. R. A.

Goodwill is not included in such terms as partnership property, credits and effects, nor stock and effects.

Hall v. Hall, 20 Beav. 139; Howe v. Searling, 19 How. Pr. 14; Reeves v. Denicke, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 92.

In the absence of express power corporations cannot sell, transfer, nor assign their franchises.

Coe v. Columbus P. & I. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 372, 75 Am. Dec. 518; Atkinson v. Marietta & C. R. Co. 15 Ohio St. 21; Com. v. Smith, 10 Allen, 448, 87 Am. Dec. 672; Richardson v. Sibley, 11 Allen, 65; Pullan v. Cincinnati & C. Air-Line R. Co. 4 Biss. 35; Carpenter v. Black Hawk Gold Min. Co. 65 N. Y. 43; State v. Morgan, 28 La. Ann. 482; Fietsam v. Hay, 122 Ill. 293.

The right to be a corporation by a particular name is a franchise.

Hazelton Boiler Co. v. Hazelton Tripod Boiler Co. 137 Ill. 231; Paulino v. Portuguese Ben. Asso. 18 R. I. 165, 20 L. R. A. 272.

The franchises of a corporation cannot be sold, leased, mortgaged, nor taken on execution.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 929; Hall v. Sullivan R. Co. Brun. Coll. Cas. 613, 2 Redf. Am. Ry. Cas. 621; Atkinson v. Marietta & C. R. Co. 15 Ohio St. 21; Wood v. Bedford & B. R. Co. 8 Phila. 94; Hays v. Ottawa, O. & F. R. Valley R. Co. 61 Ill. 422; Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 24 N. J. Eq. 455; Middlesex R. Co. v. Boston & O. R. Co. 115 Mass. 347; Randolph v. Larned, 27 N. J. Eq. 557; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. ed. 950.

Messrs. Comstock & Gardner, for respondents:

A suit to enjoin the use of a certain name by a legally organized corporation can only be maintained when brought by or in behalf of the state.

Paulino v. Portuguese Ben. Asso. 18 R. I. 165, 20 L. R. A. 272.

A charter of incorporation obtained by fraud remains valid until the state has elected to set it aside, and the rescission must be declared judicially and a proceeding instituted for that purpose by a proper government officer.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 769, 938, 1040; Rice v. National Bank of the Commonwealth, 126 Mass. 300.

The right to use a name of a corporation selected and conferred in accordance with the provision of the law cannot be taken away at the suit of private parties.

Boston Rubber Shoe Co. v. Boston Rubber Co. 149 Mass. 436; American Order of S. C. v. Merrill, 151 Mass. 558, 8 L. R. A. 320.

The same principles of law must be applied to this bill brought by a private party to prevent the use of a corporate name as would be applied to a bill brought to restrain the use of a firm or trade name, and these principles and these alone have been applied to every cause of this character brought by private parties.

Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Celluloid

Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 94; Newby v. Oregon C. R. Co. Deady, 609; Churton v. Douglas, 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 841; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 290.

All that the public demands is, that when it orders an engine of this Armington & Sims Company it shall get the machine which has for fifteen years been known as the Armington & Sims engine; and as the bill does not intimate a doubt of this it cannot be maintained on the ground that the public is misled or defrauded.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 260; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; Oarmichel v. Latimer, 11 R. I. 395, 23 Am. Rep. 481; Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. 11 H. L. Cas. 523; Hall v. Barrows, 4 DeG. J. & S. 150; Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617, 25 L. ed. 769; Oakes v. Tonsmierre, 49 Fed. Rep. 447; Condy v. Mitchell, 37 L. T. N. S. 766.

That proprietary right which a man has in his name or in any name as the designation of a business carried on by him is assignable, and will pass with the sale of such business even under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors.

Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 402, 27 L. R. A. 42; Snyder Mfg. Co. v. Snyder, 54 Ohio St. 86, 31 L. R. A. 657; Hegeman v. Hegeman, 8 Daly, 1; Hall v. Barrows, 4 DeG. J. & S. 156; Witthaus v. Braun, 44 Md. 303; Banks v. Gibson, 34 Beav. 566; Dixon Crucible Co. v. Guggenheim, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 321; Hozie v. Chaney, 145 Mass. 592; Pepper v. Labrot, 8 Fed. Rep. 29; Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617, 25 L. ed. 769; Booth v. Jarrett, 52 How. Pr. 169.

When an inventor or first maker of an article who gives his name to such article has caused the article to be so associated with the name given to it that it has ceased to indicate him as the manufacturer of the goods, and his peculiar skill and character, and come to mean the goods of a particular type made at a particular factory or by a particular process, such name may be used by the successor in business of the original inventor, or by any person who has the legal right to manufacture such article.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 260; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828; Jennings v. Johnson, 37 Fed. Rep. 364; Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Stange, 6 Fed. Rep. 279; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Riley, 11 Fed. Rep. 706; Goodyear India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 128 U. S. 598, 32 L. ed. 535; Leclanche Battery Co. v. Western Electric Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 276; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Shakespear, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 36; Brill v. Singer Mfg. Co. 41 Ohio St. 127, 52 Am. Rep. 74; Frazer v. Frazer Lubricator Co. 121 Ill. 147.

The right to the exclusive use of a trademark (if such exclusive right exists) is inseparable from the right to make and sell the article which it has been appropriated to designate. It may be abandoned if the business of the proprietor is abandoned. It may become identified with the place where the article is manufactured.

Atlantic Mill. Co. v. Robinson, 20 Fed. Rep. 217.
43 L. R. A.

Stinness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These bills set out that the complainants were formerly partners, under the name of Armington & Sims, in the manufacture of high-speed engines, which were protected by patents. In 1882 they procured an act of incorporation from the general assembly of this state, as the Armington & Sims Company, and upon organization they conveyed to the corporation all the assets of the partnership, including the patents and goodwill.

In 1883 another act of incorporation was procured for the Armington & Sims Engine Company, to which the former corporation made a similar conveyance. The latter corporation went on in business until August, 1890, when, becoming seriously involved, an agreement of six parts was entered into between the Armington & Sims Engine Company, a committee of the creditors of said corporation, creditors of said corporation who were not holders of its stock, creditors of the corporation who were holders of stock, holders of a majority of the stock of the corporation, and Armington & Sims as individuals. The indebtedness of the corporation was extended for the term of three years; the sum of $35,000 was advanced by certain creditors for small bills and a working capital; the control of the business was given to the creditors' committee, to whom a majority of the stock was transferred, and they were to sell the property of the corporation to pay its indebtedness, upon request of a majority of the creditors other than the stockholders of the company.

It was found to be impossible to carry on the business in that way, and upon request, as aforesaid, the property was sold at auction to the respondent Scott, who, with the respondents Palmer and Rushnell, organized, under the general laws of this state, a new corporation, with the name Armington & Sims Company.

A meeting of the Armington & Sims Engine Company was called to ratify and confirm the use of the name Armington & Sims in the name of the new corporation, and at said meeting, by a viva voce vote, and against the written protest of the complainant Sims, a resolution granting to the respondents the right to use the name Armington & Sims Company as the name of their corporation was declared to be passed, said Armington not being present.

The respondents, under this name, are engaged in business to sell "Armington & Sims engines" as "Armington & Sims Company, successors to Armington & Sims Engine Company."

The complainants, individually and as stockholders in the last-named company, claim that this a wrongful and injurious use of their names, against which they pray for an injunction restraining the use of such corporate name, and for other relief. The respondents demur to the bills upon the ground that a suit for such an injunction cannot be maintained by private parties against a corporation organized under the laws of this state, but that suit must be brought by or in behalf of the state; and also that no facts are set out which entitle the complainants to relief.

Upon the first ground of demurrer the question is whether a private party can maintain a bill against a corporation for the wrongful assumption of its name. The respondents rely upon Rice v. National Bank of the Commonwealth, 126 Mass. 300; Boston Rubber Shoe Co. v. Boston Rubber Co. 149 Mass. 436; American Order of S. C. v. Merrill, 151 Mass. 558, 8 L. R. A. 320; and Paulino v. Portuguese Ben. Asso. 18 R. I. 165, 20 L. R. A. 272.

The first of these cases was an information quo warranto, to exclude the respondents from exercising the franchise of being a corporation. The court held that such a bill must be filed by the state, and not by private parties. With this doctrine we need not disagree. The second case was a petition for leave to file an information quo warranto, and to restrain the respondent from doing business under the name of the Boston Rubber Company, claiming that this was distinct from the franchise to be a corporation. The statutes of Massachusetts, of 1870, provided that the name assumed in the agreement of association should not be changed but by act of the legislature, and also that the agreement was to be submitted to a commissioner of corporations for his approval. The court held that, as it was within his discretion to refuse to approve it, the court could not exercise that discretion, and the certificate was conclusive. The court said that the statute was not intended to prevent the fraudulent use of tradenames, but to prevent the identity of corporate names. The statute, like our own, required that the name should not be one in use by any existing corporation of the state. The statutes of Massachusetts (Pub. Stat. chap. 186, § 17) provide for an application to the court in cases of private injury; but as the petitioner had acquiesced in the use of the name for ten years, without injury, the court held that it did not make out a case for injunction under the statute. The third case is to the same effect, that the approval by the insurance commissioner of the name adopted by a beneficial association is conclusive, in a private suit, of the right of the association to such corporate name. Both of these latter cases so clearly rest upon the conclusiveness of the judgment of the commissioner that they are hardly in point in respect to our statute, which has no such provision. Judge Holmes, in American Order of S. C. v. Merrill, foresaw a case like this one, in saying: "When there are no statute provisions as to the choice of names, and parties organize a corporation under general laws, it may be that they choose the name at their peril, and that, if they take one so like that of an existing corporation as to be misleading, and thereby to injure its business, they may be enjoined, if there is no language in the statute to the contrary."

The possibility here suggested is fully sustained by many cases, among which are the following, some of which were cited by Judge Holmes: Putnam v. Sweet, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 286; Newby v. Oregon C. R. Co. 43 L. R. A.

Deady, 609; Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 37 Conn. 278, 9 Ann. Rep. 324; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 21 Abb. N. C. 104; Chas. S. Higgins Co. v. Higgins Soap Co. 144 N. Y. 462, 27 L. R. A. 42; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 94; R. W. Rogers Co. v. Wm. Rogers Mfg. Co. 17 C. C. A. 576, and note, 35 U. S. App. 843, 70 Fed. Rep. 1017; Plant Seed Co. v. Michel Plant & Seed Co. 23 Mo. App. 579, Affirmed 37 Mo. App. 313.

The principles upon which these cases rest are that, although a corporation may be legally created, it can no more use its corporate name in violation of the rights of others than an individual can use his name, legally acquired, so as to mislead the public and to injure another. The principle adopted is similar to that of a tradename or trademark, and is applied accordingly. Consequently a court of equity has jurisdiction in such a case, without the intervention of the state.

The case of Paulino v. Portuguese Ben. Asso. is quite different from the case now before us. In that case the complainants, a voluntary association, had appointed a committee to procure a charter, which was procured and under which the corporators had organized. The bill sought to annul the charter, because of alleged misconduct on the part of the corporators. The court held that this could not be done. Clearly the remedy of the complainants was of a different sort. After referring to some of the cases cited above, the court used the same language, herein quoted from the opinion of Judge Holmes, in American Order of S. C. v. Merrill, thus intimating the very right which is claimed in this case.

But the respondents argue, as was argued in the Massachusetts cases, that to restrain the use of the name is practically to annul the corporation, because it cannot act without a name. We do not think that this result follows. According to the allegations of the bill, the name assumed by the respondents is so like that of the older corporation as to be misleading and injurious. We see no reason why the corporation, if it is restrained from using its present name, may not, under R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 176, § 7, choose another name. That section, relating to an increase of the capital stock, says: "Such agreement may be amended in any other particular, excepting as provided in the following section," which relates to a decrease of the capital stock. The corporation, therefore, may still exist and enjoy the franchise, except in the wrongful use of its present name. This fact distinguishes the case from those in Massachusetts. Our opinion is that the bill states a case, and that the demurrer must be overruled.

Upon the merits, subject to the demurrer, the case is submitted on bill and answer. There is no dispute that the respondents have the right to make and sell the Armington & Sims engine, the only contention being that of the right to use the name of the former maker, The Armington & Sims Engine Company, which had become known and established, and to which the stock of the original Armington & Sims Company had been surrendered and canceled, and thus the original corporation had ceased to exist. Stated generally, the defense is that having the right to make the engine the respondents have the right to use the name, which, for this reason, cannot injure the complainants; that no fraud was intended in the choice of the name; and the authority given by the vote above referred to for the use of the name by the respondents.

The use of a tradename is in some respects different from that of a trademark. The latter usually relates chiefly to the thing sold; while, in addition to this, the former involves the source from which it comes, the individuality of the maker, both for protection in trade and for avoiding confusion in business affairs, as well as for securing to him the advantage of any good reputation which he may have gained. The law of trademark is designed chiefly for the protection of the public from imposition; that of tradename for the protection of the party entitled to it. A case, therefore, in regard to tradename is of somewhat broader scope than one relating to a trademark. It would be of little use to go over the numerous cases upon these subjects, as they all agree in principle, however variant may have been its application. For this case it is enough to say that, although one may make and sell an unprotected article, he cannot simulate the name or product of another so as to trench upon the latter's rights or to mislead the public. Lord Langdale stated the rule plainly in Perry v. Truefitt, 6 Beav. 66, cited in 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 951, note, as follows: "The principle on which both the courts of law and of equity proceed, in granting relief and protection in cases of this sort, is very well understood. A man is not to sell his own goods under the pretense that they are the goods of another man; he cannot be permitted to practise such a deception, nor to use the means which contribute to that end. He cannot, therefore, be allowed to use names, marks, letters, or indicia by which he may induce purchasers to believe that the goods which he is selling are the manufacture of another person. . . .

The case of Millington v. Fox, 3 Myl. & C. 338, seems to have gone this length, that the deception need not be intentional." Applying this principle to this case it is demonstrative. The name adopted by the respondent is so close a resemblance to that of the Armington & Sims Engine Company that there can be little doubt that it would be misleading and confusing in business matters, and the respondent advertises itself as the successor of said company. That company is still in existence. So far as appears it still has assets, because its accounts, bills, and notes receivable were excepted from the sale of its property. As such corporation it has the right to its name, free from simulative interference. Some of the cases cited by the respondents are of a different character. They relate to the right to use the name which has become descriptive of an article, e. g. "Singer," as applied to a sewing machine, Singer Mfg. Co. v. Stanage, 6 Fed. Rep. 279; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Riley, 11 Fed. 43 L. R. A.

Rep. 706; Brill v. Singer Mfg. Co. 41 Ohio St. 127, 52 Am. Rep. 74; "Goodyear Rubber," Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 128 U. S. 598, 32 L. ed. 535. In this case the decision is based on the descriptive character of the name, but the court suggests that, as the respondent was the elder company, if there was any exclusive right it would be with that company rather than with the complainant.

Several of the cases cited support the complainants. Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84, enjoined the respondents from using their own names against the right of a prior firm of Day & Martin. McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. ed. 828, held that the appellant infringed a trademark in using the name "Dr. McLane's Liver Pills" and that proof of fraudulent intent is not required where the infringement clearly appears. Frazer v. Frazer Lubricator Co. 121 Ill. 147, where the appellant had sold his right to his preparation known as "Frazer's Axle Grease" with the right to use his name. He afterwards undertook to carry on the business as S. Frazer & Co., but was enjoined.

But the respondents claim that the Armington & Sims Engine Company is not in business, and so no injury can follow. As we have said, the company is still in existence, and may be put on a footing for active business by a further contribution of capital, a thing which is often done. It has the right to its name, and if its right be violated it is not necessary to show actual damage, nor will the absence of fraudulent intent be a defense. Davis v. Kendall, 2 R. I. 566. This disposes of the defense on the ground of innocent intent.

The third branch of the defense, the claim of authority, cannot prevail. The respondent did not acquire the right to use the name by purchase. They bought only the plant, machinery, stock, and such visible property. The purchase of these does not carry the franchise or name of the corporation. Undoubtedly, as the respondents claim, the right to use the name goes with the right to manufacture, but this applies only to the use of the name in connection with the article, while the question here involved is the right to use the name of a maker, which stands upon a different ground.

The vote of the corporation is of no effect. In the first place, the majority of the stock was held by the creditor's committee, who do not appear to have held that amount of interest in the corporation. But if they had, or if the creditors whom they represented desired them so to vote, aside from the defect of record by which it is claimed that the vote of a majority appears, it was done after the sale of the property and the organization of a new company, and without consideration. It was therefore a purely voluntary act. It was not referred to in the sexpartite agreement, which was the foundation of the whole matter. A majority cannot give away the rights of a minority.

We are therefore of opinion that the demurrer to the bill must be overruled, and that upon the showing of the bill and answer the complainants are entitled to relief.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

W. L. MAULDIN et al., Respts.,
v.

City Council of GREENVILLE, Appt.

(.....S. C.....)

Assessments upon owners of abutting lots for new sidewalks and drains, which were necessary only because of a change of the grade of the street, are in violation of the South Carolina Constitution, which requires the whole property of the municipality to be taxed for any public or corporate purpose.

(September 29, 1898.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Greenville County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enjoin defendant from enforcing an assessment for local improvements upon plaintiff's property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph A. McCullough and J. P. Carey, for appellant:

In Mauldin v. Greenville, 42 S. C. 293, 27 L. R. A. 284, this identical act and identical ordinance were before the court, and they were upheld so far as they relate to sidewalks.

Where the expense is to be assessed in proportion to the frontage the proper course is to ascertain the entire expense, both as to sidewalks and roadways, and charge it upon each lot in the proportion that its frontage bears to all the lots fronting on the street improved.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 390.

It depends on the provisions of the special charter, or legislative act, whether or not notice to the abutter or proprietor is required in order to make him liable to pay the expense or cost of the local improvement, and in what manner it shall be given.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 803; Davis v. Lynchburg, 84 Va. 861; Gillette v. Denver, 21 Fed. Rep. 824; Cooley, Taxn. p. 623; Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 33 L. ed. 772; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763.

Parties seeking relief in equity from assessments alleged to be excessive or erroneous must show that they have exercised strict diligence in availing themselves of every opportunity elsewhere afforded for the correction of alleged errors.

2 Desty, Taxn. pp. 625, 662; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 804; Fanning v. Leviston, 93 Cal. 186; Wright v. Tacoma, 3 Wash. Terr. 410; Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 33 L. ed. 772; Nevin v. Roach, 86 Ky. 492; McKusick v. Stillwater, 44 Minn. 372.

Under power to improve any street the city council is not required to improve the entire length of the street or none; it may improve part and confine the assessment to the lots adjoining the part improved.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 799, note 1; Scovill

NOTE—For former decision in this case, which is here overruled on one point, see Mauldin v. Greenville (S. C.) 27 L. R. A. 284. 43 L. R. A.

v. Cleveland, 1 Ohio St. 133; Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159; Craycraft v. Selva, 10 Bush, 696; St. Louis, Creamer, v. Clemens, 36 Mo. 487; Lafayette v. Fowler, 34 Ind. 140; Bacon v. Savannah, 86 Ga. 301.

On reargument.

The legislature had the power to pass this act unless restrained by constitutional provisions.

Rose v. Charleston, 3 S. C. N. S. 369; State v. Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 420; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 703, 26 L. ed. 241.

The provisions in our Constitution with reference to taxation are not a limitation upon the power of the legislature in this respect. They are not exhaustive.

Pelzer v. Campbell, 15 S. C. 593, 40 Am. Rep. 705; State v. Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 420; Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 27 S. C. 396; State v. Columbia, 6 S. C. N. S. 1; Information v. Oliver, 21 S. C. 318; Information v. Jager, 29 S. C. 438.

The word "tax" as used in these sections of the Constitution, has no reference or application to "special assessments."

Cooley, Taxn. pp. 626, 627, note 4, 628, 632, 636, 638; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 198, 37 L. ed. 134; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 369; Birmingham v. Klein, 89 Ala. 461, 3 L. R. A. 369; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 737, 755, and note, 757, notes 1, 2; 2 Desty, Taxn. p. 1252, note 3; Edgerton v. Green Cove Springs, 19 Fla. 140; Hayden v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 817; Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L. R. A. 402; Goodrich v. Winchester & D. Turnp. Co. 26 Ind. 119; Warren v. Henry, 31 Iowa, 31; Morrison v. Hampshire, 32 Iowa, 271; Holtzhauser v. Newport, 94 Ky. 396; Maddux v. Newport, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 657; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Gogreve, 41 La. Ann. 251; Dorgan v. Boston, 12 Allen, 223; Brooks v. Baltimore, 48 Md. 266; Williams v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 560; Hoyt v. East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 39, 2 Am. Rep. 76; Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367; Garrett v. St. Louis, 25 Mo. 505, 69 Am. Dec. 475; People, Griffin, v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L. R. A. 330; Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Watertown, 1 S. D. 461; Cooley, Conat. Lim. pp. 617, 618; Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 636; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569; Willard v. Presbury, 14 Wall. 676, 20 L. ed. 721; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Lightner v. Peoria, 150 Ill. 80; Wilson v. Philippi, 39 W. Va. 75; Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 17 L. R. A. 135; Auburn v. Paul, 84 Me. 212; Chrisman v. Brookhaven, 70 Miss. 477; English v. Wilmington (Del.) 37 Atl. 158; Kelly v. Minneapolis, 57 Minn. 294, 26 L. R. A. 92; Hilliard v. Asheville, 118 N. C. 845; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270.

A statute which authorized a city to open and improve streets, and to assess the cost thereof on owners of adjoining lots, does not deprive such owners of their property without due process of law, nor deny to them the equal protection of the law.

Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 617, 618; 2 Dill. Mnn. Corp. § 754; Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 636; Raleigh v. Peace, 110 N. C. 32, 17 L. R. A. 330; Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L. R. A. 402; People, Griffin, v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 418, 55 Am. Dec. 266; Cooley, Taxn. p. 624.

Assessments for sidewalks have been uniformly sustained by the courts, although held otherwise by some of them in regard to the other street improvements.

Davis v. Litchfield, 145 Ill. 313, 21 L. R. A. 565, note; State v. Portage, 12 Wis. 563, 14 Wis. 551; Paason v. Sweet, 13 N. J. L. 196; State, Agents, v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 416, 18 Am. Rep. 729; Sands v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 571, 31 Am. Rep. 742; Palmer v. Way, 6 Colo. 106; Bordages v. Higgins, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 56; Deblois v. Baker, 4 R. I. 445; Greenburg v. Young, 53 Pa. 280; Buffalo City Cemetery v. Buffalo, 46 N. Y. 503; Bonhall v. Lebanon, 19 Ohio, 418; Hudler v. Golden, 36 N. Y. 446; Scott County v. Hinds, 50 Minn. 204; Lowell v. Hadley, 8 Met. 180; White v. People, Bloomington, 94 Ill. 604; Macon v. Patty, 57 Miss. 378, 34 Am. Rep. 451; Reinken v. Fuchring, 130 Ind. 382, 15 L. R. A. 624; Washington v. Nashville, 1 Swan, 177; Franklin v. Maberry, 6 Humph. 368; Wilson v. Philippi, 39 W. Va. 75.

Every lotowner may be required to build the public improvements in front of his lot without regard to the inequalities in the value of the lots, in the expense of constructing the improvements, or to the question whether the lot is injured or benefited by their construction.

Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 258; Black, Const. Law, p. 68; Ex parte Roundtree, 51 Ala. 42; Jenkins v. Ewin, 8 Heisk. 456.

Messrs. Mooney & Patterson and Haynsworth & Parker for respondents.

Pope, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was begun in the court of common pleas for Greenville county on the 1st day of September, 1896, to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant, the city council of Greenville, from levying and collecting an assessment of two thirds of the cost for laying a sidewalk on each side of Main street from Reedy river to North street from those owners of real estate which abutted on said Main street within the limits above stated, on the ground that the act of the legislature of this state approved in the year 1891 (see 20 Stat. at L. p. 1372) was unconstitutional, on the several grounds set up in the complaint. The answer denied that the act in question was unconstitutional or that there was any failure on the part of the city council that rendered the assessment null and void, or that the plaintiff could controvert the constitutionality of the 43 L. R. A.

act in question by reason of the fact that as to him the judgment of this court, as found in the case of Mauldin v. Greenville, 42 S. C. 293, 27 L. R. A. 284, affirming its constitutionality, was res judicata. The cause came on to be heard before his honor, Judge Watts, through exceptions to the report of Master Verner; and by Judge Watts's decree it was held that the defendant should be enjoined and restrained from levying the assessments against the plaintiff and other property owners on Main street for two thirds of the cost of improvements to the sidewalks and drains. From this decree the defendant now appeals, on eighteen exceptions.

There have been two hearings had before this court. On the first, when the argument was finished in this court an order was passed directing a reargument, with leave to counsel to question "the correctness of the former decision in this case, as reported in 42 S. C. 293, 27 L. R. A. 284, in so far as it holds that the city council has power to assess the property of any taxpayer to pay the 'cost of the improvements to the sidewalks and drains fronting their respective lands.'" 29 S. E. 812. The appellant relies upon the police power to sustain the constitutionality of the assessments made by the city council of Greenville against the plaintiffs for the cost of the sidewalks and drains recently improved by the city council of Greenville, and paid for by said city council out of the general funds of the municipality. Quite recently, in the two cases of Cornelia Real-Estate Co. v. Charleston, and Stehmeyer v. Charleston (S. C.) 31 S. E. 322, this court has, with great patience, endeavored to show that the police power, where the public health, the public morals, and the public safety are concerned, operates directly upon the persons and property of the citizen, so as to require that such person or property shall not prove injurious to other citizens; and then, also, such police power is made to operate upon persons and property where the citizen is not at fault, but to further a public purpose; and when, to accomplish the furtherance of a public purpose, the property is taken from the citizen or citizens by taxation or the right of eminent domain, that in such cases the right to tax or the right of eminent domain must be exerted in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution adopted in the year 1895, which are therein ordained to regulate taxation or the right of eminent domain. The grounds for these conclusions of this court on the police power need not be reproduced here, inasmuch, as before remarked, as this court has so recently embodied its conclusions on this subject in the two cases just quoted.

But, independently of the exercise of the police power, the appellant, the city council of Greenville, seeks on two other grounds to sustain the assessment of these lotowners for the cost of improvement of the sidewalks and drains in front of their property, respectively: First, it is insisted that this question is res judicata as to W. L. Mauldin; and, second, that such an assessment is perfectly consistent with the provisions of our present Constitution. Let us examine these positions in their order.

Is the decision of the case of Mauldin v. Greenville, 42 S. C. 293, 27 L. R. A. 284, controlling, as res judicata of the question now presented by the case at bar? We uphold the doctrine of res judicata as it is presented in Hart v. Bates, 17 S. C. 35, namely: "The doctrine of 'res judicata' is very far-reaching and effective. It is founded on principles of the wisest policy, because the peace and order of society require that a matter once litigated should not again be drawn in question between the same parties, or those claiming through them. But, whilst it is important to maintain the principle in all its integrity, it is not less important that it should be clearly defined, and kept within its proper limits. All agree as to its utility and necessity, but there has been a difference of opinion as to its precise limits, and its application in particular cases. As we understand it, the rule established in the Duchess of Kingston's Case, is: 'First, that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, directly on the point is, as a plea in bar, or as evidence, conclusive between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another court; secondly, that the judgment of a court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is in like manner conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another court for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which comes collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment.' 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 424, and notes. It seems, therefore, to make out the defense at least three things are necessary: The parties must be the same, or their privies; the subject-matter must be the same; and the precise point must have been ruled." We may remark at the beginning that the present action was commenced by W. L. Mauldin for himself and such others in like plight with himself who would elect to come into this suit, and that, by a consent order passed in the case at bar, Theron Earle, James McPherson, W. C. Gobson, and others did come in under such invitation. Each of these parties hold their property separately from each other, and are not privies of W. L. Mauldin. So, therefore, it would seem that even if W. L. Mauldin was bound by the former judgment, under the doctrine of res judicata, his coplaintiffs are not so bound. But is W. L. Mauldin precluded from this suit by the former adjudication? In the former suit W. L. Mauldin sought to enjoin the city council of Greenville from levying an assessment upon his property on Main street to pay for the cost of an improvement to the street (Main) running in front of his property; but, in praying for an injunction against the assessment upon his property because of the improvement to the street, he also prayed that the city council of Greenville should be restrained from levying an assessment on his property to improve the sidewalks and the drain in front of his property. So, therefore, the judgment of this court, composed as it was then of the present Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Pope (for Mr. Justice Gary did not sit in that case), was in these words: "It is therefore the judgment of this court that so much of the judgment of the circuit court as grants a perpetual injunction against the defendant, preventing any assessment upon the property of the plaintiff, and other citizens of the city of Greenville in like plight as the plaintiff, to pay for the cost of improving the roadway of Main street, in said city, be affirmed, but when the said judgment enjoins the defendants from levying and assessing upon the plaintiff, and others in like plight with him, the cost of the improvements to the sidewalks and drains fronting their respective lands, it be reversed." The plaintiffs seek to show that, although such was the judgment of this court in the previous case, yet that judgment referred to the status of the parties in the year 1893, and that since that time, to wit, in the year 1896, the city council of Greenville has caused its engineer to relocate both the sidewalks and drains, claiming to act under the act of the legislature passed in the year 1891, and also by virtue of sundry resolutions passed by the said city council of Greenville, whereby they required the taxpayers in question to pay off the cost of such improvements and drains, so that each of such taxpayers would pay one third of the cost of sidewalks and drains in front of his property, and also one third of the cost of such improvements of the sidewalks and drains on the opposite side of the street, thus making each taxpayer who owns land on Main street pay two thirds of one half of the aggregate cost of such sidewalks and drains on both sides of such street so improved. It is thus hoped by the taxpayers in question that the doctrine of res judicata may be avoided. This matter thus presented is not free from difficulty, but we much prefer not to be misled by any apparent avoidance of the former decision, so far as sidewalks and drains are concerned. The two justices who rendered the former decision confessed with candor that so much of their judgment as related to sidewalks and drains was reluctantly made, because of some previous decisions rendered while the Constitution of 1790 was of force, and not because, in their opinion, such previous decisions were bottomed upon correct principles of law. The two justices in question felt a reluctance to overrule such decisions; but now, when the court is full, we propose to go to the root of the matter, and, if it becomes necessary to destroy the former decision, as found in 42 S. C. 293, 27 L. R. A. 284, so far as sidewalks and drains are concerned, to do so.

It must be borne in mind that the Constitutions of 1787 and 1790 contained no restriction upon the power of the general assembly in the matter of taxation other than that which ordained: "No freeman of this state shall be taken or imprisoned, or exiled or disseized of his freehold, liberties, or priv-illeges, or outlawed, or exiled, or in any manner destroyed or deprived of life, liberty, or property but by the judgment of his peers or by the law of the land. . . . "So that whenever the general assembly itself, or any municipal corporation created by it and clothed by it with power, should desire and ordain the payment of a tax by the citizens, it was only necessary that the provisions of § 2 of article 9 of the Constitution of 1790 (which we have just quoted) should not be violated. Under previous legislation, which had been continued of force, the citizens of the city of Charleston were required to pay for sidewalks and drains fronting their premises. Therefore, under the wholesome provision, "by the law of the land," these improvements in the city of Charleston as to sidewalks and drains were held by the courts to be constitutional. But by the Constitution of the years 1868 and 1895 very radical changes were made on the subject of taxation. It was no longer left to the general assembly or its municipalities to tax as they pleased. All taxes were required to be levied according to the value of the property, real and personal. All persons and property were required to be taxed uniformly. Whenever any property was exempted from taxation, it was specifically named in the Constitution itself. The assessments of the value of property for taxation were required to be made in anticipation of the laying of taxes. Great care was taken in providing that taxes as laid by the state should be for public purposes, and by municipal corporations that taxation should be for corporate purposes. Taxes for municipalities were required not to exceed 8 per cent of taxable property. It is true, municipalities were allowed to tax, by a graduation tax, incomes, and to impose a graduated tax on occupations and business. By § 5 of article 10 in the Constitution of 1895, the general assembly was required to compel municipal corporations to exact a tax on all the property, except that specially exempted under the Constitution, for corporate purposes, and for the payment of debts contracted under authority of law. We thus see what strides the organic law of the state has made in regulating this power of taxation by the state and her municipalities. What a public purpose is to the state, a corporate purpose is to the municipality. It is the same thing in each, being differently named, so as to emphasize the difference in territorial limits. In Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455, Mr. Justice Miller very ably discussed the necessity, in a tax, that it could only be legally laid when for a public purpose. It is admitted that an effort is made by persons to justify the imposition of "special assessments," as they are called, by claiming that such assessments are made for specific divisions of corporate territory, so that certain streets are called "tax districts;" but it is enough for our purpose to say that in our Constitution no power is given to the general assembly to carve the territory of the state into special tax districts for state taxation, except into counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns, and villages, and what 43 L. R. A.

is denied under the Constitution to the general assembly for state purposes is equally denied to chartered cities, towns, or villages, in dividing up such cities, towns, or villages, as the case may be, into separate tax districts to answer corporate purposes. Whenever there is a public or corporate purpose, the whole property of the city, town, or village must be taxed to subserve such public or corporate purpose. It is admitted everywhere that a public highway belongs to no one citizen or set of citizens to the exclusion of other citizens. It belongs to the public, and the public should keep it in repair. Navigable streams are always open to the public as highways. Sidewalks are, after all, nothing but a part of the highway or roadway. The highway is for vehicles and for men and animals to use whenever they see proper. So with sidewalks. All pedestrians may use them, without let or hindrance. They belong to the public. The same argument that would convert a highway into a taxing district would convert a sidewalk into one, and vice versa. As well might it be demanded that, inasmuch as a state house or a county courthouse or a state college happens to be located nearer the property of some citizens than others (as must be the case), therefore such persons living nearest each of these must be responsible for a larger proportion of the expense of their construction than all other citizens. Such is not the law, and has never been the law, because opposed to common sense.

W. L. Mauldin, James McPherson, and Theron Earle had good, hard sidewalks in front of their respective lots on Main street, in the city of Greenville. Both Mauldin and McPherson had taken the pains, before laying their sidewalks, to confer with the city authorities, and locate the same on the grade required by said city authorities; but, when the latter saw proper to regrade the roadway of Main street, the result was that these sidewalks in front of the lots owned by Mauldin, McPherson, and Earle were either too high or too low, with reference to the new roadway. Hence the city council saw proper to regrade the sidewalks, and lay afresh an improved pavement on the sidewalk. For this, for the distance of 105 feet, Mauldin was required to pay $174.59 therefor. Now, look at this proposition. Mauldin had, prior to the year 1896, under the direction of the city authorities, constructed a sidewalk and drain in front of his property, which sidewalk and drain comported with the grade of said Main street up to the year 1893. But the city authorities determined to improve Main street as a roadway by changing the grade, because thereby it facilitated public travel over said street, and such improvement was completed. Then the city council concluded to improve the sidewalks so that the grade of the same, when paved, should be in keeping with the newly-graded roadway on Main street, and to do this they assessed two thirds of the cost of the same upon the said W. L. Mauldin for his 105-foot frontage on Main street. Was this not all required for the benefit of the public? Who would be responsible for any damages to the pedestrians which might occur by reason of the defective sidewalk? Certainly not W. L. Mauldin or McPherson or Theron Earle, if such damages occurred on the pavement in front of their respective lots.

In Mauldin v. Greenville, 42 S. C. 293, 27 L. R. A. 284, this court announced that this state has repudiated, and still continues to repudiate, the doctrine of supposed benefit to owners of lots of land abutting on public streets, in levying taxes; and we are now satisfied that such former decision, where it upheld assessments made upon owners of lots abutting on streets where improved sidewalks and drains are constructed, was wrong, and should be reversed, as opposed to our present Constitution. Such conclusion on our part renders it unnecessary that we should pass upon any other question raised by this appeal.

It is therefore the judgment of this court that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

Oliver WHEELOCK, Appt.,
v.

Elmer E. JACOBS.

(70 Vt. 162.)

1. A stream of water large enough to fill a  $\frac{1}{2}$  pipe, running through a fissure or hole in the bed rock several feet below the surface of the ground, but not flowing in a well-defined channel underground, is to be deemed percolating water which can be appropriated by the owner of the land without liability to the owner of a spring a short distance therefrom, into which some of the water has been accustomed to find its way.
2. Percolating water is regarded as a part of the earth itself as much as the soil and the stones, with the same absolute right of use and appropriation by the owner of the land in which it is.
3. The doctrine of prescription is not applicable to percolating water.
4. A grant of a spring does not by implication convey percolating water before it reaches the spring.

(Taft, J., dissents.)

(December 2, 1897.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Washington County Court in favor of defendant in an action brought to enjoin the interference with water percolating to complainant's spring. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. J. Deavitt and J. P. Lamson, for appellant:

The orator, by his deed of the house and spring, had the right to all the benefits as they then existed. The defendant by obtaining a subsequent deed, with or without consideration from the same grantor who reserved all he had before that time deeded, large enough to dig and blast on, where it was obvious to him the water supply of the spring might be reached, cannot deprive the orator of his rights.

NOTE.—As to rights in subterranean waters, see note to Southern P. R. Co. v. Dufour (Cal.) 19 L. R. A. 92; also Willis v. Perry (Iowa) 26 L. R. A. 124; and Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Cline (Fla.) 33 L. R. A. 376. 43 L. R. A.

Coolidge v. Hager, 43 Vt. 9, 5 Am. Rep. 256; Vermont C. R. Co. v. Hills, 23 Vt. 681; Minard v. Currier, 67 Vt. 489; Broom, Legal Maxims, p. 362; Nicholas v. Chamberlain, Cro. Jac. 121; Goodrich v. Burbank, 12 Allen, 459, 90 Am. Dec. 161; Nitzell v. Paschall, 3 Rawle, 76.

Mr. John H. Senter, for appellee:

Whose is the land, his is also that which is above or below it.

Wharton, Legal Maxims, p. 24; Broom, Legal Maxims, p. 395; Domat, Civil Law, § 1581; Pardessus, Traité des Servitudes, § 76.

The maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, is mere verbiage.

Bonomi v. Backhouse, El. Bl. & El. 643; Hague v. Wheeler, 157 Pa. 324, 22 L. R. A. 141.

If a man digs a well in his own field, and thereby drains his neighbor's, he may do so unless he does it maliciously.

Acton v. Blundell, 12 Mees. & W. 324; 2 Bl. Com. p. 18; 2 Bouvier, Inst. § 160.

The rule in relation to diverting a natural watercourse, to the injury of other riparian proprietors, does not apply to underground springs of water.

2 Washb. Real Prop. 44; Pingrey, Real Prop. § 224.

Percolating water is part of the soil, or cannot be distinguished from it. Hidden or unknown veins of water belong to the soil, and constitute a part of it, and may be used, controlled, and removed by the owner in the same manner that he can the soil through which the water percolates.

1 Pingrey, Real Prop. § 225; 3 Kent, Com. 14th ed. 44, note b; Kerr, Real Prop. § 2224; Eggleston, Damages, § 347; Gould, Waters, § 280; Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, § 68.

The owner of land may construct a well thereon, although by so doing he cuts off the supply of water to the springs and wells in the vicinity.

2 Waterman, Trespass, p. 272; Goddard, Easem. Bennett's ed. p. 64; Bishop, Non-contr. L. § 877; Weeks, Damnum Absque Injuria, §§ 100, 103; Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Personal, p. 282.

If a person without any intention to injure an adjacent owner, and while making use of his own land for any suitable and lawful purpose, cuts off, diverts, or destroys the use of an underground spring or current of water which has no known or defined course, but has been accustomed to penetrate and flow into the land of his neighbor, he is not thereby liable to any action for the diversion or stoppage of such water.

Washb. Easem. 2d ed. § 411; Beach, Inj. § 1114; 6 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2945; 1 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 144; Angell, Watercourses, § 109.

Acton v. Blundell, 12 Mees. & W. 324, established the doctrine in England of the absolute right of the owner of land, through whose land water percolates, to use that water.

In Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 549, 1 English Ruling Cases, 729, this rule is laid down: "Where a proprietor digs a well on his own land, and pumps up water to an extent exceeding what is required for his private use, with the result of absorbing water from the substrata and diminishing the supply enjoyed by neighboring proprietors, but without diverting water already collected in any definite channel, the loss suffered by these proprietors is damnum absque injuria, and affords no ground of action against the first proprietor."

Bury v. Pope, Cro. Eliz. pt. 1, p. 118; Balard v. Tomlinson, L. R. 26 Ch. Div. 194; Broadbent v. Ramsbotham, 11 Exch. 602, 34 Eng. L. & Eq. 553; Smith v. Kenrick, 7 C. B. 566; Ballacorkish Min. Co. v. Dumbell, 43 L. J. P. C. N. S. 19, L. R. 5 P. C. 49; Brain v. Marfell, 41 L. T. N. S. 455, 20 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 93; Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 68; North Shore R. Co. v. Pion, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 612, 59 L. J. P. C. N. S. 25; Wyatt v. Harrison, 3 Barn. & Ad. 871; New River Co. v. Johnson, 2 El. & El. 435; Queen v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, 3 Best & S. 708; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721.

Percolating water belongs absolutely to the owner of the soil, and his title thereto is not affected by the fact that an impervious stratum beneath and on which the porous stratum containing the water rested in close contact directs the course of percolating water over adjoining land.

Gould v. Eaton, 111 Cal. 639; Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 303, 10 Am. Rep. 299; Southern P. R. Co. v. Dufour, 95 Cal. 615, 19 L. R. A. 92; Ingraham v. Hutchinson, 2 Conn. 584; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 532, 52 Am. Dec. 352; Brown v. Illius, 25 Conn. 583, 27 Conn. 84, 71 Am. Dec. 49; Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Oline, 37 Fla. 586, 33 L. R. A. 376; New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Peterson, 14 Ind. 112, 77 Am. Dec. 60; Greencastle v. Hazelett, 23 Ind. 189; Taylor v. Fickas, 64 Ind. 167, 31 Am. Rep. 114; Benthall v. Seifert, 77 Ind. 302; Cafo & V. R. Co. v. Houry, 71 Ind. 364; People's Gas Co. v. Tyner, 131 Ind. 277, 16 L. R. A. 443; Hougan v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 35 Iowa, 558, 14 Am. Rep. 502; Quinn v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 510; Emporia v. Soden, 25 Kan. 588, 37 Am. Rep. 265; Hail v. Reed, 15 B. Mon. 479; Redman v. Forman, 83 Ky. 214; 43 L. R. A.

Thurston v. Hancock, 12 Mass. 220, 7 Am. Dec. 57; Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. 434; Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117; Wilson v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 265, 11 Am. Rep. 352; Chase v. Silverstone, 62 Me. 175, 16 Am. Rep. 419; Chealey v. King, 74 Me. 164, 43 Am. Rep. 569; Upjohn v. Rickland Trop. Bd. of Health, 46 Mich. 542; Shane v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 71 Mo. 238, 36 Am. Rep. 489; Beatrice Gas Co. v. Thomas, 41 Neb. 662; Mosier v. Caldwell, 7 Nev. 363; Strait v. Brown, 16 Nev. 317, 40 Am. Rep. 497; Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Asso. v. Asbury Park Omrs. 40 N. J. Eq. 447; Lord v. Carbon Iron Mfg. Co. 42 N. J. Eq. 157; Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns. 92, 8 Am. Dec. 369; Lasala v. Holdbrook, 4 Paige, 169, 25 Am. Dec. 524; Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357; Wagner v. Long Island R. Co. 2 Hun, 635; Conhocton Stone Road Co. v. Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. Co. 3 Hun, 528; Bellows v. Sackett, 15 Barb. 96; Ellis v. Duncan, 21 Barb. 230; Delhi v. Youmans, 50 Barb. 316, 45 N. Y. 362, 6 Am. Rep. 100; Waffle v. New York C. R. Co. 58 Barb. 423; Goodale v. Tuttle, 29 N. Y. 459; Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 520, 91 Am. Dec. 72; Bliss v. Greeley, 45 N. Y. 671, 6 Am. Rep. 157; Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39, 28 Am. Rep. 93; Bloodgood v. Ayers, 108 N. Y. 400; Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 204; Elster v. Springfield, 40 Ohio St. 82; Taylor v. Welch, 6 Or. 198; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721; Stoughton's Appeal, 88 Pa. 198; Kier v. Peterson, 41 Pa. 357; Halderman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 517, 54 Am. Dec. 511, and notes; Chicago & A. Oil & Min. Co. v. United States Petroleum Co. 57 Pa. 83; Coleman v. Chadwick, 80 Pa. 81, 21 Am. Rep. 93; Trout v. McDonald, 83 Pa. 146; Lybe's Appeal, 106 Pa. 626, 51 Am. Rep. 542; Hague v. Wheeler, 157 Pa. 324, 22 L. R. A. 141; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 143, 57 Am. Rep. 445; Collins v. Chartier's Valley Gas Co. 131 Pa. 143, 6 L. R. A. 280; Williams v. Ladew, 161 Pa. 283; Buffum v. Harris, 5 R. I. 243; Metcalf v. Nelson, 8 S. D. 87; Sullivan v. Northern Spy Min. Co. 11 Utah, 438, 30 L. R. A. 186; Meyer v. Tacoma Light & W. Co. 8 Wash. 144.

There are no correlative rights between adjoining proprietors as to waters percolating under the surface.

Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49, 31 Vt. 358; Delhi v. Youmans, 50 Barb. 316; Harwood v. Benton, 32 Vt. 724; Clark v. Conroe, 38 Vt. 469; Boynton v. Gilman, 53 Vt. 17; Minard v. Carrier, 67 Vt. 489.

An act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent.

14 Alb. L. J. 61; Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. 308; 21 Alb. L. J. 284.

But no man by mere prior enjoyment of the advantages of his own land can obtain a servitude in the land of another.

If I see a well on my neighbor's land, I have no power to interfere, and no occasion to announce any purpose as to my own land. Then, should this state of things continue during the prescription period, there can be no presumption that we bargained for it, since there was nothing to call out a controversy or a compromise.

Bishop, Noncontr. L. § 885; Gould, Waters, § 281; Kerr, Real Prop. § 2221; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 52 Am. Dec. 352; Angell, Watercourses, § 114; Goddard, Easem. p. 63; Washb. Real Prop. pp. 327, 328; Pingrey, Real Prop. § 227; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 725; Halde-man v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 514, 84 Am. Dec. 515; Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117; Lybe's Appeal, 106 Pa. 626, 51 Am. Rep. 542; Chase v. Silverstone, 62 Me. 175, 16 Am. Rep. 419; Delhi v. Youmans, 50 Barb. 316, 45 N. Y. 362, 6 Am. Rep. 100; Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 294; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 42, 100 Am. Dec. 597; Whetstone v. Bowser, 29 Pa. 59; Beasley v. Shaw, 6 East, 208; Rawstron v. Taylor, 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 435, 11 Exch. 369; Greatrea v. Hayward, 8 Exch. 291; Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748; Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 303, 10 Am. Rep. 209; Weid v. Hornby, 7 East, 195; Webb v. Bird, 10 C. B. N. S. 260; Rights in Subterranean Waters, 2 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 65; 1 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 637.

The orator's deed simply conveys to him a spring of water.

Conveyance of a well carries, not only the right to use the water, but conveys, not only the orifice reaching down to the water, but the whole opening in the earth before it was stoned, and the stone wall and the water.

Browne, Judicial Interpretation, 524; Mixer v. Reed, 25 Vt. 254; Magoon v. Harris, 46 Vt. 264.

The grants and the covenants of the grantor are the precise measures of the orator's right.

Goddard, Easem. p. 185; Lybe's Appeal, 106 Pa. 626, 51 Am. Rep. 542; Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 164, 43 Am. Rep. 569; Bliss v. Greeley, 45 N. Y. 672, 6 Am. Rep. 157; Brain v. Marfell, 41 L. T. N. S. 455, 20 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 93.

Rowell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On January 1, 1872, Eben Scribner, by his warranty deed of that date, conveyed to the orator a dwelling house, outbuildings, and a spring then supplying said buildings with water. The spring was on other land of the grantor's and the words conveying it are: "Also a spring of water, and the pipe that conveys the water from said spring to said buildings." This is not a spring where water issues from the ground by natural forces, but was formed by excavating 3 or 4 feet through the soil to the bedrock, which dips towards the Winoski at quite a sharp angle. At the bottom of this excavation there is a fissure in the rock through which the water comes into the excavation from the upper side. This fissure was closed on the lower side, and the excavation bricked up, to make a receptacle for the water. In wet times there is usually plenty of water, but in dry times it is scant. The snow and rain that fall on the land above supply the spring with water, which percolates the soil to the bedrock, then follows the rock to the river, "passing over the rock in its lowest places, or through some fissure or hole therein," as the master finds. The orator's grantor consequently conveyed to J. G. Scribner the land around the spring, except what he had theretofore conveyed by deed, and J. G. Scribner conveyed to the defendant a small piece of it just below the spring, on which the latter, without malice, but for the purpose of obtaining needed water for his own house, dug down to the bedrock, the top of which was "rotten, and full of joints," which, on being removed with pick and shovel to the depth of 3½ or 4 feet below the surface, revealed a fissure or hole in the rock 6 or 8 inches in diameter, through which a stream of water was running large enough to fill a five-eighths pipe, the direction of which, if continued in the same course, would carry it some feet south of the orator's spring. The defendant stopped this hole at the lower end, except putting in a ½ inch pipe near the bottom to let the water through, and this formed a small hollow in the rock, which filled with water, and from which the defendant took water to his house. Some portion of the water thus taken by the defendant theretofore usually found its way into the orator's spring through some subterranean passage or passages, and was one source of its supply; and it is to restrain this diversion of water that the bill was brought.

This is not a case of water flowing in a well-defined channel under ground, but of water coming from rain and melting snows, percolating in varying quantities the soil of an extensive hill-side to the bedrock, down which it wanders in divers depressions and passages of unknown location, size, and direction, until it finally reaches the river. Now, there are no correlative rights between owners of adjoining land in respect of percolating water, which is regarded as a part of the earth itself, as much as the soil and the stones, with the same absolute right of use and appropriation by the owner of the land in which it is. Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49; Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 349, 1 English Ruling Cases, 729. Hence, on this score, the orator's loss is without legal injury, and affords no ground for sustaining the bill. Nor has the orator acquired a prescriptive right to this water, for the doctrine of prescription is not applicable to percolating water. Angell, Watercourses, 6th ed. § 114 p; Lybe's Appeal, 106 Pa. 626, 51 Am. Rep. 542; Chasemore v. Richards, above cited; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 52 Am. Dec. 352. But the orator says that his deed conveys the water to him by implication before it reaches the spring, because the maxim is that when you grant a thing you are presumed also to grant to the extent of your power that without which the thing granted cannot be enjoyed, and that, therefore, the acts complained of are in derogation of the grant; and he relies on Coolidge v. Hager, 43 Vt. 9, 5 Am. Rep. 256, as fully sustaining his claim. That was a conveyance of a house and lot without mention of a spring owned by the grantor on the land of another, from which water was then running to said house through an aqueduct that was partly in the land conveyed, partly in other adjoining land of the grantor's and partly in the land of the third person. No question was made, nor could be, but that the grant carried all of the aqueduct that was in the land conveyed, and the court held, on the principle of the maxim invoked, that the grant of the house and the land and of that part of the aqueduct in the land, carried with them the water as it was then running, with the right to the spring and the aqueduct sufficient for its continuance, as an appurtenance of the house and the land. But that case is not like this. There the question was whether the spring was conveyed at all or not, while here it is, not whether the spring was conveyed, but whether the grant of it conveys, by implication, percolating water before it reaches the spring; and so the question is as to the extent of the grant, as it was in Minard v. Currier, 67 Vt. 489, which is much in point. That was a conveyance in fee of certain springs or wells fed by percolating water, with a further conveyance of all the grantor's right to the water that would naturally flow into them. It was said that a grant of the land containing the wells would not have deprived the grantor nor his grantees of the right to dig upon the remaining land to the injury of the wells, but that a right to percolating water greater than could be acquired by a deed of the land could be created by apt and sufficient words, and, if the language of the deed clearly imports such right, the law will recognize it; and it was held that the further conveyance did import such right in that case, and conveyed the water that the wells would receive when nothing was done to intercept its passage. Whitehead v. Parks, 2 Hurlst. & N. 870, is to the same effect. Now, there is no difference between granting land containing a spring, and granting a spring without more; and in each case, although the grantee takes the fee, he must stand on his common-law right as to percolating water. The orator's deed gives him the spring and the water therein and flowing therefrom, but it gives him no right to water before it reaches the spring, and consequently no right to prevent his grantor, nor those claiming under him, from diverting it from the spring. Brain v. Marfell (English Court of Appeals) 41 L. T. N. S. 455, 20 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 93, is a leading case on this subject, and a stronger one for the plaintiff than this is for the orator. There the defendant sold a spring to the plaintiff and the sole right to the water therein and obtainable therefrom, with the right of conveying the same through a pipe in the defendant's land to the plaintiff's dwelling house, with the right of entry for repairs and other proper purposes, with a declaration that the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, should be the absolute owner of the spring, and a covenant of quiet enjoyment. The defendant subsequently sold some of his land near the spring to a railroad company, which made a tunnel through it that destroyed the spring, whereupon the plaintiff sued the defendant for a breach of his contract; and it was held that the defendant had conveyed the water only after it reached the spring, and that draining the water before it reached the spring was no breach. Lord Coleridge said, in the course of his opinion, that in a case on the western circuit, the name of which he did not remember, it was held that in the conveyance of a spring with the water flowing from it, the spring head, with the definite stream of water flowing from it, was meant, and that interference with the water before it reached the head, or before it began to run in a definite channel, was not actionable. In Bliss v. Greeley, 45 N. Y. 671, 6 Am. Rep. 157, the owner of a farm granted to the plaintiff, with a covenant of warranty, the right to dig and stone up a spring thereon, and to lay a pipe therefrom to plaintiff's house. Held, that the entire farm was not thereby made servient to the grant, and that the grantor's assignee might lawfully dig a spring near plaintiff's spring though it was thereby rendered useless. Lybe's Appeal above cited, was like this, a bill for an injunction. There the grantor of land reserved the right to conduct water from a spring thereon to his adjoining land, on which a well was subsequently dug, whereby the subterranean supply of the spring was cut off; and an injunction was denied. In Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 164, 43 Am. Rep. 569, the grantor of land reserved the privilege of taking water from a spring thereon to his house and barn and pasture. The court said that, while the grantor's rights in the spring were completely subject to the grantee's right to consult his own convenience and advantage in the digging of a well in the land conveyed for better supplying it with water, yet, if he dug the well for the sole and malicious purpose of cutting off the sources of the spring and injuring the plaintiff, he would be liable. By our law it is immaterial with what motive a man does an act lawful in itself.

Decree affirmed, and cause remanded.

Taft, J., dissents.

Louis PLOOF, Admr., etc., of Frank Ploof,
v.

BURLINGTON TRACTION COMPANY.

(.....Vt.....)

1. The negligence of parents, contributing to an accident which injures a minor child, cannot be imputed to the child in an action by the child against a third person for personal injuries sustained through negligence.

2. The contributory negligence of NOTE.—As to the doctrine of imputing negligence to children because of their parents' negligence, see note to Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox (Ill.) 21 L. R. A. 76; also Bottoms v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 784; Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. v. Gravitt (Ga.) 26 L. R. A. 553; and Roth v. Union Depot Co. (Wash.) 31 L. R. A. 855.

parents is a defense to an action for the death of their minor child, under Stat. §§ 2451, 2452, which give the right of action to the personal representative of the child for the benefit of the next of kin.

3. Negligence of parents in permitting a boy ten years old to go upon the street does not proximately contribute to an accident resulting from his attempt to cross the street in front of a moving car.

(July 21, 1898.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Chittenden County Court made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's minor son which resulted in a verdict in defendant's favor. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Seneca Haselton, E. R. Hard, and George W. Deberville, for plaintiff:

The doctrine that negligence of a parent or of one standing in the place of a parent is imputable to a child of tender years so as to defeat its recovering in an action against another for injuries negligently inflicted was first announced in Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273.

The next case involving this question was Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67, which denied the doctrine of the imputed negligence of a parent.

The supreme court of Massachusetts in 1857 held as that of New York had done.

Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co. 8 Gray, 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233.

In the following year, 1858, the question came before the courts of Connecticut and Tennessee. Both repudiated the doctrine of Hartfield v. Roper.

Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; Whirley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 613.

The doctrine of Robinson v. Cone is now the prevailing doctrine in this country.

The reason underlying Hartfield v. Roper is fallacious.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 77, 78; 2 Thomp. Trials, § 1687; 2 Thomp. Neg. ed. 1886, p. 1186, note; Wood, Railway Law, § 322; Bishop, Noncontr. Law, § 582; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 127; Harris, Damages by Corp. § 463; Wharton, Neg. ed. 1874, § 313; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 400, 98 Am. Dec. 175; 4 Am. Law Rev. 405; 3 Elliott, Railroads, p. 1881; Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Manson, 30 Ohio St. 451; Eric City Pass. R. Co. v. Schuster, 113 Pa. 412, 57 Am. Rep. 471; Huff v. Ames, 16 Neb. 139, 49 Am. Rep. 716; Atlanta & O. Air-Line R. Co. v. Gravitt, 93 Ga. 369, 26 L. R. A. 553; Bottoms v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 114 N. C. 699, 25 L. R. A. 784; Government Street R. Co. v. Hanlon, 53 Ala. 70; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Moore, 59 Tex. 64, 46 Am. Rep. 265; Westbrook v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 66 Miss. 560; Winters v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 99 Mo. 509, 6 L. R. A. 536; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 138 Ill. 370, 21 L. R. A. 76; Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 494; Shippey v. Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Shockman (Kan.) 52 Pac. 43 L. R. A.

446; Newman v. Phillipsburg Horse Car R. Co. 52 N. J. L. 446, 8 L. R. A. 542; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Hone, 59 N. J. L. 276; Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 396, 6 L. R. A. 545; Norfolk & P. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 27 Gratt. 455; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Groseclose, 88 Va. 267; Westerfield v. Lewis Bros. 43 La. Ann. 63; Roth v. Union Depot Co. 13 Wash. 525, 31 L. R. A. 355; Moore v. Metropolitan R. Co. 2 Mackey, 437; Berry v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 70 Fed. Rep. 679.

In those states in which the rule of Hartfield v. Roper has been recognized and not repudiated it has been in various ways modified and restricted under the growing sense of its harshness and unreasonableness.

Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Sears, 11 Ind. App. 654; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 43 Md. 534; Meeks v. Southern P. R. Co. 56 Cal. 513, 38 Am. Rep. 67.

In New York, Massachusetts, and Maine, it is now uniformly held that if the child in fact did nothing at the time of injury which would be deemed negligence in an adult, the contributory negligence of its parents or guardian must not be imputed to it in an action in its behalf.

Ihl v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 47 N. Y. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 450; McGarry v. Loomis, 63 N. Y. 104; Collins v. South Boston R. Co. 142 Mass. 301, 56 Am. Rep. 675; Munn v. Reed, 4 Allen, 431; Lynch v. Smith, 104 Mass. 52, 6 Am. Rep. 188; O'Brien v. McGlinchey, 68 Me. 552.

When the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, our statute gives a right of action in the name of the personal representative of such deceased person for the benefit of the next of kin, whenever, if death had not ensued, the party injured would have been entitled to maintain an action, and it therefore necessarily follows that no element of contributory negligence can enter into the consideration of a case brought by an administrator which would not have entered into the consideration of the case if death had not ensued and the action had been brought by the party injured.

Vt. Stat. §§ 2451, 2452; Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 396, 6 L. R. A. 545; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Hone, 59 N. J. L. 275; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Groseclose, 88 Va. 267; Westerfield v. Lewis, 43 La. Ann. 63; Cleveland, C. C. & O. R. Co. v. Crawford, 24 Ohio St. 631, 15 Am. Rep. 633; Atlanta & O. Air-Line R. Co. v. Gravitt, 93 Ga. 369, 26 L. R. A. 553.

The negligence of the parents, if there was any, consisted in letting their boy of ten years go to the fair on the morning of the day on which he was injured at four o'clock in the afternoon while returning therefrom. If the parents were negligent, their negligence was remote and not proximate, and, whether imputable or not, cannot affect the right of recovery in this case.

Trow v. Vermont C. R. Co. 24 Vt. 487, 58 Am. Dec. 191; Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546; Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 377; Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 458; Templeton v. Montpelier, 56 Vt. 328; Davis v. Central Vermont

R. Co. 66 Vt. 290; Bisaillon v. Blood, 64 N. H. 565; Berry v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 70 Fed. Rep. 679; Kyne v. Wilmington & N. R. Co. 8 Houst. (Del.) 185; Waite v. North Eastern R. Co. El. Bl. & El. 719; Meeks v. Southern P. R. Co. 56 Cal. 513, 38 Am. Rep. 67.

Messrs. A. G. Whittemore and R. E. Brown, for defendant:

No greater degree of care as to pedestrians or private vehicles in the street is demanded of a street-railway company than is exacted of the owner of any other vehicle.

Booth, Street Railways, § 309; Unger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 51 N. Y. 497.

As to members of the general public between whom and the company no relation arising out of contract, express or implied, exists, the employees are bound to exercise only what amounts, under all the circumstances of the case, to ordinary care and prudence.

Booth, Street Railways, § 309; Pendleton Street R. Co. v. Shires, 18 Ohio St. 255; Pendleton Street R. Co. v. Stallman, 22 Ohio St. 1; Etherington v. Prospect Park & C. I. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 641; Roller v. Sutter Street R. Co. 66 Cal. 230.

The motorman has the right to assume that the traveler in front has heard the warning given, and will turn aside in time to avoid injury.

Everett v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. (Cal.) 6 Am. Elec. Cas. 460; McLaughlin v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. 48 La. Ann. 23; Fleishman v. Neversink Mountain R. Co. 174 Pa. 510.

This suit was brought for the sole benefit of the parents of the deceased. The question of their negligence was for the jury.

Lindsay v. Canadian P. R. Co. 68 Vt. 556; Roller v. Sutter Street R. Co. 66 Cal. 230; Booth, Street Railways, §§ 390, 391; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 399, 98 Am. Dec. 175; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1191; Glassey v. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. 57 Pa. 172; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Long, 75 Pa. 265; Chicago v. Starr, 42 Ill. 174, 89 Am. Dec. 422; Ewen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 38 Wis. 613; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 71; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 44; Grant v. Fitchburg, 160 Mass. 16; Casey v. Smith, 152 Mass. 294, 9 L. R. A. 259; Pittsburgh, A. & M. R. Co. v. Pearson, 72 Pa. 169; Smith v. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. 92 Pa. 450, 37 Am. Rep. 705; Albertson v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co. 48 Iowa, 292; Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 396, 6 L. R. A. 545; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 24 Ohio St. 670; Reed v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 34 Minn. 557; O'Flaherty v. Union R. Co. 45 Mo. 70, 100 Am. Dec. 343; Schierhold v. North Beach & M. R. Co. 40 Cal. 447; Westbrook v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 66 Miss. 560; Hoppe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 357; Dahl v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 62 Wis. 652; Ewen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 38 Wis. 613; Chicago v. Starr, 42 Ill. 174, 89 Am. Dec. 422; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Hoffman, 80 Tex. 420; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Groseclose, 88 Va. 267; Birkett v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 110 N. Y. 504; Ihl v. Forty- 43 L. R. A.

Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 47 N. Y. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 450.

The degree of care and caution required of a child must be measured by his age and capacity.

Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67; Maher v. Central Park, N. & E. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 52; McCarthy v. Cass Avenue & F. G. R. Co. 92 Mo. 536; Crissey v. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. 75 Pa. 83; Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. v. Hassard, 75 Pa. 367; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Corrihan, 46 Ohio St. 283, 3 L. R. A. 385; Croswell, Electricity, § 760.

The question of negligence is generally for the jury.

Croswell, Electricity, § 764; Booth, Street Railways, § 385; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 43 Md. 534; Stone v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 104; Connolly v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 114 N. Y. 104; McCarthy v. Cass Avenue & F. G. R. Co. 92 Mo. 536; Maher v. Central Park, N. & E. R. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 52; Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. v. Hassard, 75 Pa. 367; McLaughlin v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 48 La. Ann. 23; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. §§ 117, 118.

To the extent that a child has knowledge and understanding of the danger to which he is exposed, or where it is of such a nature as to be necessarily obvious to one of his years, he is under a legal duty to avoid it.

Booth, Street Railways, § 385; Ridenhour v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 102 Mo. 270; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox (Ill.) 8 L. R. A. 494; Sicift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645; Nagle v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 88 Pa. 35, 32 Am. Rep. 413; Manahan v. Steinway & H. P. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 760; Tucker v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 308; McMahon v. New York, 33 N. Y. 642; Sheets v. Conolly Street R. Co. 54 N. J. L. 518.

Ross, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover such damages as are just with reference to the pecuniary injuries resulting from the death of Frank Ploof, a boy ten years of age, to Louis Ploof, his father, the plaintiff administrator, and to his wife, the mother of Frank Ploof; the father and mother being the next of kin of Frank Ploof. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant. The defendant, on September 4, 1896, owned and operated an electric railway in the city of Burlington. On that day one of its cars ran over the intestate, Frank Ploof, and inflicted upon him such injuries that he died in a few hours. At that time the intestate was a boy ten years of age, healthy, and of ordinary ability. He attended the public schools, could read and write, and for about a year had sold evening papers on the street. He had gone about the city and on the streets on which the electric cars ran for the purpose of attending school and for the purpose of selling papers. On the day he was injured he had, with the consent of his parents, attended the annual fair at Howard Park, about  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile distant from the place of the accident, and was returning for the purpose of procuring and selling the evening papers. His parents were not present at the place of the accident when it occurred, and resided some distance from it. The defendant claimed that the parents of the deceased were negligent in permitting him to go into the streets where the cars were, and at the defendant's request, against the exception of the plaintiff, the court charged: "The defendant claims that the negligence of the parents contributed to the accident; that they did not exercise ordinary care—the care of prudent persons in permitting the boy to go into the streets where the car ran. The parents were bound in this respect to exercise ordinary care,—the care of prudent persons,—and if they were negligent in permitting the boy to go to the fair and return home over Pine street, where the accident took place, the plaintiff cannot recover." The plaintiff took several other exceptions to the charge, but now insists upon this one alone. He insists that this exception should be sustained:

1. Because he contends that the recovery is in the right of the intestate, and that under the decisions of this court, the negligence of the parents contributing to the accident which injures their minor child cannot be imputed to the minor child in an action brought by the child against a third person to recover personal damages sustained through the concurring negligence of such third person. Assuming, but not conceding, that this is such an action, or one in which the administrator is seeking to recover damages sustained by the intestate, and for the benefit of the estate of intestate, his contention is supported by Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67, and note. That case has become a leading case against the doctrine of imputed negligence, and its doctrine is quite generally followed by courts of last resort, and indorsed by eminent legal writers. The doctrine of imputed negligence was announced in the earlier decision of Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273, which has been followed to some extent by courts of last resort. Some such courts which early adopted the doctrine on the strength of Hartfield v. Roper have receded and now hold the doctrine of Robinson v. Cone. Much has been written for and against the doctrine of imputed negligence. It is very fully and carefully collated and clearly set forth in the brief for the defendant. We shall take no time in reviewing the decisions on the subject. In a suit in which a minor or his administrator seeks to recover damages in the right of the minor, or in the right of his estate, for injuries inflicted upon such minor by the negligence of a party, it is difficult to find any satisfactory legal ground upon which such party can, in a court of justice, be heard to say: "True, I negligently inflicted a serious injury upon the child, but no legal obligation rests upon me to compensate the child for injuries inflicted by my negligence, because the parents of the child were negligent in the same transaction, 45 L. R. A.

and their negligence contributed to the happening of the accident occasioning such damages." Parents are the natural protectors and guardians of their minor children, but not their agents to waive torts committed upon them. The usual doctrine is that every joint tortfeasor is liable for all the damages committed, and there is no contribution between joint tortfeasors. Such excuse overturns this wholesome and just doctrine when the negligence of the parent is involved in the wrongdoing. It would be much easier to find good reasons for holding that such an injured child might recover jointly against his parent and the third person. This court is content to abide by the decision of Robinson v. Cone on the doctrine of imputed negligence.

2. The plaintiff contends that when the recovery, as in this case, is for the benefit of the parents, the contributory negligence of such parents is no defense. Put briefly, this contention is that a parent may recover damages sustained in part by his own wrong, or damages produced by an accident to which his own negligence contributed. This contention is against the recent decision of this court in Lindsay v. Canadian P. R. Co. 68 Vt. 556, and against the general doctrine that a party whose negligence has contributed to the happening of the accident causing him damages cannot recover, because he cannot recover for so much of such damages as he himself caused, and because the law will not, if it were possible fairly and justly so to do, trouble itself to inquire into and divide such damages between the wrongdoers contributing thereto. Again, it is practically impossible to ascertain and divide such damages justly between the parties whose negligence has contributed to the accident causing them. In Lindsay v. Canadian P. R. Co. there is no discussion of this doctrine. But the case in facts and in principle is like the present case, and the point was taken and fully discussed, supported by a large citation of authorities, at the hearing, and fully considered by the court. The plaintiff does not contend against the soundness of the general doctrine that a plaintiff whose negligence contributes to the happening of an accident causing him damages cannot recover, but contends that this case does not fall within that class of cases; that it is governed and controlled by the statute conferring it. Nor does he contend that the recovery, if had, would not be wholly for the benefit of the parents of the intestate. He insists that the statute either gives the damages in right of the intestate, or, if in the right of the parents, it gives an absolute right of recovery, regardless of the contributory negligence of such parents or next of kin. The statutes relied upon are Vt. Stat. §§ 2451, 2452. They read: When the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of a person or corporation, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, the person or corporation liable to such action, if death had not ensued, shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death is caused under such circumstances as amount in law to a felony." "Such action shall be brought in the name of the personal representative of such deceased person, and commenced within two years from his decease, and the court or jury before whom the issue is tried may give such damages as are just, with reference to the pecuniary injuries resulting from such death, to the wife and next of kin, and the amount recovered shall be for the benefit of such wife and next of kin, who shall receive the same proportions as in the distribution of the personal estate of persons dying intestate." It is manifest that the recovery under these statutes, though in the name of the personal representative of the deceased, is not, in general acceptation, for the benefit of the estate of the deceased, but is for the benefit of those who may take by the terms of the statute, and the damages are measured "with reference to the pecuniary injuries resulting from such death to the wife and next of kin." Hence such personal representative is not the agent of the estate of the deceased, and does not recover in the right of the deceased, but is the agent of the wife and next of kin, and recovers, although the recovery grows out of an injury to the deceased, not for the injury to the deceased, nor to his estate, but for a pecuniary injury to the wife and next of kin involved in and flowing from the injury to the deceased. This court had these statutes under consideration in Legg v. Britton, 64 Vt. 652. It is there said: "The recovery is for the benefit of his widow and next of kin. The damages are to be assessed, not with reference to the loss sustained by the intestate, but with reference to the pecuniary injury resulting to them from his death. It is contended that the statute gives a new right of action. Strictly, it is a new right of recovery arising from an injury to the intestate which gave or would have given him a right of action and of recovery, if death had not ensued. The amount to be recovered is determined by the injury sustained by the widow and next of kin. . . . The right of recovery and measure of damages are different from what existed in the intestate. This right of recovery did not exist at common law. It is wholly given by the act. It is not an act to cause to survive a right of recovery which otherwise would be taken away by the death of the injured. The damages are based mostly upon the wrongful destruction of the earning capacity of the intestate." Hence the contention that the recovery is in the right of the intestate, and can be defeated only by his contributory negligence, cannot be sustained. Nor does the statute give the representative of the wife and next of kin an absolute right of recovery. Their right to damages determines their right to recover. The language of the statute is, "the court and jury may give such damages as are just with reference," etc.

43 L. R. A.

From a very early day the common law has denied a recovery, as unjust, to a party whose negligence has contributed to the accident causing the injury for which he demands damages. All statutes conferring a right of recovery of damages, especially when in terms they give such damages only as are just, must be read and considered with reference to this universal principle of the common law. So read, this statute does not give an absolute right to recover in case a right of action would have survived to the intestate if death had not ensued. The plaintiff has brought to our attention some cases where the courts have apparently supported his contention. Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 396, 6 L. R. A. 545, cited by the plaintiff, is against his contention. The statute of Iowa gave a right of recovery to the estate of the minor intestate and one to the next of kin. The action was to recover for the estate. The court held that the contributory negligence of the parents could not be imputed to their minor child to defeat a recovery for his estate, but say, "Such negligence would prevent a recovery by the parents in their own right." Consolidated Traction Co. v. Hone, 59 N. J. L. 275, seems to support the contention of plaintiff. The statute of New Jersey is worded somewhat differently from our statute. The opinion cites—evidently without careful consideration—the Iowa case as supporting the decision. Whether the other cases cited by the plaintiff support his contention we have not been able to determine. The statutes in some of the states from which cases are cited are very different from the one under consideration, and may properly receive different consideration. Some give a definite sum in damages, without reference to the pecuniary injury to the party for whose benefit recovery is had. On further consideration we hold to the conclusion reached in Lindsay v. Canadian P. R. Co. 68 Vt. 556, that when the recovery is for "such damages as are just with reference to the pecuniary injuries resulting from such death to the wife and next of kin," the negligence of such wife and next of kin, entering into and contributing to the accident causing such death, will defeat their right to recover. Atlanta & C. Air-Line R. Co. v. Gravitt, 44 Am. St. Rep. 145, and note, 93 Ga. 369, 26 L. R. A. 553.

3. The plaintiff contends that there was error in the charge wherein, in substance, the court told the jury that, if the parents were negligent in permitting the boy to go into the street where the car ran, the plaintiff could not recover. He contends with much force, and, so far as disclosed by the exceptions, we think with reason, that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of these parents to be submitted to the jury; that the boy was of such an age, and of such physical and mental characteristics, that it was not negligence to permit him to go upon the streets where the cars ran; that the law required them to send him to school over such streets; that they had the right to send him on errands, or for pleasure and amusement, unattended, upon such streets where the law compelled them to send him to attend school. The plaintiff did not raise this question by a proper motion or request; hence we do not consider whether there was any evidence to go to the jury on the question of contributory negligence. By his exception to the charge he has raised the question whether evidence that the parents permitted the intestate to go upon the street had a tendency to show such proximate negligence contributing to the accident which caused his death as will defeat a recovery. The most this evidence tended to show was that the parents negligently permitted him to go unattended upon the street where the car ran, or that their negligence was a factor in bringing him to the place of the accident, but not a factor in the boy's attempting to cross the street in front of the moving car, and therefore not a factor entering into and contributing to the happening of the accident which caused his death. At most, their negligence was a remote, and not a proximate, factor of the accident. Such remote negligence will not defeat a right of recovery otherwise proved. In Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67, and note, the boy injured was only four years old, and was coasting on a sled on a street over which he was accustomed to pass in attending school. The trial court charged the jury, in reference to the negligence of the parents in allowing him to go unattended upon the street, as follows: "That if the boy were of so tender years as to be absolutely incapable of observing and avoiding travelers, it might be gross negligence in parents to permit him to be on the street, and in such case the defendant would not be liable unless he were also guilty of gross negligence; but that, if the plaintiff were an active boy of sufficient age to attend school, and was attending school, and if children of his age and capacity would ordinarily be allowed and expected to attend school, and be in the street, as he was, then there would be no gross negligence on the part of the parents, though the boy might not have the prudence and capacity of a man to avoid danger, and the defendant could derive no advantage from the principle of law before stated." The word "gross" is used somewhat indefinitely, probably in the sense of "proximate." This instruction was not found erroneous in this court. The court had under consideration the question of remote and proximate negligence as affecting a plaintiff's right to maintain an action in Trow v. Vermont C. R. Co. 24 Vt. 487, 58 Am. Dec. 191, and note. The plaintiff had negligently permitted his horse to be upon the highway, from which it went upon the defendant's railroad, where it was injured. The defendant had negligently failed to fence its railroad. After discussing the question and decided cases, the court says: "When there has been mutual negligence, and the negligence of each party was the proximate cause of the injury, no action whatever can be sustained. In the use of the words 'proximate cause' is meant negligence occurring at the time the injury happened. In such case no action can be sustained by either for the reason 'that, as there can be no apportionment of damages, there can be no recovery.' So, where the negligence of the plaintiff is proximate, and that of the defendant remote, or consisting in some other matter than what occurred at the time of the injury, in such case no action can be sustained, for the reason the immediate cause was the act of the plaintiff himself. Under this rule falls that class of cases where the injury arose from the want of ordinary or proper care on the part of the plaintiff at the time of its commission. These principles are sustained by Hill v. Warren, 2 Starkie, 377; Munroe v. Leach, 7 Met. 274; Parker v. Adams, 12 Met. 415, 46 Am. Dec. 694; Brownell v. Flagler, 5 Hill, 282; Brown v. Mawoell, 6 Hill, 592, 41 Am. Dec. 771; Williams v. Holland, 6 Car. & P. 23. On the other hand, when the negligence of the defendant is proximate, and that of the plaintiff remote, the action can then well be sustained, although the plaintiff is not entirely without fault." The doctrine of this case was followed in Hyde v. Jamaica, 27 Vt. 458; Templeton v. Montpelier, 56 Vt. 328, and in Davis v. Central Vermont R. Co. 66 Vt. 290. In Templeton v. Montpelier there were two highways leading from Montpelier to the place where the plaintiff desired to go. The referee found that the plaintiff was negligent in taking the highway where the accident occurred, but was guilty of no other contributory negligence. This court held that his negligence was remote, and permitted him to recover. In Davis v. Central Vermont R. Co., the defendant, it was found, owed a duty to the plaintiff to have moved the grain from the elevator before it was destroyed by fire, without their negligence being involved in the fire. It was held that defendant's negligence was the remote cause of the loss of the plaintiff's grain, and did not entitle them to recover. The negligence in the Case of Trow and in the two cases last named consisted in bringing the party or property destroyed to the place of the accident, as the parents' negligence in the case under consideration brought the intestate into the street where the cars ran, and it was held the negligence was remote, and, when that of the plaintiff, did not defeat his right of recovery, and, when that of the defendant, did not authorize a recovery. Hyde v. Jamaica falls within same class as Davis v. Central Vermont R. Co. These decisions sustain this exception taken by the plaintiff. It is observable that in each of the cases the failure to discharge a duty denominated "remote negligence" was not an active factor of the accident causing damages, but a factor in producing a condition upon which the proximate or causal negligence of the other party operated.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

Annie E. BEACH, Respt.,

v.

Abbie D. BROWN, Appt.

(.....Wash.....)

1. A married woman may maintain an action in her own name to recover damages for the alienation of her husband's affections where the statutes abolish all disabilities of the wife and give her the same right to sue as if she were single.
2. Procuring a divorce from her husband will not prevent a woman from maintaining an action against a third person for prior alienation of his affections.
3. Letters written by a husband to his wife during coverture are admissible to prove his affection for her in an action by her against a third person for alienation of his affections from her.
4. Evidence of declarations of a husband as to his purpose in writing letters to his wife during coverture is not admissible to contradict expressions of affection contained in them.
5. A husband who lives and cohabits with his wife, having children by her, is presumed to have an affection for her, which presumption will continue until overthrown by a fair preponderance of evidence to the contrary.

(November 29, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John E. Humphries, W. E. Humphrey, and E. P. Edsen, for appellant:

A married woman in the state of Washington cannot maintain a suit in her own name for tort unless her husband joins with her, where the damages secured would be community property.

The statutes of this state must be construed as one entire system of laws.

Humphries v. Davis, 100 Ind. 274, 50 Am. Rep. 788.

All of the sections have been construed together, and the rights of married women defined.

Seattle Bd. of Trade v. Hayden, 4 Wash. 263, 16 L. R. A. 530; Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 3 Wash. 592, 16 L. R. A. 808.

All property accumulated by either husband or wife, or both, after marriage, is community property.

The husband and wife cannot by contract change community to partnership property. In fact they cannot form a partnership; and while they may be in partnership the property is community property instead of co-partnership property, if accumulated by them after marriage.

Gallagher v. Bowie, 66 Tex. 265; Loper v. Western U. Telg. Co. 70 Tex. 689; State, Baumann, v. Langridge, 44 La. Ann. 1014; Barton v. Kavanaugh, 12 La. Ann. 333; Cooper v. Cappel, 29 La. Ann. 213; Holzap v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 38 La. Ann. 185, 58 Am. Rep. 177; McFadden v. Santa Ana, O. & T. Street R. Co. 87 Cal. 468, 11 L. R. A. 252; Neale v. Depot R. Co. 94 Cal. 425; Rice v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. 8 Tex. Civ. App. 130; Ezell v. Dodson, 60 Tex. 331; Texas C. R. Co. v. Burnett, 61 Tex. 638; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Black, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 363.

The right to recover for personal injury, as well as the money recovered as damages, is property, and may be regarded as choses in action.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Dunn, 52 Ill. 260; Neale v. Depot R. Co. 94 Cal. 425; Black, Law Dict. p. 202; Abbott, Law Dict. p. 219; Anderson, Law Dict. p. 179.

The chose in action becomes personal property, and the husband has the right to manage and control a chose in action, and for the recovery of the chose in action the suit must be brought in the name of the husband, and not in the name of the wife.

At common law the wife could not maintain an action for the loss of the society and support of her husband.

Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 8 L. R. A. 420; Main v. Main, 46 Ill. App. 106; Doe v. Roe, 82 Me. 503, 8 L. R. A. 833; Libby v. Berry, 74 Me. 286, 43 Am. Rep. 589.

The interest of a wife in community personal property is a mere expectancy, like the interest that an heir may possess in the property of his ancestor.

Greiner v. Greiner, 58 Cal. 115.

After divorce and voluntary separation a woman cannot maintain an action for enticing away her husband.

Buckel v. Suss, 28 Abb. N. C. 21.

One who entices away a husband is not liable in damages to the wife for the loss of his society and support.

Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 8 L. R. A. 420, 31 Cent. L. J. 32, note.

All of the cases upon which respondent relies are based upon a statute giving married women the right to sue for damages; but we have no such statute in this state.

Doe v. Roe, 82 Me. 503, 8 L. R. A. 833; Libby v. Berry, 74 Me. 286, 43 Am. Rep. 589; Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27; Cooley, Torts, pp. 223-227; Main v. Main, 46 Ill. App. 106; Dillon v. Linder, 36 Wis. 344; Freese v. Tripp, 70 Ill. 503; Jaynes v. Jaynes, 39 Hun, 40; Calloway v. Laydon, 47 Iowa, 456, 29 Am. Rep. 489.

The court of appeals of New York made a mistake in the case of Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 6 L. R. A. 553, as to the rule at common law.

NOTE.—As to a wife's right of action for alienation of her husband's affections, see Tucker v. Tucker (Miss.) 32 L. R. A. 623, and 43 L. R. A.

authorities cited in the footnote thereto; also Brown v. Brown (N. C.) 38 L. R. A. 242, and Gerner v. Gerner (Pa.) 40 L. R. A. 549.

Even if the case of Bennett v. Bennett is the law in New York, it cannot apply in Washington because the damages are community property, and under the Washington statute the wife cannot recover for personal injuries, without joining her husband.

Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 3 Wash. 592, 16 L. R. A. 808; German Ins. Co. v. Hunter (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 344; Neule v. Depot R. Co. 94 Cal. 425; Ezell v. Dodson, 60 Tex. 331.

The divorce settles all property rights for damages.

Buckel v. Suss, 28 Abb. N. C. 21; Main v. Main, 46 Ill. App. 106; Doe v. Roe, 82 Me. 503, 8 L. R. A. 833; Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27; Brown v. Smith, 19 R. I. 319, 30 L. R. A. 680.

How is it possible that a woman who has no cause of action while married can make a cause of action by getting a divorce, unless the choses in action are given her by the decree?

Weedon v. Timbrell, 5 T. R. 357; Buckel v. Suss, 28 Abb. N. C. 21.

If respondent had cause of action then her husband was a necessary party, and in fact the only necessary and proper party.

Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 3 Wash. 592, 16 L. R. A. 808; Rice v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. 8 Tex. Civ. App. 130.

The judgment for alimony settles all of her rights to community property. The property rights are all settled by the decree of divorce.

Webster v. Webster, 2 Wash. 417; Fields v. Fields, 2 Wash. 441; Prouty v. Prouty, 4 Wash. 174; Ferry v. Perry, 9 Wash. 239; Main v. Main, 46 Ill. App. 106; Buckel v. Suss, 28 Abb. N. C. 21; German Ins. Co. v. Hunter (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 344; Musselman v. Musselman, 44 Ind. 106; Muckenburger v. Holler, 20 Ind. 139, 92 Am. Dec. 345; Behrley v. Behrley, 93 Ind. 255; Nicholson v. Nicholson, 113 Ind. 131.

A woman divorced has no interest in her husband's property.

Brown v. Smith, 19 R. I. 319, 30 L. R. A. 680; Fletcher v. Monroe, 145 Ind. 56; McKean v. Ferguson, 51 Ohio St. 207; Weindel v. Weindel, 126 Mo. 640; Winch v. Bolton, 94 Iowa, 573.

The title to community property remains in the husband.

Rosholt v. Mehus, 3 N. D. 513, 23 L. R. A. 239; Burns v. Lewis, 86 Ga. 591; Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27; Piper v. May, 51 Ind. 283; Libby v. Berry, 74 Me. 286, 43 Am. Rep. 589.

The court erred in admitting in evidence letters written by W. H. Beach to the respondent. The letters are confidential communications from husband to wife written in the absence of appellant, and are not competent testimony for any purpose.

2 Ballinger's Codes & Statutes, § 5994; Scott v. Com. 94 Ky. 511; State v. Ulrich, 110 Mo. 350; Underwood v. Linton, 54 Ind. 468; Higham v. Vanosdol, 101 Ind. 160; Dye v. Davis, 65 Ind. 474; White v. Ross, 47 Mich. 172; Perry v. Randall, 83 Ind. 143; Buchanan v. Foster, 23 App. Div. 542; Lancot v. State, 98 Wis. 136; Henderson v. 43 L. R. A.

Chaires, 25 Fla. 26; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 334, 337; Selden v. State, 74 Wis. 271; Smith v. Merrill, 75 Wis. 461; Lafferty v. Lafferty, 42 W. Va. 783; White v. Perry, 14 W. Va. 66; Fratini v. Caslini, 66 Vt. 273.

No letter or communication made by husband or wife after suspicion of guilt can be admitted.

1 Phillipps, Ev. § 181; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 102; 1 Wharton, Ev. § 225.

There is no presumption of law that a husband loves his wife.

The burden of proof was upon respondent under the issues.

Buchanan v. Foster, 23 App. Div. 542; Mask v. Allen (Miss.) 17 So. 82; Com. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 417; J. D. Marshall Livery Co. v. McKelvy, 55 Mo. App. 240; Long v. Long, 44 Mo. App. 141.

The admission of the letters and the exclusion of the declarations cannot both be right.

Witman v. Egbert, 27 App. Div. 374; Manwarren v. Mason, 79 Hun, 592; Bowes v. Steffen, 43 N. Y. S. R. 29; Erben v. Lorillard, 19 N. Y. 299; Hobby v. Hobby, 64 Barb. 277.

Messrs. Lindsay, King, & Turner, for respondent:

It is the refinement of absurdity to say that the husband can join a third person in committing a wrong on the wife, and that the damages recovered by the wife would be "community property."

At common law an action for damages could be maintained for the alienation and loss of the affections and the society of the husband from the wife.

Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577; Bassett v. Bassett, 20 Ill. App. 543; Foot v. Card, 58 Conn. 1, 6 L. R. A. 829; Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 6 L. R. A. 553; Mehrhoft v. Mehrhoff, 26 Fed. Rep. 13.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by the respondent against the appellant for damages for alienating the affections of respondent's husband. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint, to the effect that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which was overruled. A motion for a nonsuit was also made and overruled. Upon the trial of the cause a verdict was rendered in favor of the respondent, judgment was entered in accordance therewith, and an appeal was taken to this court.

It is the contention of the appellant, in the first instance, that this action cannot be maintained, for the reason that a married woman in the state of Washington cannot maintain a suit in her own name for tort without her husband joining her, where the damages secured would be community property. This statement assumes somewhat the legal questions at issue. But on the main proposition, as to whether a married woman can maintain this action for the loss of the consortium of her husband, the authorities are somewhat conflicting. In Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 8 L. R. A. 420, a case which was strongly relied upon by the appellant, it was decided by a divided court that she could not, but we are not impressed with the reasoning upon which that decision is based. It is conceded that at the common law the husband might maintain an action for the alienation of the affections of a wife, but it is said that the wife's right to the society of the husband is different in degree and value, and, in a long opinion, the court undertakes to substantiate this proposition. The reasons given are too numerous to set forth in this opinion, but we think they are unsatisfactory and illogical. The decision is also based upon the fact that at the common law the wife had no property in the consortium of her husband, and that her position as a wife precluded her from bringing the action. An attempt is made in this case to distinguish the cases that hold that the wife at common law had a right to bring this action, but we think the attempt was unsuccessful, and there are other cases maintaining the same view. However, the case of Williams v. Williams, 20 Colo. 51, squarely decides the proposition the other way, and shows that the doctrine is really based upon the ancient idea of the comparative inferiority of the wife. The court in that case said: "Mr. Justice Blackstone, who wrote 150 years ago, gave as a reason for denying the wife's right of action in cases of this kind the following: 'The inferior hath no kind of property in the company, care, or assistance of the superior, as the superior is held to have in those of the inferior, and therefore the inferior can suffer no loss or injury.' 3 Bl. Com. p. 142. This language seems strange in the present age, however familiar it may have been during the last century." And the court then quotes Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 127, 14 L. R. A. 545, where it is said: "The wife is entitled to the society, protection, and support of her husband as certainly, under the law and by moral right, as he is to her society and services in his household." Foot v. Card, 58 Conn. 1, 6 L. R. A. 829, is also quoted, where the court said: "So far forth as the husband is concerned, from time immemorial the law has regarded his right to the conjugal affection and society of his wife as a valuable property, and has compelled the man who has injured it to make compensation. Whatever inequalities of right as to property may result from the marriage contract, husband and wife are equal in rights in one respect, namely, each owes to the other the fullest possible measure of conjugal affection and society. The husband owes to the wife all that the wife owes to him. Upon principle, this right in the wife is equally valuable to her, as property, as is that of the husband to him. Her right being the same as his in kind, degree, and value, there would seem to be no valid reason why the law should deny to her the redress which it affords to him." This reasoning, it seems to us, is more in conformity with modern thought on the subject of the marital relations existing between husband and wife. See also Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 6 L. R. A. 553; Van Arnam v. Ayres, 67 Barb. 544; Haynes v. Nowlin, 129 Ind. 581, 14 L. R. A. 787; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. 43 L. R. A.

Cas. 577; Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397.

But, however it may have been at the common law, the trend of judicial opinion in this country has been in favor of extending rights of this kind to the wife, and it seems to us that the right is placed beyond a peradventure by our own statutes. We do not think that the cases decided by this court which are cited by the appellant bear upon this question. The legislature of this state has, from time to time, plainly sought to remove disabilities of this character from married women, and § 1408, 1 Hill's Code, provides that "every married person shall hereafter have the same right and liberty to acquire, hold, enjoy, and dispose of every species of property, and to sue and be sued as if he or she were unmarried." It would seem as if this statute was very nearly conclusive of this question, but, if not, § 1409 makes it absolutely so. That section provides that "all laws which impose or recognize civil disabilities upon a wife, which are not imposed or recognized as existing as to the husband, are hereby abolished, and for any unjust usurpation of her natural or property rights she shall have the same right to appeal in her own individual name to the courts of law or equity for redress and protection that the husband has;" and it will be observed that all the exception that there is to this sweeping law is made in a proviso to § 1409, to this effect: "Provided, always, that nothing in this chapter shall be construed to confer upon the wife any right to vote or hold office, except as otherwise provided by law."

And an investigation of the statutes in relation to the rights of married women shows that in all cases where exceptions are intended they are provided in the statutes. These statutes also do away with the necessity which existed under the common law, as held by some of the courts where the right was sustained, that the action could only be maintained when the husband joined in it. But the action in this case was brought by the respondent after she had obtained a divorce from her husband, and it is therefore urged by the appellant that, if she ever had the right to bring this action, it was lost when she sought and obtained a divorce; that all rights were settled by the decree of divorce; and cases from this court are cited to sustain that contention. But we do not think that the cases cited or the law bear upon this character of rights. It could not, in the very nature of things, have been contemplated in the divorce decree. It is a damage which is peculiar to the wife, which the husband, under no rule of right, could have any interest in; and it would be a harsh rule of law that, conceding that the wife had this right during coverture, would deprive her of the right when the wrongful acts of which she complains created the necessity for and caused the action for divorce. Of course, the damages could not be calculated after the time when the decree of divorce was obtained. Having, then, the right to maintain this action, and there being no community,—the community having been destroyed by the decree of divorce,—we need not concern ourselves about the proposition that the damages when secured will be community property. The judgment settles the question as to the ownership of the amount secured for damages. This answers the demurrer upon both grounds, viz., that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the husband was a necessary party plaintiff; and also the error alleged in overruling the motion for a nonsuit.

It is alleged that the court erred in admitting in evidence letters written by the husband, Beach, to the respondent during coverture, for the purpose of showing the affection of the husband towards the wife. We think, under the circumstances of this case, that the letters were admissible, and the testimony was as competent as any other testimony showing the relations between the husband and wife, and they certainly do not fall under the ban of the statute cited by the appellant.

It is also claimed that the court erred in excluding testimony of the witness Stull in relation to the object which the husband avowed that he had in writing the letters. We think this testimony was properly excluded, and that it falls under the head of self-serving testimony.

The appellant also objects to the following instruction given by the court: "The law presumes that a husband who lives with and cohabits with his wife, she bearing children, the issue of such cohabitation, has an affection for her, and this presumption continues until it is overthrown by a fair preponderance of the testimony to the contrary." We are not prepared to indorse the pessimistic view of the marriage relation contended for by the appellant, and we think the instruction was correct, and that there was no error in the modification by the court of the instructions requested by the appellant. There being no prejudicial errors committed by the court, the judgment will be affirmed.

Anders and Gordon, JJ., concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Julia L. GREEN, Admx., etc., of Lars G. Green, Deceased, Respt.,
v.

ASHLAND WATER COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. A mere distributor of water for compensation is not liable as a guarantor of its quality.
2. A distributor of water under a public franchise will be liable for injury to consumers without fault on their part from using the water furnished if it knows or from the situation ought to know that the water it is distributing is dangerous for domestic use from some cause not discoverable ordinarily by the use of reasonable care, and it fails to disclose such danger to them.
3. Liability of a water company, through fault of the municipality, to procure pure water from a source designated in its contract, will not relieve the company from liability to consumers for injuries caused by its knowingly furnishing them with contaminated water and deceiving them into the belief that it is wholesome.
4. A consumer cannot hold a water company liable for injuries caused by unwholesome water furnished by it if he knew or ought to have known its dangerous condition when he used it.
5. Evidence of greater precautions by a water company to procure pure water after

NOTE.—The above case is wellnigh a pioneer on the question of the liability for disease caused by the impurity of a water supply.

As to the liability of a city for the impurity of water from a free public well, see Danaher v. Brooklyn (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 592.

As to the liability of a vendor in cases of tort for the sale of unwholesome food, see note to Craft v. Parker, W. & Co. (Mich.) 21 L. R. A. 139.

43 L. R. A.

the death of a customer from fever is not admissible in an action to hold it responsible for the death.

6. Upon the question of the liability of a water company for the death of a customer from fever evidence is not admissible of tests of the water supply long after the occurrence, when the conditions might have changed.
7. An expert cannot be permitted to give his opinion that a person died from drinking polluted water furnished by a water company when the evidence does not exclude the possibility of other sources of contagion.
8. The rule permitting a physician to testify as to the cause of a person's death does not include his opinion as to the cause of the fever which resulted in death.
9. Opinion evidence as to the duty of a water company to make tests of the water furnished by it is not admissible in an action against it for the death of a customer from fever alleged to have been caused by polluted water furnished by it.
10. A newspaper article charging a water company with distributing poisonous water and charging excessive rates, published months prior to the death of a customer of the water company from fever, is not admissible in an action seeking to hold the company liable for such death.
11. Evidence of proceedings of the municipal authorities for the annulment of the franchise of a water company is not admissible in an action to hold the company liable for the death of a customer which is alleged to have been caused by impure water.
12. A water company cannot be held liable for injuries caused to consumers from failure to exercise ordinary care to procure a pure water supply from the source designated by its contract, if the evidence does not show that pure water could be procured there.
13. A consumer of water furnished by a water company who is possessed of average intelligence will be held to have notice that the water is impure if that condition has existed for a long time and the fact is widely and commonly known.

(November 22, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Portage County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate which was alleged to have been caused by impure water furnished by the defendant. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged to have been caused by negligence on defendant's part, in that it failed and neglected to extend its intake pipe into Chequamegon bay from time to time as needed to secure water free from sewage contamination, and suitable for domestic use as required by its contract with the municipality of Ashland. It was claimed that, owing to the breach of duty mentioned, in March, 1894, defendant took from Chequamegon bay water contaminated with typhoid fever germs and distributed the same to its customers in the city of Ashland, of whom the deceased was one; that without fault on his part, he used such polluted water taken from the service faucet at his residence, for drinking purposes, and was thereby stricken with typhoid fever from which he died. The facts mentioned were properly alleged in the complaint and put in issue by the answer. The facts established conclusively by the admissions in the pleadings or evidence given on the trial were, that the contract under which defendant's waterworks system was constructed and operated was made in 1884; that there was then no sewerage system in Ashland; that the contract required defendant to take its water supply from Chequamegon bay and to extend the intake pipe in the bay from time to time, as the growth of the city of Ashland might require, to keep the water free from contamination by the sewage from such city; that three years after the waterworks system was installed, there was constructed a sewerage system in Ashland by which the sewage of the city was deposited in the bay, and such system was extended from time to time, and the amount of the sewage thereby, and by the growth of the city, deposited in the bay from year to year down to the time of the occurrence complained of, was so increased that, with pollutions of like character which were drained into the bay from other sources, it was rendered practically impossible to secure therein with certainty, at all seasons of the year, a water supply suitable for domestic use; that as a result of the situation, for several years prior to the spring of 1894, at about the time of the break-up in the spring, there was an epidemic of typhoid fever in Ashland from using the bay water; that as early as 1891, it was generally accepted as true by the people of the city, that the water of the bay was contaminated with typhoid fever germs, and was the cause of the prevalence of typhoid fever, especially in the spring; that the danger of taking the fever from using such water in the spring was notorious in 1894, and for some time prior thereto; that the subject was one generally talked about among the people and was discussed in the city press which was patronized by the intestate; that he had been a resident of the city for several years, was an intelligent working man, and his attention had been specially drawn to the subject of typhoid fever by reason of his wife having been afflicted with it about six months prior to his sickness; that he knew the source of defendant's water supply, and used the water freely without any effort to free it from dangers of sewage contamination. The evidence further shows that deceased was away from home all of the time for about four days prior to his sickness becoming so pronounced as to require him to desist from working, and that prior to such four days he was absent from home during the working time of each day. There was considerable evidence given by experts for the purpose of showing the condition of the bay water, and the probability that the death of the intestate was caused by using it. Numerous exceptions were taken to the rulings on questions propounded to the experts and to other rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence. At the close of plaintiff's case there was a motion for a nonsuit made and denied, and the question raised by such motion was again raised by a motion to direct a verdict in defendant's favor at the close of the evidence on both sides. The jury rendered a special verdict finding, among other things, that the deceased died from typhoid fever, caused by drinking water drawn from the faucet in his house; that typhoid fever was epidemic in the city in 1892 and 1893, and that defendant knew, or ought to have known, that the water it furnished was dangerously contaminated with typhoid germs; that it could have procured wholesome water from Chequamegon bay prior to the sickness of the deceased; that the deceased was without fault in using the water, and that it was publicly and widely stated and believed among the citizens of Ashland, prior to the occurrence complained of, that the typhoid fever epidemics in the city of Ashland were attributable to the water furnished by the defendant. All other issues requisite to plaintiff's recovery were found in her favor, and damages assessed at $5,000. There was a motion for a new trial made after verdict, sufficiently broad to present all questions necessary to be preserved thereby. Proper exceptions were taken to all rulings of the court, adverse to the defendant. Defendant appealed.

Messrs. Tomkins & Merrill, for appellant:

The court allowed the plaintiff to introduce evidence that the defendant used greater precautions and built a filter after the death of Green. This was error.

Castello v. Landwehr, 28 Wis. 530; Lang v. Sanger, 76 Wis. 71; Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. & O. R. Co. 87 Wis. 105, 23 L. R. A. 203.

It was error to allow the physicians to testify that intestate's death, in their opinion, was caused by drinking the bay water furnished by the defendant.

Luning v. State, 2 Pinney, 215, 52 Am. Dec. 153; Wright v. Hardy, 22 Wis. 348; Kreuziger v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 73 Wis. 158; Maitland v. Gilbert Paper Co. 97 Wis. 476.

The city and water company both undoubtedly believed, when the contract was entered into, that wholesome water could be procured from the bay. The city fixed and furnished the site for the pumping station with the right to purchase the plant. Both parties were mistaken as to the quality of the bay water. The one is as culpable as the other.

Du Bois v. Du Bois City Waterworks Co. 176 Pa. 430, 34 L. R. A. 92; United States Waterworks Co. v. Du Bois, 176 Pa. 439.

When the fact is that the damages claimed in an action were occasioned by one of two or more causes, for one of which the defendant is responsible, and for the other of which it is not responsible, the plaintiff must fall if his evidence does not show that the damages were produced by the former cause.

Searles v. Manhattan R. Co. 101 N. Y. 661; Hanrahan v. Brooklyn Elev. R. Co. 17 App. Div. 588.

Green knew, or ought to have known, that the bay water was contaminated with sewage and liable to cause typhoid fever.

Where the water is taken from a natural body of water like a river, bay or lake, it is as much the duty of the consumer as the water company to ascertain the character of the water, and take measures to protect himself against the dangerous impurities of the water.

Messrs. Lamoreux & Shea, also for appellant:

There is no proof that the water was unwholesome until the analysis in May after typhoid epidemic in the spring.

Danaher v. Brooklyn, 119 N. Y. 241, 7 L. R. A. 592.

It cannot be said that any citizen of intelligence of the city of Ashland who had resided in the city as long as Green had, to wit, since April, 1887, could be ignorant of the source or place from which this water was received.

Green knew as well as this company that the water being used in his house was being pumped from Chequamegon bay.

Mr. Green, when he began using this water, must have known that the water company were simply pumping bay water up to that house. He was bound to know its source and bound to know its condition in the bay.

If the water company did nothing to contaminate it or injure it in moving it from the bay to his house they cannot be held to be guilty of any wrong.

Messrs. Cate, Sanborn, Lamoreux, & Park, for respondent:

The questions objected to do not cover a single mooted "evidentiary" question of fact in the case, not purely in the domain of scientific inquiry. There is absolutely no evidence in the case that up to the time he was taker sick, Green drank or was where he had an opportunity to drink any other than the water furnished by the defendant.

Whether the bay water was poisoned by typhoid bacilli, whether by drinking this he contracted typhoid fever, were purely scientific questions, depending upon the opinion of experts.

1 Rice, Ev. p. 330; State v. Smith, 32 Me. 369, 54 Am. Dec. 578; Com. v. Piper, 120 Mass. 185; Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 143; Smalley v. Appleton, 75 Wis. 15; Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 392; McCallan v. Buckstaff, 96 Wis. 316; Gates v. Fleischer, 67 Wis. 504.

It is demanding too much of a man in Green's walk in life to hold that he, as a matter of law, should have been on his guard against the water the entire community were drinking, and say to his widow, Mr. Green should have dug a well, driven a pump, or bought spring water, because, although he did not know of it, there was a contention in the locality where he lived that the bay water was causing typhoid fever.

In the following cases some material fact like notice of the danger brought home to the defendant, or the entire absence of any duty to the person injured, resulted in a judgment for the defendant, but in each case the liability of the defendant on a proper showing is freely and fully admitted:

Buckingham v. Plymouth Water Co. 142 Pa. 221; Danaher v. Brooklyn, 119 N. Y. 241, 7 L. R. A. 592; Milnes v. Huddersfield, L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 124, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 443.

The action is one purely and simply for the tort of the defendant, and the duty to the deceased which the defendant negligently failed to perform is based upon contract.

Coy v. Indianapolis Gas Co. 146 Ind. 655, 36 L. R. A. 535; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 985a; Thomas, Neg. pp. 998, 1027.

A company undertaking to supply the inhabitants of a municipality with water for domestic purposes for a valuable consideration should be held to impliedly warrant the water it so furnishes as pure, wholesome, and fit for that purpose.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 157; Lukens v. Freund, 27 Kan. 604, 51 Am. Rep. 429; Hunter v. State, 1 Head, 160, 73 Am. Dec. 165; Benjamin, Sales, § 673a, p. 772; Craft v. Parker, W. & Co. 969 Mich. 245, 21 L. R. A. 139.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought, tried, submitted to the jury, and went to judgment, upon the theory, apparently, that a recovery was claimed for the death of plaintiff's intestate on the ground of actionable negligence of defendant. Something is said in the briefs of counsel about the rule, so called, of implied warranty in the sale of provisions for immediate domestic use, as if that rule might apply to the facts. It is not necessary to consider that theory because of the manner in which the case was tried and submitted, as indicated, though it is proper, and deemed advisable as a guide in future proceedings to discuss it. The doctrine of Sir William Blackstone that there is a warranty of the wholesomeness of provisions sold for domestic use to the buyer, and the vendor is bound to know their quality in that regard at his peril is controverted by the weight of authority in this country and England. Liability for damages in the circumstance mentioned is supported, but on the ground of deceit, not contract. It would be interesting, and probably constitute a valuable addition to our jurisprudence, to have the true nature of that liability definitely decided here. The writer is not familiar with any case where the point has been so presented and decided that the result stands as a binding adjudication on the subject, though there are dicta here and there recognizing the rule as stated by Blackstone as one prevailing in this country generally. Gettely v. Rountree, 2 Pinney, 379, 54 Am. Dec. 138; Williams v. Slaughter, 3 Wis. 347. There is a strong reason for holding that caveat emptor applies to the purchase of provisions for domestic use the same as to the purchase of other articles, in the absence of the express contract or of fraud; that the only difference is that the situation and relation of the parties in the one case raises an inference of artifice, while in the other it does not. In Emerson v. Brigham, 10 Mass. 197, 6 Am. Dec. 109, it is said in substance, that the mistake of Blackstone was in treating deceit and fraud as breach of implied contract; that artifice must be established as the foundation of liability, and without it no liability in the nature of that on an implied warranty exists in case of the sale of provisions any more than in the sale of any other article; that the sale of provisions for a sound price for immediate consumption involves a representation of wholesomeness, and knowledge of the falsehood, if falsehood there be, is presumed from the nature of the transaction and duties growing out of the trade; that the inference of fraud arises from the necessities of the situation, and to the deceit attaches the liability. That was affirmed in Winsor v. Lombard, 18 Pick. 57, where Chief Justice Shaw stated, in effect, that the supposition as to the rule of implied warranty existing in the sale of provisions any more than in the sale of other articles, is founded in failure to distinguish between a rule of evidence and a rule of law, as explained in Mr. Justice Sewall's opinion in Emerson v. Brigham. In Moses v. Mead, 1 Denio, 378, 43 Am. Dec. 676, Bronson, Ch. J., speaking on the same subject, said that the dictum of Blackstone cannot be supported in its full extent; that the liability can be supported, but on the ground of deceit, citing Emerson v. Brigham with approval, and distinguishing Van Bracklin v. Fonda, 12 Johns. 467, 7 Am. Dec. 339, a leading case often cited to the implied warranty theory and as sustaining the dictum of Blackstone. A careful reading of it shows that the sale considered was with actual knowledge of the vendor of the unwholesomeness of the article. He was guilty of a fraud and liable on that ground, and that was the real foundation of the recovery. See further, to the same effect, Giroux v. Stedman, 145 Mass. 439, and 43 L. R. A.

Burnby v. Bollett, 16 Mees. & W. 644. A careful examination of the textbooks on this subject shows that the writers reason along the line of Emerson v. Brigham and the other cases cited. Benjamin, Sales, ed. 1892, § 646; Biddle, Warranties, §§ 193-204; Schouler, Pers. Prop. § 348; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 157. Courts in recent years have not been inclined to add new exceptions to the rule of caveat emptor, or to extend those already established. It once applied to all sales of personal property with the one exception of warranty of title. Many exceptions have since been added, presumably under the influence of the civil law, where the rule was caveat venditor, a rule as harsh to the seller as that of the common law to the buyer. Each exception in the development of our system paved the way for another, and that for still another, as the exigencies of particular situations seemed to require, in order to harmonize moral with legal obligations, till the rule itself ceased to be the safe and simple guide it was when Justice Popham, in pronouncing the law in his time, said, "If I have commodities which are damaged, whether victuals or otherwise, and I, knowing them to be so, sell them for good and affirm them to be so, an action upon the case lies for deceit; and although they be damaged, if I, knowing not that, affirm them to be good, still no action lies without I warrant them to be good." That a more enlightened sense of justice has softened and limited that rigorous rule, is by no means to be regretted; but if a written system of laws is to be preserved at all, and the science of the law is to be found therein, so many exceptions and limitations of a principle should not be recognized as to practically obscure it. To the one implied warranty of title, with which the rule of the common law, as indicated, commenced, has been added that in case of a sale by sample, warranty of general character where the chattel is not present and subject to inspection, warranty of manufactured goods as to merchantable quality, warranty that manufactured goods sold for a particular purpose are reasonably suitable therefor, and perhaps some others. None of the changes, however, have taken place in recent times, and as the remedy is ample to protect against frauds on the part of vendors where the vendees use reasonable care in looking after their own interests, our system, without further changes, is probably as perfect to the end that even-handed justice between individuals may be guaranteed as it can reasonably be.

In the light of the foregoing, no reason is perceived for saying that a mere distributor of water for a compensation should be held liable as a guarantor of its quality. It is not a commodity kept for sale in the strict sense of the term, but is free to everyone, in nature's reservoir, like light and air. It is taken directly or indirectly from a common source of supply. The immediate source, as in this case, is usually selected in advance and fixed by contract, leaving the mere service of a carrier to be performed, of taking the water from such source and distributing it to the consumer. To say that the person or corporation performing that service shall be burdened with an implied warranty of the quality of the thing carried and distributed, would be treating the transaction as a sale, strictly so called, and then applying an exception to the doctrine of caveat emptor not supported by good reason or any authority we are able to find, or any to which our attention has been called. It would burden such public service in a way that would be destructive of private enterprise in that line, and render public enterprise in the same direction so attended with dangers as to discourage a service that has become a necessity in all communities of any considerable size, and which promotes to a high degree the welfare and happiness of individuals in communities great or small. If distributors of water under public franchises be held strictly accountable for the exercise of ordinary care not to place before their customers an unwholesome article under circumstances liable to induce persons, in the exercise of ordinary care, to use it for drinking or other domestic purposes in ignorance of the dangers attending the use, and held liable for deceit in such transactions, and the law be firmly administered along those lines, the safety of individuals, as affected by public water service, will be as well promoted as is consistent with the continuance of such service whether performed by strictly public or by quasi public agencies.

From the foregoing, it will be seen that if a recovery can be sustained on the facts of this case at all, it must be on the ground of actionable fraud or negligence without contributory fault on the part of the deceased. If defendant knew, or from the situation ought to have known, the water it was distributing in the city of Ashland was dangerous for domestic use, from other cause not discoverable ordinarily by the exercise of reasonable care, it owed the duty to its customers of disclosing that danger, and a failure so to do, knowing that such customers were liable to use the water through ignorance of its character, was a fraud in law, rendering the defendant liable to legal damages to any person injured by such fraud without fault on his part, and it was also a failure of duty amounting to actionable negligence as well, to which the same liability is incident. The mere fact, if it be a fact, that it had been rendered impracticable for defendant to procure a supply of wholesome water in Chequamegon bay, as required by the contract with the city, from causes attributable to the municipality, though constituting a defense against any action on its contract with the city or to forfeit its franchise, does not excuse knowingly pumping contaminated water from the bay and distributing the same to customers and deceiving them into the belief that it was wholesome. But, as indicated, though the conduct of the defendant be held wrongful on the ground of either fraud or negligence, if the deceased knew, or under the circumstances ought to have known, the dangerous condition of the water, yet used it with the consequence complained of, no legal liability thereby attaches to the defendant. If the deceased knew, and he is charged with knowledge of what a man of ordinary intelligence under the circumstances ought to have known, then he was not deceived, whatever may have been the conduct of the defendant, and for the same reason he is chargeable with contributing to the result complained of, by his own want of care. So, plaintiff's cause of action, if any there be, sounds in tort however we may look at it, and knowledge, or its equivalent, on the part of the defendant, and want of such knowledge or equivalent on the part of the deceased, is essential to legal liability in the one case as well as the other, the only difference being in the manner of establishing the fault of the deceased, the affirmative of that being on the complainant, if a recovery be sought on the ground of fraud, and on the defendant if on the ground of actionable negligence. The distinction between the two is exceedingly shadowy, and really not important in the practical application of principles.

The foregoing discussion and statement is deemed justified, if not called for, by the positions taken by counsel. If some of the principles contended for were applied on a new trial of the case, and it resulted favorably to the plaintiff, the misfortune of a reverse might probably follow. The danger in that regard may be avoided, guided by what has been said.

In considering the specific errors assigned, it appears most logical to first take up the rulings complained of on the admission of evidence. First in order is that admitting proof that greater precautions to obtain pure water were taken by the defendant after the occurrence complained of than before. If defendant in fact knew the water supply was dangerously contaminated, the fact that it subsequently took means to correct the evil, as we have seen, is immaterial on that question, but the question of whether the water was impure, and whether defendant negligently failed to remedy the difficulty, were material, and determinable solely by the situation prior to the occurrence complained of. What was done afterwards had no legitimate bearing on that question, and the jury had no right to draw any inference therefrom. Such evidence has been repeatedly condemned by this and other courts. Castello v. Landwehr, 28 Wis. 522; Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 87 Wis. 195, 23 L. R. A. 203; Downey v. Sawyer, 157 Mass. 418; Columbia & P. R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 144 U. S. 202, 36 L. ed. 405; Blair v. Daly, 68 N. Y. 547; Nalley v. Hartford Carpet Co. 51 Conn. 524, 50 Am. Rep. 47; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem, 123 Ind. 15, 7 L. R. A. 538; Hodges v. Percival, 132 Ill. 53; Hudson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 581, 44 Am. Rep. 692; Motey v. Pickle Marble & G. Co. 36 U. S. App. 682, 74 Fed. Rep. 155, 20 C. C. A. 366.

What has been said on the subject of evidence of precautions against sewage contamination after the occurrence complained of, applies to evidence of experts, received against defendant's objection, as to tests made of water taken from the bay some time after the occurrence. For aught that appears, the water may have been wholesome in the early part of March, 1894, and very unwholesome when the subsequent tests were made. The evidence shows that the deceased took the fever about the 1st of March, and that the height of the typhoid fever epidemic was not reached till the last of that month, there being several hundred persons afflicted in all. Under the circumstances, sufficient time had elapsed for a material change in the bay water to have taken place. The admission of the evidence was plainly prejudicial error. True, evidence of a situation existing after an injury, though a considerable time may have elapsed, is admissible to show the situation existing at the time of the injury, if preceded by prima facie proof that no change has taken place in the meantime. Tremblay v. Harnden, 162 Mass. 383. Here that preliminary proof not only was wanting, but there was a strong case to the contrary made by the evidence.

It is further assigned for error that the court allowed opinion evidence as to facts in issue,—the evidentiary facts (not for scientific controversy) relating thereto being in dispute,—contrary to the settled law on the subject, and as declared in numerous decisions in this court, and recently stated in Maitland v. Gilbert Paper Co. 97 Wis. 476. The following are some of the questions complained of: "You may state whether or not, in your opinion, the water furnished by the Ashland Water Company during the winter and spring of 1894 had anything to do with the typhoid fever epidemic which prevailed in the city of Ashland during that time?" "What, in your judgment, was the cause of the typhoid fever of which he [Green] died?" "You say the typhoid fever in this case, in your opinion, was caused by drinking bay water: Do you say that from the investigations you made?" All the questions were answered in the affirmative. The learned counsel for respondent say in support of the questions, that they were proper because the effect of evidence in establishing controverted facts, on which opinions were given, was not involved,—that such facts were not in dispute. We are unable to see the case that way. How can it be said the question was established beyond a controversy that the deceased did not drink other than bay water? Let it be admitted that up to within four days from the time he was stricken with the disease, bay water was used at his working place as well as at his home. How can it be assumed from that alone that he did not drink water elsewhere or come in contact with some other medium whereby the seeds of the disease were taken into his system? As to each of these points, if the evidence was such as to remove it from the realms of mere conjecture, certainly it was not established in plaintiff's favor so as to warrant taking it from the jury, and if not, certainly the expert could not properly pass upon the evidence in giving his opinion. All the facts on which the opinions were given, except that Green died of typhoid fever, and that prior to his taking the disease he habitually used bay water for drinking purposes, were in controversy. It seems clear that opinions going to the question of how the disease was contracted could have been properly elicited only on hypothetical questions, leaving the jury free to consider such opinions after finding from other evidence the existence of the foundation facts upon which they were based.

As a second proposition respondent suggests, with apparent confidence, that the questions were proper under the rule that a physician may testify, as to the cause of death, from personal examination or knowledge. That rule is familiar, but extends no further than the immediate cause of death, because, manifestly, that is the limit of scientific investigation. Failure to observe that test often leads to prejudicial error. A competent witness may testify as to whether a person came to his death by a wound found upon the body, but not as to who inflicted it, because, as said, he cannot go beyond the range of scientific investigation. This court said an expert may testify that certain injuries to a female, found on personal examination, may have been caused by a ravishment, but not that they were so caused, and, we may add, certainly not who was the guilty party. Noonan v. State, 55 Wis. 258. These illustrations show clearly that respondent's counsel erred in relying on the rule mentioned to sustain the method of examination of the expert resorted to. That such was their reliance is evident from the fact that they rounded out their examination by interrogating the witness as to whether he gave his opinions from personal examination. Wherever expressions are used in the books to the effect that opinion evidence of the cause of death, based on personal examination, is admissible, they will readily be seen, by a little attention to the matter, to relate solely to the immediate cause, not what set the action in motion.

Opinion evidence was permitted against objection, as to the duty of the defendant with reference to testing the water supply. As to this, respondent's counsel answer, the objectionable parts of the evidence, if there be such, were not responsive to the questions. An examination of the record fails to bear out that view. The questions were: "What, in your judgment, should the water company do with reference to ascertaining the purity or impurity of the water?" "How frequently, in your judgment, should these analyses be made?" They seem to call very clearly for opinion evidence as to the duty of defendant as regards testing the water supply. That certainly, if material at all, was a question to be determined by the jury. No ground is perceived upon which the questions can be sustained. It was competent to show by opinion evidence that the quality of the water was only determinable by certain tests, but whether legal duty required defendant to make the tests was certainly not a matter for such evidence.

The appellant further complains of a ruling, admitting in evidence an article published in an Ashland newspaper about seven months prior to Green's death, wherein the defendant was charged with distributing poisonous water to its customers and requiring the city to pay for water service twice as much as was proper, and it was suggested that the most expeditious method of dealing with defendant, in order to remedy the evils complained of, was to annul its franchise and seize its property; and it was further suggested that the officers of the company should be prosecuted without leniency, civilly and criminally, if they did not voluntarily and immediately remedy such evils. There can be no justification suggested for the admission of that evidence. We have a right to assume that the learned counsel for respondent were unable to suggest any, as they did not attempt to do so. If overcharges were made by the water company, that had nothing to do with causing the death of Green by typhoid fever, and if the death was so caused, the declarations made in a newspaper in regard to the condition of the water certainly had no possible bearing on that question. They were no more competent as evidence because made editorially in a newspaper than if made by any individual. They had no legitimate place in the trial. They were well calculated to prejudice the jury against the defendant and prevent a fair and impartial trial of the important issues between the parties on the legitimate evidence produced. An examination of the record shows that considerable other evidence, admitted over the objections of appellant's counsel, to which no particular reference is made in their brief, was irrelevant and prejudicial. This observation refers to proceedings of the common council covering a period of about one year before Green's death and a month or two afterwards. That placed before the jury the history of a bitter contest that existed between defendant and the city of Ashland, covering the period mentioned. It closed with a resolution passed some time after the death of Green, canceling the defendant's franchise and directing the city attorney to commence proceedings to annul the same by judicial decree and to condemn the water supply. It is not claimed that any of this evidence was admissible for any purpose except to show notice to the defendant that it was claimed by the city that the bay water was unwholesome for domestic use. So little of it was relevant for that purpose, and that little so involved with matter having no bearing even on the question of notice, and so tending to prejudice the minds of the jury unfavorably to the defendant and to prevent a fair trial, that the whole should have been rejected on defendant's objection.

The remaining question for consideration was raised by the motion for a nonsuit, the motion to direct a verdict, and the motion for a new trial. All the rulings may properly be considered together. The learned trial court correctly held that the franchise under which the defendant operated its works did not require it to go outside of Chequamegon bay for a water supply. Following that and the negligence alleged in the complaint,—failure to extend the intake pipe to a point beyond the reach of sewage contamination,—the court submitted to the jury these questions: "Could the defendant company have procured wholesome water from Chequamegon bay at and prior to the sickness of Green?" "Was the defendant company guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the death of Green?" "Did the defendant know, or ought it reasonably to have known, prior to the time when the deceased contracted the disease from which he died, that the water it furnished deceased was contaminated by typhoid germs?" To each of these questions the jury answered in the affirmative. Thus, it will be seen, the right of plaintiff to recover was made to turn on whether defendant negligently failed to extend its intake pipe into pure water in Chequamegon bay. As heretofore indicated, the mere fact of impracticability or impossibility of obtaining a pure water supply in the bay, if such were the facts, did not legally excuse defendant for knowingly distributing dangerously impure water for domestic consumption under such circumstances that persons of ordinary intelligence might probably use the same with dangerous consequences. But as that was not the theory of the pleadings in making up the issues for trial, or in the submission of their case to the jury, the case will be considered as the parties and the trial court considered it. Whether a judgment could be sustained under the complaint and findings of fact against the defendant on the other theory, is immaterial on account of the branch touching defendant's fault, which is to be considered hereafter.

Does the evidence warrant the finding that defendant failed to exercise ordinary care to procure a pure water supply from the bay? That, as indicated, is the key to plaintiff's case. We have searched the record from beginning to end, and read and reread it with the greatest care, to find such evidence, and have failed. The point was raised in appellant's brief that no such evidence exists, and no reply thereto appears in the brief of respondent. No evidence is pointed out by them upon which the findings can rest. They evidently turned, if based on evidence at all, on an unsworn report of a chemist, based in part on an unverified report of an examination made by Vaughn, of the Michigan University, of several samples of water, one of which was taken from a point about 1,300 feet east of the breakwater, which point was about 2 miles from the pumping station. The samples were selected some time after the occurrence complained of. The one east of the breakwater was the only one found free from sewage contamination. The chemist who made the report did not place sufficient reliance thereon to recommend resorting for a supply to the place where, on the single occasion, pure water was found. He thought a supply might be found there with reasonable certainty, but expressed a preference for going outside the bay entirely. All the sworn evidence in the case shows that if pure water was found on one occasion at a particular place, that situation might or might not continue; that the bay water was so generally contaminated with sewage, especially in the spring, that a safe supply could not be found there with any reasonable certainty. Dr. Hosmer said, if there was no current, there would be more protection; that towards Washburn, just before reaching the sewage on that side of the bay, was the safest place, but on account of the swinging currents one could not tell anything about it; that emptying so much sewage into the bay was sufficient to condemn it as a source of water supply without any test. Some tests were made of samples taken from different parts of the bay, one being near Houghton Point, several miles from the pumping station, that being the only one free from sewage contamination. One of the experts said that it was improper to take water for dietetic use from a body of water having no current, into which the sewage of a city was drained, unless the sewage delivery and the end of the intake pipe were many miles apart. There is a large amount of evidence of that character in the record, and nothing to controvert it. Further, it is shown that nearly a year prior to the death of Green, the officers of the city and the officers of the water company were of one mind as to the necessity of going outside the bay to get water suitable for domestic use. As early as February, 1893, an official report was made to the common council and adopted, to the effect that the intake pipe should be extended so as to take the water supply from the lake instead of the bay, and the city attorney was requested to draw a resolution formally directing the defendant to make such extension. In April thereafter, such a resolution was drafted by the board of health and adopted by the council, and thereafter an attempt was made to condemn the water supply and annul the defendant's franchise because it did not go to the lake with its intake pipe. It clearly appears all through the proceedings of the common council, for nearly a year prior to the death of Green, that all parties understood that the bay water was unsuitable for dietetic use. During all that time a contest existed between the municipality and the defendant as to whether the latter was obliged to extend the intake pipe into the lake, it being agreed that water free from dangerous pollution could not be obtained from the bay. That being the situation as to the primary parties to the contract, the situation could not be different as to private persons who became parties thereto by claiming the benefit of the contract. The verdict of the jury on the point here considered appears to be contrary to the evidence, and if a recovery on the record depends on that question, the verdict should have been directed for the defendant, and the judgment appealed from cannot stand. There is no explanation, it would seem, of the finding of the jury, consistent with the theory that it was based on evidence, except that they considered that regarding the filtration system, and did not mean to say that the water of the bay, without treatment by filtration, could at any point be depended upon as a safe source of supply.

It is further contended by appellant's counsel that the evidence conclusively shows contributory fault of deceased, precluding a recovery. As before indicated, if deceased drank the bay water with knowledge, or reasonable means of knowledge, that it was dangerously polluted with sewage, he took upon himself the risk and the plaintiff cannot recover, whether recovery be sought on the ground of deceit or negligence. The jury found specifically for plaintiff on that point, yet said by another finding that prior to the death of Green it was publicly and widely stated, and believed, among the citizens of Ashland, that the cause of typhoid fever epidemics in the city was the impure drinking water furnished by defendant. In view of the fact, which we deem uncontroverted by the evidence, that the water was impure, and that such condition had existed for a long time and was widely and commonly known, the findings referred to are inconsistent, there being no evidence explaining why the deceased did not know of that which was a matter of common knowledge in the community where he lived. Common knowledge of a fact raises a presumption that all persons of average intelligence have notice of it. That is elementary. Not only was there no proof to justify the jury in saying the deceased did not have reasonable ground to believe what they said was commonly known and believed, but there is such affirmative evidence to the contrary. He knew that the sewage of the city was drained into the bay, and that the defendant's water supply was taken therefrom. He was an intelligent, reading, working man. He took one of the city papers wherein the dangers of taking water from the bay were discussed. He had typhoid fever in his family six months before he was stricken, his wife being the afflicted party. She was attended by Dr. Hosmer,—one of plaintiff's witnesses, who was thoroughly conversant with the condition of defendant's water supply, and who probably talked with the deceased on the subject, as he did with intelligent men generally, it being a matter of common talk. All these facts are in evidence. It is not deemed advisable to quote the evidence at length. Suffice it to say that the proof is overwhelming to the point that the bay water was dangerously polluted at the time Green was stricken with the fever, and that it had been in that condition, especially in the spring, for several years; that the facts in that regard were understood in the city generally, and had been the subject of discussion at public meetings and in the city council, and in the newspapers, and among the people for a long time. There is no evidence in the record to rebut the presumption that the deceased had notice of what was so commonly known. So we cannot escape the conclusion that the verdict of the jury on the subject of Green's contributory fault is without evidence to support it, and that the contrary is established by the evidence. For this and the other reasons mentioned, the judgment appealed from must be reversed.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

J. J. YORK, Respt.,
v.

John M. STEWARD et al., Appts.

(.....Mont.....)

1. Oral warranties are not admissible to vary the terms of a written lease subsequently or contemporaneously made.
2. There is no implied warranty that a leased house is fit for the use for which it is let, or that it is suitable for any purpose, or that it shall remain in a tenable condition.
3. An averment in answer to an action for rent that the lessor made false representations as to the fitness and condition of the building is not such an allegation of fraud as will entitle defendant to show the condition of the building.
4. The flowing of water into leased apartments from an upper tenement owned and occupied by the lessor, because of defective plumbing, causing injury to the lessee's goods, which the lessor refused to remedy within a reasonable time after notice, constitutes a breach of the implied covenant for quiet enjoyment, in the absence of excusing facts.
5. Refusal to allow a pleading to be amended during trial will not be ground for reversal, where no abuse of discretion or necessity to amend is shown.

(November 7, 1898.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Silver Bow County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover rent alleged to be due and unpaid. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Cotter, for appellants:

The lease sued upon in this action contains an implied covenant for quiet enjoyment as against the lessor and those claiming under him.

Gear, Land. & T. § 91, note; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1011; Foster v. Peyser, 9 Cush. 242, 57 Am. Dec. 43; Boreel v. Lawton, 90 N. Y. 293, 43 Am. Rep. 170; DeWitt v. Pierson, 112 Mass. 8, 17 Am. Rep. 58; Whitbeck v. Cook, 15 Johns. 483, 8 Am. Dec. 272; 3 Parsons, Contr. p. 501.

It was competent to show the actual condition of the building and its unfitness for the purpose intended.

Blake v. Dick, 15 Mont. 236; Milliken v. Thorndike, 103 Mass. 385.

Any act on the part of the landlord which so disturbs the tenant's possession of the demised premises as to compel an abandonment of the same, or which deprives him of their

NOTE.—As to the effect of a partial eviction upon liability for rent, see note to Edmison v. Lowry (S. D.) 17 L. R. A. 275; also Collins v. Lewis (Minn.) 19 L. R. A. 822.

As to constructive eviction, see also Lelferman v. Osten (Ill.) 89 L. R. A. 156.

For implied covenants in a lease as to the fitness of the property for the purpose intended, see note to Clifton v. Montague (W. Va.) 38 L. R. A. 449.

43 L. R. A.

beneficial enjoyment, either in whole or in part, or any entry of the landlord upon said premises in such manner as to unfit them for the purpose for which they were leased, will amount to an eviction.

7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 37, note 5; Gear, Land. & T. § 47; Rowbotham v. Pearce, 5 Houst. (Del.) 135; Bissell v. Lloyd, 100 Ill. 214; West Side Bank v. Nanton, 76 N. Y. 616; McAlester v. Landers, 70 Cal. 79.

It is not necessary to state facts constituting an eviction; it may be averred generally; no formal allegation is necessary.

1 Estee, Pl. § 1259; Rickert v. Snyder, 9 Wend. 416.

Action of third persons holding under the landlord may be shown, and knowledge of former acts is also admissible for the jury to consider.

Warren v. Wagner, 75 Ala. 188, 51 Am. Rep. 446; Story, Agency, § 452; City Power Co. v. Fergus Falls Water Co. 55 Minn. 176; McCarthy v. York County Sav. Bank, 74 Me. 315, 43 Am. Rep. 591; Carson v. Godloy, 26 Pa. 111, 67 Am. Dec. 405.

The plaintiff, being the owner and in possession of the upper stories of the building, portions of which he had rented to different tenants of his own, was responsible for any acts of the tenants in allowing the overflow of the closets or fixtures, and any damage that might result to the defendants thereby.

Marshall v. Cohen, 44 Ga. 489, 9 Am. Rep. 170; Gear, Land. & T. § 46; Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2829, p. 4621; Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cow. 727; Lawrence v. French, 25 Wend. 443; Edgerton v. Page, 20 N. Y. 281; Crommelin v. Thiess, 31 Ala. 412, 70 Am. Dec. 499; Jackson v. Eddy, 12 Mo. 209.

A surrender of a lease may be inferred from the circumstances and conduct of the parties, evincing that they both agree to consider a surrender as made.

Gear, Land. & T. § 192, p. 696; Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 382, 24 L. ed. 173; Bedford v. Terhune, 30 N. Y. 453, 86 Am. Dec. 394, note.

An executed verbal agreement to reduce rent is binding after the acceptance of the reduced rent in full.

Gear, Land. & T. § 132; Horgan v. Krumwiede, 25 Hun, 116; Nicoll v. Burke, 78 N. Y. 580; Copper v. Fretnoransky, 42 N. Y. S. R. 472.

It was competent for appellants to show the manner in which the second story of the building was used by plaintiff, to prove their allegation of damages, as an offset, if for no other purpose, to the claim for rent.

Jones v. Freidenburg, 66 Ga. 505, 42 Am. Rep. 86, note; Gliksauf v. Maurer, 75 Ill. 289, 20 Am. Rep. 238, note; Toole v. Beckett, 67 Me. 544, 24 Am. Rep. 54. See also Pike v. Brittan, 71 Cal. 159, 60 Am. Rep. 527.

Messrs. Charles O'Donnell and Francis Brooks, for respondent:

Nothing short of an actual eviction from the premises by the landlord, or through his agency, or by title paramount, or a surrender of the premises by the tenant, and their acceptance by the landlord, will at common law relieve the tenant from his liability for the rent for the full term.

Harrison v. North, 1 Cas. in Ch. 84; Hart v. Windsor, 12 Mees. & W. 78; Whitbeck v. Skinner, 7 Hill, 53; Kelsey v. Ward, 16 Abb. Pr. 98; Myers v. Burns, 35 N. Y. 269; Willard v. Tillman, 19 Wend. 358; Gates v. Green, 4 Paige, 355, 27 Am. Dec. 68.

There is no implied contract on the part of the landlord that the leased premises are tenantable.

Witty v. Matthews, 52 N. Y. 512; Cowell v. Lumley, 39 Cal. 151, 2 Am. Rep. 430.

The landlord cannot be treated as having impliedly covenanted to repair, or that the building is or shall continue to be fit for the purposes for which it was let.

Robbins v. Mount, 4 Robt. 553.

Where a man undertakes to pay a specific rent for a piece of land, he is obliged to pay that rent whether it answers the purpose for which he took it or not.

Laughin v. Kief, 15 Alb. L. J. 255; Hartford & N. Y. S. B. Co. v. New York, 12 Hun, 550.

Pigott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for rent alleged to be due upon a lease entered into between plaintiff and defendants on December 31, 1892, by the terms of which plaintiff let to the defendants the storeroom and first basement of a three-story brick building in Butte for the term of twelve months, beginning with January 1, 1893, at the monthly rental of $225 for the first six months, and of $250 for each month thereafter. Provision is made in the lease that, if the rent be not paid monthly in advance, the lessor may re-enter, and take possession, and, at his option, may determine the lease. It contains the usual covenants against waste or alteration by the lessees, but expresses no covenant whatever on the part of the lessor. Upon issues framed by the complaint, answer, and reply the cause was tried by jury. A verdict was rendered, and judgment entered for the plaintiff. From an order refusing a new trial, and from the judgment, defendants have appealed.

1. Much difficulty has been experienced in the effort to determine the exact ground upon which the defendants, in their first defense and counterclaim, intend to rely. The matters there stated as constituting both a defense and a counterclaim are set forth in a manner so obscure, and with such disregard of the rule requiring conciseness and clearness, that a demurrer attacking the part of the answer now being considered, for want of certainty, as well as for ambiguity, would have been well interposed. Since, however, no objection was taken in the court below or here to the answer upon any ground whatsoever, we have examined the first defense and counterclaim as pleaded, and, after some hesitation, arrive at the conclusion that the pleader intended to aver, substantially, that, on, or just before, the execution of the lease, and while the defendants were negotiating with plaintiff therefor, plaintiff warranted that the building was in all respects suitable for the purpose of carrying on therein the piano and musical instrument business, in which defendants were engaged; that the basement would be ceiled, and put in good condition, and a new sidewalk laid; that defendants, relying upon these representations and warranties, entered into the lease, and in pursuance of the lease went into possession of the building, and placed their stock of musical instruments therein, and remained in possession until August 31, 1893; that the building was defectively constructed; that it was unfit for defendants' business, and that by reason of the defective construction of the plumbing and water fittings in the second story, which was occupied by and in the possession of plaintiff, the sinks and closets situated in the second story, and under the control of plaintiff, were allowed to overflow, and the water permitted to run down into the defendants' place of business, and upon defendants' merchandise, whereby the stock of goods was injured; that defendants repeatedly notified plaintiff of the defective condition of the plumbing and fittings in the building, but that plaintiff refused and neglected to remedy such defects, by which default plaintiff permitted a continuing nuisance to exist; that, because of the defective construction of the building, it was unfit for the use for which it was rented by the defendants, and was untenable; and that by reason of the representations and warranties of the plaintiff as to the condition of the building, and by reason of its unfitness for the purposes for which it was warranted by plaintiff, and by reason of the injury done by the water, defendants were damaged in their business in the sum of $250.

The first error assigned is the action of the court below in refusing to permit the introduction of evidence tending to prove an oral warranty of the condition of the building. The rule that, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, oral evidence cannot be admitted to alter, add to, or contradict the terms of a written contract, is so familiar that it would seem needless to cite authorities. This rule is applicable to evidence offered for the purpose of establishing an oral warranty, where, presumptively, the parties have reduced their entire contract to writing. Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. L. 331, 43 Am. Rep. 380; McLean v. Nicol, 43 Minn. 169; Snead v. Tietjen (Ariz.) 24 Pac. 324. See also Sanford v. Gates, T. & Co. 21 Mont. —, 53 Pac. 749; Gaffney Mercantile Co. v. Hopkins, 21 Mont. —, 52 Pac. 561; Mast v. Pearce, 58 Iowa, 579, 43 Am. Rep. 125; Fisher v. Briscoe, 10 Mont. 124; Anderson v. Perkins, 10 Mont. 154; Stevens v. Pierce, 151 Mass. 207; DeWitt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306, 33 L. ed. 896; Brady v. Henry, 71 Cal. 481, 60 Am. Rep. 543. The court, therefore, did not err in excluding all evidence having a tendency to show that plaintiff, contemporaneously with the making of the lease, or prior thereto, warranted by word of mouth the condition of the building, or promised to lay a new sidewalk, or ceil the cellar. Nor may defendants base their defense and counterclaim upon the breach of an implied warranty of fitness, for in the lease of a house there is no implication of warranty that the property is fitted for the use for which it is let, or that it is suitable for any purpose, or that it shall remain in a tenantable condition. Blake v. Dick, 15 Mont. 236; Gear, Land. & T. § 99. Defendants insist, however, that, having pleaded fraud, concealment, and misrepresentation in the making of the lease, it was competent for them to show the actual condition of the building, and its unfitness for the purpose intended. In answer to this contention it is sufficient to say that neither fraudulent misrepresentation nor concealment is pleaded. The answer, it is true, alleges that the plaintiff represented the building to be suitable, but it is silent as to whether or not the representation was fraudulently made. The averment that the representation was false is tantamount to saying that it was merely untrue. Budd v. Power, 8 Mont. 380. Defendants assign as error the rejection of evidence which they say was offered for the purpose of proving that the building was so defectively constructed in respect of the plumbing, fittings, water-closets, and sinks on the second floor, and in the possession of plaintiff, as to cause the water therein continually to overflow, and run down through the ceiling into defendants' storeroom, the effect of which was to deprive them of its beneficial enjoyment, to render it untenable, and to injure their goods; and that plaintiff failed, refused, and neglected to remedy the defect, although his attention was frequently called to it by the complaints of the defendants; and that by reason of the continuance of the nuisance defendants surrendered the demised property in August, 1893. That the evidence tendered and the offers of proof were as broad as defendants assume they were, is not perfectly apparent; but we are inclined to think that, when the pleadings and the whole course of the trial are considered, it may fairly be held that the evidence ruled out and the offers to prove comprehended, in substance, what is claimed by defendants. Would the evidence offered and excluded tend to establish the violation by plaintiff of any agreement or promise on his part contained in the lease? The usual words of demise import a covenant for quiet enjoyment, which signifies that the tenant shall not be evicted by title paramount, and also that his possession shall not be disturbed by the acts or wrongful omissions of the lessor. Any sort of annoyance, unless, perhaps, a mere trespass, affecting the occupation of the property let, which prevents the tenant from enjoying it in as ample a manner as he is entitled to by the terms of the lease, amounts to a breach. If the lessor disturbs the possession by an unlawful interference therewith, the lessee may, when sued for the rent, set up the damages arising from such disturbance as a counterclaim (Hanley v. Banks, 6 Okla. 79; McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67) while at common law it seems he may recoup damages (New York v. Mable, 13 N. Y. 151). Treating the evidence which was offered as received, it appears that the plaintiff owned and was in possession and control of that part of the building immediately over the room let by him to the defendants; that the plumbing and fittings in such part of the house were defectively constructed; and that, by reason of the refusal of the plaintiff to remedy the defect, water overflowed the sinks and closets of the plaintiff, and ran down into the storeroom of the defendants to such an extent as to deprive them of the beneficial use of their tenement. We are satisfied that such evidence would, at least, tend to establish a constructive eviction, occasioned by the omission of the lessor to abate a nuisance, originating in, and continuing to exist upon, the property owned and controlled by him. Anything which is an obstruction to the free use of property so as to interfere with its comfortable enjoyment is a nuisance. Comp. Stat. 1887, div. 1, § 361. It is well settled that defective water pipes become a nuisance when carelessly maintained. Wood, Nuisances, § 124. The landlord's acts or defaults may not amount to a physical eviction; nevertheless they may be of such character as to create or permit the continuance of a nuisance, "which, by preventing the reasonable use by the tenant of the premises, would affect directly the consideration of the contract between them." Sully v. Schmitt, 147 N. Y. 248; McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67; Kline v. Hanks, 14 Mont. 361; Marshall v. Cohen, 44 Ga. 489, 9 Am. Rep. 170. If defendants, as tenants of the lower floor, were disturbed in their occupancy, or constructively evicted by the flowing of water from improperly constructed fixtures in a part of the building not let to them, but in the possession and under the control of plaintiff, the lessor, and the disturbance or eviction would not have resulted but for the omission of the lessor to remedy the defective construction within a reasonable time after notice thereof, then the lessor, at least in the absence of excusing facts, has violated the implied covenant for quiet enjoyment. This is clearly common sense as well as the law; indeed, the supreme court of Georgia, in Freidenburg v. Jones, 63 Ga. 612, which case is approved in Jones v. Freidenburg, 66 Ga. 505, 42 Am. Rep. 86, held that "where a tenant on a lower floor is injured by the flowing of water from the bathtubs and water fixtures situated above, he has a right of action against the landlord, if the overflow results from their improper construction; and this liability exists without reference to the occupation of the upper apartment by another tenant." But it is not necessary in the case at bar to approve or disapprove the doctrine there declared. Blake v. Dick, 15 Mont. 236, is cited by plaintiff as controlling, but nothing decided in that case is inconsistent with the principles applicable to the question raised in the case before us. For the error referred to, the motion for a new trial should have been granted.

2. During the trial the defendants asked leave to amend the answer by inserting an allegation to the effect that, owing to the negligent use of the upper story by the plaintiff and his tenants, the water fittings were allowed to overflow, and the water to run down, so as to render the store untenable for defendants' purpose, or for any purpose. The request was denied. We perceive no error in the action of the court. It does not appear that defendants made any showing of the necessity to amend, nor was the amendment sought for the purpose of making the allegations correspond to the evidence already introduced. Some testimony had been received tending to prove that lodgers or tenants on the second floor had allowed water to overflow the sinks. But this evidence was received as one of the inducements for the alleged agreement for alteration or cancelation of the lease pleaded in the second defense, and not as supporting the averments constituting the first defense and counterclaim. It does not appear that court abused its discretion in refusing the application, which was made during the progress of the trial.

3. The second defense is, in effect, that the plaintiff, on July 1, 1893, in consideration of the prevailing business depression and of the untenable condition of the demised property, and of the defective construction of the water sinks on the second floor of the building, entered into a new agreement with defendants, by which he let the property to them from month to month, at a rental of $225 monthly, and that on August 1, 1893, defendants notified plaintiff that they would quit the premises on September 1, 1893, and that they were never in possession after August 31st, and that they paid all rents accrued to September 1, 1893. Plaintiff admitted that the rent was paid to September 1st, and that defendants vacated the property in August, and did not thereafter occupy it. Plaintiff denied that there was any agreement whatever to change the terms of the lease, and testified that because of the stagnation of business he voluntarily reduced the monthly rent for July and August from $250 to $225. The testimony upon this question was in substantial conflict. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $846, and thereby necessarily found that the only change made in the lease was a reduction of the rent to $225 a month for the last half of the term.

Errors are also assigned upon the charge of the court and refusal of prayers for instructions relating to the second defense. Examination of the instructions given and of those refused has disclosed no reversible error. Some other matters of minor importance are specified as error, but, as they are not likely to arise again in the cause, their consideration is not deemed necessary. Let the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the district court to permit the defendants to amend the answer as they may be advised, and within such time and on such terms as may to the court seem proper. It is further ordered that appellants do not recover the costs incident to the appeal, and that each party bear such of said costs as were incurred by him.

Reversed and remanded.

Hunt, J., concurs. Pemberton, Ch. J., not sitting.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Carl H. JACKSON, Respt.,
v.

Alex. McINNIS, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

Presentment and demand of payment made on a receiver pendente lite of an insolvent bank and notice of nonpayment by him are insufficient to bind an indorser of a negotiable certificate of deposit issued by the bank before its insolvency.

(October 31, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of plaintiff in an action against the indorser of a negotiable certificate of deposit. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George, Gregory, & Duniway, for appellant:

The certificate of deposit sued upon is not an inland bill of exchange under our statute, because it contains no promise to pay any other person or his order, or unto bearer, any sum of money therein mentioned. 2 Hill's Code, § 3188.

The law raises a right of action in favor of the payee against the maker, which right of action is conditional. But this is not a bill of exchange, so that an indorsement to transfer the right of action can be treated as an indorsement of a bill of exchange under the law merchant.

Patterson v. Poindexter, 6 Watts & S. 227, 40 Am. Dec. 554; Lebanon Bank v. Morgan, 28 Pa. 458; Charnley v. Dulles, 8 Watts & S. 361; Loudon Sav. Fund Soc. v. Hagerstown Sav. Bank, 36 Pa. 498, 78 Am. Dec. 390; Austen v. Miller, 5 McLean, 156.

The indorsee in an action against the indorser can only recover the consideration which he has actually paid.

Coye v. Palmer, 16 Cal. 160; Cook v. Cockrill, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 475, 18 Am. Dec. 67; Braman v. Hess, 13 Johns. 52; Youse v. M'Creary, 2 Blackf. 243; Ingalls v. Lee, 9 Barb. 650.

An indorser's liability is contingent upon strict demand of payment on maker and notice of nonpayment.

2 Randolph, Com. Paper, §§ 758, 1067.

Demand of payment must be made upon the maker or authorized agent.

NOTE.—For presentment to receiver, see also Hutchison v. Crutcher (Tenn.) 37 L. R. A. 89.

For notice to assignee for creditors, see American Nat. Bank v. Junk Bros. Lumber & Mfg. Co. (Tenn.) 28 L. R. A. 492.

43 L. R. A.

2 Randolph, Com. Paper, §§ 1083, 1086.

A bill drawn or a note made by a corporation must be presented for payment to the corporation, or to an agent duly authorized to pay its bills.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 528, 2105.

If the maker becomes bankrupt, still demand must be made upon him for payment.

Hawley v. Jette, 10 Or. 31, 45 Am. Rep. 129; Phipps v. Harding, 34 U. S. App. 148, 70 Fed. Rep. 468, 17 C. C. A. 203, 30 L. R. A. 513; 2 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1086; Story, Bills, §§ 318, 326, 346; Tiedeman, Com. Paper, §§ 313-366; Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 241-252; Chitty, Bills, 11th Am. ed. pp. 330, 335.

Demand for payment upon the assignee to whom the maker has made statutory assignment for the benefit of creditors is not sufficient to hold the indorser.

Armstrong v. Thruston, 11 Md. 148; Story, Bills, §§ 318, 326, 346; Chitty, Bills, 11th Am. ed. pp. 330, 335; Hawley v. Jette, 10 Or. 31, 45 Am. Rep. 129.

The appointment of a receiver of a corporation is interlocutory, does not wind up the corporation, or revoke the appointment of the agents of the corporation.

Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Oregon P. R. Co. 31 Or. 237, 38 L. R. A. 424; Rockwell v. Portland Sav. Bank, 31 Or. 431, 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 11; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 6894, 6939, 6940; Ballard v. Burton, 64 Vt. 394, 16 L. R. A. 664.

Messrs. Spencer & Malarkey for respondent.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by an indorsee against an indorser of a negotiable certificate of deposit, issued by the Portland Savings Bank on October 26, 1894, in favor of the defendant, for $399.76, and by him transferred and indorsed to the plaintiff, for value. After the indorsement, and before the maturity of the instrument, the Portland Savings Bank, becoming insolvent, closed its doors, and a receiver, pendente lite, was appointed by the circuit court of Multnomah county. Upon the maturity of the paper, presentment and demand of payment was made upon the receiver, and notice of nonpayment given to the defendant; and the only question necessary to consider on this appeal is whether such demand and notice is sufficient to hold the indorser. No authority directly in point has been cited by counsel on either side, nor have we been able to find any; but upon principle the demand in question was, in our opinion, insufficient. The contract of an indorser of a negotiable instrument is that if, when duly presented at maturity, the paper is not paid by the maker, he—the indorser—will, upon notice of dishonor, pay the same to the indorsee or other holder. It is a collateral and conditional contract, governed by the technical rules of the law merchant; and a demand of payment upon the maker or drawer and notice of nonpayment are conditions precedent to the indorser's liability. It would seem, necessarily, to follow, therefore, from the very nature of the contract, that the presentment for payment must be made to the person whose duty it is to pay, or to an agent or person duly authorized to act in the premises. 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 588; Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 313. Now, the receiver pendente lite of a corporation is not the agent of the corporation, nor is it his duty to pay or discharge any of its obligations, except as he may be directed by the court. He is an officer of the court, to preserve and distribute the assets of the insolvent corporation, and has no power other than that conferred upon him by the order of his appointment, or such as may be derived from the general practice of the courts of equity in such cases. High, Receivers, § 1; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Oregon P. R. Co. 31 Or. 237, 38 L. R. A. 424. A demand upon him for the payment of the debts of the corporation would, therefore, be a useless proceeding, because he has neither the power nor authority to pay them. That duty still rests upon the corporation, notwithstanding its insolvency and the appointment of a receiver. Neither of these events amounts to a dissolution of the corporation, nor relieves it from the duty of paying its obligations. Bank of Bethel v. Pahquioque Bank, 14 Wall. 383, 20 L. ed. 840; Decker v. Gardner, 124 N. Y. 334, 11 L. R. A. 480; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Hartford Deposit Co. 161 U. S. 1, 40 L. ed. 595. It continues to exist as a corporate entity, and its insolvency constitutes no excuse for neglect to make due presentment for payment of its paper, or to give notice of dishonor to an indorser thereof. Hawley v. Jette, 10 Or. 31, 45 Am. Rep. 129. The case of Armstrong v. Thruston, 11 Md. 148, is quite analogous to the case in hand, and supports the conclusion at which we have arrived. In that case the demand of payment was made upon an assignee of the maker of the note for the benefit of creditors, and it was held that it was not sufficient, because the insolvency of the maker did not excuse demand and notice, and the assignee was not his agent, nor was it his duty to pay the note; and the court says no case has been found in which a demand of payment on a person standing in such a relation to the maker of the note has been held sufficient. The case of Ballard v. Burton, 64 Vt. 387, 16 L. R. A. 664, cited by the defendant, is not in point. That was an action against a person who joined with the bank as maker of a certificate of deposit, and his undertaking was to pay the plaintiff the amount called for by the certificate when it, properly indorsed, should be returned to the bank. Before its maturity, the bank failed, and the question was whether a return of the certificate to the receiver was a sufficient compliance with the terms of the contract. There was no question in the case as to the rights or liabilities of an indorser, and no discussion or consideration of that question. The same may be said of the case of Hutchison v. Crutcher, 98 Tenn. 421, 37 L. R. A. 89. That was an action against an indorser of a note executed by a third person, payable at a certain bank; and the bank being, at the maturity of the note, in the hands of a receiver, it was held by a divided court that the place of payment was at the office of the receiver, and not at the building formerly occupied by the bank.

It follows from these views that the demand for payment made by the plaintiff upon the receiver of the Portland Savings Bank was insufficient to charge the defendant as indorser, and the judgment of the court below must be reversed, and the case remanded for such further proceedings as may be proper, not inconsistent with this opinion.

A. H. CARSON, Respt.,
v.

C. F. GENTNER et al., Appts.

(.....Or.....)

1. A prior appropriator of water from a natural stream flowing through state lands has such a vested right to the use of the water and to the ditch in which it flows, also constructed on said lands, as will defeat the claim of one who, with notice of such diversion and existence of the ditch, obtains from the state a deed of the premises, without any reservation of any water rights.
2. The reservation of vested rights of the owners of ditches provided by Hill's Anno. Laws, §§ 4057-4060, on the issue of patents for land by the state, is not the grant of a new easement, but the recognition of a pre-existing right.
3. A prior appropriator who owns a ditch across lands subsequently patented by the state to another person has the right to enter on such lands to clean and repair the ditch.

(March 15, 1898.)

NOTE.—Right of appropriator to enter upon the land of an upper proprietor to clean out ditch.

The rule which has been applied in this case is the ordinary rule applicable to the preservation of easements.

In Darlington v. Painter, 7 Pa. 473, it is said that the owner of a watercourse through the land of another, whether to lead the stream to his ground or to discharge it therefrom, may enter to remove obstructions from natural or artificial courses.

And this right was applied to a drainage ditch in Roberts v. Roberts, 7 Lans. 55.

In Pico v. Colimas, 32 Cal. 578, where the owner of the ditch entered upon the land of the upper owner and threw down a gate which the latter had placed in the ditch to divert water for his own use, the court said as ancillary to the reasonable enjoyment of plaintiff's easement he had a right to enter upon the upper proprietor's land for the purpose of keeping the ditch in repair and free it from obstructions prejudicial to the easement, and that if the enjoyment of the easement was not impaired by the gate there was no right to enter upon the upper land to remove it.

And that case was cited with approval in Fitzell v. Leaky, 72 Cal. 482.

And its doctrine applied in favor of the owner of an easement for a drainage ditch in Durfee v. Garvey, 78 Cal. 546.

The right to maintain the ditch is involved in the acquisition of it. McGuire v. Brown, 106 Cal. 660, 30 L. R. A. 384.

In Colorado the Constitution and laws per-
42 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Josephine County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiff's maintenance of a ditch across their premises. Affirmed.

Statement by Moore, Ch. J.:

This is a suit to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiff's maintenance of a ditch constructed across their premises. The evidence shows: That on December 23, 1859, the surveyor general of Oregon approved the plat of the survey of township 37 S., range 5 W., of the Willamette meridian, whereupon the legal title to section 16 of said township and range became vested in the state of Oregon for the support of common schools. 9 Stat. at L. 323, chap. 177; 11 Stat. at L. 383, chap. 33. That in 1868 one Lewis Strong constructed a ditch across the W. ¼ of the N. E. ¼ of said section, and thereby diverted from Board Shanty creek the waters thereof, which he used in working a mine in section 22, in said township and range; but, having abandoned his improvements, plaintiff, on April 1, 1876, took possession thereof, and with the water flowing in the ditch continued the operation of the mine, during nearly every season, to the commencement of this suit. That on November 21, 1883, defendants settled upon the land first above described, through which Board Shanty creek flows, and thereafter obtained a deed from the state of Oregon for said tract which contained no reservation of water rights. That on November 30, 1892, plaintiff endeavored to go on defendants' land to repair said ditch, but they refused to permit him to do so, omit the condemnation of a right of way for the construction and maintenance of an irrigation ditch. United States Freehold Land & Emigration Co. v. Gallegos, 89 Fed. Rep. 773.

In Flickinger v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 126, 11 L. R. A. 134, it appeared that the agreement under which the ditch was constructed provided that the owner of it should keep it in repair.

The right to clean out the ditch may extend to the entry upon the stream above the head of the ditch for the removal of obstructions which prevent the flow of the water through the ditch. Crisman v. Helderer, 5 Colo. 589.

In Spear v. Cook, 8 Or. 380, the deed gave the right to repair.

The mere right to maintain the ditch does not give the owner the right to use the soil adjoining the ditch for the purpose of repairing it. Thompson v. Uglow, 4 Or. 369.

As bearing upon the question of the right to repair, it has been held that a ditch owner is bound to keep his ditch in repair so that the water will not break through and overflow the land of adjoining proprietors. Richardson v. Kler, 34 Cal. 63, 91 Am. Dec. 681; Campbell v. Bear River & A. Water & Min. Co. 35 Cal. 679; Childester v. Consolidated Ditch Co. 59 Cal. 197.

In Carson v. Gentner, it seems to have been assumed by the parties that the right to repair the ditch accompanied the right to the ditch because defendant refused to permit the plaintiff to go upon land to repair the ditch, and defended his action in that respect by alleging that plaintiff had no right to construct the ditch. And the court held that the right to the ditch involved the right to repair. H. P. F.

whereupon he commenced this suit for the relief hereinbefore stated. The defendants, after denying the material allegations of the complaint, allege that plaintiff never had any license from the state of Oregon to enter upon its school lands, nor had he or his predecessors any privity of interest with the state, by which he or they were authorized to construct or maintain said ditch across the land now owned by them, or to use the waters of said creek. The reply having put in issue the allegations of new matter contained in the answer, a trial was had, and the court found, from the evidence, that plaintiff was the owner of said ditch, and for more than sixteen years had been in the adverse possession thereof, and was entitled to use the same to carry the waters of Board Shanty creek, of which he was also entitled to the use, and thereupon perpetually enjoined defendants from interfering with plaintiff's ownership of the ditch and right to enter upon their lands, at all times when necessary to repair the same, from which decree defendants appeal.

Mr. Davis Brower for appellants.

Messrs. G. W. Colvig and R. G. Smith, for respondent:

Mining is a franchise which rests in a presumptive grant from the state. It is extended to all persons who choose to mine and construct canals to their properties, and is such a vested right as cannot be destroyed.

Gold Hill Quartz Min. Co. v. Ish, 5 Or. 106; Irwin v. Phillips, 5 Cal. 140, 63 Am. Dec. 113; Conger v. Weaver, 6 Cal. 548, 65 Am. Dec. 528; Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 317, 68 Am. Dec. 262; Black's Pomeroy, Riparian Rights, § 26, note, § 29; Or. Const. art. 15, sub. 8; 2 Lindley, Mines, § 838.

The legislative assembly of Oregon recognized the right of miners to work their claims and appropriate water and construct ditches to the same at an early date.

2 Hill's Code, §§ 3830, 3832, 3833; 1 Lindley, Mines, §§ 44, 45.

The only reservation on an appropriation of water for mining purposes was that the local laws of miners should not conflict with the laws of the United States.

2 Hill's Code, § 3832.

A title by adverse possession is a perfect title, and will protect the possessor against every act of infringement that a paper title could.

Parker v. Metzger, 12 Or. 409.

Prescriptive title applies to water rights, ditches, and easements.

Johnson v. Knott, 13 Or. 315; Coventon v. Seufert, 23 Or. 548.

Possession is hostile and adverse if asserted under claim of right, and evidenced by exclusive use and occupation.

Rowland v. Williams, 23 Or. 515.

The statute of limitations runs against the state the same as against private persons.

Code, p. 138; State v. Baker County, 24 Or. 141; Buswell, Limitations & Adverse Possession, § 98, p. 150; People v. Clarke, 9 N. Y. 349; People v. Columbia County Super. 10 Wend. 363; Jones v. Borden, 5 Tex. 43 L. R. A.

410; Wood, Limitations of Actions, p. 93; Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 274; Webster v. State Harbor Comrs. 18 Wall. 57, 21 L. ed. 798; St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 387; State v. Baker County, 24 Or. 141.

The right to go upon state lands for the purpose of acquiring water rights or constructing ditches has always been exercised by the people in this state.

An easement could be acquired by adverse use if title could.

Tolman v. Casey, 15 Or. 83; Coventon v. Seufert, 23 Or. 548.

Moore, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented for consideration by this appeal is whether a prior appropriator of water from a natural stream, flowing through state lands, has such a vested right to the use of the water and to the ditch in which it flows, also constructed on said lands, as will defeat the claim of one who, with notice of such diversion and existence of the ditch, obtains from the state a deed for the premises, without reservation of any water rights. Defendants' counsel contend that, prior to the appropriation complained of, the state of Oregon was a riparian owner of the land sought to be burdened with the easement, and entitled to have the waters of said stream continue to flow in its natural channel past said land; that the state, prior to the act of February 24, 1885 (Hill's Anno. Laws, §§ 4057-4060), having conveyed to defendants said premises without reserving any water rights therein, they acquired by their deed the ditch constructed thereon, and also a usufructuary interest in the flow of the waters of said creek in its natural channel; and that plaintiff, not having had possession of the ditch, or the use of the water of said creek, for a period of ten years after defendants' entry, the court erred in restraining them from utilizing their own property. Plaintiff's counsel insist, however, that the ditch in question was constructed in pursuance of a license from the state, upon the faith of which labor and money were bestowed and expended thereon, thus rendering such license irrevocable, and that plaintiff, having been in the adverse possession of the ditch and water flowing therein, for more than sixteen years, had in this manner acquired an easement in defendants' premises which entitled him to continue the use thereof unmolested by them.

The doctrine of the common law, that the waters of a stream must continue to flow in its natural channel, undiminished in quantity and unimpaired in quality, has been very much modified in the territory embraced in the Pacific Coast states, where a new rule, founded upon the necessities under which the early settlers labored, has been inaugurated. So much, only, of the common law was adopted by these settlers as was applicable to the condition of the country in which their lot was cast; and, realizing that water is a powerful agent in separating the precious metals from the baser materials in which they are embedded, and also serves, when used in irrigating arid tracts, to cause the desert to bud, blossom, and bear fruit, and that without the use of such water a vast region must forever remain valueless and uninhabited, necessity compelled these primitive lawgivers to adopt for their government a code of customs which prescribed the extent of public land each was entitled to, and regulated the manner of appropriating water to the operation of mines and the cultivation of farms, orchards, and vineyards. This latter custom provided that he who first changed the course of a natural stream flowing through public lands, which at the time was common to all, and appropriated the water so diverted to some useful purpose, thereby acquired a superior right to continue the use thereof against every claimant except the United States. The justice of this custom was recognized by the courts, which enforced its provisions in opposition to the doctrine of the common law; and the legislative assemblies of these states, following the example set by the courts, have passed in many instances acts guaranteeing protection to prior appropriators in their possessory rights in the diversion of water against all claimants except the sovereign. The legislative action of this state on the subject is embodied in § 3832, Hill's Anno. Laws, approved October 24, 1864, which reads as follows: "Miners shall be empowered to make local laws in relation to the possession of water rights, the possession and working of placer claims, and the survey and sale of town lots in mining camps, subject to the laws of the United States."

The wisdom of this new rule was finally recognized by Congress, which, on July 26, 1866, passed an act, the 9th section of which, so far as applicable to the case at bar, provides "that, whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is hereby acknowledged and confirmed." 14 Stat. at L. 251, chap. 262; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2339. It has been repeatedly held that the provisions of the section just quoted only confirm to the owners of ditches and water rights on the public domain the same privileges which they enjoyed under the local customs, laws, and decisions of the courts prior to its passage. Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 507, 22 L. ed. 414; Bacey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. 670, 22 L. ed. 452; Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 240; Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. 101 U. S. 274, 25 L. ed. 790.

The custom of appropriating water to a beneficial use has been limited by this court, which holds that the act of Congress of July 26, 1866, applies only to government lands. Curtis v. La Grande Hydraulic Water Co. 20 Or. 34, 47, 10 L. R. A. 484, 488. Mr. Justice Lord, rendering the decision of the court in that case, and speaking of the diversion of the waters of a stream claimed to have been made in pursuance of the provisions of the Federal statute above quoted, says: "While that act was passed a year later than the facts show the waters of the creek were diverted, yet it applies only to government land and streams flowing through it. In these, under the circumstances indicated in the act, the prior appropriation of the water may operate to secure a vested right to divert it, which shall be maintained and protected. But it has no application to the lands of individual owners, and, as against them, can confer no right to divert the waters of streams flowing through their lands."

In Alta Land & Water Co. v. Hancock, 85 Cal. 219, it is held that a stream flowing through the land of a riparian owner is an appurtenance thereto, which runs with the land as a corporeal hereditament, which might be segregated by grant or condemnation, or extinguished by prescription, but it could not be defeated by simple appropriation.

In Santa Cruz v. Enright, 95 Cal. 105, it was held that a riparian proprietor of private lands could not acquire any right by mere appropriation to the use of water flowing through his premises.

In Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 33 L. ed. 761, the facts were that in March, 1877, one John Smith settled upon a tract of public land in Dakota territory through which False Bottom creek flowed in a natural channel; that on March 25, 1879, he filed a homestead entry thereon, and, having made final proof in support of his claim on May 10, 1883, obtained from the United States a patent therefor and in May, 1884, conveyed said tract to Beck; that in June, 1877, Sturr settled on an adjoining tract of public land, filed a homestead entry thereon May 15, 1880, and made final proof in support thereof on May 10, 1883; that on May 15, 1880, Sturr, without any grant from Smith, went upon the latter's claim, located a water right thereon, and constructed a ditch, by means of which he diverted the waters of said creek and appropriated the same to his claim. In a suit by such appropriator against the owner of the tract through which said stream flowed, to enjoin him from interfering with the ditch constructed thereon and the use of the water diverted thereby, it was held that the filing of a homestead entry for a tract of public land across which a stream flows in its natural channel, with no right or claim of right to divert the water therefrom, initiates a right to have the stream continue to flow in such channel without diversion which ripens into a complete grant, upon obtaining a patent therefor which relates back to the date of filing, and thereby cuts off intervening adverse claims of the water. Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, in rendering the decision of the court, says: "When, however, the government ceases to be the sole proprietor, the right of the riparian owner attaches, and cannot be subsequently invaded. As the riparian owner has the right to have the water flow ut currere solebat, undiminished except by reasonable consumption of upper proprietors, and no subsequent attempt to take the water only can override the prior appropriation of both land and water, it would seem reasonable that lawful riparian occupancy, with intent to appropriate the land, should have the same effect."

In Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 249, it was held that the rights of the defendant, a riparian owner, whose patent for public lands from the United States was issued without reservation of any water rights, and antedated the act of Congress of July 26, 1866, was superior to the claim of plaintiff, a prior appropriator of the waters of a natural stream flowing through defendants' land. Whitman, J., speaking of plaintiff's claim as a prior appropriator, says: "He acquired no right against Haines, prior to the date of the latter's patent, which could affect that grant, because there was no title in Haines to be affected by acts of the respondent. He could acquire no right against the United States, for, as to that government, he was a trespasser, in that he diverted water from its lands not sought to be pre-empted by him. No presumption of grant arises against the sovereign, and no statute of limitation runs, save in some excepted instances, of which this is not one."

In Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. 101 U. S. 274, 25 L. ed. 790, Mr. Justice Miller, referring to the right of prior appropriation, says: "It is the established doctrine of this court that rights of miners, who had taken possession of mines, and worked and developed them, and the rights of persons who had constructed canals and ditches to be used in mining operations and for purposes of agricultural irrigation, in the region where such artificial use of the water was an absolute necessity, are rights which the government had, by its conduct, recognized and encouraged, and was bound to protect, before the passage of the act of 1866. We are of the opinion that the section of the act which we have quoted was rather a voluntary recognition of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one."

In Jones v. Adams, 19 Nev. 78, plaintiff was awarded seven tenths of the waters of a stream flowing through his land, and defendant, an upper riparian proprietor on said stream, the remaining three tenths,—the trial court having found that each was the first appropriator upon his respective land. Plaintiff, relying upon the rule announced in Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 249, contended that, inasmuch as the findings of the court showed that he obtained from the United States a patent for his land prior to the act of Congress of July 26, 1866, he, as a riparian owner, was entitled to the flow of the waters of said stream in the channel thereof; but Hawley, J., denying the point contended for, quotes with approval the above language of Mr. Justice Miller in Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. and says: "The case of Vansickle v. Haines, in so far as the same is in conflict with the views herein expressed, is hereby overruled."

In Lus v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, it was held that the state of California, on September 25, 1850, became the owner of certain swamp 43 L. R. A.

lands situated within its borders; that a prior appropriation of the waters of a stream flowing through such lands was defeated by a subsequent grant of the state of such lands, without reservation; and that the rights of the state are not dependent upon or limited by the decision of the state courts with respect to controversies arising out of prior appropriations of water from streams flowing through the public lands of the United States. The force of that decision is very much weakened, however, by the very able dissenting opinion of Ross, J., in which he says: "From the foundation of the state, waters pertaining to the public lands of both the Federal and state governments have been appropriated and used for mining, agriculture, and other useful purposes. Such appropriation and use was first sanctioned by custom, next by the decisions of the courts, and, finally, by legislative action on the part of the United States, as well as the state. It thus became a part of the law of the land, of which every citizen was entitled to avail himself, and of which every purchaser from the United States, as well as the state, was bound to take notice. In protecting, therefore, the rights of the appropriators of water upon the public lands of the state and of the United States, no wrong is done to the purchasers from either government." Further on in the opinion the learned justice says: "The doctrine of appropriation thus established was not a temporary thing, to exist only until someone should obtain a certificate or patent for 40 acres, or some other subdivision of the public land, bordering on the river or other stream of water. It was as has been said, born of the necessities of the country and its people, was the growth of years, permanent in its character, and fixed the status of water rights with respect to public lands. No valid reason exists why the government, which owned both the land and the water, could not do this. It thus became, in my judgment, as much a part of the law of the land as if it had been written in terms in the statute books, and in connection with which all grants of public land from either government should be read. In the light of the history of the state, and of the legislation and decisions with respect to the subject in question, is it possible that either government, state or national, ever contemplated that conveyance of 40 acres of land at the lower end of a stream that flows for miles through public lands should put an end to subsequent appropriation of the waters of the stream upon the public lands above, and entitle the grantee of the 40 acres to the undiminished flow of the water in its natural channel from its source to its mouth? It seems to me entirely clear that nothing of the kind was ever intended or contemplated."

In Krall v. United States, 48 U. S. App. 351, 79 Fed. Rep. 241, 24 C. C. A. 543, the officers of the United States, in pursuance of a proclamation of the president in January, 1868, reserved 640 acres of land from the public domain in Idaho for a military post, through which a stream flowed, and from which a prior appropriation of the waters thereof was made for the use of the government. Thereafter plaintiff went upon the public lands, and diverted and appropriated a certain quantity of the water of said stream from a point above the military reservation for the purpose of irrigating his own land; and it was held that the prior appropriation of the government did not defeat the right of a subsequent appropriation by the citizen. Mr. Justice Ross, with whom Mr. Justice Hawley concurred, speaking for the majority of the court, says: "The creation of the reservation for military post purposes did not destroy or in any way affect the doctrine of appropriation thus established by the government in respect to the waters of the non-navigable streams upon the public lands. They continued subject to appropriation for any useful purpose. The appropriation of a part of those waters for the uses of the military post secured it in the use of the portion so appropriated, but it did not take from others the right to make such appropriation above the reservation as would not interfere with its prior appropriation." Mr. Justice Gilbert, however, relying upon a contra rule, which he maintains was established in the case of Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 33 L. ed. 761, dissents from the conclusion reached by his associates.

The legislative assembly of Oregon passed an act, approved February 24, 1885, which granted to any individual or corporation a right of way over all lands belonging to the state, for the construction of water ditches, to be used for irrigation, manufacturing, or mining purposes, and provided that all patents issued by the state, for any of its school, university, tide, swamp, or overflowed lands, should be subject to any vested rights of the owners of such water ditches. Hill's Anno. Laws, §§ 4057-4060. This statute was a legislative sanction, confirmatory of the customs of miners, and, like the act of Congress of July 26, 1866, was the recognition of a pre-existing right, rather than the granting of a new easement in its real property. Without it the common law of the Pacific Coast states, applicable alike to the arid and mining region, authorized the diversion of water flowing through public lands of the state, and an appropriation thereof for irrigating and mining purposes; and Strong, having taken advantage of this universal custom, made a diversion and appropriation, but, having abandoned his interests therein, his right reverted to the public, so that, in 1876, when plaintiff took possession thereof, it was the initiation of a new diversion and appropriation, but, having been made prior to defendants' settlement upon the state lands, it is superior to their interests therein, and hence plaintiff is entitled to the relief awarded, so far as it relates to an interference with his right to enter upon defendants' lands to clean and repair the ditch.

Counsel for the defendants insist that the court erred in its conclusion of law that plaintiff was entitled to the use of the water of Board Shanty creek, claiming that this was not in issue; but an examination of the answer shows that reference was made to this right, and that the question of such use was involved in the suit, and, this being so, the decree in that respect will not be disturbed.

It follows that the decree must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Rehearing denied June 20, 1898.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Mississippi, Appt.,

v.

Joseph REED.

(.....Miss.....)

A railroad company has no right to give one hackman an exclusive privilege of entering, with his hacks, its inclosed station grounds to solicit passengers.

(December 19, 1898.)

A PPEAL by the state from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Warren County acquitting defendant of trespass upon property of the Alabama & Vicksburg Railroad Company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McWillie & Thompson, for appellant:

The railway company was and is a common carrier of passengers. It was engaged in selling to passengers whose journeys extended beyond its own line coupon tickets, entitling them to through carriage: and this obligated the railway company to transport such passengers through the city of Vicksburg, from its own depot to the depots of other railroad companies, steamboat landings, etc.

Can it not authorize its own agents in such through transportation to enter its cars and premises for the purpose of facilitating its through business, and to promote the comfort and convenience of its through passengers?

Jencks v. Coleman, 2 Sumn. 221.

The railway company is the private owner of its enclosed grounds, subject only to the rights which the law gives against it.

Every right given by our Constitution, by our statutes, and by the common law of the land against railroad companies, as concerns entering their premises at least, are given, not to the public generally, but to their patrons; and they are given against the roads in their public employment and capacity as common carriers, and not against them in any other relation.

NOTE.—The conflicting authorities respecting the right of a railroad company to give an exclusive privilege to one hackman are found in a note to Cole v. Rowen (Mich.) 13 L. R. A. 848. 43 L. R. A.

For later cases, see Lindsey v. Anniston (Ala.) 27 L. R. A. 436; Lucas v. Herbert (Ind.) 37 L. R. A. 376; and New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Scoville (Conn.) 42 L. R. A. 157.

Barker v. Midland R. Co. 18 C. B. 46; Perth General Station Committee v. Ross [1897] A. C. 479; Jencks v. Coleman, 2 Sumn. 221; Beadell v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 2 C. B. N. S. 509; Foulger v. Steadman, L. R. 8 Q. B. 65; Barney v. Oyster Bay & H. S. B. Co. 67 N. Y. 301; Cole v. Rowen, 88 Mich. 219, 13 L. R. A. 848; Old Colony R. Co. v. Tripp, 147 Mass. 35; Fluker v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 461, 2 L. R. A. 843; Com. v. Carey, 147 Mass. 41, note; Griswold v. Webb, 16 R. J. 649, 7 L. R. A. 302; Brown v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 75 Hun, 355.

The authors of the notes to Kalamazoo Hack & Bus Co. v. Sootsma, 22 Am. St. Rep. 699, and 13 L. R. A. 848, fail to take or to present adequate notice of the fact that the decisions which they seem to approve are based on statutory or constitutional provisions.

Mr. R. L. McLaurin, for appellee:

The Constitution of 1890, §§ 184-186, 190, expressly forbids any discrimination on the part of railway corporations.

The case at bar is a palpable case of discrimination.

The effort is made to have the United States mail, baggage, and other things carted to the postoffice and to other places where the railroad company is under contract to take them, free of cost to the railroad company by giving one hack line and baggage man exclusive rights on the railroad premises in consideration of said hack line doing this hauling.

If it is lawful for the railroad company to give this special privilege by contract, then it would be in the power of the railroad company to practically control the hack and transfer business of any city or town, which is beyond and in excess of its charter rights.

Montana Union R. Co. v. Langlois, 9 Mont. 419, 8 L. R. A. 753; Kalamazoo Hack & Bus Co. v. Sootsma, 84 Mich. 194, 10 L. R. A. 819; Cravens v. Rodgers, 101 Mo. 247; Cole v. Rowen, 88 Mich. 219, 13 L. R. A. 848; Sandford v. Catawissa, W. & E. R. Co. 24 Pa. 373, 64 Am. Dec. 667; McConnell v. Pedigo, 92 Ky. 465; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1678.

Woods, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Joseph Reed, the appellee, was arrested upon affidavit charging him with trespassing upon private premises belonging to the Alabama & Vicksburg Railroad Company, and was, before the justice of the peace, tried and convicted. He appealed from that conviction to the circuit court of Warren county, and was there tried upon an agreed statement of facts, and was by the judgment of that court acquitted of the charge and discharged. From this judgment of the circuit court, the state prosecutes this appeal.

From the agreed statement of facts it appears that the depot of the railroad company in the city of Vicksburg is surrounded by a fence, and that there is a "considerable inclosure of the grounds adjacent thereto." It further appears, also, that, "within said inclosure around the depot is the most convenient and best place for hackmen and busmen to discharge, solicit, and receive passengers departing and arriving on the passenger trains of said company, and that any hackman or busman who had the exclusive privilege of entering this inclosure and soliciting passengers there would have an advantage over hackmen or busmen excluded therefrom, so far as passengers arriving on said trains were concerned." These facts, moreover, appear in the agreed statement, viz.: That the railroad company granted in June, 1894, the exclusive privilege of entering said inclosure and soliciting passengers therein to said Peine, and that Peine was a person engaged in the hack, bus, and general transfer business in Vicksburg, and that, after said exclusive grant to Peine, all other hackmen and busmen were excluded from entering said inclosure for the purpose of soliciting passengers therein, and were notified not to enter said inclosure for that purpose under threat of being prosecuted as trespassers; that the appellee, Reed, after having been notified not to enter said inclosure for such purpose, drove his hack into the inclosure, and while therein solicited and received a passenger, and then drove away, and that in doing this he created a disturbance or disorder; that Cherry street is about 150 feet from the depot, and that from the depot to Cherry street, where hacks other than Peine's can stand, there is a good sidewalk. In a word, Peine's hacks have the exclusive privilege of entering the inclosure surrounding the depot and soliciting incoming passengers, while all other hacks are excluded from the inclosure, and must stand outside and about 150 feet from the depot, and in an open street.

It is admitted in the agreed statement that any hackman or busman having the exclusive privilege of entering said inclosure, and soliciting passengers there, would, to that extent, have an advantage over hackmen or busmen excluded therefrom, so far as concerned incoming passengers. The agreed statement of facts distinctly states the question to be decided by us, and to that we must confine ourselves. Says the agreed statement: "It is contended that the said company had the right to make the said contract, and thus exclude the defendant and others than the said Peine from the said inclosure, and to grant to the said Peine the exclusive right to enter the said inclosure for the purpose of there soliciting passengers for his hack line. Defendant controverts this position, in so far as it is claimed that the said company can grant the exclusive right to any particular person to enter the said inclosure with his hack, and there solicit passengers, and contends that the railroad company must exclude all or admit all into the said inclosure, so long as they conduct themselves in an orderly and peaceable manner." The single issue is thus sharply defined, viz.: Has a railroad the right to confer upon one hackman the exclusive privilege of entering with his hacks its inclosed stationhouse grounds, and of soliciting incoming passengers, and to exclude all others from the inclosure, such privilege conferring advantages upon the favored hackman, and discriminating against all other hackmen by forbidding them to enter the inclosure to solicit passengers, and by placing the hacks of those excluded 150 feet from the depot, and in an open street? The question has never before been presented in our courts, but it is by no means a new one, and has been passed upon in other jurisdictions. Quite independently of constitutional or statutory provisions, it seems to be the prevailing doctrine in the United States that a railroad company may make any necessary and reasonable rules for the government of persons using its depots and grounds, yet it cannot arbitrarily, for its own pleasure or profit, admit to its platforms or depot grounds one carrier of passengers or merchandise, and at the same time exclude all others. The question is one that affects not only the excluded hackmen; it affects the interests of the public. The upholding of the grant of this exclusive privilege would prevent competition between rival carriers of passengers, create a monopoly in the privileged hackmen, and might produce inconvenience and loss to persons traveling over the railroad, or those having freights transported over it, in cases of exclusion of drays and wagons from its grounds, other than those owned by the person having the exclusive right to enter the railroad's depot grounds. To concede the right claimed by the railroad in the present case would be, in effect, to confer upon the railroad company the control of the transportation of passengers beyond its own lines, and in the end to create a monopoly of such business, not granted by its charter, and against the interests of the public. These are the views ably urged in Kalamazoo Hack &

Bus Co. v. Sootsma, 84 Mich. 194, 10 L. R. A. 819; Montana Union R. Co. v. Langlois, 9 Mont. 419, 8 L. R. A. 753; Cravens v. Rodgers, 101 Mo. 247, and McConnell v. Pedigo, 92 Ky. 465. These are the views held, too, by the three dissenting judges in the case of Old Colony R. Co. v. Tripp, 147 Mass. 35-41. The majority of the judges in that case held that a railroad might grant to one an exclusive right to solicit the patronage of incoming passengers; but this is the only American case making that distinct holding, and that opinion was delivered by four judges. The other three members of the court vigorously dissenting, and with better show of reasoning, in our judgment. The cases of Barney v. Oyster Bay & H. S. B. Co. 67 N. Y. 301; Fluker v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 461, 2 L. R. A. 843; and Cole v. Rowen, 88 Mich. 219, 13 L. R. A. 848; do not present the precise point involved in the case before us. They are all decisions of other questions, and can be readily distinguished from the case in hand. Counsel for appellant think that in Cole v. Rowen, 88 Mich. 219, 13 L. R. A. 848, the supreme court of Michigan has swung away from the doctrine announced in the earlier case of Kalamazoo Hack & Bus Co. v. Sootsma, 84 Mich. 194, 10 L. R. A. 819. But that very able court did not so think, and was careful to disabuse the mind of counsel, who seems to have the notion which counsel here puts forward, and the court clearly distinguished the two cases.

We are of opinion that the railroad had no right to exclude Reed, the appellee, from its depot and inclosed grounds, on the facts appearing in the agreed statement on which the case is submitted to us, and hence that the action of the court below in discharging Joseph Reed was correct.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

J. T. TREZONA

v.

CHICAGO GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. One who gets upon a train with a ticket which he knows does not, upon its face, entitle him to passage because the time for which it purports to be valid has expired, although he thinks the limitation unreasonable, cannot recover damages for being ejected, if he refuses to pay fare.
2. A waiver relied upon to preclude a defense must be pleaded.
3. The holder of a railroad ticket who does not use it for a passage during its life for such a purpose is not entitled, as matter of law, to have the purchase price refunded.

(December 16, 1898.)

NOTE.—On the question of the right to eject a passenger for nonpayment of fare, see also McGowen v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. (La.) 5 L. R. A. 817, and note; Peabody v. Ore-43 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Delaware County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful ejection from defendant's train. Reversed.

Statement by Granger, J.:

On the 13th day of October, 1893, the plaintiff purchased from defendant's agent at Dubuque, Iowa, a passenger ticket from Dubuque to Lamont, Iowa, paying therefor $1.75, that being the first-class regular fare. Across the face of the ticket in red ink were the words, "Not good after date of sale." The ticket was not offered for passage until November 17, 1894, when plaintiff and his wife took defendant's train at Dubuque for Lamont, and when a little out of Dubuque the conductor asked for plaintiff's ticket, and he presented the one described, which the conductor refused to receive, and demanded gon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) 12 L. R. A. 823, and note; see also Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner (Tenn.) post, 140.

fare, which was refused, and for failure to pay his fare he was ejected forcibly from the train at the next station, and only permitted to enter on payment of the regular fare, with 10 cents extra. Some additional facts will be noticed in the opinion. This action is for damages because of being ejected from the train. There was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

Messrs. D. W. Lawler, D. E. Lyon, and D. J. Lenehan, for appellant:

Plaintiff knew the ticket was not good at the time he entered the car. He was so informed by the conductor at the fair grounds, only a mile from the depot, and he refused to pay his fare or get off the cars when requested, thereby becoming a trespasser.

Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458; Sherman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 40 Iowa, 45; Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 48, 52 Am. Rep. 431; Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 342, 35 Am. Rep. 278; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 6 U. S. App. 95, 50 Fed. Rep. 496, 1 C. C. A. 544; Ellsworth v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 95 Iowa, 101, 29 L. R. A. 173.

A railroad company may lawfully limit the time within which a ticket shall be used. Thus, where the ticket is in terms "good for this date only," it is not good for any subsequent date.

Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 576; Elmore v. Sands, 54 N. Y. 512, 13 Am. Rep. 617; Calaway v. Mellett, 15 Ind. App. 367.

The carrier may by contract provide that passage shall be made within a time specified, and in one continuous trip.

Barker v. Coffin, 31 Barb. 556; Oheney v. Boston & M. R. Co. 11 Met. 121, 45 Am. Dec. 190.

As between the passenger and the conductor, the face of the ticket is conclusive evidence of the passenger's right to ride.

Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481; McKay v. Ohio River R. Co. 34 W. Va. 65, 9 L. R. A. 132; Townsend v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290.

The ticket is evidence of the contract between the purchaser and the railroad company.

Sleeper v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 100 Pa. 259, 45 Am. Rep. 380; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 6 U. S. App. 95, 50 Fed. Rep. 496, 1 C. C. A. 544; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 47 Ind. 79; Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249.

Where a railroad passenger ticket by its terms limits the time within which it is to be used, it does not exonerate the holder from the payment of fare if he takes passage on the road after the expiration of the time, and on refusal to pay fare the conductor has the right to eject a person from the train.

Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458; Sherman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 40 Iowa, 45; Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 342, 35 Am. Rep. 278; Hill v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. 43 L. R. A.

R. Co. 63 N. Y. 101; Elmore v. Sands, 54 N. Y. 512, 13 Am. Rep. 617; Pease v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 367, 54 Am. Rep. 609; Condran v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 32 U. S. App. 182, 14 C. C. A. 506, 67 Fed. Rep. 522, 28 L. R. A. 749; Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 48, 52 Am. Rep. 431, 73 Iowa, 463.

A passenger refusing to pay his fare, or conform to any lawful regulation of the railroad company, may be expelled from the car by the conductor.

Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co. 15 N. Y. 455; Townsend v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419; Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481; Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290; Beebe v. Ayres, 28 Barb. 275; Condran v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 32 U. S. App. 182, 67 Fed. Rep. 522, 14 C. C. A. 506, 28 L. R. A. 749.

A railroad company has the right to require passengers to pay fare, and a rule directing its conductors to remove from the cars those who refuse to pay fare will be upheld.

Shelton v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 29 Ohio St. 214; Beebe v. Ayres, 28 Barb. 275.

When a passenger becomes a trespasser, he is not entitled to the rights of a passenger.

Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 6 U. S. App. 95, 50 Fed. Rep. 496, 1 C. C. A. 544.

No damages can be recovered under the contract.

Dooley v. Burlington, O. R. & N. R. Co. 89 Iowa, 450; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 6 U. S. App. 95, 50 Fed. Rep. 496, 1 C. C. A. 544; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290, and cases cited therein; Elmore v. Sands, 54 N. Y. 512, 13 Am. Rep. 617; Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249; Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458.

Punitive or exemplary damages cannot be given on a state of facts such as disclosed by the evidence in this case.

Paine v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 45 Iowa, 569; Fitzgerald v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 50 Iowa, 79; Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458; Curly v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 417; Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 342, 35 Am. Rep. 278; Townsend v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. ed. 374; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 6 U. S. App. 95, 50 Fed. Rep. 496, 1 C. C. A. 550; Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481.

The rules in question are reasonable.

McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 124, 96 Am. Dec. 114; State v. Chovin, 7 Iowa, 204; Hutchinson, Carr. §§ 588, 589; Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co. 15 N. Y. 455; Pease v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 367, 54 Am. Rep. 609.

Messrs. Dunham & Norris for appellee.

Granger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. It does not appear why the ticket was not used on the day of its purchase, nor does it appear that plaintiff did, on the day of the purchase, notice the limitation on the ticket, but he did know of it before he took the train on the 17th day of November, 1894. He says he had such knowledge, but thought the provision was unreasonable, and that, as he had paid for the passage, he had a right to it, notwithstanding the provision on the ticket. The arguments in this case take a wider range than the controlling legal proposition requires. A few significant facts first stated will do much towards clearing the way to the particular question that controls the case. Plaintiff had no ticket that purported to entitle him to a ride on the train from which he was ejected. It expressed on its face that he had no such right. The ticket contained the only evidence of the understanding under which it issued. Hence the conclusion is manifest and certain that the plaintiff was attempting to ride on a train for which he had no ticket, and for which neither he nor the company understood the ticket to be good. He expressly says that he knew of the limitation as to time for its use, but thought it was unreasonable. His evidence shows that he thought he was entitled to the ride "without any reference to the ticket;" that he was entitled to the ride, because he had paid for it. The arguments deal quite elaborately with the question whether such a limitation on a ticket is legal, the thought being that it is so unreasonable as to be against public policy. We do not think such a question is involved. It is not like a case where a ticket is apparently good on its face, as, where it is silent as to the time in which it may be used, and some rule or custom of the company limits its validity to a certain period, so that the purchaser has what he understands to be good, and what on its face appears to be so. The question that controls this case is not, Did the company, because of the payment at one time of a fare, owe plaintiff a passage to Lamont? but, Did he present to the conductor a ticket that entitled him to such a passage? It is not sufficient that he was entitled to a passage, but he must obtain it in the way provided by the regulations of the company, that are sustained by the law of the land. In Ellsworth v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 95 Iowa, 101, 29 L. R. A. 173, we considered a question quite akin to this, except that we there dealt with the obligations of the company when a ticket, good on its face, was presented, and a rule of the company made it void. We there collated some authorities, and quoted somewhat from the discussions bearing on the rights of passengers with and without tickets entitling them to transportation on particular trains. Speaking to the question of a proper remedy, we said, in the Ellsworth Case, that in determining such a question we should keep in mind the difficulties to be met with and overcome in a successful management of the railway passenger traffic of the country, both as to the public and the carriers; and that to such an end it was clearly important that there should be rules for the guidance of the employees in the different parts of the service; and that such rules should be conclusive as to their course of conduct, even though at times the rule might operate to the prejudice of an individual passenger. As a conclusion of our discussion in that case, we said: "It is safe to state, as a rule of passenger traffic, that no person has a right to passage on a train without paying fare, unless a ticket or other evidence of a right to transportation is presented to the conductor." That language was used in considering what character of ticket a conductor might or might not refuse, which question was directly involved in the case. The statement is followed by a reference to cases on both sides of the proposition, being, as we there stated, not harmonious. This question, on principle, was to some extent involved and settled in Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458. In that case there was a coupon ticket from Clinton to Sioux City, Iowa, the coupon first used being from Clinton to Missouri Valley. The conductor, out from Clinton, punched the coupon to Boone, Iowa, and returned it to the passenger. A conductor's check told him he must get a special check to stop over. At Marshalltown he left the train without a special check, and resumed his journey on the train the next day, and to that conductor he presented his ticket punched, and his conductor's check. These, properly read, showed him not entitled to transportation on that train to Boone, although he had paid his fare, and had not passed over that part of the route. It is true that that case turns largely on the fact that by leaving the train in violation of the regulations known to him his contract was at an end, so that he was not entitled to transportation until a new contract was made. The same is to be said in this case. By not using the ticket within the time fixed by it, his rights under the ticket were at an end, and, before he could rightfully claim a passage, he must obtain a ticket entitling him to one. For that purpose he should apply to the agent of the company authorized to issue tickets, and there urge his claim, if such he had, to a ticket, because of his former payment, and not attempt its adjustment with the conductor, whose duty it was to take up and cancel, and not to issue, tickets. Had he not presented the ticket, but claimed a passage, because, more than a year before, he had purchased one, and had not used it, we assume no one would contend that he was entitled to a passage, and why? Because public policy, as well as public sentiment, would condemn a rule so palpably unreasonable. How do the cases differ? In the case assumed, the conductor may deny the passage, because he is not required to accept the word of the passenger, even though it is true. In the case at bar he presents a ticket that on its face negatives his right to a passage. In Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481, it is said: "It is a reasonable practice to require a passenger to pay his fare, or to show a ticket, check, or pass; and, in view of the difficulties above alluded to, it would be unreasonable to hold that a passenger, without such evidence of his right to be carried, might forcibly retain his seat in a car, upon his mere statement that he is entitled to a passage. If the company has agreed to furnish him with a proper ticket, and has failed to do so, he is not at liberty to assert and maintain by force his rights under that contract; but he is bound to yield, for the time being, to the reasonable practice and requirements of the company, and enforce his rights in a more appropriate way." See also McKay v. Ohio River R. Co. 34 W. Va. 65, 9 L. R. A. 132, and other cases there cited, where the rule is announced that, as between the passenger and the conductor the ticket is the conclusive evidence of the passenger's rights. Appellee concedes the right of the company to limit the life of a ticket, but insists that the limit must be reasonable. This ticket was held for thirteen months before there was an attempt to use it, and, without determining the question of the limitation being unreasonable, it is to be said that the limitation expressed in no way operated to the prejudice of the plaintiff.

2. In this case the conductor took up the ticket, and then demanded the fare, and reliance is placed on that fact as being a waiver of the limitation, and the court instructed that the limitation on the ticket was reasonable, but that, if the company took up the same within the statute of limitations, then the passenger was entitled to ride thereon. Error is assigned on the instruction, and we dispose of the point on this theory: that the case presents no issue of waiver. The defendant pleaded the limitation of the ticket as a defense. If plaintiff relied on a waiver of the condition it must have been pleaded. Eiseman v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 74 Iowa, 11, and numerous cases there cited. The invalidity of the ticket, after October 13, 1893, is pleaded in the answer, and, if plaintiff desired to show a waiver of the conditions, he must, under the authorities, have pleaded it in a reply, and no reply was filed; nor does such a plea appear in the pleadings filed. It was error to instruct on the question.

3. The court gave the following instructions: "(7) You are further instructed that a railroad company has a right to make a rule that upon the issuing of every first-class ticket the use of the same is limited to the day and trip for which the ticket was purchased, and such a rule is in law reasonable. (8) But in making such a rule as is named in the last instruction, they have no right to make one that would render the ticket absolutely void, and of no value, after the date and trip for which the ticket is issued; and such a rule, you are instructed, would be unreasonable. (9) You are further instructed that a first-class railroad ticket, when purchased, and its value limited to the day of sale and trip for which it was sold, and it is not used within that limit, does not entitle the owner, as a matter of right, to transportation after that time, but it is, nevertheless, of value to the holder during the statute of limitation, and the value of such ticket, in the absence of any other proof is in law presumed to be the amount the purchaser paid therefor. (10) You are further instructed that a railroad company has a right to make a rule and direct its conductors to refuse to honor a ticket after the day and trip for which it was issued; and, if a conductor does so, and collects fare from the passenger, he is in the line of his duty; and, if a passenger refuses to pay said fare on demand, then the conductor has a right to remove him from the train unless he pays full fare between the points of his travel, with ten cents added, using no more force than is necessary therefor." Exceptions were taken to those numbered 8, 9, and 10. The 7th instruction is not questioned, and must stand as the law of the case. It holds, as a matter of law, that the limitation on the ticket was reasonable, in so far as a right of passage was concerned, and, with the question of waiver out of the case, there could be no recovery for the ejection from the train, for the plaintiff refused to pay his fare, and held no ticket that gave him a right of passage, and hence he was not a passenger, but a trespasser. See Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458. The instructions hold, as a matter of law, that, notwithstanding the limitation was reasonable, the plaintiff might recover back the amount paid for it; that is, they hold that it would be unreasonable to make the ticket valueless if not used, and that its value would be the amount paid for it, in the absence of proof to the contrary. This must mean that the holder of a railroad ticket, who does not use it for a passage during its life for such a purpose, is entitled, as a matter of law, to have the purchase price refunded. No authority is cited to support such a rule, and we do not believe it is the law. It contravenes all general principles on the law of contracts. The contract of carriage imposed on the company an obligation to be prepared to perform the contract on its part by the equipment and operation of its train, and we do not see why, when the ticket was purchased so that the company was bound by its terms, the plaintiff was not alike bound; that is, he must accept what he has purchased, or lose it. This question received but a passing notice in argument, and we leave it without further elaboration.

The judgment must be reversed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

J. O. TURNER.

(100 Tenn. 213.)

1. To limit a general ticket for passage on a railroad, for which full price is paid, to the date on which it is sold, there must be an express contract based upon a consideration, or the alternative must be given the purchaser to have a full and unlimited ticket.
2. The mere stamping or printing of a limitation upon a railroad ticket, and the acceptance of such ticket by a passenger, are not sufficient to bind him to such limitation in the absence of actual notice of it, and his assent thereto when he purchases the ticket.
3. Posting notices of intention to limit the time for passage on railroad tickets in the waiting rooms, ticket offices, and on the cars will not affect passengers with notice so that they will be bound by limitation by taking the ticket without agreeing to the limitation.
4. Three hundred dollars damages is excessive for putting a passenger off a train for attempting to ride after the time limited on the ticket has expired, although the limitation was unlawful, if no force was used, or purpose to humiliate shown, and the passenger was within a few miles of his destination, which he reached without further outlay only five hours later than he would had the train carried him.

(January 7, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful ejection from defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Burney & Bailey for appellant.

Messrs. Daniel & Daniel, for appellee:

The ticket is a mere voucher that the passenger has paid his fare; it is not a contract, and before a passenger can be held bound by a declaration on the ticket for transportation on a passenger train, the restriction or limitation sought to be imposed must be made known to him, and he must have accepted the ticket with full knowledge of the restrictions of the company indorsed thereon.

New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 344, 12 L. ed. 465; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Passenger Carriers, pp. 514, 516.

The burden of proof is on the carrier to show that there was assent by the passenger to the conditions on the ticket.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall.

NOTE.—For notice to passenger of conditions on ticket, see note to Potter v. The Majestic (C. C. App. 2d C.) 23 L. R. A. 746.

As to ejection of passengers, see Trezona v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (Iowa) ante, 136, 43 L. R. A.

65, 20 L. ed. 354; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Passenger Carriers, p. 516.

The purchaser of a railroad ticket does not, by mere acceptance, bind himself and acquiesce in all the terms and conditions printed thereon, in the absence of actual knowledge thereof.

Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Passenger Carriers, p. 518; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354.

A limitation in time upon a ticket is not binding on a passenger unless stated at time of purchase.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Spicker, 105 Pa. 142.

In this case plaintiff below called for a ticket to Clarksville, and did not ask for a limited ticket.

Under these circumstances the company is responsible if the agent gave him a ticket limited, and in consequence he was ejected.

St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Mackie, 71 Tex. 491, 1 L. R. A. 667.

The question of damages was for the jurors. They have decided it, and the verdict should not be disturbed unless the damages assessed are so excessive as to show to the court that the passion and prejudice of the jury was so great as to render them incapable of giving the defendant a fair trial.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages for unlawfully ejecting the plaintiff, Turner, from one of the passenger cars of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. It was commenced before a justice of the peace, and on appeal was tried before the court and a jury, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff for $300 and costs; and the railroad company has appealed and assigned errors.

The facts are that plaintiff bought what is called a "local ticket" at Guthrie, Kentucky, for Clarksville, Tennessee. Upon its face were stamped or printed the words, "Good for one continuous passage, beginning on date of sale, only." And the date of sale, "June 14, 1897," was stamped on its back. Plaintiff did not use or attempt to use the ticket upon the day of sale, being unexpectedly detained at Guthrie on business. On the next day he tendered the ticket for passage to Clarksville. The conductor took the ticket in his hand and punched it, and handed it back to plaintiff, with the remark that he could not ride upon it, that the rule of the company was that such ticket was good only on the day of sale, and that he would have to pay fare or get off the train. Plaintiff replied that he had bought the ticket and paid full price for it, and was entitled to ride upon it, and had no notice of such rule; that he had no money to pay his fare, and would not willingly leave the train, but would have to be put off. At the next station the conductor took him by the arm and led him through the car, and put him off, without any actual force or rudeness. He walked down the railroad 3 or 4 miles, and, finding a conveyance going to Clarksville, went in it, reaching that city without further cost about 4 o'clock P. M., when by the train he would have reached there at 11 A. M. of the same day. Plaintiff states that he had no knowledge of the regulation of the road that a ticket must be used on the date of its sale, and had previously ridden upon tickets on days subsequent to the day of sale. It appears that about January 1, 1897, the railroad company had put this rule in force, and had posted notices of it in its various waiting rooms, and among others one was posted near the ticket window at Guthrie. This notice was as follows:

Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co.
Notice.

On and after January 1, 1897, local tickets sold by this company, except commutation and mileage tickets, will be void if not used for continuous passage through to destination, beginning on date of sale. Any ticket which cannot be thus used will be redeemed from the original purchaser, if sent to the general passenger agent, at Louisville, Ky., with satisfactory explanation of the cause which prevented its use.

Signed by the traffic manager and general passenger agent.

This notice was thus posted continuously from the date it went into effect, about January 1, 1897, up to the date of trial; and all local tickets sold after January 1, 1897, had stamped or printed on their face the provision above stated,—"Good for one continuous passage, beginning on date of sale, only." It is not shown that any special damage was done the plaintiff, beyond the indignity of ejecting him from the train and the inconvenience to which he was put on his journey. Many errors are assigned, but we will not treat them seriatim.

The court charged the jury in substance, that such a regulation and limitation in regard to tickets as the one in controversy would not be binding on a purchaser, unless the contents and conditions were made known to him when he bought the ticket, or it be shown otherwise that he knew of them, and purchased the ticket with that knowledge; that, in order to charge him with notice, it must be shown that he actually knew of them and consented to them, and the railroad company would be liable, if he bought a ticket without such actual knowledge, and attempted to use it, and was ejected from the train; that the fact that the notice was posted up in the waiting room, near the ticket window, and that the limiting words were stamped or printed on the face of the ticket, would not affect a purchaser with notice, if he bought the ticket in the usual way, and paid the usual price for it, and, if ejected for the refusal to pay fare while tendering such ticket, the road would be liable. This holding and ruling of the court is assigned as error, and it is also assigned as error that there is no evidence to support the verdict, and that the damages are excessive. It is held by this court that a railroad company may make, and by its agents enforce, reasonable rules and regulations for the carriage of freight and passengers, and the transaction of its business generally. Summit v. State, 8 Lea, 413, 41 Am. Rep. 637; Lane v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 5 Lea, 126; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Garrett, 8 Lea, 438, 41 Am. Rep. 640; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 129; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Benson, 85 Tenn. 627. As to whether a rule is reasonable or not is a question for the court. Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 128. But such rules and regulations must be reasonable in their requirements, and must be executed in a reasonable and proper manner, so as not to be unnecessarily burdensome to the public. Such rules must not contravene any law or principle of sound public policy, and they must accord with the proper service and conduct of a railroad in its business and duty as a common carrier. The liability of the road cannot be restricted by such rules and regulations, nor can they be so shaped or enforced as unnecessarily to annoy and restrict the traveling public in its rights. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 482, and notes. Thus, in Lane v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 5 Lea, 124, it was held that a railroad company has the right to make regulations requiring passengers to purchase tickets before entering upon a freight train, and authorizing conductors to expel persons not having tickets, though they offer money in payment of fare. In Summit v. State, 8 Lea, 413, 41 Am. Rep. 637, it is held that a railroad may make all necessary reasonable rules for the proper and orderly management of its depots and other places open to the public, but not in such way as to infringe upon the rights of the public. A railroad may also make a rule that coupons from tickets shall be detached only by the conductor, and not by the passenger, and enforce such rule in a reasonable manner. Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Harris, 9 Lea, 180, 42 Am. Rep. 668. So a railroad may by regulation establish a higher rate of fare if paid on the cars than in the case of a ticket purchased before going on the train. Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Guinan, 11 Lea, 98, 47 Am. Rep. 279. It may also regulate the running of its trains, and the stopping of through trains at principal points only, and require passengers who are destined to way stations to ride upon such trains only as under the schedules stop at such stations. Trottinger v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 11 Lea, 533. It may also require a person, on entering a train for purposes of travel, to exhibit his ticket, and afterwards to surrender it when called upon by the conductor. Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 129. It may also prescribe in what cars passengers may ride, provided equal and proper accommodations are furnished alike to all passengers holding first-class tickets, as that cars may be set apart for ladies, when alone or accompanied by gentlemen traveling with them; and different cars for colored and white people shall be furnished under the statute. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Benson, 85 Tenn. 627; Chesapeake, O. & S. R. Co. v.

Wells, 85 Tenn. 613. Such rules and regulations, in order to be effective, must be made known to the public in such way and by such means as in the special case may be necessary, and best adapted to serve the convenience and purpose of the passenger as well as of the railroad. As to what notice or publication of rules is required or sufficient in order to reach and affect the public, the authorities are by no means agreed. From the very nature of the case, much must depend upon the provisions of the rule, and whether it is one intended to affect the entire public, and the usual and general business of passenger traffic, or one intended for certain trains and certain circumstances and individuals only. To illustrate: A person desiring to ride upon a freight train or a through train, when his destination is a way station, would reasonably expect regulations different from those affecting travel generally, and would be put on his guard to ascertain the rules by which his passage must be governed, when he would have no occasion to suspect such rules to apply to his passage upon the trains of the road generally. A rule relating to the former might be reasonable which would not be in the latter case, and notice might be sufficient in the former which would not be in the latter. So, in Lane v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 5 Lea, 124, it was held that, when a railroad company has been in the habit of permitting persons to ride upon its freight trains without the purchase of tickets, it must inform persons personally that its rule has been changed so as to require tickets, if such is the case, until such time as will suffice to acquaint the public with the existence of such rule. So, in Trottinger v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 11 Lea, 533, it was held that a passenger holding a ticket to a way station had no right to ride upon a through train which did not stop at such station, provided he had notice of such schedule regulations; and it was suggested that if such publicity had been given in the ticket office and on the cars, by posters, that a party of ordinary intelligence by the use of ordinary care and caution could or might obtain all requisite information as to the matters involved, then the passenger would be bound by such regulations; citing 1 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 67, and cases there collated, for authority for the latter proposition, as to publication and notice.

These regulations in regard to riding on freight trains and on trains only that stop at certain stations and do not stop at others have been held to be reasonable regulations, but they apply to only exceptional cases, and not to the general traveling public in passing over the road from one station to another. Such special cases may be regulated by rules, and such rules may very properly be brought to the knowledge of the traveling public by notices of publication; but a rule and notice which is intended to apply to all passengers, and to affect all travel and every individual who applies for passage, stands upon a different basis, and requires more direct notice. A notice which is intended to apply to the entire public should be such as to leave no doubt but that it reaches all who are to be affected by it. While there is a conflict in the cases, the weight of authority is that time limitations or conditions stamped or printed upon the back or face of a general ticket are not binding upon a passenger, unless his attention is called to them when he purchases the ticket, and he assents thereto. Potter v. The Majestic, 23 L. R. A. 746, note; 20 U. S. App. 503, 60 Fed. Rep. 625, 9 C. C. A. 161; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Passenger Carriers, pp. 514, 518; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1593, note; Cole v. Goodwin, 32 Am. Dec. 505, and notes, 19 Wend. 251; Rawson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. Y. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 545. While there may be some uncertainty, and even conflict, in the authorities, we are of opinion that the correct rule is that a person who purchases a general ticket, and pays the usual price therefor, is entitled to one passage, unlimited as to time, upon any train which under the proper and usual schedules of the road stops at the point of the passenger's destination. If a ticket limited or conditional is sold to a passenger, it can only be done upon an express agreement with him, either oral or in writing, and either based upon a consideration, or with the alternative presented to the passenger of a full and unlimited ticket. A similar rule obtains in regard to contracts for carriage of freight, and it has been held by this court that a carrier must hold itself in readiness to ship with common-law liability, and must offer to shippers a reasonable and bona fide alternative between that mode of shipment and one with restricted or limited liability. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 88 Tenn. 430, 7 L. R. A. 162. So, in Michigan C. R. Co. v. Mineral Springs Mfg. Co. 16 Wall. 330, 21 L. ed. 303, it is said: Nothing short of an express stipulation by parol or in writing will be permitted to discharge a carrier from the duties which the law has annexed to his employment, and such agreement is not to be implied or inferred from a general notice to the public limiting the obligation of the carrier, which may or may not be assented to. See also New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 344, 12 L. ed. 465. We are also of opinion that the mere stamping or printing of a limitation or condition upon the back or face of a ticket, and the acceptance of such ticket by a passenger, without more, are not sufficient to bind him to such condition or limitation, in the absence of actual notice to him of such condition or limitation, and his assent thereto, when he purchases his ticket. It cannot be presumed that every person buying a railroad ticket for ordinary and general use will, in the hurry and bustle of travel, stop to read and critically inspect his ticket. As a matter of fact, but little opportunity is afforded him to do so. He generally takes his place in the crowd at the ticket window, and produces and hands over his money, with a request for a ticket to destination. His money is received. The ticket is produced, and after being stamped, is handed to him through the ticket window. He has had no opportunity to see what is upon it, and has no time, in the rush, to stop and read and consider what may be printed or stamped on its face or back; and when he has paid full fare, there is no occasion for his doing so, inasmuch as he can safely rely upon the contract which the law makes for him. Ordinary local tickets do not generally contain any terms of contract, and are not intended to do so. They are mere tokens to the passenger, and vouchers for the conductor, adopted for convenience to show that the passenger has paid his fare from one place to another,—very much in the nature of baggage checks. The contract is in fact made when the ticket is purchased, and, if it is different from what the law would imply, it must be so stated and assented to when the ticket is delivered. Nor will the posting of notices in the waiting rooms, ticket offices, and on the cars affect purchasers with notice in such cases. Passengers have but little time or opportunity to read such placards; and it would impose quite a serious burden upon travel, to hold that the public must read all these notices thus posted before taking passage on a train upon which they are willing to and do pay full fare. Rawson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. Y. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 545; Cole v. Goodwin, 32 Am. Dec. 505, and note, 19 Wend. 251; Ray, Passenger Carriers, § 145; Hutchinson, Carriers, §§ 246, 580, 581; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1593. This rule, which we consider to be settled by the weight of authority and by reason, by no means prevents a railroad company from selling special tickets for special trains with limitations and conditions, such as excursion, round-trip, commutation, and mileage tickets, when the conditions and limitations are known to the purchaser, and assented to by him orally or in writing, and he has paid for such ticket less than the usual fare. When tickets are sold at reduced rates, it has been very wisely said that the purchaser should, in consideration of such reduced fare or greater privileges, expect and look for some conditions, limitations, and terms different from those attaching to tickets generally, and be on his guard to become informed of them. But there is no such obligation upon the ordinary passenger, who pays the usual or full fare, and asks for no reduced rates or special privileges; and he has a right to expect an unlimited ticket.

Under this view of the law, there is ample evidence to support the verdict in this case, and the only question remaining is, Are the damages of $300 excessive? We do not find from the record any evidence of rudeness on the part of the conductor. The plaintiff declined to leave the car after the whole matter was explained to him, and notified the conductor he would have to put him off. While the record shows that plaintiff had no money to pay his fare, it fails to show that he made any effort to obtain it from any of his fellow passengers. The conductor led him through the train and put him off at the front end; but it does not appear that this was unusual, or done with any purpose to humiliate the passenger. It was attempted to be shown that the conductor made some remark after he had put the passenger off, but this was properly excluded by the court. The plaintiff was subjected to no pecuniary loss, was put off at a station not more than eight miles from his destination, and reached there a few hours later without any additional outlay of money. We think, under these circumstances, the question of his right to ride being at least doubtful, and the conductor being in the plain discharge of his duty to the road, and performing it in a reasonable manner, it does not present a case of malice and oppression on the part of the railroad which should be punished with excessive damages. The true rule in such cases is laid down in Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Guinan, 11 Lea, 101-106, 47 Am. Rep. 279; and in Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 152.

For this latter reason we reverse the judgment of the court below, and remand the cause for another trial. Appellee will pay costs of appeal.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Vincent GAGE et al., Appts.,

v.

A. HARVEY.

(.....Ark.....)

The loss of money taken from the owner's pockets while he was intoxicated is not included in the damages occasioned by the sale of liquor to him, within the meaning of Sand. & H. Dig. § 4870, since the sale of the liquor is not the proximate cause of the loss, but this is due to the intervening wrongful act of a third person.

(December 24, 1898.)

NOTE.—For recovery in civil damage cases, see also Veon v. Creaton (Pa.) 9 L. R. A. 814, and note; Fletcher v. Forler (Mich.) 10 L. R. A. 80, and note; Belding v. Johnson (Ga.) 11 L. R. A. 58; Brockway v. Patterson (Mich.) 1 L. R. A. 708; Jones v. Bates (Neb.) 4 L. R. A. 43 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Garland County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to hold defendants liable for money taken from plaintiff while he was intoxicated with liquor obtained at defendants' saloon. Reversed in part.

George Sargianovich was the keeper of a saloon in the city of Hot Springs. J. Kempner and David Beffa were sureties on his bond. Vincent Gage was the manager in charge of the saloon. Plaintiff went to the saloon on November 23, 1895, became intoxicated, and while in such condition a sum of 495, and note; also note to State v. Creeden (Iowa) 7 L. R. A. on page 300.

As to liability in such case in the absence of statute, see Riden v. Grimm Bros. (Tenn.) 85 L. R. A. 587.

money was taken from his pockets, and he brought this action to hold defendants liable for the loss. The jury found that the manager, Gage, was the one who took the money and there was evidence tending to show that he may have encouraged plaintiff to drink in order to make him intoxicated for the purpose of securing an opportunity to take it.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Greaves & Martin, for appellants:

This was not a common-law action. It was purely a statutory action, based upon §§ 10 and 13 of "An Act to Regulate the Sale of Vinous, Ardent, Malt, or Fermented Liquors," approved March 8, 1879, §§ 4870, 4873, Sandels & H. Dig.

These statutes are to be construed strictly.

Freese v. Tripp, 70 Ill. 496; Meidel v. Anthis, 71 Ill. 241; Kellermen v. Arnold, 71 Ill. 632; Fentz v. Meadows, 72 Ill. 540; Hayes v. Phelan, 4 Hun, 733.

The evidence must be confined to the cause stated in the complaint.

Hackett v. Smelsley, 77 Ill. 100.

Such a remedy did not exist by the rules of the common law.

Woody v. Coenan, 44 Iowa, 19; Grant v. Owens, 55 Ark. 52; Dillon v. Linder, 36 Wis. 344; Struble v. Nodwift, 11 Ind. 64; State v. Ludington, 33 Wis. 107.

If our statute (Sandels & H. Dig. § 4873) means anything when it says: "Any person aggrieved by the keeping of said dramshop or drinking saloon . . . may have an action on said bond against the principal and securities for the recovery thereof,"—it cannot be extended, in the light of prior legislation, to mean that there is a remedy under it to the intoxicated person for injuries received while in an intoxicated condition. For such injuries the common law affords a civil remedy against the wrongdoer.

Brooks v. Cook, 44 Mich. 617, 38 Am. Rep. 262; Franklin v. Schermerhorn, 8 Hun, 112; Brown v. Thompson, 14 Bush, 538, 29 Am. Rep. 416; Seiffer v. McLean, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 158.

The injury complained of—the loss of appellee's money—must have been the natural, immediate, and proximate result of the intoxication produced, in whole or in part, by liquor sold by the appellant Gage.

Krack v. Heilman, 53 Ind. 517; Collier v. Early, 54 Ind. 559; Schmidt v. Mitchell, 84 Ill. 195, 25 Am. Rep. 446; Shugart v. Egan, 83 Ill. 56, 25 Am. Rep. 359; Swinfin v. Lowry, 37 Minn. 345; Lueken v. People, 3 Ill. App. 375; King v. Henkie, 80 Ala. 505, 60 Am. Rep. 119; Belding v. Johnson, 86 Ga. 177, 11 L. R. A. 53.

If an injury has resulted in consequence of a certain wrongful act, but only through or by means of some intervening cause, from which last cause the injury followed as a direct and immediate consequence, the law will refer the damage to the last proximate cause, and refuse to trace it to that remote.

Cooley, Torts, pp. 68, 69.

Messrs. Wood & Henderson, for appellee:

The question whether the liquor sold at 43 L. R. A.

this saloon to appellee was the cause of the loss of his money, or contributed thereto, so as to render appellants liable under the statute, was for the jury.

Cornelius v. Hultman, 44 Neb. 441.

The condition of the bond is to pay to any person aggrieved all damages that may be occasioned by reason of liquor sold. Was not appellee aggrieved in this case by his loss, and is he not a person?

Liquor selling in Arkansas is a privilege, and the legislature has a perfect right to prescribe how it shall be sold, to whom it may be sold, and to provide a remedy for all damages that may be occasioned by reason of its sale to any person aggrieved thereby.

Drew County v. Bennett, 43 Ark. 364; Edgar v. State, 45 Ark. 356; Berthalf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323.

Appellants not only kept appellee drunk, but got him drunker and kept him so until Gage got his money, and they should be held responsible for all damages occasioned thereby.

Hackett v. Smelsley, 77 Ill. 126; Jones v. Bates, 26 Neb. 693, 4 L. R. A. 495; Boyd v. Watt, 27 Ohio St. 259; Shugart v. Egan, 83 Ill. 56, 25 Am. Rep. 362, note.

A bond must be construed like any other contract or instrument of writing; it is enough that the intent appears though it be not fully and particularly expressed.

State v. Wood, 51 Ark. 208; McLeod v. Scott, 38 Ark. 72.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in this case is, Can one who becomes intoxicated upon liquor sold to him in a saloon or dramshop by the keeper thereof or his agents, and thereby incapacitated to hold and take care of his money, and who, while in that condition, loses it by having it forcibly or without his knowledge or consent taken from his pockets by some person, maintain an action against the keeper and the sureties on his bond to recover the money so taken?

This question arises under § 4870, Sandels & H. Dig., which provides: "Each applicant for a dramshop or drinking saloon license . . . shall enter into bond to the state of Arkansas, in the penal sum of $2,000, conditioned that such applicant will pay all damages that may be occasioned by reason of liquor sold at his house of business, . . . which bond shall have two good securities thereto, to be approved of by the court;" and under § 4873 which reads as follows: "Any person aggrieved by the keeping of said dramshop or drinking saloon . . . may have an action on said bond against the principal and securities for the recovery thereof."

The answer to the question obviously depends upon the meaning of the words, "conditioned that such applicant will pay all damages that may be occasioned by reason of liquor sold at his house of business," which are used in § 4870. They should be construed according to the general rule fixing the limit of the liability of parties for the consequences of their acts in other cases, as they in no way indicate an intent to make the liability of the saloon keeper an exception to such rule. According to their legal effect, they bind him to pay all damages that may be the natural and proximate result of the use or consumption of liquor sold by him or his agents at his place of business. Further than this the law does not extend the liability on his bond on account of the sale of liquor. As said by Lord Bacon: "It were infinite for the law to consider the cause of causes, and their impulsions one of another; therefore it contenteth itself with the immediate cause, and judgeth of acts by that, without looking to any further degree." Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Broom, Legal Maxims, p. 165.

The material inquiry in this case is, therefore, whether the use or consumption of the liquor sold by the keeper or his agents at his place of business was the proximate cause of the loss of the money mentioned in the question propounded.

In determining whether an act of a defendant is the proximate cause of an injury, the rule is that the injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the act; such a consequence, under the surrounding circumstances of the case, as might and ought to have been foreseen by the defendant as likely to flow from his act; the act must, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, operate as an efficient cause of the injury. If a third person intervenes between the act of the defendant and the injury, and does a culpable act, for which he is legally responsible, which produces the injury, and without it the injury would not have occurred, and the act of the defendant furnished merely an occasion for the injury, but not an efficient cause, the defendant would not be liable; for no one is responsible for the independent wrong of a responsible person to whom he sustains no relation which makes him liable for his wrong independent of an actual participation therein or connection therewith,—as, for instance, the master for the acts of the servant in the scope, course, or range of his employment.

Mr. Wharton states the doctrine in question and answer as follows: "Supposing that, if it had not been for the intervention of a responsible third party, the defendant's negligence would have produced no damage to the plaintiff, is the defendant liable to the plaintiff? This question must be answered in the negative, for the general reason that causal connection between negligence and damage is broken by the interposition of independent responsible human action. I am negligent on a particular subject-matter [as to which I am not contractually bound]. Another person, moving independently, comes in, and either negligently or maliciously so acts as to make my negligence injurious to a third person. If so, the person so intervening acts as a nonconductor, and insulates my negligence, so that I cannot be sued for the mischief which the person so intervening directly produces. He is liable to the person injured." Wharton, Neg. §§ 134 et seq.

43 L. R. A.

We will give a few illustrations of the rule stated, beginning with Alexander v. New-castle, 115 Ind. 51, in which a town was sued for injuries alleged to have been caused by a pit or excavation in a street, which the town wrongfully and negligently suffered and permitted to remain open and uninclosed. The plaintiff was a special constable, and was thrown into the pit by a prisoner he had under arrest, as they were passing and opposite the pit, and was injured, the prisoner escaping. It was insisted that, as the pit or excavation so wrongfully and negligently permitted to remain open and uninclosed afforded the prisoner the opportunity of throwing the plaintiff into it as a means of escape, it was, in legal contemplation, the proximate cause of the injuries which the plaintiff received. But the court held that the prisoner was clearly an intervening as well as an independent human agency in the infliction of the injuries of which the plaintiff complained, and that the town was not liable. In that case the pit afforded the opportunity to inflict the injury, but was not an efficient cause of it.

In Vicars v. Wilcocks, 8 East, 1, the plaintiff sued the defendant for slander, which was uttered in a conversation with persons who were not his employers, but was communicated to his master, and attempted to hold him liable for the damage he suffered by reason of his master discharging him in consequence of the slander, before the expiration of his term of service. And Lord Ellenborough said that the special damage must be the legal and natural consequence of the words spoken, otherwise it did not sustain the declaration; and here it was an illegal consequence, a mere wrongful act of the master for which the defendant was no more answerable than if, in consequence of the words, other persons had afterwards assembled and seized the plaintiff, and thrown him into a horse pond by way of punishment for his supposed transgression. And his lordship asked whether any case could be mentioned of an action of this sort sustained by proof only of an injury sustained by the tortious act of a third person. Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 31, 10 Am. Rep. 205.

In Shugart v. Egan, 83 Ill. 56, 25 Am. Rep. 359, the plaintiff's husband, while in a state of intoxication caused by liquors obtained by him from the defendant, insulted or menaced one McGraw, who thereupon stabbed him, inflicting a wound whereof he died shortly afterwards. The court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover under a statute which gave a wife "who shall be injured in person, property, or means of support" in consequence of the intoxication of any person "a right of action against the person who caused the intoxication, and made such person liable" for all damages sustained and for exemplary damages. Mr. Justice Scholfeld, for the court, said: "It has also been held that the intervention of the independent act of a third person, between the wrong complained of and the injury sustained, which was the direct or immediate cause of the injury, breaks the causal connection; and, consequently, there can, in such case, be no recovery except as against the person whose immediate agency produced the injury. . . . Here, the death not resulting from intoxication or from any disease induced or aggravated by the use of liquor, but solely from the direct and wilful act of McGraw, we have a case clearly within this principle.

In the case before us the intervening act produced the injury complained of, and was the wrongful act of a third person for which he was legally responsible. The sale and consumption of the liquor may have furnished the opportunity or occasion for the wrongful act of the third person, but was not the proximate cause of the injury. Hence the saloon keeper, who sold the liquor which produced the intoxication, and the sureties on his bond, are not liable for damages. Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed as to George Sargianovich, the keeper of the saloon, and J. Kempner and D. Beffa, the sureties on his bond, and is affirmed as to Vincent Gage.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

W. N. CAMP et al., Appts.,

v.

B. M. BRUCE.

(.....Va.....)

A contract to sell the bid or interest of a successful bidder at a judicial sale, before its confirmation, for more than the amount bid, is contrary to public policy, unless the advance on the bid inures to the benefit of the parties to the suit.

(December 7, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court for Nansemond County in favor of defendant in a suit to compel specific performance of a contract to sell to plaintiffs a right to a sheriff's deed which defendant had procured by becoming the highest bidder at a judicial sale of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Jackson Guy, for appellants:

A contract to sell land must be in writing. But suppose one is sued for performance of a parol contract to sell land, and he answers and does not make the point that the contract is not in writing; will the court supply it for him? It will not.

2 Minor, Inst. 4th ed. 856; Wren v. Moncure, 95 Va. 369; Potomac Mfg. Co. v. Evans, 84 Va. 721; Stuart v. Coalter, 4 Rand. (Va.) 78, 15 Am. Dec. 731; Welfley v. Shenandoah Iron, Lumber, Min. & Mfg. Co. 83 Va. 768.

Inadequacy of price can only be a ground for setting a contract aside when it is so gross as to amount to a fraud by one party on the other.

Pom. Spec. Perf. §§ 187, 193, 195; Young v. Ellis, 91 Va. 297.

As soon as the contract of September 26

NOTE.—As to the effect of checking or preventing bids upon the validity of an auction sale, see Hendron v. Gibson (S. C.) 20 L. R. A. 545, and note.
43 L. R. A.

was executed by the parties a relation of trust was raised between them, and neither party could deal with the subject-matter of the contract to the prejudice of the other without violating that other's rights.

Dunsmore v. Lyle, 87 Va. 391; Pom. Spec. Perf. § 314.

Sales's determination to put in the upset bid was reached after September 26.

Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 122, 32 L. ed. 878; Thompson v. Myrick, 20 Minn. 205.

The doctrines of the equity courts are satisfied if the vendor is able to procure and give a good title at the time of the decree, even though he could not do so at the time of commencing his suit.

Pom. Spec. Perf. § 421.

A chancellor will not compel a vendee to take an estate of which the vendor was not the owner at the sale, or at least had not the legal or equitable means to make himself so; and this because one who speculates on what is not within his control is not a bona fide contractor.

Ley v. Huber, 3 Watts, 367.

Where the seller, though not the owner of the fee, has an equitable estate in the premises under articles of agreement for its purchase and the right to acquire the legal title, and actually acquired it after the contract of sale, but before any laches could properly be imputed to him, he may compel a specific performance.

Tiernan v. Roland, 15 Pa. 429; Lewis v. Madisons, 1 Munf. 303; Price v. Winston, 4 Munf. 63; 1 Chitty, Contr. 11th ed. p. 431; Townshend v. Goodfellow, 40 Minn. 312, 3 L. R. A. 739; Reeves v. Dickey, 10 Gratt. 138; Christian v. Cabell, 22 Gratt. 82; Hendricks v. Gillespie, 25 Gratt. 181; Hunter v. Bales, 24 Ind. 299; Bryant v. Booze, 55 Ga. 438; Bayler v. Com. 40 Pa. 43, 80 Am. Dec. 551; Ryan v. United States, 136 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 447; Central Land Co. v. Johnston, 95 Va. 223.

Mr. J. B. Prince also for appellants.

Messrs. R. H. Rawles and R. E. Boykin for appellee.

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record shows that on the 11th day of June, 1894, at a judicial sale in the case of Ranstead against Ranstead, etc., the appellee purchased a tract of land containing 2,900 acres, at the price of $2,100; that he complied with the terms of sale by paying the cash required and executing his bonds for the deferred payments; that the sale was reported to the court, but pending confirmation he entered into a written agreement with the appellants by which, in consideration of their assuming payment of the purchase-money bonds held by the commissioner and the payment of $1,565 to the appellee (which was $500 profit on his bid), he sold and conveyed all his right, title, and interest in the land and in the sale and purchase thereof to the appellants, and agreed that he and his wife would unite with the commissioner in his conveyance of the land, which he was directed to ask the court to have made to the appellants. An upset bid having been put in, the sale to the appellee was set aside, and a resale ordered. After the land had been resold several times, upset bids having been put in from time to time, the appellee finally became the purchaser, at the price of $4,850, at a sale which was confirmed.

Some months after the confirmation of that sale, the appellants filed this bill to compel the appellee to specifically execute its provision, upon the ground that he, in violation of his agreement with them and in fraud of their rights, had improperly and fraudulently procured the upset bid to be put in, which prevented the confirmation of the first sale made to him.

The appellee answered the bill, and, among other things, admitted the execution of the agreement, and alleged that he would have complied with its provisions if the sale had been confirmed, but denied that he procured the upset bid to be put in, which prevented its confirmation.

The first question to be determined is whether that agreement is one which a court of equity will enforce. If it be an illegal contract, as claimed in argument, this suit cannot be maintained, although that defense was not raised by the pleadings, nor relied upon in the circuit court. The law refuses to enforce illegal contracts, as a rule, not out of regard for the party objecting, nor from any wish to protect his interests, but from reasons of public policy. Whenever, therefore, the illegality of the contract appears, whether alleged in the pleadings or made known for the first time in the evidence, it is fatal to the case. That defect cannot be gotten rid of either by failure to plead it or by agreeing to waive it in the most solemn manner. The law will not enforce contracts founded in its violation. Fry, Spec. Perf. § 309; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 261; Pom. Contr. 2d ed. § 286; Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542, 19 L. ed. 244.

We have no statute declaring that contracts like the one under consideration are unlawful; yet, under the principles of the common law, any contract that is made for the purpose of or whose necessary effect or tendency is to lessen competition and restrain bidding at judicial sales is held to be illegal, because opposed to public policy. The object in all such sales is to get the best price that can be fairly had for the property. The policy of the law, therefore, is to secure such sale from every kind of improper influence. To allow one bidder to buy off another, which is but a species of bribery, and thus prevent the property from bringing the best price, is condemned by the law, and the courts will not enforce contracts founded in such practices. Underwood v. McVeigh, 23 Gratt. 409, 428, 429; Cocks v. Izard, 7 Wall. 559, 562, 19 L. ed. 275, 276; Fry, Spec. Perf. § 308; Pom. Contr. § 283; Greenwood, Pub. Pol. pp. 183-189.

Tested by these principles, the agreement in question was clearly illegal.

If the parties had succeeded in having the sale confirmed by the court, and the appellants substituted as purchasers, in lieu of the appellee, at his bid of $2,100, the agreement would have operated as a fraud upon the court and the parties whose lands were being sold for purposes of partition. It would have enabled the appellee to put $500 in his pocket, for which he furnished no valuable consideration; would have taken from the co-owners that much of their inheritance, and enabled the appellants to get the property by buying off the court's bidder, instead of putting in an upset bid, and taking the chances of having to pay a higher price for it at a resale. Neither in this case nor in the case in which the land was sold could such an agreement be enforced. If the commissioner who made the sale in the case of Ranstead against Ranstead had reported to the court that since the sale to him the appellee had sold his bid to the appellants, at a profit of $500, to be paid when the sale was confirmed (as he ought to have done, for he wrote the agreement, and knew all the facts, and the court, whose agent he was, had the right to know all that he knew about the appellants' dealing with their bidder that could affect the confirmation of the sale), instead of merely reporting that the appellee desired the conveyance for the land to be made to the appellants, the court would not have confirmed the sale at the appellee's bid of $2,100, although no upset bid had been put in.

A court will never, where the facts are known to it, confirm a sale where the bidder has sold his bid at an advance, unless the advance paid or to be paid inures to the benefit of the parties to the suit. It does not allow bidders to trade behind its back, and speculate in that way on property which it is selling. 2 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 5th ed. p. 1285; Hodder v. Ruffin, 1 Tamlyn, 341.

In order to prevent this, it became the practice of the English chancery courts, in the time of Lord Eldon, it is said, to require the bidder who desired the court to substitute another in his stead to file an affidavit that there was "no underhand bargain between them." Rigby v. Macnamara, 6 Ves. Jr. 515; Vale v. Davenport, 6 Ves. Jr. 615; Holroyd v. Wyatt, 9 Jur. 1072, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 327.

The rule of the English chancery courts upon this subject is thus stated in 2 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 5th ed. p. 1285: "If, after becoming the bidder for an estate, the purchaser is desirous of being discharged from his contract, and of substituting another person in his stead, the court will, on motion, make an order to that effect. He must, however, support his motion by an affidavit that there is no underbargain, for the new purchaser may give the other a sum of money to stand in his place, and so deceive the court; and the rule appears to be that, if a purchaser resell behind the back of the court before the purchase is confirmed, the second purchaser is considered a substituted purchaser, and must pay the additional price into court for the benefit of the estate. When the highest bidder at an auction induced the auctioneer to accept another person in his place, concealing the fact that he had sold his bargain at an advance, which he received, and then absconded, the property was ordered to be resold, reserving all questions of liability of the original or subpurchaser."

The English rule of requiring affidavits where one purchaser is asked to be substituted for another is a wise one, and in this case the agreement sought to be enforced shows the necessity for some such safeguard in our practice. It might be well for our courts in all such cases, unless the parties consent to the substitution, to adopt the English practice. It is of the utmost consequence that judicial sales, and especially sales for partition, where infants are generally interested, should be protected from practices and influences which may prevent the lands from bringing the best price.

The bill was properly dismissed by the Circuit Court, and its decree must be affirmed.

Cardwell and Riely, JJ., absent.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

John S. RITZ, Admr., etc., of Sarah Ritz, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.

City of WHEELING.

(.....W. Va.....)

*1. When, upon the facts conceded as shown, a verdict for the plaintiff would be against law, the court should, on motion, exclude the plaintiff's evidence, and direct a verdict for the defendant. So it is also where, if the essential facts claimed to be proved by the evidence, were proved, a verdict for plaintiff would be justified by the law, yet the evidence does not appreciably tend to prove them, but so plainly fails to do so that two reasonable men should not differ as to its insufficiency.

2. A landowner is under no duty to a mere trespasser to keep his premises safe, and the fact that the trespasser is a child does not raise a duty where none otherwise exists. Such a trespasser, injured on such premises, cannot recover of the landowner by reason of the unsafe condition of the premises, unless this negligence be so gross as to amount to a wanton injury.

(November 23, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ohio County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate *Headnotes by BRANNON, P.

NOTE.—For negligence with respect to dangerous ponds, see Stendal v. Boyd (Minn.) 42 L. R. A. 288, and footnote thereto.
43 L. R. A.

which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Caldwell & Caldwell, for plaintiff in error:

If a corporation erects and maintains upon its own land for its own use a structure capable of inflicting injury on persons, and by its appearance and operation calculated to attract or allure children non sui juris, and to endanger their life or limbs, and leaves the same unguarded and injury results therefrom to such children, without the fault or negligence of their parents or guardians, it constitutes negligence on the part of such corporation for which a recovery may be had.

Thomas, Neg. Rules, Decisions, & Opinions, 1895, p. 1083.

The test of the permissible use of one's own land, is whether the act or use was a reasonable exercise of the dominion which the owner of property has by virtue of his ownership, having regard to all interests affected, his own and those of his neighbors, and having also in view public policy.

Thomas, Neg. Rules, Decisions, & Opinions, p. 1050; Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 36 W. Va. 173.

The rules applicable to adults are in some respects essentially modified when applied to children non sui juris. It is considered that the owner of private premises should use reasonable care not to permit unguarded upon his premises machinery, structures, or other dangerous conditions, to which children would be likely to be attracted, in proximity to places frequented by them, and from an interference with which injury would be likely to result.

Thomas, Neg. Rules, Decisions, & Opinions, p. 1078; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. Webb's Notes, 2d ed. p. 77, notes; Bronson v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154.

Reasonable care should be taken to prevent injury to children likely to enter upon private premises and be injured.

Coppner v. Pennsylvania Co. 12 Ill. App. 600; Moynihan v. Whidden, 143 Mass. 287; Ferguson v. Columbus & R. R. Co. 75 Ga. 637; Whirley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 610; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Heisk. 347.

A railroad company has been held liable for injuries to children caused by turntables left unguarded, even upon their own premises.

Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Evansich v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 67 Tex. 126, 44 Am. Rep. 586; Koons v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 65 Mo. 592; Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Simpson, 60 Tex. 103; Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 31 Am. Rep. 203; Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Bell, 81 Ill. 76, 25 Am. Rep. 269; Nagel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 653, 42 Am. Rep. 418; Dwyer v. Missouri P. R. Co. 12 Mo. App. 597; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Bailey, 11 Neb. 332; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Styron, 66 Tex. 421; Union P. R. Co. v. Dunden, 37 Kan. 1; Bridger v. Asheville & S. R. Co. 25 S. C. 24; Waldh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 78 Hun, 1.

Dangerous machinery cannot be distinguished on principle from other dangerous things placed on the ground by its owner.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 705; Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206; McDonald v. Union P. R. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 582; Bishop v. Union R. Co. 14 R. I. 314, 51 Am. Rep. 386.

There can be no contributory negligence by children of tender years.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 136; Lynch v. Nurdin, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 29; Hughes v. Macfie, 2 Hurlst. & C. 744; Mangan v. Atterton, L. R. 1 Exch. 239; Clark v. Chambers, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 327; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Mackey v. Vicksburg, 64 Miss. 777.

Negligence cannot ordinarily be imputed to a child of the age of six years, for it would not be presumed of sufficient capacity or discretion to understand the danger of getting on and off street-railway cars and to guard against it.

Buck v. People's Street R. Electric Light & P. Co. 46 Mo. App. 555; Pittsburg, A. & M. Pass. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 74 Pa. 421; Dicken v. Liverpool Salt & Coal Co. 41 W. Va. 512; Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 36 W. Va. 168; Mackey v. Vicksburg, 64 Miss. 782; Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, 83 Pa. 335.

Placing a dangerous excavation in public 43 L. R. A.

streets or grounds, or on the edge of such ground, and keeping such excavation or dangerous pool of water unguarded and unprotected, is negligence.

Barthold v. Philadelphia, 154 Pa. 109.

A public square or common is a highway, but not for vehicles.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 646 (509 and notes).

The city of Wheeling is liable in this case, although it is a municipal corporation.

Clark v. Manchester, 62 N. H. 577; Brown v. Guyandotte, 34 W. Va. 299, 11 L. R. A. 121; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 986 (1024, 1026); Watkins v. Preston County Ct. 30 W. Va. 662; Gibson v. Huntington, 38 W. Va. 178, 22 L. R. A. 561; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 331, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Chapman v. Milton, 31 W. Va. 385.

The neglect of the city was the proximate cause of the accident in the case at bar.

Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Twced, 7 Wall. 52, 19 L. ed. 67.

Reasonable care should be taken to prevent injury to children likely to enter upon private premises and be injured.

Coppner v. Pennsylvania Co. 12 Ill. App. 600; Ferguson v. Columbus & R. R. Co. 75 Ga. 637; Whirley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 610; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Heisk. 347; Branson v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154; Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 36 W. Va. 173; Raines v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 50, 24 L. R. A. 226.

Messrs. Frank W. Nesbitt and Henry M. Russell, for defendant in error:

The question of negligence was a question for the court, and if the evidence of the plaintiff failed to show negligence, it was proper for the court to exclude it.

Klinker v. Wheeling Steel & I. Co. 43 W. Va. 219; Reese v. Wheeling & E. G. R. Co. 42 W. Va. 333.

In cases in which streets are not involved the burden of proving negligence, and of proving the elements of negligence, is upon the plaintiff.

Gibson v. Huntington, 38 W. Va. 177, 22 L. R. A. 561.

It is necessary for the plaintiff to show that the particular act of negligence was the proximate cause of the accident.

Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 36 W. Va. 165.

If this inclosure containing the reservoir had been instead an open street, the city could only have been held bound to keep it in a reasonably safe condition.

Van Pelt v. Clarksburg, 42 W. Va. 218.

Defendant did not owe any duty which it had failed to perform.

Woolwine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 329, 16 L. R. A. 271; Poling v. Ohio River R. Co. 38 W. Va. 645, 24 L. R. A. 215; Dicken v. Liverpool Salt & Coal Co. 41 W. Va. 511; Clark v. Manchester, 62 N. H. 577; Grindley v. McKechnie, 163 Mass. 494; Murphy v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 575; Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365; Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535, 20 L. R. A. 714; Mergenthaler v. Kirby, 79 Md. 182; Charlebois v. Gogebic & M. River R. Co. 91 Mich. 59; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; Moran v. Pullman Pal-

acoe Car Co. 134 Mo. 641, 33 L. R. A. 755; Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422; Klika v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 60 Am. Rep. 854; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573; Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467.

The Turntable Cases are not applicable.

Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573; Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467; Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422; Klika v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 60 Am. Rep. 354.

The Turntable Cases are not good law.

Dicken v. Liverpool Salt & Coal Co. 41 W. Va. 511; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards, 90 Tex. 65, 32 L. R. A. 825; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Bockoven, 53 Kan. 279; Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, 26 L. R. A. 947; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724; Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345.

There are a number of cases which, while not involving pools of water, do involve facts and circumstances which are not to be distinguished in principle from the case at bar, and which therefore will be found of value.

Gay v. Essex Electric Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 238, 21 L. R. A. 448; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards, 90 Tex. 65, 32 L. R. A. 825; Talty v. Atlantic, 92 Iowa, 135; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Bockoven, 53 Kan. 279; O'Connor v. Illinois C. R. Co. 44 La. Ann. 339; Ratte v. Dawson, 50 Minn. 450; Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, 26 L. R. A. 847; Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355.

Brannon, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

Sarah Ritz, a child of less than five years, was drowned in a reservoir maintained by the city of Wheeling to furnish water for public use, and the administrator brought action against the city, and upon the trial the court excluded the whole of the plaintiff's evidence from the jury as insufficient to warrant a verdict, and directed the jury to find for the defendant, and upon such a verdict gave judgment for defendant, and the plaintiff appeals. The case is not one involving credibility of witnesses, or weight of evidence, or the proper inferences and deductions from evidence, which are matters proper for the consideration of a jury; for the material facts of the case are undisputed, and the case presents simply the question of law whether, upon the facts, a liability rests on the city. The question is, Was the city guilty of negligence? Negligence is most frequently a question of mixed law and fact, proper to go before a jury; but, where the facts are such that ordinarily men will not differ about their effect in not showing negligence, it becomes a question of law for the court, not one of fact for the jury, and, if the evidence is not colorably sufficient to show negligence, the court ought to take the case from the jury and direct a verdict against the plaintiff. When the evidence is so clearly deficient as to give no support to a verdict for plaintiff, if rendered, the evidence should be excluded from the jury. Klinkler v. 43 L. R. A.

Wheeling Steel & I. Co. 43 W. Va. 219; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 2d ed. § 56. Where the case turns on the weight and effect of the evidence in proving or not proving facts necessary to support the action, and the evidence appreciably goes to prove such facts, it ought to go to the jury, as a verdict upon such evidence gives it a force which it might not have with the judge before verdict, and fortifies his case more against the action of the court, as the court cannot set the verdict aside unless plainly and decidedly contrary to or without evidence; but where the case is not such, but one of undisputed or indisputable facts, leaving it only a matter of law whether the facts show a liability on the defendant, the court should take the case from the jury, and direct a verdict, if the evidence shows no case for the plaintiff, because, if there were a verdict for him, it would be a finding against law, and the court always annuls a verdict against law upon conceded or indisputable facts. It is different, then, from a motion for a new trial, where the verdict rests on the credibility of witnesses or the weight and effect of evidence. Grayson's Case, 6 Gratt. 712; Poling v. Ohio River R. Co. 38 W. Va. 645, 24 L. R. A. 215 (point 8). Likely this distinction is not always thought of. Plainly, if the court does right in excluding the evidence, it commits no error in directing a verdict, as such a verdict is the inevitable consequence of such exclusion. There cannot then be any different verdict.

Let us see, then, whether the city is liable. In maintaining the reservoir, the city was engaged in a lawful act, within its power and duty as a municipal corporation,—a governmental act; and I do not see, in the absence of a statute imposing liability, if an open question, how it could be held liable, even if guilty of negligence, under the principle stated in Brown v. Guyandotte, 34 W. Va. 299, 11 L. R. A. 121, and 1 Beach, Pub. Corp. § 749: "Where a city, under the authority of a general law, undertakes a work for the sole use and benefit of the public, it is not liable for an injury caused by the negligent or defective performance of such work by its agents or servants, unless some statute, either directly or by implication, gives a private remedy for such injury. This rule has been applied against a traveler injured by negligent blasting while excavating the foundation of a public schoolhouse, and against a child injured by reason of an unsafe staircase of a schoolhouse, and a dangerous excavation in a schoolhouse yard. The same rule has been applied in favor of cities in respect to town house and courthouses, and in respect to public grounds, like Boston Common. And it makes no material difference, in the application of the rule, whether the injury is caused by a negligent act done in the direct performance of the public work," or is received after the completion of the work. You cannot sue the state for such cause, unless it granted remedy. Why sue a city when performing a governmental function? One citizen is as much guilty of negligence as are others; all are guilty alike. Contrary doctrine holds a city liable as if an individual engaged in private work for private ends. But most authorities oppose this view. The law seems to be that a city or town, in the use of its property, though for purely public purposes, is liable for negligence as private owners. Gibson v. Huntington, 38 W. Va. 177, 22 L. R. A. 561; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 985; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1141, 1149, 1155. But those authorities hold that, to make a municipal corporation liable for injury received from its use of its property, negligence must be shown. Thus we encounter in this case the question whether the city was guilty of negligence to which we can attribute the death of the little girl. There can be no negligence charged upon a person unless he rests under a duty to the person complaining of damage at his hands; for if there is no duty violated, though there may be grave damage befalling the complaining party, he has no ground of action. It is a case denominated in law as damnum absque injuria,—damage done, but without violation of a right in the injured party; a misfortune unaccompanied by a breach of duty by the party inflicting the injury. Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 8. The reservoir and the land containing it were the private property of the city, used, not as a park or place of public resort or common, but only for reservoir purposes. The child was a trespasser, if you can say a child can be a trespasser. It was a trespasser, in legal sense; that is, it was on this property without right. The city was not bound to watch it. It could not be liable to it only for wilful or wanton injury. I would, as an original question, hold that the law testing this case is laid down in 1 Beach, Pub. Corp. § 754, as follows: "A municipal corporation is not liable to a trespasser who goes, without license or invitation, upon its land, though unmolested, for mere pleasure or to gratify curiosity, and there meets with an injury through the corporation's negligent management of its property; and no distinction is made in favor of an infant child so receiving an injury. In such a case the municipality owes no special duty to a child straying from its parents, and the duty of protecting it is not shifted from its parents to the municipality because it chances to escape from their care. This is the general rule applicable to those who trespass on private lands, and there is no reason why municipal corporations should not have the benefit of it; but, of course, it has no application to public highways, where all have a right to be."

I repeat, this is so, because no legal duty rests on the corporation. Our own cases sustain the doctrine of immunity where there is no duty placed by the law upon the party sought to be charged with damages. By reason of this doctrine, the case of Woolwine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 329, 16 L. R. A. 271, denied relief to a man who visited a telegraph office kept by a railroad company to make a call of friendship on the operator, and was injured by negligence of the railroad's servants. And by reason of this doctrine, in Poling v. Ohio River R. Co. 38 W. Va. 645, 24 L. R. A. 215, no damages were conceded for the death of a person standing on the railroad grounds, and killed by reason of a defective apparatus used to catch mail from a passing train. And by reason of the same doctrine, in Dicken v. Liverpool Salt & Coal Co. 41 W. Va. 511, recovery was denied for the injury of a little child crippled by a car while on a train road of a salt company. Such must be the ruling as long as private ownership in property is recognized, as to hold otherwise would detract from the lawful dominion of a man over his own property, and contravene the canon of property expressed in the Dicken Case, that "a party who is using his own property in a lawful way cannot be guilty of a breach of duty to anyone."

These cases of our own decide the case against the plaintiff, but the importance of the case and briefs of counsel justify reference to other states. In Clark v. Manchester, 62 N. H. 577, a child of four years was drowned in a reservoir which had once been used by a city, but its use had ceased, the fence was removed, it was partly filled up, and but a portion yet had water in it. Children played there. A field was near by, where ball playing and other amusements went on. The child, while passing along a path at the reservoir, fell into it. It was held that the city was not, without a statute, liable for neglect of a public corporate duty, and that the city owed no duty to one going upon its land for pleasure or curiosity, unless the negligence be so gross as to amount to a wanton infliction of injury, and that no distinction is made in favor of an infant. In Grindley v. McKechnie, 163 Mass. 494, a city kept a sewer, and by it a hole had been formed by the action of the water, and was filled with water, the hole being 50 feet from the street, along which was a fence, and some boards had been torn from it, and a path led from this opening to the sewer. A child went through this opening, along the path, to the sewer, and was drowned. It was held that the city owed no duty to the child to keep the sewer or hole in safe condition, and was not liable in damages. Similar decisions, based on principles above stated, are to be found in Murphy v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 575; Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365; Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535, 20 L. R. A. 714; Charlebois v. Goebie & M. River R. Co. 91 Mich. 59; Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 124 Mo. 641, 33 L. R. A. 755; Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422; Kliw v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 69 Am. Rep. 854; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573; Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467; Omaha v. Bowman, 52 Neb. 293, 40 L. R. A. 531; Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345. They are cases of small children drowning in reservoirs or pools of water, in most instances unprotected by fence, whereas in this instance the reservoir was well fenced. Those cases are apposite to this in similarity of source of injury and character of the persons injured. Many cases may be cited of injury from other causes to persons on ground occupied by others. They involve the same principle, regardless of different cause of injury; that is, that the owner of the ground owed no duty to one having no legal right to be upon the ground. Recovery was refused in Gay v. Essex Electric Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 238, 21 L. R. A. 448, to a boy ten years old, who went on a car unlawfully standing in a street, and was injured by a recoiling brake not properly fastened. It was said that, if standing on the company's ground, it would be most clear that the company would not be liable; and, as it was, the court said that the defendant was not liable. In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards, 90 Tex. 65, 32 L. R. A. 825, an eight-year-old child in a lot of the company open on one side was crushed by a pile of plank improperly piled. In Talty v. Atlantic, 92 Iowa, 135, child was injured by going down path from street, and crushed while digging sand, by a bank caving. It was held that the city was not bound to fence the path. In O'Connor v. Illinois C. R. Co. 44 La. Ann. 339, children usually played in a block with openings in fence and one of seven years was injured. In Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Bockoven, 53 Kan. 279, a child of five years was killed while swinging, by a falling gate, which was defective and dangerous. In Ratte v. Dawson, 50 Minn. 450, a child of three years was playing in a pit caused by taking out sand, and wholly unguarded, in a vacant lot, and was killed by a falling embankment left in dangerous condition. Children usually played in the sand, as it was attractive to them. It was held there could be no recovery, as there was no duty on the owner to keep his premises safe. In Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, the railroad owned a yard not fenced, where children went to play, and one of six years jumped on a train and was injured. Held no duty to the child was on the company. In Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467, defendant owned a board yard in a populous part of city, frequented by children, and a child injured by a falling pile of lumber, not in safe condition, was denied recovery, because no duty as to the child rested on the defendant to pile the plank properly. In Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, the city had made excavation on land of another, who had erected a wall along the street, and a child of six years walked on the wall, and fell into the pit. The court said the city owed him no duty, as he went upon property where there was no duty owing him. McGuinness v. Butler, 159 Mass. 233, denied relief to a child injured by pulling upon himself a slab left by the owner leaning against his shop, one end in the street and the top a few inches inside his line.

But it is contended that, while this doctrine that no duty lies upon the owner of property to keep it in safe condition as to trespasser applies to persons who have attained years of discretion, the case is wholly different as to children of tender years; that as to them the owner cannot use the property as he chooses, but must so use it as not to injure them. Perhaps this is stating the position of plaintiff's counsel too broadly. The position is that the owner cannot erect or continue on his property any structure, establishment, or machinery that is at the same time in dangerous condition, and calculated to attract and allure young children to it. It must be both to sustain a recovery. This position is sought to be supported by what are called the "Turntable Cases" (Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745, and other cases following it). In that case a boy was injured while playing in a railroad turntable left unlocked, and was allowed a recovery. The case is most unsatisfactory. The opinion is not clear. It seems to go upon the idea, as an element of decision, that to deny a recovery it was necessary to impute contributory negligence to a child; whereas the matter in that case did not, nor does it in this case, involve contributory negligence, which is foreign to our question, which question is whether the defendant owes duty to a child wandering upon the defendant's premises and injured by its lawful works. And in the Stout Case the real point of the decision is that the case should have gone to the jury, rather than a flat decision of defendant's liability, though I do not say it was not involved. But the Stout Case, if carried to the length to which it is sought to be carried, would exact of every property owner the utmost watchfulness, vigilance, and expenditure to guard against hurt to children, else he would be every moment in danger of ruinous damages. It attacks the right of free use of one's property in lawful business. A railroad liable because it happened to leave a turntable unlocked, as turntables often are, on its own track,—a necessary appliance in a lawful business! Ought a farmer be liable for failing to put a picket fence around his pond necessary for his cattle? If he does not, some little boy will climb the fence into the farmer's field, drown in the pond, and sue the farmer, on the same principle. The dam that contains water to turn the mill wheel, having a path around it shaded with willows, is very alluring to the child and the man. Must the miller inclose it? The canal, with its towpath and frogs, is very attractive to the little boy or girl, and dangerous, too. If a child drown in it, is the company liable? How many more instances of things useful in lawful business, and withal very attractive to children, and very dangerous, might be put? And the rule contended for says that, if the thing causing the injury be attractive or seductive, the liability attends it. How many things are, or may be, so to children? "A child's will is the wind's will." Almost everything will attract some child. The pretty horse, or the bright red mowing machine, or the pond in the farmer's field, the millpond, canal, the railroad cars, the moving carriage in the street, electric works, and infinite other things, attract the child as well as the city's reservoir. To what things is the rule to be limited? And where will not the curiosity, the thoughtlessness, and the agile feet of the truant boy carry him? He climbs into the high barn and the high cherry tree. Are they, too, to be watched and guarded against him? As was well said in Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365, this rule "would charge the duty of the protection of children upon every member of the community except their parents." A very onerous duty! Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 462, holds that the same precautions by property owners apply to infants and adults.

I am guilty of no undue assumption in condemning the Stout Case, as it has received in some courts, the most eminent in the land, open condemnation, and in others criticism tantamount to condemnation; and some which followed it limit its application to its facts or desire to recant. Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724; Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220; Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 349, 13 L. R. A. 248; Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, 26 L. R. A. 847; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards, 90 Tex. 65, 32 L. R. A. 825; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Bookoven, 53 Kan. 279; Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345; Catlett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 57 Ark. 461; Bishop v. Union R. Co. 14 R. I. 320, 51 Am. Rep. 386.

Here I may fitly add that the cases cited denying recovery were cases of infants of tender years. Are they all wrong, running through so many years? Is our own Dicken Case wrong? And the Woolwine and Poling Cases? Another reason against applying the Stout Case to mulct the city of Wheeling in damages is that, as often construed, that case only applies to "dangerous machinery." Several courts which followed it have since said it ought to be limited to its particular facts. Whether the distinction between "dangerous machinery" and other means of injury be clear or not, several courts and text-writers have made it. Railroad cars held not such "dangerous machines." Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, 26 L. R. A. 847; Catlett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 57 Ark. 461. Cars are attractive to children, but the law does not require a guard to keep children from standing cars. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 47 Ill. 265.

Now, I do not suppose this reservoir of the city would come under the head of "dangerous machinery." If so, what structure or establishment might not? At any rate, if that is "dangerous machinery," hundreds of necessary things would fall under this head of liability not heretofore regarded as dangerous and attractive to children, and greatly endanger the maintenance of many things necessary in life and business, and be an enormous burden to guard and watch with never sleeping eyes. Strange to me the idea that such a reservoir can be made to come under this rule. And I say that the reservoir is not "dangerous" in that sense. And I say, with yet greater confidence, that it is not specially "attractive" in that sense. If not, there can be no recovery in this case; for on that narrow ground the case hinges. Hence the Stout Case does not apply.

But a most important matter is, What is the negligence claimed to sustain this action? It is that there was a gate of entry into the inclosure containing the reservoir, which was 43 L. R. A.

sometimes open, and that there was an opening under the picket fence several feet deep to allow water coming into the reservoir inclosure from the hill above, from rain, to pass out so as to keep it from entering the reservoir and polluting its water. The reservoir was inclosed with a high, strong picket fence. It does not appear how the child entered the inclosure, but likely through the opening under the fence. Now most of the cases above will show that the city was not bound to fence, but it did securely fence the reservoir. It adopted a reasonable precaution, and did all that reasonable care would exact. Do the gate and drain, things indispensable, convict the city of want of ordinary care or gross negligence? Surely not. The place was reasonably safe. Though people and children did sometimes go upon the city land containing the reservoir, and along the narrow path along the fence on the east side over the high, steep ground, almost a precipice of hundreds of feet, to watch games of baseball in a field below, yet there was no invitation by the city to do so. The place was uninviting and dangerous, and there was no ground for the city to anticipate that parents would allow their children there, on very dangerous ground, or that one would crawl under the fence, through this single necessary opening. The city used all due precaution. This opening was at the remote end of the inclosure, away from houses a considerable distance, and at the end of the path. The path was along the fence, was only 2 feet wide, and very close to the fence, and the whole space between the fence and precipice was only that width,—a path, not a highway, and unlikely to invite people. It was not bound to use the utmost possible care to guard infallibly against all possible accidents. In Gavin v. Chicago, 97 Ill. 66, 37 Am. Rep. 99, it was held that the city must keep a bridge in a reasonably safe condition, and that, though it could be made to be free from accident to playing children, yet it was not bound to so construct it as to be safe for children playing upon and around it, or place guards or mechanical contrivances to keep children off the bridge. An owner is not required to provide against remote and improbable injuries to trespassing children. Brinkley Car Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ark. 545, 46 Am. St. Rep. 216, and note. One using his property in a lawful way is not under obligation to save others from inevitable accident. "He performs his duty when he uses reasonable care and precaution." Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118. Even if the city owed a duty to the child, it was only of ordinary care. 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 2d ed. § 705.

The city had a watchman there, though by no means was this required, as above authorities show. The watchman was not present or did not happen to see this child. The fact that it did keep a watchman did not bind the city to duty not fixed by law or a higher degree of duty than the law fixes, if any. The fact shows that the city took all reasonable precautions, and this is an unfortunate, inevitable accident, for which it is not responsible. The South Carolina court stated the point clearly, saying, as to children, that there is a liability only "when, from the peculiar nature and open and exposed position of the dangerous defect or agent, the owner should reasonably anticipate such injury." How can we say in this case that a drain at the end of a narrow fringe of 2 feet, 200 yards long, between a fence and precipice, just where the fence butted up against a high hill cut down in the construction of the reservoir, not where people usually went, very inconvenient to walkers, we may say dangerous, where there was nothing to invite them, but everything to deter, and the common ground, if such, was on the other side of the reservoir inclosure, a good distance and cut off from this point,—the point where the drain emerged being secluded, and the best point for it, and where no one would be expected to go,—how can we say the city "should reasonably anticipate injury" there, in the language of the South Carolina court? Buswell, Personal Injuries, § 77, states the rule, as to children trespassing, to be that, to charge the defendant, it must appear that the act was "wilfully mischievous, as by leaving a ferocious dog at liberty," and that it is to be deemed mischievous or wanton only when the act was done "in the ordinary course of his business, and by the use of appliances which do not, obviously, and of necessity, expose all persons who may approach them to peril, or the exposure of which is not attended with some concealed danger." That is the test.

Now would a farmer or millowner be liable because he left a drain under his fence, and a child happened to crawl through it and fall into the pond? Certainly not. It is an unexpected, inevitable accident. Neither is Wheeling liable.

Counsel complain that the court would not allow as evidence a paper to show that the only title the city had to the land containing part of the reservoir was one vested in it in trust as a common, and that it misappropriated it when it devoted a part of it to use for a reservoir. The city had years ago made this reservoir; had been for years in actual use of it for the purpose. It never was used as a common, in the sense of a park. Now, if the party who conferred the land upon the city, or his heirs, could stop its use for a reservoir, or in any manner complain of the act as a misappropriation, or if anyone could do so, while the city was in the exclusive, unrestrained occupation of it, for reservoir purposes, it has the right to be looked upon as owner, and entitled to the immunity from damages, like any owner. Its title could not be put in question in this collateral way in this action. I think the paper was irrelevant.

Late reference is made to the case of Rowzee v. Pierce, 75 Miss. 846, 40 L. R. A. 402. That was an injunction to prevent a lot conveyed to a town for a park from being used as a site for a schoolhouse, and it was held that the use proposed to be made of it was against the purpose of the grant. To me it is plainly not relevant to this case. To restrain a city from diverting property to a different use from that contemplated in the grant is one thing; but the question whether it is, while in actual use of the land for such purpose, liable for an act claimed to be a negligent use of the property, which negligence does not consist in the application of the property to a use not contemplated, but in its mere handling of the property, is another question. The question here is whether the act of having the drain renders the city liable, no matter how it came by the land. Would the city be liable if the conveyance to it had been general, and not for a special purpose? I oppose imposing upon the innocent public heavy damages for the accidents and misfortunes which always have and always will attend human existence. The safety of the many is to be preferred to even the suffering and misfortunes of individuals.

Judgment affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Clarence MURPHY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
COMMONWEALTH of Massachusetts.

(.....Mass.....)

1. An ex post facto law is one which will increase the penalty or deprive a party of substantial rights or privileges to which he was entitled as the law stood when the offense was committed.
2. Deductions for good conduct and permits to be at liberty, to which pris-

NOTE.—For validity of law providing for indeterminate sentences, see also Miller v. State (Ind.) 40 L. R. A. 109.
42 L. R. A.

oners who were convicted of offenses committed when Stat. 1880, chap. 218, and Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, were in force, are entitled as of right rather than by favor, for faithful observance of the rules and for not having been subjected to punishment, constitute rights which cannot be taken away or interfered with to their disadvantage by subsequent legislation.

3. A statute which alters or may alter in a substantial manner the positions of those committing offenses prior to its passage is unconstitutional as to such an offense, even if it is possible that in that particular case it might operate more beneficially than the prior law would have operated.

4. The duration of a sentence is not uncertain, and the determination of the term of imprisonment is not taken from the courts so as to make the act ex post facto as applied to an offense previously committed, merely because it provides for a sentence that is indeterminate between a maximum and minimum, and gives the prison commissioners, after the minimum term, power to release the prisoner on a permit approved by the governor and council.

5. A statute requiring the approval of the governor and council to a permit for the release of a convict after the expiration of the minimum term of his sentence is not an ex post facto law, but relates merely to a matter of procedure.

6. Act 1895, chap. 504, providing for indeterminate sentences, is to be construed prospectively and does not apply to sentences for offenses committed before it took effect.

(January 3, 1899.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Essex County to review a sentence of imprisonment upon a conviction of defendant for embezzlement. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ezra R. Thayer and Edward F. McClennen, with Messrs. Brandeis, Dunbar, & Nutter, for plaintiff in error:

The legislature cannot make any substantial change, other than a clear reduction, of the punishment for offenses previously committed.

Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506; Re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835; Com. v. McDonough, 13 Allen, 581; Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95; Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406; 1 Hare, Const. Law, p. 564.

The statute of 1895 substantially changes, without reducing, the prisoner's punishment.

The act, by its terms, applies to all sentences passed after its enactment.

Com. v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144.

Under the previous law the prisoner would have received a determinate sentence, imposed by the court. From this sentence he would have been entitled to certain fixed deductions for good behavior. By the new law the court is forbidden to fix the term of imprisonment, but can only establish a maximum and minimum. The actual period of imprisonment remains uncertain, and depends on the pleasure of the commissioners of prisons and the governor and council.

The change in the tribunal imposing the sentence has been frequently held to be of controlling importance.

Re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835; Marion v. State, 16 Neb. 349; People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 14 L. R. A. 285; Oliver v. Oliver, 169 Mass. 592.

The change from a definite to an indefinite sentence also makes a serious change in the prisoner's position.

People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 14 L. R. A. 285; Re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835; People, Henning, v. Allen (Ill.) 29 Chicago Legal News, 176.

The legislature cannot make a change in the criminal law hostile in its nature or substantially unfavorable in its operation toward prior offenders; and if such is the purpose or operation of the change, it is immaterial that it deals with a mere matter of procedure or penal administration.
43 L. R. A.

Re Murphy, 87 Fed. Rep. 549; Com. v. McDonough, 13 Allen, 581; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506; Re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835; Re Canfield, 98 Mich. 644; Ex parte Hunt, 28 Tex. App. 361.

The statute actually deprives the prisoner of rights which he enjoyed under the previous law.

The deductions for good behavior allowed by Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, are important benefits to the petitioner.

Opinion of the Justices, 13 Gray, 619; Re Murphy, 87 Fed. Rep. 549.

A prisoner sentenced under Stat. 1895, chap. 504, is not entitled to the benefits of Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20.

The permit under the new act is wholly inadequate as a substitute for that granted by the old.

Com. v. McDonough, 13 Allen, 581.

Mr. J. M. Hallowell for the Commonwealth.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for a writ of error to reverse a sentence of the superior court for the county of Essex, by which the petitioner is confined in the state prison. The plea is in nullo est erratum, and therefore admits the facts well assigned in the petition. Bodurtha v. Goodrich, 3 Gray, 508, 512; Conto v. Silvia, 170 Mass. 152. From those, and from the record of the superior court, it appears that the offenses of which the petitioner was convicted were committed between July 19, 1892, and November 17, 1893, but that he was sentenced under Stat. 1895, chap. 504, which took effect on the 1st day of January, 1896, and which provides in § 1 that "when a convict is sentenced to the state prison otherwise than for life or as an habitual criminal the court imposing sentence shall not fix the term of imprisonment but shall establish a maximum and minimum term for which said convict shall be held in said prison. The maximum term shall not be longer than the longest term fixed by law for the punishment of the offense of which he is convicted and the minimum term shall not be less than two and one half years." The petitioner was indicted under Pub. Stat. chap. 203, § 40, and was found guilty on sixty-three counts, each of which, except in a few instances, alleged the value of the property stolen to be more than $100. The penalty is prescribed in § 20 of the same chapter, and is imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years, or fine not exceeding $600 and imprisonment in the jail not exceeding two years, if the value of the property stolen exceeds $100. The maximum sentence imposed in the present case was not more than fifteen years, and the minimum not less than ten. The maximum term was therefore only a small fraction of that authorized by law, and it is agreed that it probably does not exceed the sentence which would have been imposed before the passage of Stat. 1895, chap. 504. The error assigned is that the sentence and the commitment pursuant to it were wholly unauthorized and void, because the statute under which the sentence was imposed was ex post facto, and contrary to § 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States, and to article 24 of the Declaration of Rights of the Constitution of Massachusetts.

The statute was considered by this court in Com. v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144, 146, and again in Oliver v. Oliver, 169 Mass. 592. It was also before the court in Com. v. Crowley, 168 Mass. 121. In Com. v. Brown the court says that it sees no reason why the statute should not be construed to apply to all sentences in the cases referred to in it, passed after it went into effect. But it is evident that the attention of the court was directed more to the effect upon the constitutionality of the statute of the feature of indeterminate sentences than to other matters. The fact that the statute might interfere with his rights or privileges in regard to a permit to be at liberty, and was therefore objectionable as ex post facto, was not suggested in the defendant's brief. In Oliver v. Oliver, the point decided was that a sentence imposed under the statute in question must be regarded as a sentence for the maximum term, and not for the minimum or any intermediate term. The point now raised was not involved nor considered in that case. Com. v. Crowley followed Com. v. Brown. There was in the opinion no discussion of the statute, and the motion in arrest of judgment did not aver that the statute was unconstitutional because of its interference with defendant's right to a permit to be at liberty for good conduct, under Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, or otherwise; and an examination of defendant's brief shows that the ground on which it was contended that the statute was unconstitutional was the indeterminate feature of the sentences. This had been fully considered and disposed of in Com. v. Brown, and hence a reference to that case was all that was necessary. We discover nothing in either of these cases which precludes us from examining the question now presented. The statute was also considered by the United States circuit court of the first circuit when this plaintiff was before it recently on a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which it was led to deny, and to leave the petitioner to his writ of error, largely, as we infer, on account of the views concerning the statute which this court was supposed to have expressed in the two cases of Com. v. Brown and Oliver v. Oliver, referred to above. Re Murphy, 87 Fed. Rep. 549.

We have already quoted § 1 of the act. By § 2 it is provided that, at any time after the expiration of the minimum term, the commissioners of prisons may issue a permit to the convict to be at liberty on such terms and conditions as they may deem best, and may revoke the permit at any time previous to the expiration of the maximum term. The permit shall not be issued without the approval of the governor and council, or unless the commissioners shall be of the opinion that the convict will lead an orderly life if set at liberty. Other provisions contained in the act were taken from Stat. 1884, chap. 152, §§ 1, 2, which will be referred to later. The statutes applying to the petitioner's case which were in force when he committed the offenses of which he was convicted are Pub. Stat. chap. 222, §§ 20-22, and Stat. 1894, chap. 152. There were and are statutes relating to the issue of permits to persons confined for drunkenness in jails, houses of correction, or other places under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners, or in the county of Suffolk under that of the board of directors of public institutions, and who have reformed, and also to persons imprisoned in the reformatory prison for women, who have reformed. But those are not applicable to this case. Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, provides that every officer in charge of a prison or other place of confinement shall keep a record of each person whose term is not less than four months, and "every such prisoner whose record of conduct shows that he has faithfully observed all the rules and has not been subjected to punishment shall be entitled to a deduction from the term of his imprisonment to be estimated as follows" (stating it). Later in the section it is provided that "each person who is entitled to a deduction shall receive a written permit to be at liberty during the time thus deducted upon such terms as the board granting the same shall fix." The permits are to be issued to prisoners in the state prison by the commissioners of prisons, and they "may at any time revoke the same, and shall revoke it when it comes to their knowledge that the person to whom it was granted has been convicted of an offense punishable by imprisonment." Stat. 1884, chap. 152, § 1, provides that if the holder of a permit shall violate any of its terms or conditions, or any law of this commonwealth, "such violation shall of itself make void such permit." Section 2 provides that, when any permit has been revoked or has become void, the board granting it may cause the holder of it to be arrested and returned to the place in which he was confined, and when so returned he "shall be detained therein according to the terms of his original sentence," and "the time between his release upon said permit and his return to said place of confinement shall not be taken to be any part of the term of sentence." These provisions are embodied in Stat. 1895, chap. 504, and are the ones previously referred to. The other provisions of Stat. 1884, chap. 152, are not now material.

From this examination it appears that Stat. 1895, chap. 504, differs from the statutes which were in force at the time when the offenses were committed, and that the differences consist—First, in the matter of indeterminate sentences; secondly, in providing that the permit shall not be issued till after the expiration of the minimum sentence, and in omitting any provision for deductions for good behavior; and, thirdly, in leaving the issue of the permit to the discretion of the commissioners, and in providing that it shall receive the approval of the governor and council. The petitioner contends that the effect of these differences may be to make the term of imprisonment longer than it would have been under the laws in force at the time the offenses were committed, and to change his position in other respects to his disadvantage, and that therefore the statute is unconstitutional and void. The commonwealth contends that the provisions are in the nature of prison discipline or of penal administration or criminal procedure, and are not therefore open to the objection of being ex post facto. As the term "ex post facto" has been construed, it applies only to penal or criminal matters. The objection to ex post facto legislation consists in the uncertainty which would be introduced thereby into legislation of a penal or criminal character, and the injustice of punishing an act which was not punishable when done, or of punishing it in a different manner from that in which it was punishable when done. But not all retrospective legislation is unconstitutional as being ex post facto. The question in each case is whether it will increase the penalty, or operate to deprive a party of substantial rights or privileges to which he was entitled as the law stood when the offense was committed, or, "in short, in relation to the offense and its consequences, will alter the situation of a party to his disadvantage." Caldar v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506; Medley, Petitioner, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061; Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95; Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406; Ratzky v. People, 29 N. Y. 124. A statute which mitigates the penalty is not objectionable, though passed after the offense. Com. v. Wyman, 12 Cush. 237; Com. v. Gardner, 11 Gray, 438; Dolan v. Thomas, 12 Allen, 421, 424. Nor, speaking generally, are statutes which relate to procedure or penal administration or prison discipline, even though the effect may be, in the last two instances, to enhance the severity of the confinement. Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485; Cook v. United States, 138 U. S. 157, 34 L. ed. 906; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 262; Gut v. Minnesota, 9 Wall. 35, 19 L. ed. 573; Com. v. Hall, 97 Mass. 570; Carter v. Burt, 12 Allen, 424; Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95; Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 233, 57 Am. Rep. 825; Ex parte Bethurum, 66 Mo. 545; People v. Mortimer, 46 Cal. 114; Cooley, Const. Lim. 3d ed. p. 272; Black, Const. Law, p. 513, § 184. No one has a right to insist that particular remedies shall remain unchanged, or that courts and their jurisdiction and the proceedings in them shall continue unaltered, or that there shall be no departure from established methods in prison discipline or penal administration. But the legislature, under the guise of laws relating to procedure or prison discipline or penal administration, cannot take away or interfere with any substantial right or privilege which was secured to a party by the law as it was when the offense was committed. Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 232, 27 L. ed. 510; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061; Medley, Petitioner, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835. To deprive him in any manner of such right or privilege would be to increase the penalty. In determining in any case whether this is or is not the effect of a statute, it is to be borne in mind that the constitutional provision was intended as a security to life and liberty, and as a safeguard against the infliction of any punishment except such as was duly authorized by law, and it is to be construed so as to promote these ends. As the law formerly stood in this state, the effect of good conduct on the part of the prisoner was to shorten his term of imprisonment, and to give him a right to his discharge at the expiration of the shortened term. Stat. 1857, chap. 284; Stat. 1858, chap. 77; Stat. 1859, chap. 108; Gen. Stat. chap. 178, § 47. This was so said in Opinion of the Justices, 13 Gray, 618. And although the act of 1857, chap. 284, was entitled "An Act Concerning the Discipline of the State Prison," and the acts of 1858 and 1859 were respectively entitled "An Act Concerning the Discipline of Jails and Houses of Correction," and "An Act to Amend 'An Act Concerning the Discipline of Jails and Houses of Correction,'" it does not seem to have occurred to the justices that the right of the convict was affected thereby. They declared, on the contrary, that the act of 1857, upon the construction of which the answer to the question proposed mainly depended, gave the convict a right to have his term reduced and shortened by the scale provided in it for good behavior, and bore upon the sentence, and shortened the term of imprisonment, and afforded "an assurance of the highest character that upon condition of good behavior the convict shall have the promised benefit of an earlier release." And, again, they said that "the benefit promised in consideration of good behavior was intended to be an actual reduction of sentence as a right, and not as a favor," and "therefore operated upon the sentence itself." It would seem plain, therefore, that a subsequent statute, which interfered to his disadvantage with the right of deduction for good behavior to which a convict was entitled, at the time of the commission of the offense, under the acts of 1857, 1858, and 1859, would have been unconstitutional and void, notwithstanding the fact that those acts related, according to their titles, to the discipline of the state prison and to that of jails and houses of correction, and therefore appeared to pertain to prison regulation. To have taken away the right of deduction for good behavior, or to have interfered with it to the disadvantage of the convict, would have been, in effect, to lengthen the sentence which was provided by law for the offense at the time when it was committed; and a statute which did that clearly would have been ex post facto. See Opinion of the Justices, 13 Gray, 618; Kring v. Mis- souri, 107 U. S. 232, 27 L. ed. 510; Medley, Petitioner, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061; Com. v. McDonough, 13 Allen, 581; Re Canfield, 98 Mich. 644; Ex parte Hunt, 28 Tex. App. 361.

The question, then, is whether the changes made in regard to deductions for good behavior by Stat. 1880, chap. 218, which were subsequently incorporated into and are now found in Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, have so modified the rights which convicts had under statutes previously in force that those committing offenses after the passage of Stat. 1880, chap. 218, cannot be said to have anything in the nature of a right to deductions for good conduct, and to a permit to be at liberty, which could not be interfered with to their disadvantage by subsequent legislation; in other words, whether the effect of Stat. 1880, chap. 218, and of the Public Statutes, has been and is to make deductions for good behavior and the issuing of a permit a matter of favor, and not in any sense a matter of right. It should be noted in passing that the words "with the consent of the governor and council," were inserted in Gen. Stat. chap. 179, § 51, which, with one other amendment that is not now material, is a re-enactment of Stat. 1857, chap. 284, § 1. These words were not in the commissioners' report (chap. 180, § 50), and it does not appear how they came to be inserted. They were not in Gen. Stat. chap. 178, § 47, and were omitted from Stat. 1880, chap. 218, and are not found in any subsequent statute. It seems to us that under Stat. 1880, chap. 218, and Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, the convict was and is entitled to deductions for good conduct, and to a permit to be at liberty for the time thus deducted, rather as a matter of right than of favor. The object was to furnish an incentive to good conduct while the convict was in confinement, by offering him a reward therefor. Applying the language of Opinion of the Justices, 13 Gray, 618, the provisions of Stat. 1880, chap. 218, and of the Public Statutes, "afford an assurance of the highest character that, upon condition of good behavior, the convict shall have the promised benefit" of certain deductions, and a permit to be at liberty for the time thus deducted from the term of his sentence. Though the provisions of the Statutes of 1880 and of the Public Statutes may not bear as directly upon the sentence as those of the Statutes of 1857 did, we cannot doubt that the purpose was to secure to the convict a substantial advantage as a reward for his good conduct, which practically would have the effect of shortening his sentence. It is true that the prison commissioners could revoke the permit without cause shown, or for a violation of its terms, and that they are bound to revoke it when they have knowledge that the convict has been convicted of an offense punishable by imprisonment. But this does not affect the right of the convict to deductions and to a permit in the first instance. Besides, it is not to be assumed that the power of revocation will be exercised capriciously. Unless the provisions of the statute were intended to secure a substantial advantage to the convict as a reward for his good conduct, to the enjoyment of which he could look forward with reasonable certainty if he did not violate the terms of the permit, nor commit an offense punishable by imprisonment, it is difficult to understand what object the legislature had in view. Oonlon's Case, 148 Mass. 168, is relied on as tending to show that the convict had no right to a permit. One of the contentions of the petitioner in that case was that his confinement in the reformatory was unlawful because his removal to it from the state prison to which he had been sentenced interfered with or took away his right to deductions for good conduct under Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20. But neither that statute nor Stat. 1880, chap. 218, of which it was a re-enactment, was in force at the time when the petitioner committed the offense of which he was convicted, and no question under either was properly before the court. Further, deductions for good conduct under Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, are not limited to persons confined in the state prison, but extend to those confined in "a prison or other place of confinement," and the legislature had the right to change the place of confinement of any prisoner, so long as the penalty was not thereby aggravated. Carter v. Burt, 12 Allen, 424. Lastly, the permit in that case was issued under Stat. 1884, chap. 258, and was revoked by the commissioners for a violation of its conditions, as they had the right to do. The decision would have been the same if the permit had issued under Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, and had been revoked for a like cause. The nature of the right to a permit under Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, was therefore not material to the decision. For these reasons, the case, though rightly decided, cannot be regarded as authoritative on the question now before us. And we think, as has been already observed, that Stat. 1880, chap. 218, and Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, secured to prisoners who were convicted of offenses committed when they were in force, and who came within their scope, deductions for good conduct and permits to be at liberty, as something to which they were entitled as of right, rather than by favor, for faithful observance of the rules, and for not having been subjected to punishment, and that their rights in these respects could not be taken away or interfered with to their disadvantage by subsequent legislation.

43 L. R. A.

The next question is whether Stat. 1895, chap. 504, alters or may alter to their disadvantage, in a substantial manner, the position of those committing offenses prior to its passage, and while Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, was in force. We think that it is clear that such might be its effect. In case the maximum sentence was for fifteen years, the convict would be entitled, for good conduct, to deductions under Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, which would shorten the term to twelve.

Under Stat. 1895, chap. 504, however, he could be sentenced for a maximum term of fifteen years and a minimum of thirteen, or of any number less than fifteen and more than twelve. In the present case the minimum was ten, and it is possible that the statute might operate more beneficially in the case of the petitioner than Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, and Stat. 1884, chap. 152, would have operated. But that cannot avail. A law cannot be constitutional as to some cases, and unconstitutional as to others falling within the same class. If it is unconstitutional as to any, it is unconstitutional as to all. It is suggested in Re Murphy, 87 Fed. Rep. 549, that the supposed leniency of Stat. 1895, chap. 504, might have led the court to make the maximum sentence longer than it otherwise would, and the implication is that this also would render the statute objectionable as to past offenses. But it is obvious that this argument might prevent the application of any mitigative statute to past offenses, and we should hesitate to pronounce the act unconstitutional on that ground. It is also said in Re Murphy, 87 Fed. Rep. 549, that under Stat. 1895, chap. 504, "important conditions were added which would permit the recall of a permit, and still others which would revoke it absolutely. The most serious new provision is that the act of 1895 directs that, if a permit is revoked, no portion of the time the prisoner may have been at liberty under it shall be taken to be any part of the term of his sentence." But this last provision, which is called "the most serious new provision" of the act of 1895, is found in Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 21, and in Stat. 1884, § 2, and was not, therefore, new, and was in force when the offenses were committed of which the petitioner was convicted, and applied to persons confined in the state prison. So far as the revocation of permits is concerned, it is doubtful if Stat. 1895, chap. 504, adds anything new. Under Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, the commissioners have power, as already observed, to revoke permits without cause shown. They have the same power under Stat. 1895, chap. 504. Under Stat. 1884, chap. 152, a violation by the holder of a permit of any of its terms or conditions, or of any law of this commonwealth, rendered the permit void. The same is true under Stat. 1895, chap. 504. And the provisions as to the return of the holder of a permit which has been revoked or has become void are the same in Stat. 1895, chap. 504, as in Stat. 1884, chap. 152, except that the latter contains a provision that the order for the arrest and return of the convict may be served by any officer authorized to serve civil or criminal process in any county in the commonwealth, which is omitted from Stat. 1895, chap. 504. So far, therefore, as revocation and the results which follow it, and violation of the terms and conditions of the permit, or of any law of the commonwealth, and the results which follow that, are concerned, there would seem to be nothing in the act of 1895 which, as compared with the 42 L. R. A.

laws in force when the offense was committed, changed the situation of the petitioner for the worse.

The petitioner further contends that, independent of the effect of the statute upon his right to deductions for good behavior and to a permit to be at liberty, the statute is inoperative as an ex post facto act, because it renders the duration of his sentence uncertain, and gives to the prison commissioners the power to fix the term of his imprisonment. But there is no uncertainty in the sentence itself. That, it has been held, is in effect for the maximum term. Oliver v. Oliver, 169 Mass. 592; Com. v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144, 146; People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 413, 23 L. R. A. 139, State, Atty. Gen., v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629. The convict may be released before its expiration, either by an absolute or conditional pardon from the governor (Pub. Stat. chap. 218, §§ 12 et seq.), or after the expiration of the minimum term by a permit from the commissioners approved by the governor and council. In the latter case he is under sentence till the expiration of the maximum term. Oliver v. Oliver, 169 Mass. 592. It is as correct, it seems to us, to say that the duration of his sentence is uncertain because the governor may pardon him absolutely or conditionally at any time, as it is to say that it is uncertain because, after the expiration of the minimum term, the commissioners may release him before the expiration of the maximum term on a permit approved by the governor and council, and as correct to say that, in case of a pardon, the governor fixes the term of imprisonment, as to say that, in case of release upon a permit, the commissioners fix it. Moreover, "the form of sentence," as was said in Com. v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144, 146, "is made to recognize and carry out a policy familiar to our legislation, and acted on heretofore without question." In no just sense can it be said, we think, that the duration of his sentence is uncertain, or that the determination of the term of the imprisonment is taken from the courts, where it belongs, and left to the prison commissioners. See People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 413, 23 L. R. A. 139; George v. People, 167 Ill. 447; State, Atty. Gen., v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629; Miller v. State, 149 Ind. 607, 40 L. R. A. 109. Contra, People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 14 L. R. A. 285.

The petitioner also insists that requiring the approval of the governor and council to a permit is a serious interference with his rights, and, without anything more, would render the statute void as an ex post facto law. But we think that the provision does not affect any substantial right to which the petitioner was entitled when the offenses were committed, but relates rather to a matter of procedure. There can be no doubt, we think, that in the matter of permits the legislature could have substituted some other tribunal for the prison commissioners, or could have added to the number of commissioners, on the same principle that it could have abolished the court which existed when the offenses were committed, and have created another court for the trial of such offenses, or have added to the number of the judges of the existing court. If this had been the only change, the effect of it would have been merely to require that so many more persons should act in regard to the matter of permits. The petitioner would have still been entitled to deductions for good behavior, and to a permit to be at liberty during the time of such deductions, and there would have been no increase in the penalty for the offense, or other change to his disadvantage. It is not contended that the terms and conditions of permits issued when the offense was committed, or the rules of government of the prison then in force, must remain the same. By Stat. 1898, chap. 371, which is in amendment of and in substitution for § 2, chap. 504, Acts 1895, and which went into effect since the indictment was found in this case, it is now provided that a convict who has faithfully observed all the rules, and has not been subjected to punishment, shall be entitled to release at the expiration of the minimum term, and shall be given a permit to be at liberty during the unexpired portion of the maximum term, which permit shall be issued by the commissioners of prisons. The approval of the governor and council is no longer required, and the permit is no longer to be issued at the will and pleasure of the commissioners. We think, therefore, that the statute of 1895 could not be declared unconstitutional as an ex post facto act because it requires the approval of the governor and council to permits to be at liberty, or because it renders the duration of the sentence uncertain, or gives the prison commissioners power to fix the term of imprisonment; but we think that, as the law stood when the offense was committed, the petitioner was entitled to a deduction for good behavior, and to a permit to be at liberty for the time thus deducted, or such terms as the prison commissioners should fix, and subject to revocation by them, and, if sentenced under the statute of 1895, this right might be interfered with to his disadvantage, and that the statute is therefore inoperative and void as an ex post facto law. We do not see how the statute can be construed as merely a measure of prison discipline or regulation, and therefore liable to change from time to time, as the legislature may see fit, without interfering with any rights on the part of the convict.

43 L. R. A.

We have assumed thus far that the act of 1895 applied to all cases of convicts sentenced to the state prison after it took effect, except such as are sentenced for life or as habitual criminals. But we think that it is doubtful, notwithstanding the generality of the language, whether it should be so construed. It is manifest that convicts sentenced under the statute of 1895 are not entitled to the benefits of Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20. The sentence is intended to be different in character from that referred to in § 20, and the provisions of that section in regard to deduction for good behavior could not be applied to a sentence under the act of 1895. Pub. Stat. chap. 222, § 20, so far as it relates to convicts sentenced to the state prison, is not repealed in terms by the statute of 1895. To hold that that statute operates, by necessary implication, as a repeal of it to that extent, as it would seem that we should be obliged to do if the statute of 1895 is construed to apply to all sentences to state prison after it took effect, whether the offenses occurred before or after it went into operation (Flaherty v. Thomas, 12 Allen, 428; Com. v. McDonough, 13 Allen, 581), would result in the discharge of all persons who might have been sentenced under it to the state prison for offenses committed before it took effect. On the other hand, by construing it,—as we think properly may be done, pursuant to the general rule that statutes are to be construed prospectively,—to apply to sentences for offenses committed after it took effect, this difficulty will be avoided. See Pub. Stat. chap. 3, § 3, cls. 1, 2; Com. v. Sullivan, 150 Mass. 315; Com. v. Desmond, 123 Mass. 407; King v. Tirrell, 2 Gray, 331; North Bridgewater Bank v. Copeland, 7 Allen, 139; Gardner v. Lucas, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 582, 590; Re Lambard's Appeal, 88 Me. 587.

The result is that, the only error being an error in the sentence, and the superior court having jurisdiction to impose such sentence as should be imposed, the sentence in question, in the opinion of a majority of the court, must be reversed, and the case remanded to that court for sentence according to the law as it was before the passage of Stat. 1895, chap. 504. Jacquins v. Com. 9 Cush. 279; Pub. Stat. chap. 187, § 13.

So ordered.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Wilberforce SULLY, Appt.,
v.
CAMPBELL & POWDER.

(99 Tenn. 434.)

1. A joint promise by the purchasers of real estate to pay the price cannot be modified by a mistaken construction placed upon the writing by the holder and makers, that each is to be liable for his share only.
2. The other makers of a joint note which by statute is made joint and several remain liable for the amount unpaid on it including the sum not realized by a suit against one maker for his proportionate share although that proceeded to judgment and execution against his property.

(September 25, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals affirming a decree of the Chancery Court for Washing-

NOTE.—Effect of judgment in an action against part of the obligors on a joint or joint and several contract to release or limit the liability of other obligors.

- I. Where the prior judgment is in an action on a joint obligation.
- II. Where the prior judgment is in an action on a partnership obligation.
- III. Where the common-law rule is affected by statute.
- IV. Where some of the debtors are nonresidents.
- V. Where the prior judgment is on a separate obligation.
- VI. Where the prior judgment is on a joint and several obligation.
- VII. Where prior proceedings affect subsequent proceedings in the same action.
- VIII. Where the obligors are principal and surety.
- IX. Classification by states and countries.
- I. Where the prior judgment is in an action on a joint obligation.

It is generally held, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, that a judgment on a joint obligation against part of the obligors is a bar to a subsequent suit on the original cause of action against the remaining obligors. Mitchell v. Brewster, 28 Ill. 163; Barnett v. Juday, 38 Ind. 86; Archer v. Helman, 21 Ind. 29; Root v. Dill, 38 Ind. 169; Holman v. Langtree, 40 Ind. 349; Kennard v. Carter, 64 Ind. 81; Lawrence v. Sample, 97 Ind. 53; Cox v. Maddux, 72 Ind. 206; Hunt v. Terril, 7 J. J. Marsh. 67; Kingsley v. Davis, 104 Mass. 178; Peters v. Sanford, 1 Denio, 225; Smith v. Kibbe, 31 Hun, 390; Candee v. Smith, 93 N. Y. 349; Smith v. Kibble, 19 N. Y. Week. Dig. 118; Sloo v. Lea, 18 Ohio, 279; Beasley v. Sims, 81 Va. 644; Corbin v. Planters' Nat. Bank, 87 Va. 661; Lauer v. Bandow, 48 Wis. 638; Trafton v. United States, 3 Story, 654; Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. 231, 18 L. ed. 783; Willings v. Consequa, Pet. C. C. 301; King v. Hoare, 13 Mees. & W. 494, 2 Dowl. & L. 882, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 29, 8 Jur. 1127; Harris v. Dunn, 18 U. C. Q. B. 352.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Ferrall v. Bradford, 2 Fla. 43 L. R. A.

ton County denying a portion of the relief claimed in a suit to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion. Messrs. Kirkpatrick, Williams, & Bowman, for appellant:

The note in suit, though joint in form, is, under the statute, joint and several in character.

Mill. & V. Code, 3483-5; Jarnagin v. Stratton, 95 Tenn. 619, 30 L. R. A. 105.

A covenant not to sue one of two joint and several obligors will not release the other.

Rowley v. Stoddard, 7 Johns. 207; Winslow v. Brown, 7 R. I. 97, 80 Am. Dec. 638; Snaw v. Chandler, 10 N. H. 92, 34 Am. Dec. 140; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. §§ 1291-1296; Beach, Modern Contr. 482, 492.

The doctrine of release of joint obligors has its origin in technical logic, and is not favored in equity.

Williams v. Hitchings, 10 Lea. 329; State,

508, 50 Am. Dec. 298; Moore v. Rogers, 19 Ill. 348; People v. Harrison, 82 Ill. 84; Kitterling v. Norville, 39 Ind. 183; Robinson v. Snyder, 74 Ind. 110; Martin v. Baugh, 1 Ind. App. 20; Sayre v. Coleman, 9 Dana, 174; Gibbs v. Bryant, 1 Pick. 118; Pierce v. Kearney, 5 Hill, 82; Yoho v. McGovern, 42 Ohio St. 11; Bowen v. Hastings, 47 Wis. 232; Sessions v. Johnson, 95 U. S. 347, 24 L. ed. 596.

So where the prior judgment was against plaintiff. Reynolds v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 29 Ohio St. 602; Pfau v. Lorain, 1 Cln. Super. Ct. Rep. 73; Roby v. Rainsberger, 27 Ohio St. 674.

So, a judgment in an action as to part of the obligors bars suit against all. Fullington v. Killen, 65 Ga. 575.

But there are some exceptional cases wherein a judgment on a joint obligation as to part of the obligors was held not to be a bar to a subsequent action against others. Collins v. Lemasters, 1 Bail. L. 343, 21 Am. Dec. 469, following Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215.

And where the first judgment was obtained by the fraud of the second defendant. Ferrall v. Bradford, 2 Fla. 508, 50 Am. Dec. 293.

And where the prior judgment was set aside. Martin v. Baugh, 1 Ind. App. 20; Maghee v. Collins, 27 Ind. 83; Clodfelter v. Hulett, 92 Ind. 426; Lawrence v. Sample, 97 Ind. 53.

And where the prior judgment was void. Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 Mich. 555.

And where an exception was made in case of husband and wife. Avery v. Vansickle, 35 Ohio St. 270.

And where the first judgment was against plaintiff on a personal defense. Nevill v. Hancock, 15 Ark. 511.

And the same was said to be the rule in De-troit v. Houghton, 42 Mich. 450.

And in such a case where the cause of the prior judgment was not shown. Phillips v. Ward, 2 Hurst. & C. 717, 33 L. J. Exch. N. S. 7, 9 Jur. N. S. 1182, 9 L. T. N. S. 345, 12 Week. Rep. 106.

II. Where the prior judgment is in an action on a partnership obligation.

The rule as to a judgment on a partnership debt is the same as that on a joint obligation, Midgett, v. Matson, 44 Mo. 305; Miller v. Fenton, 11 Paige, 18; Clagett v. Salmon, 5 Gill & J. 314.

Words of release are often given the force and effect of a covenant not to sue. A fortiori should an estoppel to further sue be treated as a covenant not to further sue.

Bradford v. Prescott, 85 Me. 482; Crane v. Alling, 15 N. J. L. 423; Kendrick v. O'Neil, 48 Ga. 631; Parmelee v. Laencroe, 44 Ill. 405; Tryon v. Hart, 2 Conn. 120.

In joint and several obligations each obligor is principal as to his aliquot part, and as to the other shares he is surety for his co-obligors.

Ackerman's Appeal, 106 Pa. 1; Williams v. Alley, Cooke (Tenn.) 257; 1 Addison, Contr. p. 39; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1418.

The release of a surety, although he be the comaker of the note, cannot be set up as the release of the principal.

Ragsdale v. Gossett, 2 Lea, 733.

and a judgment on a partnership liability against one partner is a bar to a subsequent suit against the remaining members of the firm. Thompson v. Emmert, 15 Ill. 415; Wann v. McNulty, 7 Ill. 355, 43 Am. Dec. 58; Henderson v. Reeves, 6 Blackf. 101; Nicklaus v. Roach, 8 Ind. 78; Crosby v. Jeroloman, 87 Ind. 264; North v. Mudge, 13 Iowa, 496, 81 Am. Dec. 441; Harford v. Street, 46 Iowa, 594; Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 148; Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227; Olmstead v. Webster, 8 N. Y. 413; Penny v. Martin, 4 Johns. Ch. 566; Farnsworth v. Halstead, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 227; Smith v. Black, 9 Serg. & R. 142, 11 Am. Dec. 686; Woodworth v. Spaffords, 2 McLean, 168; Ex parte Higgins, 3 DeG. & J. 33, 27 L. J. Bankr. N. S. 27, 4 Jur. N. S. 595; Kendall v. Hamilton, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 504, 48 L. J. C. P. N. S. 705, 41 L. T. N. S. 413, 28 Week. Rep. 97.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Jansen v. Grimshaw, 125 Ill. 468; Lingenfelter v. Simon, 49 Ind. 82; Garrison v. Garrison, 67 How. Pr. 271.

There are a few cases which deny the general doctrine, and hold that a subsequent suit may be maintained against the remaining members of the firm, although the weight of authority is decidedly to the contrary in the absence of a statute reserving the right to pursue the remaining partners. Stoddard v. Van Dyke, 12 Cal. 437 (where the prior judgment is on a personal defense); Jansen v. Grimshaw, 125 Ill. 468 (where the prior judgment was vacated); Kantrowitz v. Kulla, 20 Abb. N. C. 321 (based on a statute, but disapproved in Heckemann v. Young, 53 Hun, 406, which latter case was reversed in 184 N. Y. 170); Union Bank v. Hodges, 11 Rich. L. 480 (admitting that the rule in South Carolina differs from that of other states).

III. Where the common-law rule is affected by statute.

In some states there are statutory provisions known as joint-debtor acts, which prevent a judgment against one joint debtor or a partner from barring a subsequent suit against the remaining obligors; and so it has been held that a second action can be maintained under such statutes. Ellis v. Bone, 71 Ga. 466; Kitterling v. Norville, 39 Ind. 183; Yoho v. McGovern, 42 Ohio St. 11; Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Oleson, 47 Iowa, 442; Burrus v. Anderson, 3 Met. (Ky.) 500; Crutzen v. McKaig, 57 Md. 461; Hyman v. Stadler, 63 Miss. 362; Scharff v. Noble, 67 43 L. R. A.

A discharge of one of two joint and several obligors for a portion of the debt is only a release as to such part, and his co-obligor is still liable for the remainder due.

Rogers v. Hemsted, Kirby, 44.

The judgment against Hunt for less than the entire note did not satisfy the note, and defendants are yet liable for the balance uncollected at this date.

Day v. Hill, 2 Speers, L. 628, 42 Am. Dec. 390; Hio v. Davis, 68 N. C. 233.

Messrs Burrow Brothers and C. H. Jennings for appellees.

Beard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant as the holder of a note for $3,600, made by Mathes, Hunt, and Campbell & Pouder, file this bill against the two last-named parties for the purpose of obtaining a personal decree against them for the balance due on this note, and also to secure

Miss. 143; Knox County Sav. Bank v. Cottey, 70 Mo. 150; Wiley v. Holmes, 28 Mo. 286, 75 Am. Dec. 126; Phillips v. Fitzpatrick, 84 Mo. 276; Dando v. Doll, 2 Johns. 97; Taylor v. Pettibone, 18 Johns. 66; Carman v. Townsend, 6 Wend. 206; Bank of Columbia v. Newcomb, 6 Johns. 93; Oakley v. Aspinwall, 4 N. Y. 515; Dean v. Eldridge, 29 How. Pr. 218; Mervin v. Kumbel, 23 Wend. 293; Harbeck v. Pupin, 128 N. Y. 115; Tripp v. Saunders, 59 How. Pr. 379; Wann v. Pettengale, 14 Pa. 313; Moore v. Hepburn, 5 Pa. 399; Myers v. Nell, 84 Pa. 369; Vanemen v. Herdman, 3 Watts. 202; Campbell v. Steele, 11 Pa. 394; Bennett v. Cadwell, 70 Pa. 253; SULLY v. CAMPBELL & POWDER (under a statute making joint contracts joint and several); Nichols v. Cheairs, 4 Sneed, 229; Lowry v. Hardwick, 4 Humph. 188; Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. 231, 18 L. ed. 783.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Poole v. Hintrager, 60 Iowa, 180; Williams v. Rogers, 14 Bush, 776, Overruling Nichols v. Burton, 5 Bush, 322; Odum v. Denny, 16 Gray, 114; Knaupp v. Abell, 10 Allen, 485; Ruffy v. Claywell, 93 N. C. 306; Navassa Guano Co. v. Willard, 73 N. C. 521; Miller v. Reed, 27 Pa. 247, 67 Am. Dec. 459; Hawkins v. Humble, 5 Coldw. 531.

But there are some cases in which the joint-debtor acts are held not to prevent a judgment against one from being a bar to a subsequent suit against the remaining obligors on a joint obligation.

Where the statute was not followed. Archer v. Helman, 21 Ind. 29; Root v. Dill, 38 Ind. 169.

And so where the subsequent suit was against all. Taylor v. Claypool, 5 Blackf. 557.

See also subd. VII.

IV. Where some of the debtors are nonresidents.

It is generally recognized that the nonresidence of the party subsequently sued prevents the prior judgment from being a bar to such subsequent suit. This is an exception to the rule that a judgment upon a joint or partnership obligation bars a subsequent suit against the remaining obligors. Merriman v. Barker, 121 Ind. 74; Cox v. Maddux, 72 Ind. 206; Rand v. Nutter, 56 Me. 339; Dennett v. Chick, 2 Me. 191, 11 Am. Dec. 59; Wiley v. Holmes, 28 Mo. 286, 75 Am. Dec. 126; Olcott v. Little, 9 N. H. 250, 32 Am. Dec. 357; Brown v. Birdsall, 29 Barb. 549.

So, where the prior judgment was against plaintiff. McLelland v. Ridgeway, 12 Ala. 482.

a foreclosure of a specific lien retained in a deed to certain real estate, for the purchase money of which this note, and one other that has been paid, was executed.

The facts that have brought about this controversy, as far as they need be stated, are as follows: The assignor of the complainant conveyed by deed to Mathes, Hunt, and Campbell & Powder certain real estate, stating in the deed that the conveyees took the same in undivided interests of one third, the defendants Campbell & Powder together taking one of these thirds. For the purchase money two notes were executed by the vendees, the note sued on being one of them. These notes were in the usual form of joint paper, all the parties agreeing to pay to the payee, or order, the sums specified in them. Notwithstanding the notes were thus written, yet, from the beginning, the parties seemed to have acted upon the assumption that, as the vendees took a one-third each in the land, each was liable only for his one-third of these notes. This record discloses that the first of the purchase-money notes was paid by these makers in thirds, and that on the last—the one sued on—Mathes paid one third of the whole sum due at the date of his payment, Hunt made some payments, which were put by the holder to the credit of his one third, and so with payments made by these defendants. Subsequently, however, Hunt being much in default, the complainant, acting upon the assumption above indicated, filed a bill in the chancery court to recover from him the balance due from him on his one third of the note, and also to sell his undivided interest in the property to satisfy the decree. In his bill complainant alleged that these defendants, as to their one third, and Mathes as to his one third, of the note, had made an arrangement to his satisfaction; so there was no effort to disturb them, or their undivided interests in this realty. That cause pro-

A few cases hold that the prior judgment is not a bar, but do so by applying a statute. Shirley v. Shattuck, 13 Met. 256; Odum v. Denny, 16 Gray, 114; Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371, 80 Am. Dec. 90; Snydam v. Barber, 18 N. Y. 468, 75 Am. Dec. 254; Campbell v. Steele, 11 Pa. 304; Bennett v. Cadwell, 70 Pa. 253; Tibbetts v. Shapleigh, 60 N. H. 487.

But in the following cases a prior judgment was held to be a bar to a subsequent suit. Candee v. Clark, 2 Mich. 255 (applying common-law rule); McMaster v. Vernon, 8 Duer, 249; Sloo v. Lea, 18 Ohio, 279 (prior judgment by confession against both parties, and set aside as to one, held a bar to subsequent suit against both).

V. Where the prior judgment is on a separate obligation.

On the question whether a judgment upon a personal obligation given by a joint obligor is a bar to a subsequent suit upon a joint debt against the other obligor there is some conflict. The leading case in this county is Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215, where judgment was taken on a note against the maker, and subsequently a suit was brought against other parties upon that note and the original debt, alleging that they were members of a firm doing business under the name of the maker, and it was held that the prior judgment was not a bar. But this case has been attacked on all sides, and is not recognized as sound law. The cases holding that such a judgment is a bar are as follows: Sydam v. Cannon, 1 Houst. (Del.) 431; Averill v. Loucks, 6 Barb. 19; Benson v. Palne, 2 Hill. 552; Moale v. Hollins, 11 Gill & J. 11, 33 Am. Dec. 684; Moran v. Vredenburg, 11 Ill. & D. Supp. 392; Lewis v. Williams, 6 Whart. 264, overruled in Potter v. McCoy, 26 Pa. 458; United States v. Ames, 99 U. S. 35, 25 L. ed. 295, overruling Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215; Cambeport v. Chapman, L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 229, overruled in Wegg Prosser v. Evans [1895] 1 Q. B. 108, 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 1.

And the same was said to be the rule in Lingenfelter v. Simon, 49 Ind. 82.

But some cases hold that such a judgment is not a bar. Wallace v. Fairman, 4 Watts, 378 (where the prior suit was on the single bond of one partner); Potter v. McCoy, 26 Pa. 458 (on the ground that the debt and parties were not identical); Overruling Lewis v. Williams, 6 Whart. 264; Drake v. Mitchell, 8 East, 251 43 L. R. A.

(prior suit on bill of exchange given by one); Scott v. Colmesnil, 7 J. J. Marsh. 416 (second suit against party discovered to have been a partner); Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215 (second suit against party discovered to have been a partner; authority denied in subsequent cases); Watson v. Owens, 1 Rich. L. 111; Bell v. Banks, 3 Mann. & G. 267, 3 Scott, N. R. 497 (where one partner had given a warrant of attorney to third party as trustee); Wegg Prosser v. Evans [1895] 1 Q. B. 108, 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 1 (prior judgment on bill of exchange given by one partner) overruling Cambeport v. Chapman, L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 229.

VI. Where the prior judgment is on a joint and several obligation.

It is generally held that where the obligation is joint and several, a judgment against one of the obligors does not prevent a subsequent action against the remaining obligors. But there are some cases which hold the prior judgment to be a bar on the ground of election. The following cases hold that such a judgment is not a bar. Fitzgerald v. Burke, 14 Colo. 559; People v. Harrison, 82 Ill. 84; Moore v. Rogers, 19 Ill. 348; Giles v. Canary, 99 Ind. 116; Harlan v. Berry, 4 G. Greene, 212; Gilman v. Foote, 22 Iowa, 560; Sherman v. Christy, 17 Iowa, 322; Smith v. Coopers, 9 Iowa, 376; Sayre v. Coleman, 9 Dana, 174; Armstrong v. Prewitt, 5 Mo. 476, 32 Am. Dec. 338; Townsend v. Biddle, 2 N. H. 448; Hix v. Davis, 68 N. C. 231; Clinton Bank v. Hart, 5 Ohio St. 33; Rhoads v. Frederick, 8 Watts, 448; Day v. Hill, 2 Speers, L. 628, 42 Am. Dec. 300; Christian v. Hoover, 6 Yerg. 505; Sawyer v. White, 19 Vt. 40; Corbin v. Planters' Nat. Bank, 87 Va. 661; Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 14, 26 L. ed. 61; United States v. Cushman, 2 Sumn. 426 (prior judgment against both not a bar to suit against one) Overruled in United States v. Price, 9 How. 83, 13 L. ed. 56; Whiteacres v. Hamkinson, Cro. Car. 75; Blumfield's Case, 5 Coke, 86b; Ayrey v. Davenport, 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 474; Hayling v. Mullhall, 2 W. Bl. 1235; Claxton v. Swift, 1 Lutw. 362; Brown v. Wootton, Cro. Jac. 73, Yelv. 67; Dyke v. Mercer, 2 Show. 394.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Thompson v. Emmert, 15 Ill. 415; Nicklaus v. Roach, 3 Ind. 78; First Nat. Bank v. Indianapolis Piano Mfg. Co. 45 Ind. 5; Jenks v. School Dist. No. 38, 18 Kan. 356; ceeded to a sale, under a decree of foreclosure pronounced in accordance with the prayer of the bill, which realized to the complainant an amount far short of discharging his decree. Mathes having paid his assumed share of the original note, and there being a considerable sum due upon the other two thirds of the note,—this bill was filed against Campbell & Pouder to obtain a personal decree against them for this balance, and to enforce the lien against their undivided one-third interest in the property for the payment of that balance. Neither Mathes nor Hunt is a party to this proceeding.

The defendants set up the foregoing facts, and insist by way of defense: (1) As a matter of fact and law, that they have never been bound for more than one third of this note. (2) That, if wrong in this, then that, by bringing his separate bill against Hunt for one third of this note, and obtaining a decree for the sale and afterwards selling, his one third of this real estate, he has, in law, released defendants and their property from any balance due on the Hunt one third, leaving them liable only for the balance due on their one third of the note, which they set out specifically in their answer, and express a willingness to pay.

1. We agree with the court of chancery appeals that the first ground of insistence is not well taken. If there was any ambiguity in this note, the words and conduct of the parties might be looked to, in order to enable the court properly to interpret it. It is, however, in clear and unambiguous terms, the joint promise of the makers to pay in solido the fixed sum of $3,600, and the legal effect of this plain undertaking cannot be modified by the mistaken construction placed on the writing by the holder and the maker. While we think the rule here announced is too well established to require in its support a citation of authorities, yet it is not improv-

Elliot v. Porter, 5 Dana, 299; Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 148; McReady v. Rogers, 1 Neb. 124, 98 Am. Dec. 338; Witcher v. Oldham, 4 Sneed, 220; King v. Hoare, 13 Mees. & W. 494, 8 Jur. 1127, 2 Dowl. & L. 382, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 29; Higgins's Case, 6 Coke, 44b.

And under various statutes it has been held that the prior judgment was not a bar. Maiden v. Webster, 30 Ind. 317; Hawkes v. Phillips, 7 Gray, 284; Cruzen v. McKaig, 57 Md. 461; Beals v. Smith, 91 Mich. 146; Wolford v. Bowen, 57 Minn. 267.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Smith v. Exchange Bank, 26 Ohio St. 141; Dill v. White, 52 Wis. 456.

So where the plaintiff was defeated in the prior action on a personal defense. Kirkpatrick v. Stingley, 2 Ind. 269; Stingley v. Kirkpatrick, 8 Blackf. 186.

But in a few cases a judgment on a joint and several obligation was held to be a bar to a subsequent action against other parties upon the same contract on the ground of election. Bangor Bank v. Treat, 6 Me. 207, 19 Am. Dec. 210; Downey v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 13 Serg. & R. 288; Sessions v. Johnson, 95 U. S. 347, 24 L. ed. 596.

And the same was said to be the rule in United States v. Price, 9 How. 83, 13 L. ed. 56 (that an election to have a debt joint would bar a subsequent separate suit), Overruling United States v. Cushman, 2 Sumn. 426.

And where the plaintiff failed in a prior action on a defense of payment, a subsequent suit was barred. Spencer v. Dearth, 43 Vt. 98.

VII. Where prior proceedings affect subsequent proceedings in the same action.

It is generally held, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, that in joint actions on a joint or partnership obligation there should be but one final judgment, and that dismissing as to one party, or taking a judgment as to one party at one time, bars a judgment against others; that an action should not be split into several judgments. The cases holding such prior proceeding a bar to subsequent proceedings are as follows: Hughes v. Lindsey, 10 Ark. 555 (new trial as to one vacated judgment as to both); Exchange Bank v. Ford, 7 Colo. 314; Hale v. Crowell, 2 Fla. 534, 50 Am. Dec. 801; Pollak v. Hutchinson, 21 Fla. 128; Davidson v. Bond, 12 Ill. 84; Rose v. Comstock, 17 Ind. 1; Fletcher v. Andrews, 1 A. K. Marsh. 52; Sullivan v. Frankfort Bldg. & L. Asso. 13 43 L. R. A.

Ky. L. Rep. 48; Hempstead v. Stone, 2 Mo. 65; National Broadway Bank v. Hitch, 29 Abb. N. C. 403; Perkins v. Richmond, 17 How. Pr. 809; Clinton Bank v. Hart, 19 Ohio, 872; Williams v. McFall, 2 Serg. & R. 280; Beltzhoover v. Com. 1 Watts, 126; Murland v. Floyd, 153 Pa. 99; American Bank's Appeal, 153 Pa. 98; Campbell v. Floyd, 153 Pa. 94; Noble v. Laley, 30 Pa. 281; Finch v. Lamberton, 62 Pa. 370; O'Neal v. O'Neal, 4 Watts & S. 130; Greer v. Miller, 2 Overt. 187; Tipton v. Harris, Peck (Tenn.) 414; Hutchins v. Sims, 7 Humph. 236; Whiting v. Turley, Dallam, Dec. 453; Jenkins v. Hurt, 2 Rand. (Va.) 446; Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. (Va.) 316; Peasley v. Boatwright, 2 Leigh, 196; Early v. Clarkson, 7 Leigh, 83; Baber v. Cook, 11 Leigh, 606; Steptoe v. Read, 19 Gratt. 1; Gibson v. Beveridge, 90 Va. 696; Snyder v. Snyder, 9 W. Va. 415; Nichols v. Crittenden, 74 Wis. 459.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Byers v. First Nat. Bank, 85 Ill. 423; Martin v. Baugh, 1 Ind. App. 20; Maynard v. Penniman, 10 Mich. 153; Brooks v. McIntyre, 4 Mich. 316.

So, where the plaintiff failed against some of the defendants, he could not recover. Winslow v. Herrick, 9 Mich. 380; Mace v. Page, 33 Mich. 38; Lee v. Bolles, 20 Mich. 46; Bailon v. Hill, 23 Mich. 60; Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123; Andre v. Fitzhugh, 18 Mich. 93; Anderson v. White, 39 Mich. 130; Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85; Searles v. Reed, 63 Mich. 485; Seligman v. Gray, 66 Mich. 841.

But in some cases where there was a statutory provision authorizing the remaining obligor to be proceeded against, the prior proceedings in the same case as to others were held not to be a bar.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Parke v. Meyer, 27 Ark. 551; Long v. Ciapp, 15 Neb. 417; Choen v. Guthrie, 15 W. Va. 100; Enos v. Stansbury, 18 W. Va. 477.

And where the prior judgment was on a personal defense it did not bar further proceedings. Lawrence v. Sample, 97 Ind. 53.

So, where the prior judgments were reversed or vacated. Martin v. Baugh, 1 Ind. App. 20; Maghee v. Collins, 27 Ind. 83; Clodfeiter v. Hulett, 92 Ind. 426; Heckemann v. Young, 134 N. Y. 170.

And where the prior judgment was not final. Loney v. Bailey, 43 Md. 10.

And where a judgment was given for one deer to say that the contention made in this case was urged in Ripley v. Crooker, 47 Me. 370, 74 Am. Dec. 491, and it was there held, where several parties were jointly indebted, and one of them paid a specific share of the debt, under the misapprehension that it was all he owed, and it was accepted and receipted for by the creditor as such, under a similar misapprehension, that such payment did not exonerate the party making it from his liability for the balance of the debt.

2. But we cannot agree that the defendant's second ground of defense is tenable. The note sued on, though joint in its terms under the law of this state, where it was executed, is a joint and several obligation. Jarnagin v. Stratton, 95 Tenn. 619, 30 L. R. A. 495. Its holder could maintain either a joint action against all its makers, or a several action against each one. While, at common law, a judgment against one of several joint obligors was a merger of the contract, and thus a bar to a subsequent action against his co-obligors, it was otherwise when the contract was joint and several. On such a contract, nothing short of satisfaction would prevent the obligee from maintaining as many suits as there were obligors (1 Herman, Estoppel, § 173); and this is the necessary effect of our statute, declaring every contract, though joint in its terms, several as well as joint (Lowry v. Hardwick, 4 Humph. 188). Nor does the well-established rule that a plaintiff shall not split an indivisible cause of action apply in this case. The reason of this rule is expressed in the maxim, Nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa; and the rule itself was established to prevent the unnecessary vexation of the defendant, and to protect him from the burden of the costs of a multiplicity of suits involving the same cause of action. This rule could be invoked by Hunt, if complainant was here seeking to hold him liable for fendant and against another. Ryan v. State Bank, 10 Neb. 524; Smith v. Cassell, 70 Wis. 567; Moffett v. Dickie, 21 Gratt. 280.

And where the judgment was against some defendants at one time and some at another. Thomas v. Mohler, 25 Md. 36; Bush v. Campbell, 26 Gratt. 403; Pitts v. Spotts, 86 Va. 71; Cahoon v. McCulloch, 92 Va. 177; Hoffman v. Bircher, 22 W. Va. 537.

And where the defense of the first obligor was insufficient. Bean v. Seyfert, 12 Phila. 224.

And where the plaintiff dismissed or discontinued as to some and proceeded against others. Garrison v. Hollins, 2 Lea, 684; Burleson v. Henderson, 4 Tex. 49; Forbes v. Davis, 18 Tex. 268; Wooters v. Smith, 56 Tex. 198; Muse v. Farmers' Bank, 27 Gratt. 252; Carlson v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297.

And where proceedings were had to bind the parties not originally served. Erwin v. Scotten, 40 Ind. 389; Prince v. Cujas, 7 Robt. 76; Harper v. Bangs, 18 How. Pr. 457; Foster v. Wood, 30 How. Pr. 284; Decker v. Kitchen, 26 Hun, 176.

And where by statute the contract was joint and several. Burns v. Moore, 76 Ala. 339, 52 Am. Rep. 232.

VIII. Where the obligors are principal and surety.

Where the relationship is that of principal and surety the following cases hold that a judgment against one obligor is a bar to a subsequent suit against the remaining obligors. Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 31.

And the same was said to be the rule in Irwin v. Helgenberg, 21 Ind. 106.

And a judgment against one surety where both are sued releases the other. Waggoner v. Walrath, 24 Hun, 443.

And a prior judgment discharging the principal is a merger. Gill v. Morris, 11 Heisk. 614, 27 Am. Rep. 744.

But the following cases hold that a judgment against one obligor is not a bar to a subsequent suit or proceeding against the remaining obligors in matters of principal and surety, where the contract is joint and several. State Bank v. Robinson, 13 Ark. 214; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Landis, 50 Mo. App. 116; Phelps v. Church, 65 Mich. 231.

And a prior judgment in favor of one surety was not a bar to an action against another surety, where the prior defense was not shown. Hill v. Morse, 61 Me. 541.

43 L. R. A.

And where the second action was on a separate contract. McCullough v. Hellman, 8 Or. 191; White v. Smith, 83 Pa. 186, 75 Am. Dec. 589; Cambria County Comrs. v. Canan, 2 Watts, 107.

And where the prior judgment was void. Treasurers of the State v. Bates, 2 Ball. L. 362.

And where the right to proceed against the second party was saved by statute. Garrison v. Hollins, 2 Lea, 684; Cahoon v. McCulloch, 92 Va. 177; Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Oleson, 47 Iowa, 492; Ryan v. State Bank, 10 Neb. 524; Wooters v. Smith, 56 Tex. 198.

And the same was said to be the rule in McReady v. Rogers, 1 Neb. 124, 93 Am. Dec. 333.

IX. Classification by states and countries.

Alabama.

A judgment in favor of one partner, obtained in another state, is no bar to a subsequent suit against another partner in this state. A judgment against some, and in favor of some, defendants jointly bound was held to be erroneous. But the Code has since changed the rule in such a case, and now all joint contracts are by statute made joint and several.

A judgment in favor of one partner in a suit in which he was the defendant in Mississippi is not a bar to another suit by the same plaintiff against another party in Alabama on the same cause of action. McLelland v. Ridgeway, 12 Ala. 482.

This was held because of the principle that a verdict shall not be used as evidence against a man where an opposite verdict would not have been evidence for him.

Where a judgment was rendered against a firm and an action brought upon the judgment against a member individually, it was held that the original claim was merged in the judgment, and that under Ala. Rev. Code, § 2539, making judgments joint and several and changing the common-law rule, this action was properly brought. Cox v. Harris, 48 Ala. 538.

Arkansas.

It seems that by statute in this state all contracts are joint and several, and therefore a judgment against one party is not a bar to a subsequent action against the other obligors.

In Parke v. Meyer, 27 Ark. 551, it was said that Ark. Code, § 401, provides that in an action against several defendants the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment is proper.

the balance due on this note, but it cannot avail these defendants, who were not parties to that suit.

But the defendants insist that the separate suit against Hunt, followed by the decree against him and his property, operating to relieve him from the remainder of the debt, as a legal consequence, released them from liability for any balance due on his one third; in other words, their contention is that this judgment against Hunt had so far the effect of a common-law release as to protect them from all liability for the balance which Hunt should have paid. It will be seen that, while seeking an analogy in this several or separate judgment against Hunt, with a technical common-law release, the defendants fall far short of claiming the full effect of such a release on a joint contract at common law, for we find that they only insist upon a discharge of themselves and property from the balance remaining due from Hunt. But we see nothing in the nature of a release in that proceeding. Instead of a release to Hunt, it is an adjudication against him of liability on this joint and several debt. It is true that this judgment is for an aliquot part, rather than for the whole, of the debt, and that complainant would be barred from maintaining a suit against him for the balance; but this is not because the judgment is in the nature of a release of this balance, but rather by reason of the policy of the law, which forbids the splitting an indivisible demand. This policy, however, as has been said already, is adopted for the protection of the party so sued. It cannot be successfully invoked by these defendants.

It is very apparent from this record that the holder of this note, as well as its makers, acted under a mistake of law as to the liability of these makers on this paper, and that, at the time payments were made and accepted, all parties understood that a payment of one third by any one of the obligors would discharge him and his undivided in-

In State Bank v. Robinson, 13 Ark. 214, it was held that under Ark. Dig. 621, making all obligations joint and several, a judgment in favor of a principal sustaining a plea of payment and accord and satisfaction is no defense to a subsequent action by the creditor against a surety.

In this case the surety did not rely upon the fact that the debt had been paid by the principal, but relied upon the technical estoppel of the judgment in favor of the principal as a bar to any inquiry as to the fact of payment or satisfaction.

Where a suit was instituted against the maker and indorser of a note jointly, and the plaintiff failed to make out his case against the indorser for want of proof of demand and notice, such failure did not inure to the benefit of the maker. Nevill v. Hancock, 15 Ark. 511.

In this case, the court said: "This court has held that, where several are sued upon a joint contract, a successful plea by one going to the validity of the contract, or to the satisfaction or discharge of the debt, operates as a discharge to all the defendants; but it is otherwise where the plea goes to the personal discharge of the party interposing it."

In Hughes v. Lindsey, 10 Ark. 555, where a judgment was rendered against two defendants on a joint contract, the granting of a new trial to one was held to vacate the judgment as to both.

California.

It appears that when the prior action is upon a joint contract, a judgment thereon would bar a subsequent action upon the same contract against other obligors.

A judgment against an accommodation indorser was held a merger of the debt, so as to bar an action against other accommodation indorsers. Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 31.

"This was because the indorsement was made upon an agreement that each would become surety if the other would, or, in other words, that they would become sureties together."

Colorado.

Joint obligations are made joint and several by statute, and a judgment against one is not a bar to a further suit against another obligor. But this does not apply to oral contracts.

Where an action was brought against F. and others on a note, and judgment was rendered against the defendants defaulting, and before the trial against F. the complaint was amended 43 L. R. A.

abandoning the note and resting the action upon the original partnership debt, and was tried against F. as upon an unwritten contract, the former judgment against the codefendants was held to be a merger of the entire cause of action. It was also held that the equitable doctrine that partnership debts are joint and several does not obtain in a purely legal action. It was further held that Colo. Gen. Stat. § 1834, providing that "all joint obligations and covenants shall hereafter be taken and held to be joint and several obligations and covenants," and § 14 of our Code of Procedure, to wit, "all persons jointly or severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument . . . may all or any of them be included in the same action," does not refer to and include joint oral contracts. Exchange Bank v. Ford, 7 Colo. 314.

But where a contract sued upon was made joint and several by statute a plea that the plaintiff had already recovered judgment against one of the obligors in another suit was insufficient where it did not allege that the judgment was satisfied. Fitzgerald v. Burke, 14 Colo. 550.

Delaware.

A judgment upon an obligation given by part of the firm is a merger of the debt and prevents a suit against the remaining members. By statute in this state contracts made by several persons are joint and several unless otherwise expressly stipulated, but this does not affect partnership contracts.

A bond given by two members of a firm for a debt and a judgment confessed upon it by them discharged the original joint liability of the third partner, as the original debt was merged in the new debt by giving the bond and confessing the judgment. Sydnam v. Cannon, 1 Houst. (Del.) 431.

In Currey v. Warrington, 5 Harr. (Del.) 147, it was held that Del. Dig. 325, providing that obligations or contracts by several persons shall be joint and several unless otherwise expressly stipulated, does not apply to partnership obligations which are joint and not several.

Florida.

A judgment against one joint debtor is a bar to a subsequent action against the other. A plaintiff cannot split his case by taking a judgment against part of the joint debtors where all are served with process and prosecute the action as to others, as he cannot have but one judgment. A statute now provides for a further terest in the property from all further obligation. It is equally clear that the suit against Hunt was prosecuted under this misapprehension. But this misapprehension cannot be used to repel complainant, when he has discovered his rights, and is now proceeding to enforce them in a proper form.

The case of Day v. Hill, 2 Speers, L. 628, 42 Am. Dec. 390, is a direct authority on this point. The facts of that case were as follows: H. and B. made a joint and several note. B. was sued, and, by mistake, judgment for less than the amount due was recovered against him. This judgment was satisfied, and plaintiff sued H. for the balance, and he set up a defense similar, in effect, to that relied on here. Evans, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "I take it to be very clear that the plaintiff is not estopped from bringing his action against this defendant by his judgment against the other maker of the note. The judgment in that case is a conclusive bar to any other action against the same defendant for the same cause; yet it is no bar to an action against another, who is severally liable, unless the judgment be paid, and then it will avail the defendant, not by way of estoppel, but as payment or satisfaction of the debt. Satisfaction or payment is no bar, unless the whole debt is paid, or something accepted in full of it. For less than this, the defendant is only entitled to a deduction from the debt for the amount paid, and the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for the balance." We think, therefore, the court of chancery appeals was in error in holding that the defendants were liable only for the balance due on their one third of the note. The decree of that court is modified, and a decree will be entered against them for the balance due on the whole note, and subjecting their interest in the land to its payment. The costs of this court will be paid by defendants, and the costs of the lower court will remain as adjudged by the chancellor.

prosecution of the parties not served with process.

In Ferrall v. Bradford, 2 Fla. 508, 50 Am. Dec. 293, it was said that a judgment recovered against one of two or more joint debtors is a bar to an action against the other. But it was held that the plaintiff could avoid the effect of the prior judgment as a bar by showing that he was induced to take a judgment against part of the obligors by reason of the fraud of the defendant last sued.

In this case it was said that the case of Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 263, 3 L. ed. 218, has been directly overruled in this country and in England.

In a joint action upon a joint contract, a judgment entered up against one defendant after having discontinued as to the other, who had been in court as a codefendant, was erroneous. But as the discontinuance was entered by negligence of the attorney it was ordered to be set aside, and the judgment of the trial court was reversed. Hale v. Crowell, 2 Fla. 534, 50 Am. Dec. 301.

So, in a suit against two partners as joint debtors, where a final judgment was taken by plaintiff against one of them after default and in favor of the other on a verdict, the plaintiff could not have such judgment in favor of the successful partner reversed for new trial because he had a final judgment against the other partner, and he could not obtain two judgments upon the same cause of action in the same suit against two partners or joint debtors. Pollak v. Hutchinson, 21 Fla. 128.

Florida Rev. Stat. 1892, § 1179, act February 24, 1873, chap. 1938, § 9, provides that where a suit is brought against two or more defendants, and service of summons is not made on all, a judgment obtained in one action shall not prevent the plaintiff from bringing a suit against any defendant not served for the same claim or demand, but that the plaintiff can have only one satisfaction.

Georgia.

Under the statutes of this state a judgment against a joint obligor is not a bar to subsequent suit against the other obligors not served in the first suit.

In Ellis v. Bone, 71 Ga. 466, it was held that a judgment against a member of a firm did not merge the debt of a member of a partnership who was not served with process, and that he was still liable to suit notwithstanding such 43 L. R. A.

judgment under Ga. act 1820, Cobb, p. 485, Code, §§ 3350-1, providing that where two or more joint, or joint and several, contractors or copartners are sued in the same action, and service shall be perfected upon one or more of the joint contractors or copartners, and the officer serving the writ shall return that the rest are not to be found, the plaintiff may proceed to judgment and execution against such as were served in the same manner as if they were the sole or only defendants.

This holds that the common-law rule as to joint contracts has been changed in Georgia.

In an action against all the obligors on a note, it was held that the note could not be used to give jurisdiction against obligors not residing in the county of suit, where a judgment had been taken against the resident obligors in a prior action against the same parties, in which action the resident obligors were the only parties served with process. It was further held that as to the resident obligors the debt was merged in the judgment. Fullington v. Killen, 65 Ga. 575.

Illinois.

Starr & C. Ill. Stat. 1896, vol. 2, p. 2321, chap. 76, § 3, provides that all joint obligations and covenants shall be taken and held to be joint and several obligations and covenants. This is identical with Rev. Stat. 1845, p. 299, § 3. Notwithstanding this statute the cases in Illinois hold that a recovery against one of several persons jointly liable releases the other. So with regard to a partnership debt. But a judgment on a joint and several obligation is not a bar to a subsequent action. The decisions holding that a judgment against one party on a joint obligation is a bar to a subsequent suit, do not refer to this statute. But in National Bank v. Jennings Trust Co. 44 Ill. App. 285, the court says: "Twice at least, the supreme court has decided that the statute, chap. 76, Joint rights and obligations, covers contracts not under seal. Marine Bank v. Ferry, 40 Ill. 255; Gage v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 79 Ill. 62. This may not be consistent with decisions that a judgment against one of several joint promisors is a bar for the others. Jansen v. Grimshaw, 125 Ill. 468; nor with Union Nat. Bank v. Bank of Commerce, 94 Ill. 271, and cases there cited; but that is not our affair."

The decisions have been as follows:

A recovery against one of several persons jointly liable releases the others not served with process, and is a bar to a subsequent action against them. Mitchell v. Brewster, 28 Ill. 163.

So, where the prior suit is on a partnership contract. Thompson v. Emmert, 15 Ill. 415; Wann v. McNulty, 7 Ill. 355, 43 Am. Dec. 58.

In Moore v. Rogers, 19 Ill. 348, and People v. Harrison, 82 Ill. 84, it was said that a judgment against one or more of several joint obligors or promisors is a bar to another action upon the same contract against the same or other obligors, for the contract is merged in the judgment, and can no longer be made the subject of the action.

So, in Jansen v. Grimshaw, 125 Ill. 468, the same was said to be the rule on a joint partnership note.

In Davidson v. Bond, 12 Ill. 84, a default entered against part of the defendants, without notice taken of the other defendants who had been served with process, was held to be erroneous. But it was held that the plaintiffs could have their own judgment reversed because it was a bar to their obtaining another judgment, and of itself afforded no security.

In Byers v. First Nat. Bank, 85 Ill. 423, it was said that if one of several defendants jointly liable should stay the proceedings as to himself, and the plaintiff take judgment against his codefendant, the defendant obtaining the stay would be released from the debt.

But where a judgment was taken against part of the obligors on a partnership note, and the case removed to the Federal court and remanded, and then such judgment was vacated, it was not a bar to further proceedings in the same action against the other obligors. Jansen v. Grimshaw, 125 Ill. 468.

And where a contract was joint and several a judgment against one was not a bar to an action against the other on the several liability. The court said that contracts which are joint and several may be regarded as furnishing two distinct remedies, one by a joint action against all the obligors, and the other by a several action against each. People v. Harrison, 82 Ill. 83; Moore v. Rogers, 19 Ill. 348.

In Thompson v. Emmert, 15 Ill. 415, it was said that the law is different in respect to a judgment against one upon a joint and several cause of action operating as a bar to an action against others from what it is where the contract is joint.

Where a creditor took a judgment against the maker of a note in one suit, and against a guarantor in another, a satisfaction of the judgment against the maker was a satisfaction of the other also. Frankel v. Stern, 50 Ill. App. 54. Indiana.

A judgment against one party on a joint or partnership obligation is a bar to a subsequent suit against other obligors. The statutory provision in regard to procedure does not prevent a bar unless strictly followed. The exceptions to the rule as to a prior judgment being a bar are in case of nonresidence of a party and where the prior judgment is reversed. Where the statute is followed a dismissal as to one not served will not be a bar, and proceedings may be taken under another statute to have parties not served bound by the judgment. A judgment against one on a joint and several obligation is not a bar to a subsequent action against another party.

Where steps are not taken to preserve the liability of the other obligors under the statute, a judgment against part of the obligors on a joint contract merges the debt, and is a bar to a further action against the remaining obligors. Barnett v. Juday, 38 Ind. 86; Archer v. Helman, 21 Ind. 29; Root v. Dill, 38 Ind. 169; Holman v. Langtree, 40 Ind. 349; Kennard v. Carter, 64 43 L. R. A.

Ind. 81; Lawrence v. Sample, 97 Ind. 53; Cox v. Maddux, 72 Ind. 206.

And the same was said to be the rule in Kittering v. Norville, 39 Ind. 183; Robinson v. Snyder, 74 Ind. 110; Martin v. Baugh, 1 Ind. App. 20.

The same was held in an action on a partnership contract. Henderson v. Reeves, 6 Blackf. 101; Nicklaus v. Roach, 3 Ind. 78; Crosby v. Jeroloman, 37 Ind. 264.

And the same was said to be the rule in Lingensfelder v. Simon, 49 Ind. 82.

In Irwin v. Helgenberg, 21 Ind. 106, where the holder of a joint note made by A with B and C as sureties took judgment by default against B and C, process having been returned not found as to A, it was said that it was by no means clear that afterwards the holder could maintain an action upon it against the maker.

As affected by nonresidence.

A judgment against one of the joint makers of a note does not merge or bar a separate action against the other maker who was not a party to the former suit because he was a nonresident. Merriman v. Barker, 121 Ind. 74; Cox v. Maddux, 72 Ind. 206.

Where the prior judgment is vacated.

A judgment taken against one of two joint obligors on a promissory note, but afterwards reversed or set aside, is not a bar to another action upon the note. Martin v. Baugh, 1 Ind. App. 20; Maghee v. Collins, 27 Ind. 88; Clodfelter v. Hulett, 2 Ind. 426; Lawrence v. Sample, 97 Ind. 53.

In the latter case one of two joint makers of a promissory note succeeded in a personal defense not involving the merits of the action, and upon appeal the judgment was reversed, and it was held not to be a bar to further proceedings.

This was on the ground that the plaintiff did not elect to pursue a single one of the joint debtors, but brought suit against all of them, and obtained a judgment which would have been against both but for an erroneous verdict in favor of one, and therefore the cause of action was not merged in the judgment first obtained.

In Rose v. Comstock, 17 Ind. 1, where a judgment against A was a merger of the note as to B and C, who had answered in the same action, the court said that setting aside such judgment would not put B and C back into court as parties to the suit, because it had been at a previous term finally disposed of and ended by taking a judgment against one and failing to reply to the answers of the others.

As affected by statutes.

Where all the joint obligors were sued and judgment taken against one and the action dismissed as to the others who had been served with process, a new suit could not be brought against such dismissed defendants, under 2 Ind. Rev. Stat. p. 120, practice act, § 362, providing that when summons has been served in due time upon part only, the plaintiff may dismiss or continue for further proceedings his action as to those not summoned, or not summoned in time, and proceed to trial as to the others or continue as to all of them at his option. Archer v. Helman, 21 Ind. 29.

In this case it was further held that joint makers were to be deemed collectively as one party, and if the holder of a note sued less than all the parties, he should see all the makers or all the indorsers who may be jointly liable, under Ind. Acts 1861, p. 145, § 16, providing that the holder of any negotiable note or bill of exchange may institute one suit against the whole or any number of the parties liable to such holder, but may not at any time institute more than one suit on such note or bill.

It was further held that there was no provision in the statute which conflicted with the common-law rule.

And where one of three joint makers of a note was sued upon the note on a ca. ad res. and judgment rendered without any steps being taken to bring in the other parties or preserve the remedy against them, such judgment merged the entire cause of action. Root v. Dill, 38 Ind. 169.

In this case it was said that the plaintiff should issue his process against all and then he could take either one of two courses, under 2 Gavin & H. (Ind.) Stat. 593, § 63, providing that when a summons is returned not found as to part of the defendants, the plaintiff may continue for alias process or dismiss the cause as to the defendants not found and proceed against the others served, and such plaintiff may at any time afterwards proceed against those not found. But in this case these steps were not taken.

And in a suit against two persons on a joint note a judgment against one of them where the other was not found was a bar to a subsequent suit against both on the same note, although Ind. Rev. Stat. 1838, p. 446, provided that if a suit on a joint contract be brought against two, and only one can be found, judgment may be taken against him alone on whom process has been served. Taylor v. Claypool, 5 Blackf. 557.

In this case, as the present action was against both, a judgment against the one served with process could not be obtained, unless the plaintiff could show that he had then a good cause of action subsisting against both.

So, in an action on a joint note against A, B, and C, where B and C answered and judgment was taken by default against A, and there was a failure to reply to the answer of B and C, the taking of the judgment against A was a discontinuance of the cause as to B and C. Rose v. Comstock, 17 Ind. 1.

It was held that the case as to B and C was not saved by 2 Ind. Rev. Stat. 1852, p. 121, § 369, providing that the court may, in its discretion, render a judgment against one or more of the defendants, leaving the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment is proper.

In this case the court did not exercise its discretion or make any order, and no several judgment could be rendered, as they were only jointly liable, and when final judgment was taken against A it finally disposed of the cause as to B.

In Martin v. Baugh, 1 Ind. App. 20, it was said that Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 320, providing for further proceedings against joint debtors where only part are served, does not apply to a case where both are served.

But where one of the joint makers of a note was not served with process, which fact was entered on the record, and after two continuances judgment was taken against the other, it was the same as a dismissal as to the party not served, and was not a bar to a subsequent action against him, under 2 Gavin & H. (Ind.) Stat. 593, § 63, providing that when a summons is returned not found as to part of the defendants the plaintiff may continue for alias process or suggest a return on the record, dismiss the cause as to the defendants not found, and proceed against those served, and afterwards proceed against those not served. Klittering v. Norville, 39 Ind. 183.

In a similar case it was held that the plaintiff could have the party not served bound by the judgment in the same manner as if he had been originally summoned, under Ind. Code, § 641, 2 Gavin & H. Stat. 297, providing that when a judgment shall be recovered against one or more persons jointly indebted upon contract, as provided in § 41, those who were not originally summoned to answer the complaint may be summoned to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment in the same manner as if they had been originally summoned. Erwin v. Scotten, 40 Ind. 389.

Section 41, cl. 1, provides that if the action be against defendants jointly indebted on contract, he may proceed against the defendants served, and if he recover judgment it may be enforced against the joint property of all and the separate property of the defendants served.

In this case it was said that this section of the Code did not change the common-law rule that a judgment against one joint promisor is a bar to a subsequent suit upon such obligation against another joint promisor.

Joint and several obligations.

A judgment against one of several makers of a joint and several note is not a bar to a subsequent action against another party. Giles v. Canary, 99 Ind. 116.

And where a suit was brought upon a joint and several obligation of A, B and C against all three, and the judgment determined that A and B were not jointly liable with C, but did not determine that A was not severally liable on the obligation which was the question in the second suit, the judgment in the former suit was no bar to a suit against A. Kirkpatrick v. Stingley, 2 Ind. 269.

So, in an action of debt against A, B and C, on a joint and several promissory note, where the plaintiff failed on the ground that the note was invalid as to C, the judgment was no bar to a subsequent suit against A on the note. Stingley v. Kirkpatrick, 8 Blackf. 186.

And where the plaintiff in a joint action against two as makers of a joint and several note, both of whom had been served with process, dismissed as to one by leave of court and took judgment against the other, such judgment was no bar to a subsequent suit against the former. Malden v. Webster, 30 Ind. 317.

In this case it was held that the dismissal as to one party changed the joint action to a several action against the remaining party, and hence the judgment in that suit was no bar to a subsequent action against the other party, under Ind. Code, § 20, providing that persons severally liable upon the same obligation may all or any of them be included in the same action, and § 41, cl. 3, providing that if all the defendants have been served judgment may be taken against any or either of them severally, when the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment against such defendant or defendants if the action had been against any or either of them alone, and § 99, providing that the court may at any time, in its discretion, correct the name of any party to be added or struck out.

In First Nat. Bank v. Indianapolis Piano Mfg. Co. 45 Ind. 5, and Nicklaus v. Roach, 3 Ind. 78, it was said that on a joint and several obligation there may be as many actions and judgments as there are parties severally liable. Iowa.

An early statute provided that a judgment against one or more jointly bound should not be a bar to a subsequent action against other obligors. Where this section has been referred to it has been followed. But several decisions apply the common-law rule holding the prior judgment a bar, making no reference to the statute. It seems impossible to reconcile these decisions with the other cases and the statute.

Iowa Rev. 1860, § 2764, Code 1888, § 8755 (2250), Code 1897, § 3465, provide that where two or more persons are bound by contract whether jointly only or jointly and severally or severally only, the action thereon may at the plaintiff's option be brought against any or all of them, and that an action or judgment against any one or more of several persons jointly bound shall not be a bar to proceedings against others.

Under this statute a judgment by confession against a maker of a joint note was not a bar to a subsequent action against the remaining obligor who was a surety. Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Oleson, 47 Iowa, 492. In this case no reference was made to any other Iowa case.

In Foote v. Hintrager, 60 Iowa, 180, it was said that under Iowa Code, §§ 2550-3, where parties are jointly bound by contract, or as partners, an action may be maintained against any one of them.

In Ryerson v. Hendrie, 22 Iowa, 480, it was said that "this section is full of innovations upon the common law, as to the nature or relation of liability, the right of action, and the effect of judgment." The dissenting opinion in this case questions if a person sues a partner individually for a debt of the firm, whether he can afterwards sue the firm or the other members.

But in North v. Mudge, 13 Iowa, 496, 81 Am. Dec. 441, it was held that a judgment confessed by one member of a firm merged the contract debt and was a bar to another action on the same demand against the firm.

In this case Iowa Rev. 1860, § 2764, was not cited, although it was in force. The judgment confessed against the firm was held void as to the party not confessing; but was a bar to a further action against the firm or the members.

So, a judgment obtained against a firm without service of process on a party who was claimed to be a member was held to merge the note, and prevent a subsequent action against the firm in which it is alleged that this party was a member of the partnership at the time of the execution of the note. Harford v. Street, 46 Iowa, 594.

In this case the court said: "The note sued on became merged in this judgment under the law in force when the judgment was rendered, and it cannot now be the subject of a cause of action. North v. Mudge, 13 Iowa, 496, 81 Am. Dec. 441." The court further said that the confession of judgment by one partner did not bind the other.

Joint and several obligations.

An unsatisfied judgment against one of the obligors of a joint and several obligation is no bar to an action against the other. Harlan v. Berry, 4 G. Greene, 212; Gilman v. Foote, 22 Iowa, 560; Sherman v. Christy, 17 Iowa, 322; Smith v. Coopers, 9 Iowa, 376.

In Gilman v. Foote, 22 Iowa, 560, the recovery of a judgment against a member of a firm on his several liability on a note signed in the firm name, and individually by this member, was not a bar to a subsequent action against the firm where there had been no actual satisfaction of such judgment.

In this case the court said that "the note in suit being several as to Foote it is plain that he might thereon be severally sued, and a recovery against him without satisfaction would be no merger of the note as to the other makers."

So, in Sherman v. Christy, 17 Iowa, 322, a judgment confessed by one member of the firm on a joint and several note made by him in the firm name, bound only the member confessing, and was not a bar to a subsequent action against the other member upon the note.

In this case North v. Mudge, 13 Iowa, 496, 81 Am. Dec. 441, was distinguished, as in that case the debt was joint and not joint and several.

43 L. R. A.

And in Smith v. Coopers, 9 Iowa, 376, a judgment rendered against one of the makers of a joint and several promissory note, and the case continued as to the others, did not bar the plaintiff's right to recover against the other parties.

In this case it was held that the doctrine of merger and release by taking a judgment against one of the makers did not apply, under Iowa Code, 1825-6, § 1682, providing that persons jointly and severally liable upon the same instrument may all or any part of them be sued at once, that judgment may be rendered against one or more of several plaintiffs or defendants, and that this may be done against one or more before the case is ripe for decision as to all.

Kansas.

In Jenks v. School Dist. No. 38, 18 Kan. 356, it was said that under the Kansas statute, providing that a bond is a joint and several obligation, where suit was brought against joint and several obligors, in which process was not served on all the defendants, judgment could be taken against those served, and such judgment was no bar to subsequent proceedings against those not served at the rendition of such judgment.

Kentucky.

Prior to the Code provision there was some conflict as to whether or not a judgment against a joint obligor was barred by another action against a remaining obligor. Some of the early cases favored the case of Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215, whilst other cases indicated a desire to follow the weight of authority. Since the Code provision, however, a judgment against one joint obligor is no bar to another suit against the remaining obligor. A judgment on a joint and several obligation is no bar to a subsequent suit against the remaining obligors.

A judgment in favor of one heir and co-obligor, which would bar any other suit against him for the same cause of action, extinguished the obligation of his coheir or co-obligor where the judgment had not been obtained in consequence of a defense applying particularly and alone to the party in whose favor it had been rendered. Hunt v. Terrill, 7 J. J. Marsh. 67.

So, in Sayre v. Coleman, 9 Dana, 174, it was said that a judgment against part of the joint obligors would merge the liability, and would be a bar to a subsequent suit either against them or against others.

But a judgment upon a contract against the only obligor was not a bar to a subsequent action against another party who was alleged to be a dormant partner in a firm doing business under the name of the obligor. Scott v. Colmesnil, 7 J. J. Marsh. 416.

In this case it was said: "Though it has been frequently said by judges and lawyers that the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215, declared that a judgment against one joint obligor does not so merge or change the character of the contract as to bar a suit upon the same contract against his co-obligor, yet a careful examination of the opinion in that case will, we think, show that no such doctrine was therein settled and no such point decided." But the court said that case held that where the first suit was on a sole contract of one party that a second suit may be brought against another party alleging that he was a partner.

In Williams v. Rogers, 14 Bush, 776, it was said that under Ky. Civ. Code, § 27, providing that an action or judgment against one or more of several persons jointly bound shall not be a bar to proceedings against others, abolished the common-law rule as to joint and several liabilities upon contracts. This case denies the authority of Nichols v. Burton, 5 Bush, 322, but admits that at common law where the terms of a partnership agreement did not make it several or joint and several, the effect of a judgment against one obligor was to merge the claim against the other of the obligors, and prevent any proceedings against them either severally or jointly.

In Nichols v. Burton, 5 Bush, 322, it was held that a judgment against one partner on an individual acceptance given by him in payment of an account against the firm merged the original debt of the firm and barred a suit against the other members of the firm for the same debt, and the court said: "Our Code does not authorize separate suits at different times against the partners."

So far as this case intimates that a suit and judgment against one partner is of itself a merger and satisfaction of the claim against the other partner, the same was overruled in Williams v. Rogers, 14 Bush, 776.

And where a judgment was taken against two defendants on a note executed by three, and process was not served as to the third, and the judgment was replevied and execution issued on the replevin bond and returned no property found, this was no bar to the prosecution of the action against the third, under Ky. Civ. Code, § 399, providing that in an action against several defendants the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment is proper. Burrus v. Anderson, 3 Met. (Ky.) 500.

It was irregular to render a joint judgment against all the plaintiffs in error in a joint action, where a judgment in the same action had been previously rendered against one of them and was unversed. Fletcher v. Andrews, 1 A. K. Marsh. 52.

In this case it was said that as it now appears the judgment first rendered has been reversed since obtaining the last judgment against all the parties and on the return of this cause to the court below, as all the parties would then be legally before the court, judgment may then be rendered against all unless there is some sufficient plea presented to bar the action.

A judgment rendered against persons jointly liable is an entirety, and if void as to one defendant is void as to all, although where the parties are severally liable it would be different. Sullivan v. Frankfort Bldg. & L. Asso. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 48.

Joint and several obligations.

A judgment against two of three joint and several obligors in which the two defendants had not pleaded the nonjoinder of the third obligor in abatement, could not be pleaded in bar to a subsequent suit against the third obligor. Sayre v. Coleman, 9 Dana, 174.

In Elliot v. Porter, 5 Dana, 299, 30 Am. Dec. 683, it was said that in cases of contract a judgment against one is no bar to a suit on the same contract against another jointly and severally bound. Maine.

An election to sue one of the makers of a joint and several note is held to be an election to treat it as a several contract and a bar to a subsequent suit against the other two jointly. A judgment in favor of a surety is held not a bar to an action against another surety where the grounds for the first judgment were not shown. A judgment in an action on a joint contract against one defendant is held not to be a bar to a suit against another where the first judgment was obtained in another state, and 43 L. R. A.

only one defendant was found. This is in accord with the general doctrine.

A suit and judgment against one of the makers of a joint and several note signed by three is an election to treat it as a several contract as to all, and was a bar to a subsequent suit against the other two jointly. Bangor Bank v. Treat, 6 Me. 207, 19 Am. Dec. 210.

But a judgment in favor of a surety in an action against him is not a bar to a subsequent action against another surety. Hill v. Moree, 61 Me. 541.

In this case it did not appear upon what ground of defense the former judgment was rendered, or that in the former case the defendant prevailed upon any facts which went to the merits of the case or extinguished the cause of action, or that the facts involved in that judgment were such as would be available to the defendant as a bar to a subsequent action if the same were proved.

Nonresidence.

A judgment against one of several joint defendants found within the state in an action against all is not a bar to a subsequent action on the same obligation against them all, where service was only made upon another defendant who had come within the state, and discontinuance entered as to the others, as this is within an exception to the common-law rule that "where the claim is joint the action must be against all who are jointly liable." Rand v. Nutter, 56 Me. 389.

So, a judgment rendered in another state against one joint obligor where the other was not served is no bar to a subsequent action against the remaining obligor in another state. Dennett v. Chick, 2 Me. 191, 11 Am. Dec. 59. Maryland.

It was originally held that the common-law doctrine applied in this state, and a judgment against one of a partnership firm was a bar to a subsequent action against the remaining partner. This was changed by the Code in 1839. A statute of 1870 providing that on a joint and several bond, note, penal or single bill, no more than one action can be brought where the obligors reside in the same county was held not to apply to the covenants of a lease.

The rule of the common law was changed by Md. act 1839, chap. 14, Code, art. 49, § 10, providing that a judgment rendered against one or more partners or one or more persons jointly liable on any contract less than the whole number jointly bound, shall not extinguish or merge the cause of action as respects the liability of the partners or persons not bound by such judgment, but they shall remain liable to be sued as if their original responsibility had been joint and several.

Under this statute a judgment against one joint debtor is not a bar to a subsequent suit and judgment against the remaining obligor. Cruzen v. McKaig, 57 Md. 461.

So, under this act where a judgment by default had been taken severally and at different stages of the case but no final judgment rendered against any of the parties, and their liability all depended upon one joint contract, it was proper to render one final judgment against them. Loney v. Bailey, 43 Md. 10.

The court may set aside a default judgment as to one of two joint partners and allow him to confess a judgment for the debt, under Md. act 1839, chap. 14 (Code, art. 20, § 18), suspending the common-law rule by which a cause of action against one of two joint debtors was merged by the judgment against the other, and allowing a recovery of several judgments in such cases. Thomas v. Mohler, 25 Md. 36.

In Cruzen v. McKaig, 57 Md. 461, it was held that Md. Code, art. 49, § 2, Amended Laws 1870, chap. 329, providing that no person shall institute more than one suit on a joint and several bond, promissory note, penal, or single bill, when the persons executing the same are alive and residents in the same county, did not apply to an action on a covenant in a lease.

But previous to the act of 1839 it was held that a judgment against a party on a note executed by him barred a subsequent action of assumpsit against another party claiming that he was a dormant partner in a firm carried on in the name of the party who executed the note, and that the note was given for goods furnished the firm, and that at the time of the first suit the plaintiff was ignorant that the last-named defendant was a partner in such firm. Moale v. Hollins, 11 Gill & J. 11, 33 Am. Dec. 684. It is said in Thomas v. Mohler, 25 Md. 86, that Md. act 1839, chap. 14, Code, art. 29, § 18, changed this rule.

Massachusetts.

The common-law doctrine that a judgment against one joint debtor bars a subsequent action against the other applies in this state, except so far as modified by the statute, which provides that where more than one is sued, and process is returned not found as to the other, such judgment is not a bar to a further action. This statute has been applied where a judgment has been taken on a joint debt and the other obligors were not residents. Instead of regarding such cases as an exception to the general rule, but the same result is reached. It seems that notwithstanding the statute if the action is brought originally against one joint debtor, and no effort is made to secure service on the others, that such a judgment shall be a bar to a further action. On a joint and several obligation a judgment in an action against one is no bar to a further proceeding in the same action against the others under the statute.

A judgment recovered against one of two partners merges the debt and is a bar to a subsequent action against both promisors. Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 148.

And an action and judgment against one of two joint debtors is a bar to any further action against the other. Kingsley v. Davis, 104 Mass. 178. And the same was said to be the rule in Gibbs v. Bryant, 1 Pick. 118.

In Well v. Raymond, 142 Mass. 206, which was an action to ascertain whether an agent or undisclosed principal was liable, the court said: "If the plaintiff sold the merchandise to George J. Raymond, under the name of George J. Raymond & Company, he can sue him therefor; if, in buying the property George J. Raymond acted as the agent of his wife, an undisclosed principal, the plaintiff can also sue her; he cannot sue both jointly, but it is said that he can proceed against each separately, although not to judgment against both, for a judgment obtained against one, although unsatisfied, is a bar to an action against the other;" citing Kingsley v. Davis, 104 Mass. 178.

Massachusetts Rev. Stat. chap. 92, § 12, Gen. Stat. chap. 126, § 13, provides that if an action founded on contract is brought against several defendants, and the writ is duly served on one or more of them, but no legal service is made on the other either by attachment of property or otherwise by reason of their absence from the state or for other sufficient cause, the action may nevertheless proceed against those who are duly served with process, without any further proceedings against the others; and Rev. Stat. chap. 92, § 13, Gen. Stat. chap. 126, § 14, provides that if judgment shall be rendered against one or more of several contractors in the manner provided in the preceding section, and shall remain unsatisfied, an action on the same contract may be afterwards maintained against any of the other joint contractors in like manner as if the contract had been joint and several.

In Odum v. Denny, 16 Gray, 114, it was said that this statute rescinded the rule of the common law which had been applied by the court in Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 148. The court evidently meant that where the provisions of the statute are followed the common-law rule does not apply.

But Kingsley v. Davis, 104 Mass. 178, followed Ward v. Johnson, without referring to this statute.

So under this statute a judgment in another state against one joint obligor where the other was a nonresident is not a bar to the prosecution of a suit against another obligor in this state. Shirley v. Shattuck, 18 Met. 256; Odum v. Denny, 16 Gray, 114.

In this latter case it was said that the case of Catekill Bank v. Hooper, 5 Gray, 574, was not in conflict with it, as in that case the plaintiff had sued two partners in New York and obtained a judgment there which bound their joint property in that state under the laws of New York, although one of them was not served with process. The court said that in that case it was held that such judgment, after the commencement of proceedings in insolvency here against the defendant who was not served with process in New York, precluded proof of debt against his separate estate in insolvency, as the suit and judgment in New York was a conclusive election to treat the two defendants as partners.

In Knapp v. Abell, 92 Mass. 485, it was said that by the existing laws of this commonwealth, where several defendants are sued jointly on a contract, the action may proceed to judgment against part only served with process, and the others remain liable to a new action on the original contract.

Joint and several obligations.

A judgment and execution against one of two joint and several makers of a note pending exceptions taken by the other is not a bar to a judgment against the first upon the overruling of the exceptions, under Mass. Stat. 1852, chap. 312, § 3, authorizing a separate judgment against one of two joint and several promisors. Hawkes v. Phillips, 7 Gray, 284.

In Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 148, it was said that in case of a joint and several contract, an unsatisfied judgment against one of the promisors was no bar to a subsequent action against the other.

Michigan.

The common law is in force in Michigan except as modified by statute. The common-law rule was applied to a judgment obtained in another state, although this is generally held to be an exception to the common-law rule. But in another case a different rule was applied because the prior judgment was obtained in New York, holding that under the statute there a judgment against one obligor did not bar a subsequent action against another. On a joint and several obligation a judgment against one obligor is held here as elsewhere to be no bar to an action against a remaining obligor.

It seems that where a suit is on a joint obligation the failure of the plaintiff to maintain his action as to one of the parties, or a discontinuance by him as to one party, prevents judgment against the other. Winslow v. Herrick, 9 Mich. 390; Lee v. Bolles, 20 Mich. 46; Mace v. Page, 33 Mich. 88; Ballou v. Hill, 23 Mich. 60;

Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123; Anderson v. Robinson, 38 Mich. 407; Andre v. Fitzhugh, 18 Mich. 93; Anderson v. White, 39 Mich. 130; Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85; Searles v. Reed, 63 Mich. 485; Seligman v. Gray, 66 Mich. 341. And the same was said to be the rule in Maynard v. Penniman, 10 Mich. 153.

This rule was applied where suit was brought against two indorsers jointly and the plea was joint. A judgment discharging one discharged the other. Seligman v. Gray, 66 Mich. 341.

So, in a suit on a joint award on a joint submission, a discontinuance against one ends the suit. Rallou v. Hill, 23 Mich. 60.

And where a discontinuance against a part of the defendants discharged sureties on an attachment bond. Andre v. Fitzhugh, 18 Mich. 93.

And where the surety on the appeal bond of husband and wife was released by judgment on appeal in favor of the wife. Post v. Shafer, 63 Mich. 85.

Howell's Mich. Stat. § 7345 (Comp. Laws 1857, § 4160, Comp. Laws 1871, § 5778), provides that it may be lawful for the holder of a bill of exchange or note to include all or any of the drawers, makers, guarantors, indorsers, and acceptors in one action as though they were joint contractors. How. Mich. Stat. § 7347 (Comp. Laws 1857, § 4126, Comp. Laws 1871, § 5778), provides that in such action judgment may be rendered for the plaintiff against some of the defendants, and in favor of some of the defendants against the plaintiff. How. Mich. Stat. § 7355 (Comp. Laws 1857, § 4170, Comp. Laws 1871, § 5786), provides that plaintiff need not include in the record a judgment against all the parties to such bill or note, but judgment may be entered against any of the parties whenever plaintiff would be entitled to the same if the suit had been commenced against such parties only, and if the trial be put off by any of the parties, or if a default shall have been obtained against part, the plaintiff may proceed to trial against the other parties in the same manner as if suit had been commenced against the other parties only, and the action shall thereby be severed.

In Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123, it was held that Mich. Comp. Laws, §§ 5776-8, authorizing the makers, indorsers, acceptors, and guarantors of a note to be sued together and a judgment against any one or more of them, did not contemplate severance in a case of persons purporting to be joint makers and sued as such.

And where a suit was brought against a partnership, and four of the defendants were shown to be members but none of the others, it was fatal to the plaintiff's right to recover. Anderson v. White, 39 Mich. 130.

In this case it was said that Mich. Comp. Laws, § 5778, in connection with the section preceding it, shows "that it has no application to a case like the present, but to cases where the holder of a 'bill of exchange or promissory note, instead of bringing separate suits against the drawers, makers, guarantors of the payment thereof, indorsers and acceptors of such bill or note,' includes all or any of said parties in one action."

In Brooks v. McIntyre, 4 Mich. 316, it was said that "whether the judgment be against one or all the joint debtors, as well as where suit is instituted against part only of those jointly liable, and no plea in abatement is interposed on that account, such judgment is a bar to an action upon the original claim against the defendants not served in the one case, and against the debtors not proceeded against, in the other."

But in Detroit v. Houghton, 42 Mich. 459, where a judgment was rendered for all the defendants in a joint action, because one of the alleged makers on a joint bond had never executed it, it was said that this judgment would be no bar to another action brought against some of them on the same cause of action.

And where two persons indorsed a note before delivery to the payee they were joint original promisors with the drawer. A garnishment by a creditor of the payee and judgment against the drawer alone was void as being against one of three joint promisors, and was no bar to a subsequent suit on the note against the third, as one of two joint debtors cannot be charged as a trustee in a suit where the other debtor is not joined. Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 Mich. 555.

In Holcomb v. Tift, 54 Mich. 647, it was held that a judgment taken before a justice against a party served did not merge the debt on which it was founded, so as to preclude a suit against both, under How. Mich. Stat. §§ 6942-3 (Justice's court), providing for a judgment against all the defendants on a joint obligation where only part are served, but that such judgment shall be evidence of the plaintiff's demand as against the party not served after the liability of such defendant shall have been established by other evidence.

Nonresidence.

A judgment obtained in Ohio against one of the defendants on a partnership note is a merger of the note and extinguishes the joint liability, and is a bar to a suit subsequently brought on the note against both in the state of Michigan. Candee v. Clark, 2 Mich. 255.

In this case it was said that when the plaintiffs elected under the provisions of the statutes of Ohio to proceed to judgment on the note against B alone, they voluntarily and legally released their securities on the note against C, hence the judgment is a merger of the plaintiff's entire claim.

At the time of the commencement of the first suit the defendant subsequently sued was not a resident of Ohio but a resident of Michigan. But the court does not allude to this fact which generally works an exception to the rule. The court said they had no several demand against C on the original note if it had not been merged in the judgment.

But where a suit was brought in New York against two joint debtors one of whom was served with process and did not appear, and judgment was rendered against both, an action subsequently brought in Michigan against two was properly brought upon the original demand instead of upon the judgment, and the prior judgment was not an extinguishment of the demand sued upon. Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 Mich. 371, 80 Am. Dec. 90.

This decision was placed on the ground that the statute of New York had modified the common-law rule, and the court also attempted to distinguish Candee v. Clark, 2 Mich. 255, where the common-law rule was applied to a similar judgment, and said: "In thus holding, the court recognizes the propriety of former decisions, where, as in Candee v. Clark, in our own state, the common-law presumption has been applied to foreign judgments in the absence of any proof of its abrogation."

In this case the court said that "under all the New York joint debtor acts it has been held that the judgment was no bar to a further action. Their Revised Statutes, from which ours were, in this respect, borrowed, referred very plainly to such actions, and provided how far the judgment should be allowed to prevail as evidence. . . . But the original demand was always to be made the real foundation of a recovery against the defendant not served in the former action."

43 L. R. A.

Under How. Mich. Stat. § 7355, a suit brought against the maker and a guarantor where they answered separately could be discontinued as to the guarantor without prejudicing the right to proceed against the maker, as the guarantor was not a joint maker, and the discontinuance did not affect the right of the maker who was a sole promisor. Phelps v. Church, 65 Mich. 231.

So, in an action on a joint and several note a judgment entered against one on a cognovit was no bar to a further prosecution of the same action against the other debtor. The court said that under How. Mich. Stat. § 7355, judgment could be rendered against one or more defendants and in favor of one or more defendants, and that in this case the note was joint and several, and under this section the plaintiff had the right to take a judgment against one or the other. Reals v. Smith, 91 Mich. 146.

Where an action was brought against the maker and indorser jointly a default by the maker and a plea by the indorser did not sever the joint proceedings, as Mich. Comp. Laws, § 4170, How. Stat. § 7355, made it optional with plaintiff and he had a right to a joint judgment against both if he could establish the several liability of each. Storey v. Bird, 8 Mich. 316. Minnesota.

Joint and several obligations.

On a joint and several obligation judgment by default may be entered at one time against one party and afterwards another judgment against another defendant, under Minn. Gen. Stat. chap. 66, § 67, subd. 3, providing that although all the defendants have been served with summons, judgment may be taken against any of them severally when the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment against such defendants if the action had been against them alone, and under § 265, providing that in an action against several defendants, the court may in its discretion render judgment against one or more of them leaving the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment is proper. Wolford v. Bowen, 57 Minn. 267.

Mississippi.

A judgment against one partner is no bar to an action against another, under Miss. Stat. 1880, § 1134, providing that in any action founded on any joint or joint and several bond, covenant, bill of exchange, promissory note or other contract, or on a contract or liability of copartners, it shall be lawful to sue any one or more of the parties liable on such bond, covenant, bill of exchange, promissory note, or other contract or liability. Hyman v. Stadler, 63 Miss. 362.

So, a separate action against one partner in this state is not barred by the fact that a judgment had been recovered against his copartner for the entire debt, under Miss. Code 1880, § 1134, where the judgment was not paid. Scharff v. Noble, 67 Miss. 143.

Missouri.

In an early case the common-law doctrine was applied to a judgment in favor of some defendants on a joint contract, holding that it barred further proceedings against others. But since then the statute made joint contracts joint and several, and this has been held to avoid the effect of the common-law doctrine in all cases.

Wagner (Mo.) Stat. 269, §§ 1, 2, 4, provide that all joint obligations shall be construed to be joint and several.

Under this act a judgment on a note against one of the makers and the administrator of the individual estate of a deceased member of a firm, who was a maker with him, is not a bar to a recovery against the partnership estate of the 43 L. R. A.

firm in another action. Knox County Sav. Bank v. Cotter, 70 Mo. 130.

In Wiley v. Holmes, 28 Mo. 286, 75 Am. Dec. 126, where a note was made in New York signed by a firm, a judgment recovered in Louisiana against one of the firm on this note was held no bar to a subsequent action against the remaining partner in Missouri. This decision was on the ground that a debtor could not, by moving out of the state, extinguish his liability, and on the further ground that the Missouri statute making all joint contracts joint or several, and allowing a suit against one or more of the joint debtors, has altered the common law in relation to actions on joint demands.

In Phillips v. Fitzpatrick, 34 Mo. 276, it was held that a judgment against two of three joint debtors was no bar to a suit against the third. This was evidently under the statute although there was no discussion of the effect of the statute.

So, a judgment on a several bond against one obligor is no bar to an action against the other, where there was no satisfaction or payment. Armstrong v. Prewitt, 5 Mo. 476, 32 Am. Dec. 338.

And a judgment against the principal on a note is no bar to an action against the surety, as the obligation of such note was joint and several. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Landis, 50 Mo. App. 116.

But in Hempstead v. Stone, 2 Mo. 65, in an action on a joint contract where a judgment was had for some of the defendants and against others, the judgment was reversed on the ground that as some of the defendants had a verdict for them there should have been a judgment for all. The court approved the decision of Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227, to the effect that a judgment on a joint contract against part merged the contract against the rest.

Nebraska.

It seems that under the Code the plaintiff may take a judgment against one joint obligor although he may fall in that action to recover from a remaining obligor.

In an action on a joint contract where the liability only of the principal was established, a judgment against the principal and in favor of the surety was not erroneous, under Neb. Code, § 429, providing that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants. Ryan v. State Bank, 10 Neb. 524.

And in Long v. Clapp, 15 Neb. 417, it was said that "under the common-law practice, where the declaration counted upon a joint liability on the part of several defendants, and the evidence only proved a several liability as to one of them, the plaintiff was nonsuited;" but that this was changed by § 429 of the Code.

In McLeady v. Rogers, 1 Neb. 124, 93 Am. Dec. 333, it was said that the liability of a surety on an attachment bond is joint and several, and a judgment against one obligor is no bar to a recovery against the other.

New Hampshire.

A judgment against one party on a joint contract where the other party was out of the state is held to be no bar to another action against the other party. A judgment against one party on a joint and several obligation is no bar to a subsequent action against the remaining obligors.

Where one of two or more joint contractors was without the state so that no service could be made upon him, the judgment rendered against the joint contractors found within the state is no bar to a subsequent suit against the remaining obligors. Olcott v. Little, 9 N. H.

259, 32 Am. Dec. 357; Tibbetts v. Shapleigh, 60 N. H. 487.

In the first case the decision was on the ground that this was an exception to the general rule. In the second the same result was reached by applying Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 126, §§ 13-15, providing that a judgment recovered against one joint contractor in such cases is no bar to an action against the remaining joint contractors.

Joint and several obligations.

Where a note was joint and several the rejection of the claim by insolvent commissioners of the maker's estate was no bar to an action against the surety where the cause of rejection was not shown. Townsend v. Riddle, 2 N. H. 448.

In this case it was said that where a contract was joint and several a judgment against one promisor followed by the commitment to prison and a discharge of his person, which amounted to a technical satisfaction, did not operate as a satisfaction of the debt itself and bar another action against another promisor, but operated merely as a formal satisfaction in respect to the individual imprisoned.

New York.

Common-law remedy.

At common law a judgment against one joint contractor or partner merged or extinguished the debt and was a bar to a subsequent suit against the remaining obligor. The statutes and codes have attempted to change the common-law rule, but the common law is still in force except where specifically provided against.

So, in the absence of statutory provisions, the following cases have held that a judgment against one joint contractor or partner is a bar to a subsequent suit against a remaining obligor. Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227; Peters v. Sanford, 1 Denio, 225; Benson v. Paine, 2 Hilt. 552; Moran v. Vredenburg, Hill & D. Supp. 392; Smith v. Kibbe, 31 Hun, 390; Waggoner v. Walrath, 24 Hun, 443; Olmstead v. Webster, 8 N. Y. 413; Candee v. Smith, 93 N. Y. 349.

And the same was said to be the rule in Pierce v. Kearney, 5 Ill. 82; Smith v. Kibbe, 19 N. Y. Week. Dig. 118.

In Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227, after judgment on a firm note, a subsequent suit was brought against a party discovered to have been a partner. This is the leading case in the United States, followed in England and by the Supreme Court of the United States, denying the authority of Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 8 L. ed. 215. But its effect is modified by the present Code provision.

In Candee v. Smith, 93 N. Y. 349, one obligor had confessed judgment prior to N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1278.

In Benson v. Paine, 2 Hilt. 552, and Moran v. Vredenburg, Hill & D. Supp. 392, the prior judgment had been taken on a note given by one partner for a firm debt.

In Waggoner v. Walrath, 24 Hun, 443, judgment against one surety where both were sued was held to release the other.

In Olmstead v. Webster, 4 N. Y. 413, a judgment taken in a suit against one partner, and then vacated, was held a bar to an action against the others.

So, in a suit against three partners when judgment was taken against two, and the third partner then pleaded that judgment as a bar to a further prosecution against him, the court vacated the judgment, but could not revive the debt against the remaining partner because it was merged. National Broadway Bank v. Hitch, 29 Abb. N. C. 403.

43 L. R. A.

But a joint judgment taken by default against all the members of a firm, vacated so as to allow one of them to answer, was not a merger of the debt, as the plaintiff did not elect to extinguish the cause of action, and he opposed the vacation of the judgment. Heckemann v. Young, 134 N. Y. 170, 28 Abb. N. C. 356, Reversing 55 Hun, 400.

And a judgment in an action by an indorsee against indorsers did not bar an action by him against the maker. Russell & E. Mfg. Co. v. Carpenter, 5 Hun, 162.

As affected by nonresidence.

An exception to the common-law doctrine of merger is applied in case of judgments obtained against one or more joint obligors where the others are nonresidents, and such judgments are not a bar to a subsequent action. Brown v. Birdsall, 29 Barb. 549; Suydam v. Barber, 18 N. Y. 468, 75 Am. Dec. 254.

In this latter case the prior judgment was had in Missouri where a statute made such contracts joint and several.

But in McMaster v. Vernon, 3 Duer, 249, a judgment obtained against one partner in Rhode Island was held to be a bar to a suit in New York against two surviving partners. The residence of the three partners is not shown or discussed. If the other partners were nonresidents of Rhode Island this decision is not in accord with the weight of authority.

Statutory provisions where all are not served with process.

Under an early statute of New York it appears that a judgment could be rendered against one joint obligor at one time, and afterwards an action brought against the remaining obligor, where the defendant in the second suit was not served with process in the first suit.

1 N. Y. Rev. Laws, 515, Sess. 36, chap. 56, § 36; 1 Rev. Laws 1801, p. 353, § 13; 1 Rev. Laws 1813, p. 521, § 13, provides for judgment against all the obligors whether served or not, and suit may then be brought on that judgment against the party not served.

The effect of this statute is to allow judgments to be taken at different times against different obligors, and to prevent a merger by taking the first judgment. The decisions under this statute are as follows:

Where a judgment was taken on a bail bond against two defendants on a service of process on one, an action was allowed against both defendants on this judgment. Dando v. Doll, 2 Johns. 87; Taylor v. Pettibone, 16 Johns. 66.

The first judgment was a merger of the original indebtedness so that an action could not be maintained on the original promises; but an action of debt could be maintained on the judgment. Carman v. Townsend, 6 Wend. 206, Affirming 6 Cow. 696.

So, an action of debt will lie upon the judgment against both. Bank of Columbia v. Newcomb, 6 Johns. 98.

But where plaintiff recovered a judgment against A and B on service against A, and afterwards discovered that C, D, and E were dormant partners, and then brought a bill in equity asking for relief against them, it was held that ignorance of the fact that they were partners was no ground for relief in equity, and no recovery could be had against them. Penny v. Martin, 4 Johns. Ch. 566.

A similar act (2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 377, § 2) provided that the claim against the remaining obligor was to be established by evidence other than the judgment.

So, under this act the first judgment is not a merger. Oakley v. Aspinwall, 4 N. Y. 515.

In Dean v. Eldridge (1864) 29 How. Pr. 218, where an action was brought against two defendants on a judgment rendered for a joint debt on process against one, it was said: "It will not be denied that a cause of action still exists against these defendants, and it must be still a joint indebtedness, one which may be enforced against the defendants jointly, by means of a judgment and execution against them jointly."

And in an action against a debtor not served in the first suit, the plaintiff was bound to show that the liability existed by evidence other than the judgment under a plea of nul tiel record. Mervin v. Kumbel, 23 Wend. 293.

New York Code Civ. Proc. § 1933, is similar to this statute.

In Perkins v. Richmond, 17 How. Pr. 309, an action upon a note against principals and sureties, it was held that Code, § 136, providing that in actions on a joint contract the plaintiff may proceed against the party served, and enter a judgment against all, did not apply to justices' courts, and that in an action against several defendants on a joint and several contract, if the plaintiff elect to bring his action against the defendants, he must recover against all or fail, except when the defense is personal as to some.

New York Code Civ. Proc., § 1932, is to the same effect as Code Proc. § 136, subd. 1.

New York Code Civ. Proc. § 375 (Amended 1849), provided that where a judgment was recovered against one or more jointly indebted on a contract by a proceeding under § 136, those who were not originally summoned may be summoned to show cause why they may not be bound by the judgment. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1937, is similar.

Under this section proceedings may be had to bind parties not served in the original action. Prince v. Cujas, 7 Robt. 76; Harper v. Bangs, 18 How. Pr. 457; Foster v. Wood, 30 How. Pr. 284.

So, where the first judgment was entered against one partner alone. Decker v. Kitchen, 26 Hun, 173.

Statutes allowing offer and confession of judgment.

Under the Code provisions a judgment may be confessed by one joint debtor without its being a bar to a judgment against the remaining debtor. But it is questioned whether the same rule applies to another statute providing that a defendant may offer to allow a judgment to be taken against him for a certain amount.

New York Code Civ. Proc. § 738, Amended 1877, similar to Code Proc. § 385, provides that the defendant may offer to allow judgment to be taken against him for a specified sum, but if the plaintiff fails to obtain a more favorable judgment he must pay costs from the time of the offer.

Section 1278, N. Y. Code Civ. Proc., provides that "one or more joint debtors may confess a judgment for a joint debt, due or to become due. Where all the joint debtors do not unite in the confession, the judgment must be entered and enforced against those only who confessed it; and it is not a bar to an action against all the joint debtors upon the same demand."

Prior to § 1278 of the Code, a judgment by confession taken for the whole amount against one of the joint makers merged the debt and discharged the other makers. Candee v. Smith, 93 N. Y. 352.

Under this section a judgment confessed by some members of a partnership firm was no bar to a further action against the remaining member. Harbeck v. Pupin, 123 N. Y. 115, affirming 55 Hun, 835.

In Tripp v. Saunders, 59 How. Pr. 379, the court said that a confession of judgment by 43 L. R. A.

one joint debtor was no bar to an action against all the joint debtors on the same demand.

Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 385, where an action was against four on a joint and several bond, and two offered to let judgment be taken, it was questioned whether plaintiff could sever the action by entering judgment against two of the joint defendants and preserve the action against the other two. The court said that § 274 of the Code provides that in an action against several defendants the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more, leaving the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment may be proper, but that this appears to be in the discretion of the court. The court said that if the plaintiff avails himself of the defendant's offer, and enters judgment, it may be questionable whether he would not thereby discontinue the action against the defendants who had not united in the offer. Griffith v. DeForest, 16 Abb. Pr. 292.

A judgment entered against two partnership debtors upon an offer of judgment made by them was a bar to an action against another member of the firm for the same debt. It was held that § 1278 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply to judgments entered upon offers. Farnsworth v. Halstead, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 227.

So, in Garrison v. Garrison, 67 How. Pr. 271, it was held that this section did not apply to offers made by one partner to allow a judgment to be taken.

In Bannerman v. Quackenbush, 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 428, referring to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 738, 1932, it was said: "There seems to be no reported case construing this provision of the Code, excepting Garrison v. Garrison, 67 How. Pr. 271, wherein it was decided that there is no statutory authority allowing one joint debtor or partner to make an offer of judgment in behalf of his joint debtor or copartner, and that § 738 only applies to cases where a separate judgment must be taken against him who makes the offer, and that § 1932 of the Code, allowing judgment to be entered in form against both joint debtors when only one is served, does not relate to judgments entered upon offers."

In Kantrowitz v. Kulla, 20 Abb. N. C. 321, it was held that a judgment taken under an offer to allow a judgment for a certain amount, made by one of several joint debtors, did not bar the action as to the others.

This case was disapproved in Heckemann v. Young, 55 Hun, 406, but this latter case was reversed in 134 N. Y. 170.

North Carolina.

Under the provisions of the Code a judgment against one joint obligor does not bar an action against the remaining obligors. A judgment against one joint and several obligor is no bar to an action against the others.

In Ruffy v. Claywell, 93 N. C. 306, it was said that "under the rules of pleading, according to our former system, if the action was upon a joint contract, and the plaintiff took judgment against a part only of those liable, there could be no recovery in a subsequent suit against those omitted," but that under N. C. Rev. Code, chap. 31, § 84, contracts, whether made by copartners or other joint obligors, were made several by statute, and the plaintiff could sue one or more at his election without impairing his right to proceed against the others afterwards. The court said that this section was omitted in the Code of Civil Procedure, but re-enacted by the General Assembly, 1871-2, chap. 24, § 1, and now constitutes § 187 of the Code.

In Navassa Guano Co. v. Willard, 73 N. C. 521, it was said that Battle's Rev. 1873, N. C.

Code Civ. Proc. § 87, providing that where the action is against two or more defendants, and the summons is served on one or more of them but not on all of them, the plaintiff may proceed as follows,—“only applies to an action against two or more defendants and the summons is not served on all;” that subd. 4, providing if the name of one or more partners shall for any cause have been omitted in any action in which judgment shall have been passed against the defendants named in the summons, and such omission shall not have been pleaded, the plaintiff, in case the judgment therein shall remain unsatisfied, may by action recover of such partner separately upon proving his joint liability, notwithstanding he may not have been named in the original action, “was intended to prevent a partner who was not served with the summons from defeating any action against him on the ground that judgment had already been taken against his copartner,” and to prevent a merger.

A judgment against one on a joint and several note is no bar to an action against another maker. The court said the creditor may take several judgments and make his money out of either of them, or a part out of one and a part out of the other. Hix v. Davis, 68 N. C. 231.

In this case a compromise judgment against the surety in North Carolina, which had been satisfied, but did not pay the whole claim, did not prevent an action against the remaining obligor and a judgment for the balance.

In 1 Hayw. 487, where a writ was issued against two upon a joint and several bond, and one pleaded in abatement that the process was not served upon him in due time, the writ was abated and judgment was rendered against the other who was served. Haywood, J., said the abatement of one is the abatement of the whole writ. The reporter's note said “this decision was certainly an erroneous one.” Ohio.

In this state the common-law rule applies except as modified by statute, providing that a defendant not served with process may thereafter be made a party to a judgment against the others. An exception is made to the common-law rule in actions against husband and wife. So where the defendant is out of jurisdiction a judgment against one is no bar. A judgment on a joint and several obligation is no bar to a further action against others.

A judgment in favor of all the defendants on a joint contract is a bar to a subsequent action by the same plaintiff for the same cause of action, against one of the defendants in the former action. Roby v. Rainsberger, 27 Ohio St. 674.

And a judgment upon the merits for the defendant upon a joint contract brought against one of two joint contractors is a bar to another action upon the same contract against all the contractors. Reynolds v. Pittsburgh, C. & St., L. R. Co. 29 Ohio St. 602.

And in Yoho v. McGovern, 42 Ohio St. 11, it was said that a judgment upon a joint obligation against all or part merges the debt, and is a bar to a further proceeding upon it.

And in an action against joint contractors on a partnership contract, a judgment in favor of one is a discharge of the other. Pfau v. Lorain, 1 Cln. Super. Ct. Rep. 73.

A judgment, in another state against one of two partners on a joint obligation is a bar to a subsequent suit against the partners. Sloc v. Lea, 18 Ohio, 279.

In this case a judgment by confession had been entered in Illinois against both parties which was afterwards held void as to one of them, and an action was brought against both in Ohio. The court said that while the judgment in Illinois against M. is suffered to remain upon the docket in force no second judgment on the original liability can be recovered here against M. or against both jointly, or against S. separately upon the original cause of action because it is merged in the judgment.

But a judgment against a husband upon a joint note of himself and his wife did not merge the right to charge the wife's separate estate with the payment of the note in a subsequent action. Avery v. Van Sickle, 35 Ohio St. 270.

This was on the ground that the makers of the note were not in a legal sense jointly liable; that the wife was not liable at law and hence a joint remedy could not be anticipated when the note was executed. The court said that in this case either the husband alone was liable on the note, or he was liable jointly with the wife's separate estate, against which the remedy was wholly in equity, while his liability was strictly legal; and that a judgment against one of two joint makers of a written instrument constitutes a bar to a subsequent action only when the makers are liable thereon at law.

And a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace against one of the makers of a joint note was no bar to a subsequent action upon the note in the same court against another one of the makers who had not been served with process, and who was a nonresident of that county, to make him a party to the prior judgment, under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 5366, providing that when judgment is rendered on a joint contract, parties to the action who were not summoned may be made parties thereto by action in the same court. Yoho v. McGovern, 42 Ohio St. 11.

This was on the ground that nonresidence of one party prevented a merger, and that the justice was not authorized to issue process out of the county, and that the severance by taking a judgment against one was not the fault of the plaintiff.

The court distinguished the case of Clinton Bank v. Hart, 19 Ohio, 372, saying that no “joint” liability was ever incurred upon the note there in suit, and so in legal effect the court found, although one of the defendants was in default.

In Smith v. Exchange Bank, 26 Ohio St. 141, it was said that the liability of the drawer of a bill of exchange is a several liability and at common law was required to be enforced by a separate action; that the Code by allowing all the parties to the bill to be joined in one action does not require a joint judgment against all.

In this case the court further said: “Ohio Code, § 371, expressly provides that in an action against several defendants the court may in its discretion render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment may be proper. Where a separate action might have been maintained against a party a separate judgment under this provision of the Code is certainly proper. What effect the fact that the drawer is also one of the firm who accepted the bill may have on the right of the plaintiff to take a future judgment against the acceptors, we are not called on now to consider.”

In a joint action against all the makers of a joint and several note in which process was only served upon part, a judgment against one is no bar to a separate action against one not served with process. Clinton Bank v. Hart, 5 Ohio St. 33.

In this case it was said that the Ohio statute enabling a creditor to make one not served a party to the judgment against others, did not take away any common-law rights; that in case of a joint contract it is his only remedy, and where a contract is joint and several he has his election to pursue that remedy or to commence a separate action against any of the several makers who have not been served with process and whose liability has not been merged in the judgment.

But where four persons were sued as joint makers of a joint and several note, judgment was taken against one by default, and for two on issue joined, the fourth was not served with process and in a scire facias to charge the fourth with the judgment it was held that as the judgment was that two who were alleged to be joint makers were not liable, no judgment could have been rendered in that action against the fourth party, and therefore no judgment could be rendered against him on the scire facias. Clinton Bank v. Hart, 19 Ohio, 372. Oregon.

The recovery of a judgment against the principal is no bar to an action against him and another on another contract of guaranty executed by both of them jointly. McCullough v. Hellman, 8 Or. 191.

Pennsylvania.

Common-law remedy.

A judgment against one partner bars a subsequent suit against the other on the same obligation. Smith v. Black (1822) 9 Serg. & R. 142, 11 Am. Dec. 686.

So, an election in a suit on a joint contract to take confession of judgment by one bars a joint judgment or a judgment against the remaining party. Williams v. McFall (1816) 2 Serg. & R. 280.

And an election to treat a joint and several bond as joint by a suit, and taking a judgment against one obligor, bars a subsequent suit against the others. Downey v. Farmers' & M. Bank (1825) 13 Serg. & R. 288; Beltzhoover v. Com. (1832) 1 Watts, 126.

In the latter case the prior one was followed. All the defendants were in court; but the plaintiff accepted a confession of judgment from one which barred further judgment. No reference was made to any statute, and it is probable that the action was had prior to the act of 1830 which changed the rule in such cases.

But a judgment against a debtor is no bar to an action against a surety on a collateral covenant to pay the same debt. Cambria County Comrs. v. Canan, 2 Watts, 107.

So, a judgment against a principal is no bar to an action against him and a guarantor on a separate joint contract. White v. Smith, 33 Pa. 186, 75 Am. Dec. 589.

Statutory changes.

Pennsylvania act April 6, 1830, Pub. Laws, 277, § 1, provides that "in all suits now pending or hereafter brought in any court of record in this commonwealth, against joint and several obligors, copartners, promisors, or the indorsers of promissory notes, in which the writ or process has not been or may not be served on all the defendants, and judgment may be obtained against those served with process, such writ, process, or judgment shall not be a bar to recovery in another suit against the defendant or defendants not served with process."

In Miller v. Reed, 27 Pa. 247, 67 Am. Dec. 459, in reference to the Acts of 1830 and 1848, it was said that "the terms of this legislation, though limited to undertakings that are 'joint and several,' are applicable to contracts that are joint and not several. . . . If, then, neither action and recovery against one joint debtor, nor a confession of judgment by one, nor the death of one after judgment, works a discharge of the other, what difference remains so far as regards the remedy between joint contracts and contracts joint and several?"

A judgment against an obligor is not a bar 43 L. R. A.

to a subsequent suit against the remaining obligor not served in the prior suit:

Where the judgment is upon a partnership contract. Wann v. Pattengale (1850) 14 Pa. 313.

Or where the contract is joint. Moore v. Hepburn (1847) 5 Pa. 309.

The subsequent proceedings should be by another action. Myers v. Nell (1877) 84 Pa. 369.

And there is no bar where the judgment is on a joint and several obligation. Vanemen v. Herdman (1834) 3 Watts, 202.

And this section applies where the prior judgment is had in another state on a joint note. Campbell v. Steele (1849) 11 Pa. 394.

And the same was held in an action on a partnership note. Bennett v. Cadwell (1849) 70 Pa. 253.

This was on the ground that the presumption is that the laws of other states are the same as in Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania act April 6, 1830, Pub. Laws, 277, § 2, provides that "in all cases of amicable confession of judgment, by one or more of several obligors, copartners, or promisors, or the indorsers of promissory notes, such judgment shall not be a bar to recovery in such suit or suits as may have to be brought against those who refuse to confess judgment."

In Wallace v. Fairman (1835) 4 Watts, 378, it was held that a confession of judgment on a note given by one partner for a firm debt does not bar a subsequent action against the firm.

This was on the ground that the former suit was on the single bond of one of the partners, and not on the partnership debt. It was said that Pa. act April 6, 1830, did not apply, as that contemplates a recovery on a joint cause of action against one of several copartners, and is intended to preserve a remedy against the others.

So, a note and confession of judgment by two members of a firm of three was held no bar to a suit against one of them and the third partner. Potter v. McCoy (1856) 26 Pa. 458.

This was held on the ground that merger takes place only where the debt and parties are identical.

The court in the above case denied the authority of Lewis v. Williams (1840) 6 Whart. 264, which held that confession of judgment on a note given by one partner was a bar to a subsequent suit against another partner on the original obligation; that the act of April 6, 1830, did not apply where one had been sued severally on his single bond.

In Rhoads v. Frederick (1839) 8 Watts, 448, it was held that a judgment confessed by one obligor is no bar to a subsequent suit against the remaining obligors on a joint and several contract.

In this case a confession of judgment was made upon the original bill or specialty by one party, and after this an action was brought against the others.

Pennsylvania act August 2, 1842, Pub. Laws, 458, § 6, provides that "in all original actions and proceedings to revive judgment which have been or hereafter may be instituted against two or more defendants, in which judgment has been entered on record, at different periods, against one or more of said defendants, by confession or otherwise, or hereafter may be so entered, the entries so made or to be made shall be considered good and valid judgments against all the defendants, as of the date of the respective entries thereof, and the day of the date of the last entry shall be recited in any subsequent proceedings, by scire facias or otherwise, as the date of judgment against all of them, and judgment rendered accordingly: provided, that the provisions of this section shall not affect the liens of any such judgment."

Under this statute only one final judgment can be entered in suits against several. Murtland v. Floyd, 153 Pa. 99; American Bank's Appeal, 153 Pa. 98; Campbell v. Floyd, 153 Pa. 94; Noble v. Laley, 50 Pa. 281; Finch v. Lamberton, 62 Pa. 370; O'Neal v. O'Neal, 4 Watts & S. 130.

So, in an action on a joint debt a judgment cannot be entered against a part of the defendants for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, unless judgment is also entered against those defendants who make no defense. Murtland v. Floyd, 153 Pa. 99.

In Campbell v. Floyd (1893) 153 Pa. 94, it was said that when in an action against numerous defendants judgment is taken against one in default of appearance, against another in default of an affidavit of defense, against a third in default of a plea, and against the remaining defendants upon the verdict of a jury, the severance of the plaintiff's demand by the entry of the first of such final judgments was fatal at common law. The court said that this statute sanctions such several judgments for the purpose of lien, and the symmetry of the common-law proceedings was restored by blending them into one for all other purposes upon a final determination of the cause.

In Murtland v. Floyd, 153 Pa. 99, it was said that there is nothing whatever in the act sanctioning such a severance in the proceedings as the entry of a judgment against one only of two or more defendants equally in default.

In Finch v. Lamberton (1869) 62 Pa. 370, it was held that as a general rule, in joint actions, taking a "final" judgment by plaintiff against one defendant bars further proceedings in the same suit against the other. But where the judgment was by default and the prothonotary liquidates the sum without waiting for the trial and assessment for damages against the other, the liquidation being the act of the officer is amendable by striking it out.

In Noble v. Laley, 50 Pa. 281, where there was a joint action against three, and two confessed judgment before the trial of the action, it was said that when judgment by default goes against some of the defendants and the issue is tried as to others, there can be but one final judgment in a personal action.

In O'Neal v. O'Neal (1842) 4 Watts & S. 130, it was said that it was shown in Williams v. McFall, 2 Serg. & R. 280, that there cannot be two final judgments in debt (for the reason that as the contract is entire each of the defendants is entitled to the benefit of his codefendant's plea, and the plaintiff must proceed against all or none; to which may be added that there can be but one final judgment in any personal action).

Pennsylvania act April 11, 1848, Pub. Laws, 536, § 5, provides that "where a judgment shall be hereafter recovered against one or more of several copartners, joint or joint and several obligors, promisors, or contractors, without any plea in abatement, that all the parties to the instrument or contract on which the suit is founded are not made parties thereto, such judgment shall not be a bar to a recovery in any subsequent suit or suits against any person or persons who might have been joined in the action in which such judgment was obtained, whether the same shall be obtained amicably, or by adversary process.

Pennsylvania act April 4, 1877, Pub. Laws, 52, § 1, provides that "where judgment has been or may hereafter be obtained in any court of record of this commonwealth against one or more of several codefendants, in default of appearance, plea, or affidavit of defense, said judgment shall not be a bar to recovery in the same suit against the other defendants jointly and severally liable as co-obligors, copartners, or otherwise."

That an affidavit of defense by a co-obligor was filed and overruled was not sufficient to take the cause out of the act of 1877, and was not a bar. The court said: "The phrase, however, 'in default of appearance, plea, or affidavit of defense,' means, of course, in default of an appearance, plea, or affidavit sufficient in law." Bean v. Seyfert (1877) 12 Phila. 224. South Carolina.

In this state it is held that a judgment on a joint contract against a joint obligor is not a bar to an action against the other. Following Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215.

A judgment on an individual note of an ostensible partner is not a bar to an action on the original debt against all the partners. Watson v. Owens, 1 Rich. L. 111.

So, in an action on a joint bond a plea by one defendant of a former recovery on the same bond against his codefendant is no bar, as the bond was not merged in the judgment. Collins v. Lemasters, 1 Ball. L. 348, 21 Am. Dec. 469.

So in regard to a partnership debt. Union Bank v. Hodges, 11 Rich. L. 480.

In this case it was said that it may be conceded that the plea would have been held good in England, Massachusetts, and perhaps other states; but that in this state the decisions have been uniform that on a joint contract a plea by one defendant of a former recovery against his codefendant without satisfaction is no bar.

A former recovery against a sheriff alone without satisfaction is no bar to a subsequent joint action on his bond against himself and his sureties for the same default. Treasurers of the State v. Bates, 2 Ball. L. 362.

In this case the court said it is well settled that if one joint contractor is sued separately and a recovery had, and he is afterwards sued jointly with the others, he alone against whom the recovery was had can plead it in bar, and that the others have no right to make the objection if he does not choose to rely on it. The court further said that as to him it would not be a good plea in bar because a judgment against one joint contractor is a nullity.

A judgment against one of the makers of a joint and several note is not a bar to an action against the other maker who is severally liable unless the judgment be paid. Day v. Hill, 2 Speers, L. 628, 42 Am. Dec. 300.

But in Philson v. Bampfield, 1 Brev. 202, it was held that an action at law cannot be maintained upon a firm note against the estate of a deceased copartner after a judgment on such note against the surviving partner. The court said that the debt was merged in the judgment, and the estate is to be reached by proceedings in equity if the surviving partner is insolvent. Tennessee.

By an early statute in 1789 and by Tenn. Code 1871, § 2789 (Act 1789, chap. 57, § 5), all joint obligations are made joint and several, and therefore a judgment against one obligor is not a bar to a subsequent action against the other. The Code makes several provisions governing the prosecution of part of the obligors on a contract, but it seems that the plaintiff cannot drop the prosecution of a suit against one obligor without an entry of discontinuance, and proceed as to the others.

In SULLY V. CAMPBELL & POWDER, it was held that an obligor on a joint note, which in that state was made joint and several by statute, was liable for the unpaid balance, although a judgment had been taken against the obligor and was partly satisfied. This is in accord with the general rule.

Under this act a judgment against one partner is no bar to a suit against another member on the firm debt. Nichols v. Cheairs, 4 Sneed, 229.

So, a judgment against one obligor on a joint and several contract is no bar to a suit against another obligor. Christian v. Hoover, 6 Yerg. 505.

And in Hawkins v. Humble, 5 Coldw. 531, the same was said to be the rule as to joint obligations under the Code.

A judgment in favor of a sheriff not on the merits on a motion against him for default of his deputy is no bar to a proceeding against a deputy. The court said that where several are jointly or jointly and severally liable, a recovery against one does not prevent a suit against the other, and nothing short of satisfaction will constitute a bar to a subsequent suit against one so jointly liable. Witcher v. Oldham, 4 Sneed, 220.

In Greer v. Miller, 2 Overt. 187, Tipton v. Harris, Peck (Tenn.) 414, and Hutchins v. Sims, 7 Humph. 236, it was held that where an action was commenced against several joint defendants it could not be dropped as to some and proceeded in as to others; that there must be a dismissal as to others not proceeded against or a judgment by default taken, and then the writ of inquiry must be executed by the same jury which tries the issue as to those who plead.

Judge Cooper in his note to the case in Peck doubts the principle of these cases, and cites Code, §§ 2789-90.

In Hutchins v. Sims, 7 Humph. 236, it was said that Tenn. act 1820, chap. 25, § 2, and 1835, chap. 86, provide that in joint actions upon contracts a discharge of one or more jointly sued shall not prevent a judgment against him or them who may be liable, and that where suit may be commenced against more than one the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequit as to any one or more and proceed against the others. In this case the court said that there was no nolle entered, and the statutory mode of escape from the principles of the common law were not resorted to.

In Greer v. Miller, 2 Overt. 187, the court said that under North Carolina act 1789, in force in Tennessee, all assumpsits and obligations were made joint and several, and the plaintiff had his election to commence his suit against one or both of the parties; but that, having sued both and charged them with a joint contract, he was bound to prosecute his suit afterwards against both, and having voluntarily lost sight of one of the defendants, and left the cause as to him undecided or discontinued, the judgment was properly arrested as to the other.

In Pollard v. Huston, 7 Lea, 689, it was said that the plaintiff could dismiss his action whether on a contract as to any one or more of the defendants, and at any stage of the case, without prejudice to his right to proceed against the others, under Tenn. Code, § 2790, providing that in all actions on contracts a dismissal of suit as to one or more of those jointly sued or failure to recover as to one, shall not prevent a recovery against those defendants who may be liable, and § 2964, providing that the plaintiff may take a nonsuit or dismiss his action as to any one or more defendants, and § 4246, providing that the plaintiff may at any time during the pendency of the action dismiss as to any one or more of the defendants and proceed against the others.

43 L. R. A.

So, under Tenn. Code, §§ 2789-90, supra, in an action against a sheriff and the sureties on his official bond, the dismissal of the suit by the plaintiff as to one of the sureties did not affect his right to proceed against the other sureties. Garrison v. Hollins, 2 Lea, 684.

A surety on a judgment against two partners was entitled to maintain an action against a third partner to recover the amount paid by him. Lowry v. Hardwick, 4 Humph. 188.

In this case the court held that there was no merger, and that Tenn. act of assembly permitting a party to sue any one or more joint obligors or partners, does not make such suit a bar to a suit which may be subsequently brought against the remaining partner or joint obligor.

But a judgment in favor of a principal discharging him is a bar to a subsequent suit against a surety, this being regarded as an exception to the general rule of res inter alios acta. Gill v. Morris, 11 Heisk. 614, 27 Am. Rep. 744.

Texas.

The statute changes the common-law rule so that a judgment against part on a joint obligation is not a bar to a subsequent action against others. A discontinuance as to part of the defendants is not a bar to a further prosecution of the suit against others.

Sureties on a bond are not released by a judgment taken against the principal where they were not parties to that suit. Wooters v. Smith, 56 Tex. 198.

In this case it was said that at common law a judgment against one of several joint contractors merges the contract, but that Tex. Rev. Stat. § 1256, provides that a discontinuance as to parties not served shall not be a bar to a subsequent suit against them. It is held that the sureties do not stand in a more favorable attitude than they would if the suit had been directly upon the bond and they had not been served.

In Hinchman v. Riggins, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) § 294, it was said that Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1207 (act May 13, 1846, June 22, 1846, §§ 4, 45, 46, act January 25, 1840, March 16, 1840), providing that any principal obligor in any contract shall be sued either alone or jointly with any other party thereon, changes the common-law rule, and it is no longer necessary to join as defendants all joint obligors in a suit upon a joint contract. The court further said this is the first case in which this statute has been construed.

A discontinuance as to some defendants not served will not prevent proceedings against the defendants served, under Sayles's Tex. Civ. Stat. art. 1256 (Hart's Tex. Dig. art. 704, act 1846, p. 374, § 45), providing that where some of the defendants are not served the plaintiff may discontinue as to them and proceed against the others, or may continue the suit to the next term and take out new process, and no defendants against whom any suit may be discontinued shall be exonerated, but may at any time be proceeded against as if no suit had been brought. Burleson v. Henderson, 4 Tex. 49; Forbes v. Davis, 18 Tex. 268; Wooters v. Smith, 56 Tex. 198.

But in Whiting v. Turley (1842) Dallam, Dec. 453, where two were sued upon an assumed joint liability, and judgment was had as to one, the discontinuance after verdict as to the other was a discontinuance of the entire action.

This was prior to the statute changing the rule in such cases.

And where one of several defendants against whom a judgment had been rendered on an obligation that was joint, appealed and reversed the case, the reversal operated as to both defendants. Wood v. Smith, 11 Tex. 367.

Vermont.

A judgment against one of two obligors on a joint and several note extinguishes his liability, but is not a bar to a subsequent suit against the other obligor. Sawyer v. White, 19 Vt. 40.

But where an action was brought against one of the makers of a joint and several note, and the defense of payment prevailed, such defense is a discharge for the other maker and a bar to a suit against him, though not a party of record to the former adjudication. Spencer v. Dearth, 43 Vt. 98.

Virginia.

In early cases it was held that in a joint action against several parties plaintiff could not take a judgment by default against one and at another time a judgment on the merits as to another, or discontinue as to one and take a judgment as to another, and it was also held that there could be but one judgment in a joint action. To meet these decisions Va. Code, chap. 177, § 19, was passed and still further amended by the present Code, § 3396, which prevents a discontinuance as to any defendants being a bar to a subsequent suit, or a subsequent judgment in the same action. Notwithstanding this, where both defendants are sued in a joint action on a joint contract, the plaintiff cannot dismiss as to one and prosecute the other unless the defense to the first is for personal matters. It seems that, notwithstanding the Code, if a plaintiff brought an action against one joint obligor and took a judgment against him without reference to other joint obligors, or without following the Code provisions, such judgment would be a bar to a subsequent action against another obligor.

The early cases which held that in a joint action against several but one final judgment could be entered, were as follows: Jenkins v. Hurt, 2 Rand. (Va.) 448; Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. (Va.) 316; Peasley v. Boatwright, 2 Leigh, 196; Early v. Clarkson, 7 Leigh, 83; Baber v. Cook, 11 Leigh, 606; Stephoe v. Read, 19 Gratt. 1.

The same was also held in Gibson v. Beveridge, 90 Va. 696, where it was said that the common-law rule applicable in these case had been changed by Va. code 1898, § 3395 (same as Va. Code, chap. 177, § 19), providing that in an action on contract against two or more, the plaintiff may be barred as to one, yet he may have judgment against others. But the court held that this provision did not apply where the plea was joint and the plaintiff dismissed as to one in the absence of any showing that the defense as to the first was merely personal.

A judgment on a joint bond as to one in an action against two merges the debt and bars a subsequent action against both. Beasley v. Sims, 81 Va. 644.

And the same was said to be the rule in Corbin v. Planters' Nat. Bank, 87 Va. 661.

In Beasley v. Sims, 81 Va. 644, the court said that under Va. Code, chap. 167, § 50 (Code 1849, chap. 177, § 49), providing for a judgment against one defendant served with process and a discontinuance or subsequent service of process and judgment against the other defendant at the election of the plaintiff, the proceedings are required to be in that suit. The court further said that (Code 1860, chap. 177) chap. 173, § 19, providing for judgments against one defendant although the plaintiff may be barred as to another, meant that in a joint action against several of the contractors when all have been served with process, and where chap. 167, § 50, is inapplicable, the plaintiff must recover against all or none as at common law, unless 43 L. R. A.

some are discharged on a merely personal defense.

But in some cases under Va. Code, chap. 177, § 19 (Code 1898, § 3395), several judgments were entered in joint actions where the first judgments or discontinuances were said to be on personal defenses. Moffett v. Bickie, 21 Gratt. 280; Bush v. Campbell, 26 Gratt. 403; Muse v. Farmers' Bank, 27 Gratt. 252.

And in Pitts v. Spotts, 86 Va. 71, a joint action against partners and a confession of judgment by one was held not to affect a subsequent judgment against the other. But the Code and previous cases were not cited in this case.

A judgment on motion against one of two obligors on their joint bond did not merge the cause of action in the judgment, under Va. Code, § 3212, providing for judgments on motions on a joint obligation, and declaring in effect that there shall be no merger of the original cause of action until there has been a judgment against every person liable. Cahoon v. McCulloch, 92 Va. 177.

And a judgment against one on a joint and several contract is not a bar to a subsequent action against another. Corbin v. Planters' Nat. Bank, 87 Va. 661.

In this case it was said that the rule announced in Beasley v. Sims, 81 Va. 644, was changed by the present Code, § 3396, providing that where in an action against two or more defendants the process is served on part of them, the plaintiff may proceed to judgment as to any so served, and either discontinue as to others, or, as process is served, proceed to judgment as to them, and that such discontinuance as to any defendant shall not operate as a bar to any subsequent action which may be brought against him for the same cause. The court said that this discontinuance meant as to a defendant upon whom process had not been served.

West Virginia.

Under the Code plaintiff may have judgment against one although he falls as to another; but this is held to mean where he is entitled to recover against the remaining obligor on the contract sued on as contra-distinguished from recovering on the contract proved. He cannot split his judgments, but if he takes a default as to one and verdict as to another, he must take but one final judgment in the action.

West Virginia Code, chap. 131, § 19, p. 628, provides that in an action on contract against two or more defendants, although the plaintiff may be barred as to one, he may have judgment against the other of the defendants against whom he would have been entitled to recover had he sued them only. Chapter 125, § 52, p. 607, provides that where in an action against two or more defendants the process is served upon part of them, the plaintiff may proceed to judgment as to any so served and discontinue it as to the others, or, from time to time, as the process is served as to others, proceed to judgment as to them.

Under these sections in a joint action against A and B on a joint obligation where process was served on each of them, and A confessed judgment and a separate judgment was entered as to him, a judgment found against B at a subsequent term and entered against him was erroneous. But the supreme court corrected the error by directing a joint judgment. It was held that the judgment on the cognovit action by A did not merge the cause of action so as to exonerate B. Snyder v. Snyder, 9 W. Va. 415.

In this case the court said that this statute did not change the original rule that in a joint action upon a joint or joint and several obligation with process served upon all, there must be a joint judgment.

Under these sections of the Code it was held that where a joint suit was brought on a joint and several obligation, and the declaration showed that the defendants might have been sued separately, and one defendant confessed judgment, a judgment taken against the others at the next term was held to be valid notwithstanding such prior judgment. Hoffman v. Bircher, 22 W. Va. 537.

Under these sections the plaintiff may dismiss his action against any of the parties to a suit on a joint contract, and proceed against the remainder. Carlson v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 207.

In Choen v. Guthrie, 15 W. Va. 100, it was said that the most natural construction of W. Va. Code, chap. 131, § 19, p. 628, is that the plaintiff, though barred or defeated in his action as to some of the defendants, may nevertheless have a judgment against those of the defendants against whom he would have been entitled to judgment had he sued them only on the "contract alleged" in the declaration. The court said the other construction is that if defeated by some of the defendants the plaintiff may recover against others against whom he would have been entitled to judgment had he sued them only on the "contract as proven" at the trial.

In Enos v. Stansbury, 18 W. Va. 477, the first construction of this statute was said to be correct.

Wisconsin.

The Code provisions attempt to obviate some of the provisions of the common-law rule, but notwithstanding them it was held that a judgment against one of several joint debtors is a bar to a subsequent action against the others. On a joint and several contract where judgment is taken against one defendant, proceedings by scire facias will not lie to make another obligor a party to the judgment, but a new action is required. In such a case a prior judgment will not be a merger.

A judgment against one of several joint debtors is a bar to a subsequent action against the others as the debt is merged in the judgment. Lauer v. Dandow, 48 Wis. 638.

In this case the court said that a joint debt being indivisible cannot be merged or canceled as to one and exist as to another joint debtor.

In Bowen v. Hastings, 47 Wis. 232, it was said that the rule of the common law is recognized by Wis. Rev. Stat. § 2884, providing that where an action is against two or more jointly liable, and the summons is not served on all, the plaintiff may have judgment against all jointly indebted to be enforced against the joint property of all the defendants, or where the defendants are severally liable the plaintiff may have judgment against the defendant served as if he were the only party proceeded against, and where all are served judgment may be taken against any of them severally if he would have been entitled to judgment if the action had been against him alone, and by § 2795, giving a remedy in such cases by a proceeding in the nature of a scire facias against the joint debtors not served with process, to require them to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment. The court said that in a suit on a joint contract if only one is summoned and he should defeat the action, it would bar another action against the remaining obligor.

Under § 2884, the plaintiff in an action on a joint contract may have a judgment against one although he may fall as to the other defendant. Smith v. Cassell, 70 Wis. 567.

But in an action on a joint contract against five defendants where but one defendant was served and another one appeared, the plaintiff could not proceed against the defendant alone upon whom service was made, as a judgment upon such joint contract is an entire thing and cannot be separated into parts. The court said that Wis. Rev. Stat. § 2884, subd. 1, authorizing the plaintiff to proceed against the defendants served, did not mean that plaintiff could proceed against one where two were served, and that an action on a joint contract could not be tried in fractions. Nichols v. Crittenden, 74 Wis. 459.

Where service was had upon one of two "joint and several" debtors, and judgment taken against him, it was improper to prosecute proceedings against the other to make him a party to the same judgment, under Wis. Rev. Stat. 761, § 2795, giving a proceeding in the nature of scire facias against the "joint" debtor not served, to hold him bound by the judgment in the same manner as if he had been originally summoned. Dill v. White, 52 Wis. 456.

In this case the court said that where the obligation is several as well as joint it is divisible, and a judgment upon it against one debtor did not merge the several obligation of another debtor not summoned, and the plaintiff could bring another action upon it against the latter, but not under the statute.

United States.

The first case was Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215. This was an action on a note signed in the name of A, alleged to have been made by the firm of A and B doing business under the name of A, and in another count in assumption alleging goods sold to A and B under the firm name of A. The defendant B pleaded a judgment obtained by plaintiff against A on that note as a bar, and that it was for the same debt. The supreme court held the plea bad and directed judgment on the first count of the declaration.

This decision has been much questioned, and is considered as overruled by subsequent cases in the same court. If the court had rendered this decision on the assumption count, and simply held that the first judgment was on a personal obligation of one of the joint debtors, similar to Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East, 251, it might have been followed.

It is now held in the Federal courts that a judgment against one joint obligor is a bar to a subsequent action against the remaining obligors for the same debt. It was also held in United States v. Cushman, 2 Sumn. 426, that a judgment against both obligors on a joint and several debt was no bar to a several action against one of them. But this was overruled in United States v. Price, 9 How. 83, 13 L. ed. 56. A judgment against one joint and several obligor is no bar to a subsequent action against another unless such judgment is satisfied.

A judgment against a postmaster on his official bond for moneys not accounted for is a bar to a subsequent action against the postmaster and his assistant for the same money, where they had been in the habit of jointly depositing the postoffice money in the bank in their joint name. Trafton v. United States, 3 Story, 654.

In this case Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215, was distinguished, and also questioned.

And a judgment on a bond given by a partner in an admiralty seizure case barred a subsequent suit against the remaining partners. United States v. Ames, 99 U. S. 35, 25 L. ed. 295.

This case in effect overrules Sheehy v. Mandeville, although it does not cite it. But other cases are approved which deny the authority of the case of Sheehy v. Mandeville.

A judgment on a copartnership contract against one of the partners is a bar to a subsequent suit against any or all of the obligors. Woodworth v. Spaffords, 2 McLean, 168.

This case says in regard to Chief Justice Marshall's decision in Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215, that "it would be doing injustice to the reputation of that great jurist to assume that he intended to lay it down as a sound principle of law, that separate judgments can be recovered on a contract joint in its terms and character, except where such a course may be authorized by express legislative enactment. Such a doctrine would destroy the well-settled distinction between joint and joint and several contracts, and would, in effect, vest in courts a power to change, by construction, the contracts of parties, and give them an operation not within their contemplation or design."

In United States v. Cushman, 2 Sumn. 426, it was held that where a contract was joint and several a judgment against both the obligors was no bar to a several action against each of them. It was said that a several judgment against each was no bar to a joint action against both.

But this case was overruled in United States v. Price, 9 How. 83, 13 L. ed. 56, in which it was said that on a joint and several bond the obligee may elect to sue them jointly or severally, but having once made his election and obtained a joint judgment his bond is merged in the judgment. "One judgment against all or each of the obligors is a satisfaction and extinguishment of the bond."

And the same was said to be the rule in Sessions v. Johnson, 95 U. S. 347, 24 L. ed. 596.

In Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 14, 26 L. ed. 61, it was held that the liability of the maker and indorser of a note was not joint but several, and therefore a judgment in an action against the indorser upon the contract of indorsement could not bar a separate judgment against the maker, especially where the maker was not notified by the indorsers of the pendency of the action against them.

In Sessions v. Johnson, 95 U. S. 347, 24 L. ed. 596, Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. 231, 18 L. ed. 783, and Willings v. Consequa, Pet. C. C. 301, it was said that a judgment against one of two joint contractors is a bar to an action against the other.

In Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. 231, 18 L. ed. 783, the court said that the decision in Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215, has never received the entire approbation of the profession, and its correctness and authority have been doubted in numerous instances by the highest tribunals of the different states, and have been denied in Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227; Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 148; Wann v. McNulty, 7 Ill. 359, 43 Am. Dec. 58; Smith v. Black, 9 Serg. & R. 142, 11 Am. Dec. 686; King v. Hoare, 18 Mees. & W. 495, 8 Jur. 1127, 2 Dowl. & L. 382, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 29; and Trafton v. United States, 3 Story, 651.

But in Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. 231, 18 L. ed. 783, it was held that where only one was served with process, and judgment had passed against all, it was not a bar to a suit against the defendant not served in the former action, under Mich. Comp. Laws, vol. 2, chap. 133, p. 1219, providing that in actions against two or more jointly indebted upon any joint contract, if the process against all shall have been duly served on either the judgment shall be against all the defendants as if they had all been served, and shall be conclusive as to those served, but against every other defendant it shall be evidence only of the extent of the plaintiff's demand after the liability of such defendant shall have been established by other evidence.

English and Canadian Cases.

An action and judgment against one joint contractor is a bar to a further action upon the same contract against the remaining cocontractor, but where the prior judgment is upon a bill of exchange or check given by one of the joint obligors, a judgment thereon is not a bar to a subsequent suit on the original obligation against the other. So, where the original action is joint and several a judgment as to one without satisfaction is not a bar to a subsequent suit against another obligor.

Joint contracts.

A judgment against one cocontractor on a joint simple contract is a bar to an action against the other cocontractor. King v. Hoare, 18 Mees. & W. 494, 8 Jur. 1127, 2 Dowl. & L. 382, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 29.

This is the leading case in England on this question, denying the authority of Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch, 253, 3 L. ed. 215, and approving Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227.

The same was held in Harris v. Dunn, 18 U. C. Q. B. 302, where B pleaded a former recovery against A, and filed an affidavit showing that A was a resident of the province. This was held a good plea under common-law procedure act 1856, § 73, providing that in an action against a joint contractor the action shall not abate on account of any other joint contractor not being made defendant, unless the party pleading such nonjoinder shall file an affidavit showing that such defendant is living in Upper Canada and state his residence. To meet this plea the plaintiff alleged that B was a nonresident of Upper Canada at the time of the judgment against A. But the court held that this would not justify a second suit, and that the statute was only to enable one joint contractor to be sued.

And a judgment on a joint partnership debt against one member of the firm is a bar to subsequent proceedings against both. Ex parte Higgins, 3 DeG. & J. 33, 27 L. J. Bankr. N. S. 27, 4 Jur. N. S. 595.

And a judgment against two persons for borrowed money is a bar to another action by the same plaintiff against a third person who was afterwards discovered to have been a partner and interested in the business for which the money had been borrowed. Kendall v. Hamilton, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 504, 48 L. J. C. P. N. S. 705, 41 L. T. N. S. 418, 28 Week. Rep. 97.

In this case the Lord Chancellor said the first judgment was obtained before the judicature act came into operation, and if this judgment became pleadable in bar, he could not see how this defense is taken away from him by the judicature act subsequently coming into operation. Lord Penzance, dissenting, said that the judicature act, 36 & 37 Vict. chap. 66, rule 9, providing that "the court or a judge may, on such terms as appear to be just, order that the name of any party who ought to have been joined, or whose presence before the court may be necessary in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action, shall be added," altered the rights of joint contractors in respect of procedure, and a joint contractor having lost his right to be sued only in conjunction with his cocontractor can no longer be heard to maintain that his cocontractor must be sued with him, or that, it being impossible so to sue him by reason of his having been sued already, he is himself discharged. He further said the effect of that act was to sweep away the legal right of a joint contractor to have the other contractor joined, and the creditor became entitled to sue the parties severally.

In King v. Hoare, 13 Mees. & W. 494, 8 Jur. 1127, 2 Dowl. & L. 382, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 29, it was said that "in the case of Lechmere v. Fletcher, 1 Car. & M. 634, 3 Tyrw. 450, Bayley, B., strongly intimates the opinion of the court of exchequer, that the judgment against one was a bar for both of two joint debtors, though the point was not actually ruled as the case did not require it."

In Sloan v. Creasor, 22 U. C. Q. B. 127, it was held that a judgment against a bailiff for a tort was a bar to a subsequent action of covenant against the bailiff and his sureties on the bailiff's official bond.

But a judgment recovered by one of several joint debtors cannot be pleaded as a defense to a subsequent action against the other joint debtor in respect to the same cause of action, where the plea does not show that the judgment was recovered on a ground which operated as a discharge for all. Phillips v. Ward, 2 Hurlst. & C. 717, 88 L. J. Exch. N. S. 7, 9 Jur. N. S. 1182, 9 L. T. N. S. 345, 12 Week. Rep. 106.

In this case Bramwell, B., said that this plea does not show that the former action was successfully resisted on some ground common to all the joint debtors, but only that the court gave judgment for the defendant which may have been on some ground purely personal, as infancy, bankruptcy or insolvency.

Where prior judgment is had on a separate contract.

A judgment on a bill of exchange given by one of three joint covenantors to a lease, is not a bar to an action of covenant against the three, where it is not shown that such bill of exchange as accepted in, or had produced satisfaction. Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East, 251.

This case was distinguished in Cambeport v. Chapman, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 229 (overruled in Wegg Prosser v. Evans [1895] 1 Q. B. 108, 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 1), on the ground that there the covenant was a security of a higher nature and a bill of exchange, and also that the bill in that case was a collateral security and was not given for the same liability or debt as was secured by the covenant.

Where one of two joint obligors on a note had given a warrant of attorney to a party as trustee for the obligee to secure the amount of the note, and a further advance, and a judgment was entered thereon, it was held that this did not merge the note or discharge the other obligor. Bell v. Banks, 3 Mann. & G. 267, 3 Scott, N. R. 407.

And in Wegg Prosser v. Evans [1895] 1 Q. B. 108, 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 1, it was held that an unsatisfied judgment against one joint contractor on a check given by him alone for a joint debt is not a bar to an action against the other joint contractor on the original contract. Following Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East, 251, Overruling Cambeport v. Chapman, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 229.

The case of Cambeport v. Chapman, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 229, held that an unsatisfied judgment against one partner on a bill of exchange given by him alone for a joint debt was a bar to an action against the other partner on the original contract.

Joint and several contractors.

In Whiteacres v. Hamkinson, Cro. Car. 75, it was held that on a joint and several bond an execution and ca. sa. against one of the obligors who was released by the sheriff was no bar to a suit against the other.

In Blumfield's Case, 5 Coke, 86b, it was held that where two were bound jointly and severally and one was sued and taken in execution and 43 L. R. A.

afterwards the other, and the first escapes, the second cannot have audita querela until the plaintiff is satisfied.

And a judgment against one of the makers of a joint and several note on a cognovit and a partial levy is not a discharge of the other. Ayrey v. Davenport, 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 474.

And the holder of a bill of exchange may sue a prior indorser notwithstanding he has ineffectually taken in execution the body of a subsequent indorser and afterwards set him at liberty, as each indorser is independent of the rest. Hayling v. Mullhall, 2 W. Bl. 1235.

In Claxton v. Swift, 1 Lutw. 362, Reversing 3 Mod. 86, 2 Show. 494, it was held that if the indorsee of a bill on default of payment by the acceptor recovers against one drawer but does not take out execution, this recovery is not a bar to a second action on the same bill by the same indorsee against the first indorser, as the liability is joint and several.

In Brown v. Wootton, Cro. Jac. 73, Yelv. 67, it was said that upon an obligation against two, every one of them is chargeable and liable to the entire debt, and therefore a recovery against the one is no bar against the other until satisfaction. Speaking of this, Parke, B., says in King v. Hoare, 13 Mees. & W. 494, 2 Dowl. & L. 382, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 29, 8 Jur. 1127, that by looking at the report in Yelverton it seems to refer to the case of a joint and several obligation against two.

In Yelv. 68a, it was said: "With regard to co-obligors, the earliest authorities show that a judgment and writ of execution sued forth is not a bar without satisfaction." That "in 4 Hen. VII. 8, and 45 Edw. III. 4, it was held that taking the body of one co-obligor in execution was no satisfaction, and that the plaintiff might implead the other and commit him also. Brooke's New Cases, III. 112. And so is the law at this day. Bacon, Abr. Obligations, D. 4. In 2 Show. 394, Dyke v. Mercer, it was decided that the seizure and sale by the sheriff on a fieri facias, of the goods of one joint and several obligor, was no bar to an action against the other—that there was no satisfaction, unless the plaintiff had received the money. See also Cro. Car. 75, Whiteacres v. Hamkinson."

This evidently was only intended to state the rule in suits on joint and several obligations.

In King v. Hoare, 13 Mees. & W. 494, 8 Jur. 1127, 2 Dowl. & L. 382, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 29, it was said that where a debt was joint and several, a judgment against one of the obligors was not a bar to an action against the other.

In Higgins's Case, 6 Coke, 44b, it was said "and as to the case which has been objected, that where two are bound jointly and severally and the obligee has judgment against one of them that yet he may sue the other, it was well agreed."

In Dyke v. Mercer, 2 Show. 394, where two were bound in a bond, and one defendant was sued, and he pleaded that his co-obligor was sued to judgment and thereupon a fi. fa. and that the money was levied by the sheriff, judgment was given for the plaintiff, that the plea was naught on the ground that the co-obligor could plead nothing but satisfaction actually made.

The cases cited in the decision indicate that this was a joint and several obligation.

Cases regarding "right to take a judgment against one party" in a joint action are not intended to be included in this note, except so far as they indicate that such a judgment would prevent a further judgment against other parties.

I. T.

Lettie WEEKS, Appt.,
v.

Frank McNULTY et al.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. Excluding answers to pertinent questions is not ground for reversal unless the record affirmatively shows that the answers would have been competent and material.
2. Failure to construct fire escapes on a hotel as required by an ordinance does not make the proprietor liable for the death of a guest by fire, unless that was caused by the lack of the fire escapes.
3. Want of fire escapes is not shown to be the cause of the death of a guest in a hotel by fire, where it is not shown that he was at a window or in any position where a fire escape would have afforded him any benefit, but there is evidence that he had locked himself in his room and tried to break the door to make his escape, and also that he could have safely escaped by leaping from the window to the roof of an adjoining building.
4. Putting in evidence a portion of the cross-examination of a party in a prior case to show his admission will entitle him to have all his evidence read so far as it bears upon or explains the admission.
5. The failure of a party to offer himself as a witness does not justify any prejudicial inferences against him, unless it is shown that there were facts peculiarly within his knowledge which were not known so fully to any other witness.

(November 12, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Knox County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for death of plaintiff's husband which was alleged to have occurred while he was a guest in defendants' hotel by their negligence in permitting the hotel to burn without taking precautions to extinguish the flame or to get the guests out. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jerome Templeton and Charles T. Cates, Jr., for appellant:

The verdict of the jury is not supported by any material reliable testimony.

Young v. Cowden, 98 Tenn. 581.

The duty to place fire escapes on hotels by the owners thereof, under the first section of the ordinance, was absolute and mandatory.

It was intended for the benefit of the public and individuals using and occupying the building coming within description of the ordinance.

Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 23 L. ed. 410; Rose v. King, 49 Ohio St. 213, 15 L. R. A. 160; McLaughlin v. Armfield, 58 Hun. 376; Willy v. Mulledy, 78 N. Y. 314, 34 Am. Rep. 536.

For a violation of this ordinance a right of action would lie at the instance of the injured party.

NOTE.—For duty as to fire escapes, see note to Rose v. King (Ohio) 15 L. R. A. 160; also Panley v. Steam Gauge & Lantern Co. (N. Y.) 43 L. R. A.

Bott v. Pratt, 33 Minn. 323, 53 Am. Rep. 47; Osborne v. McMasters, 40 Minn. 103; Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410; Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 354.

The principal matters of controversy on questions of fact were as to (1) the dangerous condition of the premises; (2) the elevator shaft and the manner of its opening into the second and third floors; (3) the character and habits of John Davis, the watchman in charge of the hotel from 11 o'clock, P. M., to 4 o'clock, A. M.—during which period plaintiff's husband lost his life.

All of these points touched matters coming within the personal knowledge of defendant McNulty, or should have been within his knowledge, and the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses on said points was prejudicial to said defendant and favorable to the contention of plaintiff.

Defendant McNulty failed to go on the stand and deny such statements. Under these circumstances the presumption afforded by law was that the contention of plaintiff was true—otherwise the same would have been denied by defendant.

Dunlap v. Haynes, 4 Heisk. 476.

The liability of hotel keepers is more severe than that of any other bailees, except a common carrier.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 51; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574; Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 4, 53 Am. Rep. 242.

It is very nearly absolute.

Myers v. Cottrill, 5 Biss. 465.

Of the goods of a guest he is an insurer, except as to losses by the act of God, or the public enemy.

Manning v. Wells, 9 Humph. 746, 51 Am. Dec. 688; Hale, Bailment, 277.

For the guest's horse he is bound to provide safe stabling.

Dickerson v. Rogers, 4 Humph. 179, 40 Am. Dec. 642.

As to the personal safety of the guest he is bound to use ordinary care to put and keep his premises in a reasonably safe condition for persons who become his guests, and to take such precautions for the safety of his guest while in the hotel as would ordinarily be taken by a prudent and careful man under like circumstances. And this ordinary care is proportionate to the danger, and whenever the circumstances require great care, it is but ordinary care under the circumstances.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 401, and note; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Griffin, 100 Ind. 221, 50 Am. Rep. 783.

He is liable for exposing his guest to an infectious disease.

Gilbert v. Hoffman, 66 Iowa, 205, 55 Am. Rep. 263. See Nandys v. Florence, 47 L. J. C. P. N. S. 593; Rommel v. Schambacher, 120 Pa. 579.

A man cannot claim that he is not negligent because others ordinarily or commonly do the same thing.

15 L. R. A. 104; Schmalzried v. White (Tenn.) 32 L. R. A. 782; and Huda v. American Glucose Co. (N. Y.) 40 L. R. A. 411.

Hamilton v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 36 Iowa, 31; Koester v. Ottumwa, 34 Iowa, 41; Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 194, 8 Am. Rep. 313.

Messrs. Washburn, Pickle, & Turner, for appellees:

The innkeeper is bound for the exercise of only ordinary care for the protection of his guests, though some of the cases hold a stricter rule as to the property of guests, and make the innkeeper an insurer thereof. This strict liability, however, as to property, does not apply to boarders.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 32.

The negligence of the innkeeper must be shown to have been the proximate cause of the injury to his guest.

Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-press & S. Co. 90 Tenn. 353, 13 L. R. A. 518; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 91 Tenn. 699, 17 L. R. A. 691; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Zopfi, 93 Tenn. 374.

That a fire occurred and an injury resulted affords no presumption of negligence against the innkeeper.

East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Stewart, 13 Lea, 432; Young v. Bransford, 12 Lea, 232; Sommers v. Mississippi & T. R. Co. 7 Lea, 201; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 91 Tenn. 699, 17 L. R. A. 691; Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-press & S. Co. 90 Tenn. 307, 13 L. R. A. 518; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1227; Cutler v. Bonney, 30 Mich. 259, 18 Am. Rep. 127.

Even where the innkeeper has been guilty of negligence, the guest's action may be defeated by his own fault or negligence, immediately causing his damage.

It is an open question as to whether failure to provide the hotel with fire escapes is negligence per se.

Schmalzried v. White, 97 Tenn. 36, 32 L. R. A. 782.

The failure to comply with an absolute requirement of an ordinance as to putting up fire escapes does not render the delinquent party liable to civil action for damages resulting from such neglect, especially where the ordinance provides a penalty, and does not provide on its face for the civil liability.

For an injury resulting from an act done in violation of a prohibitory statute, a civil action lies.

Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 458, 30 L. R. A. 82.

But for injury resulting from an act done in violation of an ordinance, the same rule does not prevail.

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Erwin, 89 Pa. 71, 33 Am. Rep. 726; Flynn v. Canton Co. 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603; Heeney v. Sprague, 11 R. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 502; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532.

The whole statement containing the admission must be taken together, whether the admission is verbal or written.

Wood, Practice Ev. § 160.

The custom or usage of a particular trade and business, but not of a particular individual, is the true meaning of ordinary care in the conduct of that trade or business.

Kelton v. Taylor, 11 Lea, 264, 47 Am. Rep. 43 L. R. A.

284; Lancaster Mills v. Merchants' Cotton-press & S. Co. 89 Tenn. 2; Standard Oil Co. v. Swan, 89 Tenn. 434, 10 L. R. A. 366.

Messrs. Mynott, Fowler, & Mynott also for appellees.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff brings this suit to recover damages for the death of her husband, Arthur E. Weeks, which is alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the defendants. The grounds of liability alleged in the declaration are: First, that defendants were owners and proprietors of the Hotel Knox, a public inn in the city of Knoxville, and had negligently permitted said hotel to be in an unsafe and dangerous condition; and second, that defendants had not employed a sufficient complement of servants for the protection of the hotel and guests; and, third, that the servants employed were incompetent, whereby said hotel was on April 9, 1897, destroyed by fire, and plaintiff's intestate, Arthur E. Weeks, who was a guest therein, lost his life. The more specific grounds of negligence are stated in the second count of the declaration, viz.: That defendants had failed to provide fire escapes, as ordered by an ordinance of the city of Knoxville, or other reasonable means of escape from said building; that defendants failed to arouse deceased, or give him proper warning of said fire, and that this failure was due to defendant's omission in not employing a responsible watchman. It is further alleged that the fire was caused, and said hotel destroyed by the negligence of defendants in allowing the cellar of the storehouse, which was situated next door to said hotel, to be filled with inflammable material. Defendants pleaded not guilty. The case was tried by a special jury, to whom a large volume of testimony was submitted. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appealed, and has assigned errors.

The facts necessary to be stated are that the defendant Frank McNulty was the owner and proprietor of a public inn in the city of Knoxville, known as "Hotel Knox." Plaintiff's intestate, Arthur Weeks, was a traveling man, representing the Rochester Stamping Works and the Robinson Cutlery Company, of Rochester, N. Y. On the evening of April 7, 1897, said Weeks reached the city of Knoxville, registered at the Hotel Knox, and was assigned to room 49 on the third floor. About 3 o'clock in the morning following, Hotel Knox was destroyed by fire, and said Weeks perished in the flames. The fire was first discovered by the night watchman of the hotel, who immediately gave the alarm, ascended the stairway leading to the second and third floors, knocked upon the doors, and made every effort to arouse the guests. It is in proof that the guests were all aroused and escaped, excepting deceased and one other. It is in evidence that one of the guests, as he passed out, heard someone in 49 pounding at the door, and noticed that he had kicked out one of the panels. If this evidence is to be credited, it tends to show that deceased heard the alarm, but had unfortunately fastened himself in, or, in the excitement, had lost all command of his faculties. It is also shown that parties occupying rooms on the same floor with deceased, immediately contiguous, and across the hall in opposite and diagonal directions, all received the alarm, and succeeded in making their escape. The building was provided with a front and rear stairway, but had no fire escapes. South of the Hotel Knox, and immediately adjoining, was the banking house of the Third National Bank, which being only one story in height, several of the guests leaped upon its roof from the burning hotel building. This mode of escape was accessible to deceased, since his window overlooked the roof, but it is not shown he had knowledge of it.

The general rule of law governing the liability of an innkeeper is that he is not an insurer of the person of his guest against injury, but his obligation is merely to exercise reasonable care, that his guest may not be injured by anything happening through the innkeeper's negligence. 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 32. "There is no natural presumption," said this court, "that a fire, the origin of which is unknown, was the result of the want of care of the owner or occupant of the premises of its origin. The ancient rule of the common law, which presumed negligence in such cases, was pronounced in the reported cases to be harsh and unreasonable, and was by Stat. 6 Anne, chap. 31, abrogated. The courts of this country, whether regarding the statute of Anne as in force or not, have unanimously held that negligence or misconduct was the gist of the action against one upon whose premises a fire had originated, and that such negligence would not be presumed from mere proof of the loss by fire communicated from the premises of another." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Manchester Mills, 88 Tenn. 659. It must be shown that the negligence of the innkeeper in this case was the proximate cause of the fire and the consequent injuries. Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-press & S. Co. 90 Tenn. 353, 13 L. R. A. 518; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 91 Tenn. 699, 17 L. R. A. 691; Postal Teleg-Cable Co. v. Zopf, 93 Tenn. 374. We understand these principles were substantially charged by the circuit judge, and the issues of fact have been resolved by the jury in favor of the defendants. We find material evidence in the record to sustain their findings, and, under the rule, the verdict cannot be disturbed on this assignment.

The third assignment is that the court erred in excluding testimony showing that defendant McNulty had stored in the rear of the grocery store, on the ground floor and near the elevator shaft, oils and other combustible materials. Counsel is in error in his statement of the action of the court. The grocery store, it appears, adjoins the hotel, and is situated just north of it. It was owned by McNulty, the proprietor of Hotel Knox. The object of this inquiry was to show that defendants had been guilty of negligence in storing oils and other inflammable substances on the ground floor of the grocery store near the elevator shaft. This testimony was excepted to by defendants on the ground that no such negligence was alleged in the declaration. The negligence alleged was that defendants had permitted the hotel to be in an unsafe and dangerous condition, and that they had filled the cellar with inflammable materials, but there was no allegation of negligence in storing oils and other combustible material in the grocery store on the floor above the basement. Moreover, it seems defendants were permitted to prove that coal oil was kept in the grocery store, but when the question was asked how near the coal oil was kept to the elevator shaft, an objection was interposed by defendants' counsel, which was sustained by the court. If it be conceded that the action of the court in sustaining the objection was erroneous, it is not shown in the bill of exceptions what the witness would have answered. It has been frequently held by this court that the refusal of the trial court to permit answers to pertinent questions affords no cause for reversal unless the record shows affirmatively that the answers would have been competent and material evidence. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Barnes, 95 Tenn. 271; Holmark v. Molin, 5 Coldw. 484; State v. Turner, 6 Baxt. 203.

The fourth assignment is that the court erred in excluding the ordinance of the city of Knoxville requiring the owners and keepers of hotels to erect fire escapes thereon. The objection offered to this testimony was that the ordinance in question contemplated that notice to erect fire escapes must be given to the owner of the property by the board of public works, and that no such notice was given to the owner and proprietor of Hotel Knox. The declaration, as already observed, alleged that defendants had failed to provide fire escapes for Hotel Knox, "as ordered by an ordinance of the city of Knoxville." The insistence of counsel for defendants is that this ordinance contains no absolute requirement for the construction of fire escapes, but only provides that the same may be required by the board of public works if in their judgment they are deemed necessary. It is further insisted that, under the ordinance, the supervision, control, and direction of everything pertaining to fire escapes, including the number, locality, strength, capacity, and mode of structure, are committed to the board of public works, and that no plans or directions were ever furnished defendants by said board. It is insisted, however, that failure to comply with even an absolute requirement of a municipal ordinance in the erection of fire escapes will not render the delinquent party liable to a civil action for damages resulting from such neglect, especially where the ordinance provides a penalty, and does not provide on its face for the civil liability. It is conceded that a civil action will lie for an act done in violation of a prohibitory state law. Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 458, 30 L. R. A. 82. But it is insisted that a different rule prevails, when the act done is in violation of a city ordinance. This precise question was left open and undecided by this court in Schmalzeried v.

White, 97 Tenn. 45, 32 L. R. A. 782. It was held in Osborne v. McMasters, 40 Minn. 103, where a statute or municipal ordinance imposes upon any person a specific duty for the protection or benefit of others, if he neglects to perform that duty, he is liable to those for whose benefit or protection it was imposed, for any injuries of the character which the statute or ordinance was designed to prevent, and which were proximately produced by such neglect. In Bott v. Pratt, 33 Minn. 323, 53 Am. Rep. 47, it was held that where a city ordinance, in pursuance of the charter, makes it unlawful to leave a team standing unfastened or unguarded in a street, anyone injured by a violation thereof may maintain an action against the wrongdoer. In Salsbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 354, it appeared that defendant had suspended a sign over a street in Boston, in violation of a public ordinance of the city. During an extraordinary gale the sign was blown down, and a bolt, part of the fastenings, was hurled against plaintiff's window, causing damage, for which action was brought. Held, that defendant was liable, notwithstanding due care was exercised in constructing and fastening the sign. The reason was that the defendant had placed and kept the sign there illegally, and this illegal act contributed to plaintiff's injury. In Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410, the action was to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff, a boy eight or nine years old, who lost his arm by being run over by one of the defendant's cars. The particular negligence charged in the declaration was the omission of the railroad company to build a fence on the west line of its right of way, as required by an ordinance of the city of Chicago. The court held that an ordinance passed in pursuance of legislative authority has the force of law within the limits of the city; and although, in case of injury to persons by reason of the failure of the company to erect such fence, such default is not conclusive of liability irrespective of contributory negligence by plaintiff, yet an action will lie for the personal injury, and this breach of duty will be evidence of negligence. "The duty," says Mr. Justice Matthews, "is due, not to the city as a municipal body, but to the public, considered as composed of individual persons, and each person specially injured by the breach of the obligation is entitled to his individual compensation and to an action for its recovery. 'The nature of the duty,' said Justice Cooley, in Taylor v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 45 Mich. 74, 40 Am. Rep. 457, 'and the benefits to be accomplished through its performance, must generally determine whether it is a duty to the public in part or exclusively, or whether individuals may claim that it is a duty imposed wholly or in part for their especial benefit.' " We are aware there is a line of cases which holds that when the duties enjoined by ordinance are due to the municipality or to the public at large, and not as composed of individuals, the rule is different, and an action will not lie for a breach of the ordinance. In many cases of the latter class it was held that the owners of land abutting on streets were liable to the city alone for the breach of ordinances requiring such owners to keep sidewalks clear of snow and ice and in good repair, and that they were not liable in damages to persons injured by their neglect to perform the duties enjoined by such ordinances. These cases, it is said, proceed upon the ground that it is the sole duty of the city to keep the streets in good repair and clear of snow and ice. See Flynn v. Canton Co. 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603; Heeney v. Sprague, 11 R. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 502; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Ervin, 89 Pa. 71, 33 Am. Rep. 726. An ordinance which a municipal corporation is authorized to make is as binding on all persons within the corporate limits as any statute or other law of the state, and all persons interested are bound to take notice of its existence. Bott v. Pratt, 33 Minn. 323, 53 Am. Rep. 47; Heland v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 407, 81 Am. Dec. 670; Vandine's Case, 6 Pick. 187, 17 Am. Dec. 351; Gilmore v. Holt, 4 Pick. 258; Johnson v. Simonton, 43 Cal. 242-249. The duty to erect fire escapes required by this ordinance is not due simply to the municipality or public at large, but was a regulation designed for the peculiar benefit and protection of individuals. It is well settled that, when a statute commands or prohibits a thing for the benefit of a person, he shall have a remedy upon the same statute for the thing enacted for his benefit, or for a wrong done him contrary to its terms. Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 463, 30 L. R. A. 82; Pauley v. Steam Gauge & Lantern Co. 131 N. Y. 90, 15 L. R. A. 194; Willy v. Mulledy, 78 N. Y. 314, 34 Am. Rep. 536. We do not, however, decide the effect of the breach of an ordinance in fixing civil liability, nor do we adjudicate the proper construction of the ordinance offered in evidence, since neither question is necessarily involved in this case, for the following reason, namely: There is no proof in the record even tending to show that the deceased lost his life in consequence of the failure to construct fire escapes as provided by the city ordinance. The principle is recognized in all the cases that a liability cannot be predicated alone upon the breach of an ordinance, but it must affirmatively appear that the injury sustained resulted proximately from said breach. In Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 463, 30 L. R. A. 82, we said: "So we think the employment of the minor in violation of the provision of the statute in question was an act of negligence on the part of the defendant, and a causal connection between the employment and the injuries sustained by the boy being shown, there is liability. . . . The breach of the statute is actionable negligence whenever it is shown that the injuries were sustained in consequence of the employment." In other words, it is not enough that negligence exists, or that the ordinance was violated, unless it proximately caused the injury. Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-press

& S. Co. 90 Tenn. 353, 13 L. R. A. 518; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 91 Tenn. 699, 17 L. R. A. 691; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Zopf, 93 Tenn. 374.

After a very attentive reading of the record in this cause, we have failed to discover any causal connection between the death of plaintiff's intestate and the failure of defendants in error to erect fire escapes, as required by the ordinance. It is not shown that deceased was at a window, or in any position where a fire escape would have afforded him any benefit whatever. There is evidence tending to show that deceased had locked himself in his room, and was heard beating on his door, trying to make his escape. It is shown that one of the windows of his room overlooked the Third National Bank Building, and that deceased could, and with entire safety to himself, have escaped by leaping to the roof of that building, as many other similarly situated successfully did escape. As already stated, it is not shown that deceased knew of this avenue of escape, and we cannot perceive how he would have been benefited by fire escapes under the circumstances surrounding him. We are therefore of opinion that if the contention of counsel for plaintiff in error in respect of the proper construction of this ordinance were correct, and that its breach would constitute actionable negligence, these questions are mere abstractions in this case, since no causal connection between the violation of the ordinance and the injuries sustained by the plaintiff is shown.

The fifth assignment is that the court erred in permitting defendants to read as evidence the stenographer's report of the examination in chief of defendant John R. Northington, given on the trial of the case of H. L. Crowder against these defendants in the circuit court of Knox county. It appears that the case of Crowder against these defendants had been tried only a few days prior to this case, and on that trial John R. Northington was examined as witness. The questions at issue in the Crowder Case were identical with those involved in the present case. The plaintiff's counsel in the present trial read a large portion of Northington's cross-examination given on the former trial, for the purpose of showing admissions by Northington against his interest. Counsel for defendants then insisted that the statement of Northington could not be well understood unless the whole of it was read, and thereupon offered to read the remainder of his evidence. The court ruled that defendant's counsel had the right to introduce the whole of the statement, where any part of it is offered by the other side, and thereupon defendants read the whole of Northington's examination in chief, and plaintiff read the whole cross-examination, including the portion her counsel had previously read. We think, after reading the testimony of Northington, that the cross-examination read by plaintiff's counsel could not be fully understood without reading the examination in chief. Says Mr. Wood in his work on Practice Evidence (§ 160), viz.: "An important rule relating to the admissions of a party is. 43 L. R. A.

that the whole statement containing the admission must be taken together, whether the admission is verbal or written; for although some part of it may contain matter favorable to the party, and the object is only to ascertain what he has conceded against himself, and what may therefore be presumed to be true, yet, unless the whole is received and considered, the true meaning and import of the part which is good evidence against him cannot be ascertained." Of course, it is not admissible, under this rule, to read matters wholly disconnected and apart from the matter which constitutes the admission, but the whole admission, and anything bearing upon it and explanatory of it, is competent and relevant. Moreover, it is a conclusive answer to this assignment that plaintiff in error did not stand on the exception made, but read the whole of the cross-examination.

The seventh assignment is that the court erred in charging the jury that no prejudicial inferences could be drawn against defendants in this case from the mere fact that they did not offer themselves as witnesses and testify in this case. The general rule undoubtedly is that the failure of a party to be examined as to matters necessarily within his personal knowledge affords a presumption against him, where the proof is not clear, and the case he seeks to make could be proved by him if true. Dunlap v. Haynes, 4 Heisk. 476. It is shown by the witness Hacker that defendant McNulty was examined at the coroner's inquest, and stated that he did not get to the hotel until after the fire, and hence knew nothing about the matter. It is not shown there were any facts connected with the case peculiarly within his knowledge, and which were not known so fully to any other witness. The condition of the premises, including the elevator shaft, as well as the character and habits of John Davis, the colored night watchman, were fully proved by other witnesses. In respect of M. J. Ross's testimony, this witness was introduced by plaintiff, and does not state anything calling for a denial from defendants.

Numerous assignments are made, all of which have been carefully considered, but we find in them no reversible error.

Affirmed.

E. M. WIGHT et al., Appts.,
v.

James GOTTSCHALK.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. An eviction, either actual or constructive, is necessary before a cause of action arises on a covenant of warranty.
2. There was no liability on a covenant of warranty which was provable as a "contingent debt" or "contingent liability"

NOTE.—The decisions on the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy seem to be too fully reviewed in the above case to need annotation.

As to contingent liabilities, see also Hospes v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co. (Minn.) 15 L. R. A. 470; and Gold v. Clyne (N. Y.) 17 L. R. A. 767.

under the bankruptcy act of 1867 (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5068), until there was a hostile assertion of the paramount title.

3. A discharge in bankruptcy, under the act of 1867, did not relieve the bankrupt from liability for breach of a covenant of warranty in a prior deed which did not ripen into an actual demand until after the discharge.

(July 10, 1897.)

A PPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals reversing a decree of the Chancery Court for Hamilton County in favor of defendant in a suit to recover damages for breach of covenant of warranty in a deed of real estate in defense of which defendant pleaded a discharge in bankruptcy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas & Thomas and Dickey & Peeples for appellants.

Messrs. Brown & Spurlock for appellee.

Neill, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity for breach of a covenant of warranty in a deed to real estate. The defendant pleaded a discharge in bankruptcy, and the chancellor dismissed the suit, and complainants have appealed. The parties have agreed upon the facts, and the case presents but one question, and that is, Did defendant's discharge in bankruptcy release him from liability under his covenant of warranty? Complainants deny and defendant affirms that the discharge is a good defense. If the discharge by the bankrupt court is a release, in view of this record, then the chancellor was correct; if not, then complainants are entitled to a decree.

The facts necessary to mention are that, between 1860 and 1864, one Hoyle owned the real estate in question. In 1864 he died intestate, leaving a widow and seven brothers and sisters. These brothers and sisters were his heirs at law, and each of them owned, as such heir, a one-seventh of the realty. The widow qualified as administratrix, and filed a bill to sell the real estate to pay debts. The heirs were made defendants. One of the sisters and heirs was Mary C. Reynolds, a married woman, and Michael C. Reynolds was her husband. They had at one time lived in McMinn county, Tennessee, but had before the widow filed her bill, removed to the state of Georgia, where they have ever since resided. Process issued to McMinn county for Mary C. Reynolds and her husband; and in June, 1865, the sheriff of that county returned it, as to Mary C. Reynolds and her husband, that neither was to be found in his county. Notwithstanding this return, a judgment pro confesso was taken in the same year against her and her husband, reciting that both had been served with process and had failed to make defense. Subsequent proceedings resulted in the sale of the real estate, and one Foley Vaughn purchased it. Thereafter, in 1870, Vaughn sold it to the defendant in this case. James Gottschalk, and on February 2, 1871, defendant, Gottschalk, sold and conveyed it, 43 L. R. A.

with covenant of warranty of title, to one Alvin Dodge; and the present complainants now own and hold parts of the same realty under regular conveyances down from and through Gottschalk and Dodge. On August 19, 1878, defendant, Gottschalk, filed his petition in bankruptcy, and on January 14, 1881, was granted his discharge under the act of 1867. The decree of the bankruptcy court is as follows: "It is therefore ordered by the court that said James Gottschalk be, and he hereby is, forever discharged of and from all debts and claims which by said act are made provable against his estate, and which existed on the 19th day of August, 1878, on which day the petition for adjudication was filed by himself, excepting such debts, if any, as are by said act excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy." Some ten years after Vaughn had purchased the land at the administration sale, Mary C. Reynolds first learned of her interest in her brother's estate, and she began an investigation, which led to a bill being filed in the name of herself and husband. This bill was brought in July, 1882. But it was subsequently voluntarily dismissed by her and her husband; and in 1885 she, by next friend, brought a second bill against Foley Vaughn and the present complainants and others, to recover her one-seventh interest in the land. Such proceedings were had in that case as that she was given a decree on November 21, 1890, the court adjudging that neither she nor her husband was before the court in the Hoyle Estate Case; that no statute of limitations barred her; that the suit was properly brought by next friend, and that, for the want of any service of process, the court had no jurisdiction to divest her of title; that the decrees were void, and the purchaser, Vaughn, took no title as to her one seventh; and she was given a recovery accordingly. On appeal to the supreme court, this decree was affirmed in November, 1891. In 1892, Mary C. Reynolds brought suits in the chancery court against the present complainants to sell the real estate for partition. Thereupon the complainants purchased from her and paid her for the one-seventh interest, and obtained it for less than the value thereof, and less than it would have cost them at a partition sale. Complainant Wight paid $35 court costs and $125 cash to Mrs. Reynolds. Complainant Whiteside paid the same. Complainant Evans paid court costs, $35, and $50 cash to Mrs. Reynolds.

The case turns upon the construction of the bankrupt act of 1867, as carried into the Revised Statutes of the United States at § 5068. That section reads: "In all cases of contingent debts and contingent liabilities contracted by the bankrupt, and not herein otherwise provided for, the creditor may make claim therefor and have his claim allowed, with the right to share in the dividends, if the contingency happens before the order for the final dividend; or he may at any time apply to the court to have the present value of the debt or liability ascertained and liquidated, which shall then be done in such manner as the court shall order, and he shall be allowed to prove for the amount so ascertained." The question is whether the claim under the covenant of warranty, under the circumstances above set out, constituted a provable debt, as a "contingent debt" or "contingent liability." In order to a proper understanding of the question, we must first consider the nature of the covenant of warranty in this state, in so far as it furnishes a ground of action for a money demand. It was early held that an action for a breach of the covenant of warranty could not be maintained without alleging and proving a lawful eviction. Allison v. Allison, 1 Yerg. 16. To same effect, see Ferriss v. Harshea, Mart. & Y. 54, 17 Am. Dec. 782; Stuart v. Nelson, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 200; Crutcher v. Stump, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 100; Young v. Butler, 1 Head, 648. In Ferriss v. Harshea, Mart. & Y. 54, 17 Am. Dec. 782, it was held that even a judgment in ejectment by the party having the better title against the warrantee, and suing out a writ of possession, without its being executed, was not sufficient evidence of an eviction; that, to constitute an eviction, the warrantee must be actually dispossessed by him having the better title. In Senter v. Hill, 5 Sneed, 505, it is said to be well settled in this state that where the purchaser of land has taken a deed with a covenant of warranty alone, and is put in possession, and not evicted, a court of chancery will not give an injunction or grant relief against the payment of the consideration on the ground of defective title; that, if there is no fraud and no eviction, the purchaser must rest on the covenants in his deed. Again, it is said in the same volume, at page 124, in the case of Kincaid v. Brittain, that the covenant of warranty is regarded as an assurance to the purchaser of a permanent undisturbed possession of the premises conveyed, and therefore is broken only by his eviction, actual or constructive, until which time he can have no remedy, but must await, at whatever hazard of ultimate loss, the event of his involuntary disseisin by the paramount title, before he can be heard to allege a breach of the covenant. It is said, however, in the case of Kenney v. Norton, 10 Heisk. 384, that the discharge of an encumbrance, subsisting at the time of the conveyance and capable of being enforced, operates as an eviction pro tanto, and a breach of a general warranty of title, and that an action may be brought by the original or any subsequent vendee who discharges such an encumbrance. And in the case of Callis v. Cogbill, 9 Lea, 137, it was said that, although the covenant of warranty is not broken without eviction by paramount title, yet that eviction by judgment of law is not necessary, but that the warrantee may voluntarily yield possession to him who had a better title, and claim for a breach of the covenant; but that in such case he acts at his peril, and in a suit against the warrantor the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show the paramount title. It appeared in that case that the possession was yielded in obedience to a demand made by the person having the superior title. It was said also 43 L. R. A.

in that case, arguendo, that the court had held in Austin v. McKinney, 5 Lea, 499, that the vendee might purchase in a better outstanding title, and that under this covenant he could be reimbursed the sum paid for it. That authority, however, does not sustain the proposition, nor does the case of Searcy v. Kirkpatrick, Cooke, 211, there referred to. Both of these cases arose under covenants to convey. There is no case in Tennessee that holds that a vendee may voluntarily search out the holder of the paramount title and surrender possession without demand. Likewise there is no case holding the contrary.

In this state of the authorities here we turn to others. In Rawle, Covenants, at page 147, quoting from Drew v. Towle, 30 N. H. 537, 64 Am. Dec. 309, it is said: "The defendant had an undoubted right, upon being satisfied of the invalidity of his title, to abandon the possession of the premises, and thereby to avoid the necessity of litigation and its attendant perplexities and expenses. He owed the plaintiff no duty to remain in possession and sustain the burden of the defense, when the title was invalid. . . . The right of the defendant was, at any period, to give up the possession to the rightful owner upon claim made. He was under no obligation, either of duty or contract to withhold it. He was not bound to seek redress through a litigation that might turn out to be fruitless with the party having the title." He adds: "And the law as thus stated has been recognized and applied in many cases,"—citing a large number of authorities. He continues: "In order, however, that such ouster in pais should amount to an eviction, it is necessary that the paramount title shall have been hostilely asserted; for although there is a class of cases, to be presently considered, which recognize the right of the purchaser to buy in the paramount title, and in an action on the covenant recover the amount thus paid, yet it will be found that they refuse to sanction such a recovery unless there has been a prosecution or distinct assertion of such title. Where such has been the case, its purchase is considered as equivalent to an eviction, as the idle form of abandoning the premises under one title in order to re-enter under another is deemed unnecessary. But if, in the one case, it be considered as indispensable that there shall have been a previous assertion of the paramount title, it would seem that it would be equally indispensable in the other,"—citing a large number of authorities. He adds further: "The result of the authorities would therefore seem to be that where the holder of the adverse title has the right summarily to obtain possession under it, and adversely asserts or prosecutes that right, the covenantee may anticipate its actual exercise, and voluntarily surrender the possession, by which ouster in pais a sufficient eviction will be caused to support an action on the covenant, in which, however, he will be obliged to prove that the results which he thus anticipated were inevitable." In the pages immediately following, the author discusses cases of constructive eviction, but none of these in any way applies to the facts in the present case.

Other incidents of the covenant of warranty in this state, as elsewhere, are as follows: It runs with the land (Williams v. Burg, 9 Lea, 455); the measure of damages on breach of the covenant is, in general, the purchase money paid, with interest (East Tennessee Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 7 Lea, 420); but, under various circumstances, it may be cut down to a sum below that (Mette v. Dow, 9 Lea, 93, 96-100). In that case it is said it may be cut down where the vendee or covenantee has no mesne profits to pay to the holder of the paramount title. Mr. Justice Cooper, delivering the opinion of the court, added: "If, now, the measure of damages may be cut down by a deduction of the interest when necessary to attain the ends of justice, no reason occurs why a deduction of the principal may not also be made in a proper case. The covenant is a peculiar one, and not like an ordinary covenant for so much money. It is rather in the nature of a bond, with a fixed sum as a penalty, the recovery on which will be satisfied by the payment of the actual damages. Each vendor, subject to this rule, may be treated as the principal obligor to his immediate vendee, and as the surety of any subsequent vendee to hold him harmless by reason of the failure of title, and the ultimate vendee, when evicted, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of his immediate vendor against a remote vendor, to the extent necessary to indemnify him. Such a vendee, to use the language of the supreme court of North Carolina, sues a remote vendor on the covenant to redress his (the plaintiff's) own injury, not the injuries of the immediate vendee of such remote vendor. Accordingly, that court held, in a case like the one before us, that the measure of damages was the consideration paid by the plaintiff to his immediate vendor, with interest, and not the consideration paid by such vendor to the defendant. In other words, the damages recovered were limited to the actual injury sustained." So, in that case, where it appeared that A. had sold the undivided half of the lot to B., his cotenant, for $4,500, making him a deed with the covenant of general warranty, and some years afterwards B. sold to C. the entire lot for $3,000, making a deed of like covenant, and subsequently C. was evicted by paramount title, which, being a trust assignment to secure a debt, did not require an account for mesne profits, and C. sued A. on his covenant of warranty, it was held that he could only recover one half of the consideration paid by him to his immediate vendor, with interest from the date of eviction.

It is also held in this state that the covenant is divisible. So, in Whitzman v. Hirsh, 87 Tenn. 513, where A. conveyed to B. by warranty deed a tract of land for $2,700, and B. divided it into twenty-six lots of equal value, and conveyed these lots by warranty deeds, two to C. for $500, and subsequently ten others to different persons for $2,400, and the remainder to his assignee in bankruptcy, and then the entire tract was recovered by title paramount, and C. sued A., his remote warrantor, for breach of covenant, it was held that C. could recover of A. only two twenty-sixths of the price received by A. for the entire tract, with interest from the date of eviction, and that the measure of C.'s damages in such case was not affected by the fact that the other vendees failed to sue A., or suffered their actions to become barred; and in the case before us we have an instance in which the cause of action is split among three claimants.

From the foregoing view of the leading points affecting covenants of warranty for title, it is perceived that an eviction, either actual or constructive, is necessary before a cause of action arises; that that cause of action, when it does arise, may be split among several, and that it may exist as to some vendees interested in the warranty, and may not exist at all as to others; and, finally, that the amount to be recovered is not in any manner fixed, except that it cannot go above the consideration expressed in the deed containing the warranty, but that within that limit it may vary greatly. It is further to be observed that, under the facts as found, there was no eviction, either actual or constructive, apparent in this case, until the present complainants were evicted, which was long after the bankruptcy proceedings. It is further to be observed that it does not appear in this case who owned the property at the time the defendant's petition in bankruptcy was filed,—whether it was then still owned by the defendant's immediate vendee, Dodge, or whether he had sold it out in the parcels in which it is now presented in the present case.

Addressing ourselves now to the immediate question whether the claim under this warranty was a provable debt, we have the following to say as the result of our reflections, after full examination of the authorities, aided by very excellent briefs furnished us upon both sides:

We have been referred to only two cases where a warranty of title was drawn in question in connection with a discharge in bankruptcy. The earliest of these cases was Bush v. Person, 18 How. 82, 15 L. ed. 273, arising under the bankruptcy act of 1841. It seems to have been assumed in that case, in a general way, that the discharge would be operative upon a covenant of warranty, but that was not the point in judgment. The substance of the case is correctly stated in the syllabus as follows: "Where a person mortgaged land, which was at the time subject to a judgment lien, the deed containing what was equivalent to a covenant of warranty, then took the benefit of the bankrupt act of 1841, and then purchased the property which was sold under the judgment lien, he is estopped by his covenant from setting up his after-acquired title to defeat the mortgage. The bankrupt act does not annul a covenant in such a case." The court held, in substance, that, even if the bankrupt were discharged from his personal obligation on the covenant, it would yet remain alive for the purpose of an estoppel. The next case is Riggin v. Magwire, 15 Wall. 549, 21 L. ed. 232. This case also arose under the bankruptcy act of 1841. The case was this: On the 2d of December, 1839, Riggin conveyed a certain tract of land near St. Louis to one Ellis, in fee, by a deed with words construed to be equivalent to a covenant of warranty. The fact was that prior to the execution of this deed the property had belonged to one Martin Thomas, whose wife had never relinquished her right to dower in it. But Thomas was then living, and did not die until 1848, several years after the alleged discharge of Riggin as a bankrupt. The property afterwards, by regular devolution of title, came into possession of Magwire, who sold it in lots to various persons. In 1868 these persons were sued by Mrs. Thomas, widow of Martin Thomas, for the value of her dower, and were obliged to pay it, and the plaintiff was obliged to refund them the amount. He thereupon brought suit against Riggin on the covenant. The question was whether Riggin was discharged from this demand by his decree of discharge in bankruptcy in 1843. Whether he was or not depended on the question whether the claim could have been proved in that proceeding. The fifth section of the bankruptcy act of 1841 allowed, among other classes of claims that might be proven, those of "persons having uncertain or contingent demands against such bankrupt." Considering this question, Mr. Justice Bradley said: "The better opinion is that as long as it remained wholly uncertain whether a contract or engagement would ever give rise to an actual duty or liability, and there was no means of removing the uncertainty by calculation, such contract or engagement was not provable, under the act of 1841. . . . In 1843, Martin Thomas was still living, and there was no certainty that his wife would ever survive him. It was uncertain whether there would ever be any claim or demand. On what principle, then, could the covenant have been liquidated or reduced to present or probable value?" We are also referred to the case of Reed v. Pierce, 36 Me. 455, 58 Am. Dec. 761. This case also arose under the act of 1841. The syllabus is as follows: "Upon a conveyance of land, it is in contingency whether a paramount title will ever be established or set up, and the covenant of warranty against the lawful claims of all persons is not broken until eviction by paramount title. Until such eviction, therefore, no right of action arises upon such a covenant. In the proceedings of a court of bankruptcy, upon the covenantor's application for a discharge, the claim of the covenantee upon such a covenant was not provable, unless a rightful eviction had previously occurred. To a claim founded upon such a covenant, and proved by an eviction which occurred subsequently to the proceedings in bankruptcy, the discharge in bankruptcy is no defense." Says the court in the body of the opinion, speaking of paramount claims: "If any such existed, their enforcement was dependent on the will of those having such claims. The plaintiff could not have presented any present claim or existing demand. The possibility that one might arise is not enough."

From these authorities it would seem that, under the bankruptcy act of 1841, such a claim as we have in hand could not be proved. It is said, however, that the case of Riggin v. Magwire, 15 Wall. 549, 21 L. ed. 232, is very much weakened by the later case of Wolf v. Stiz, 99 U. S. 1, 25 L. ed. 309. That case was as follows: Certain goods were attached in chancery, and Wolf executed a replevin bond, conditioned that he would pay the ascertained value of the goods as expressed in the bond, should he be cast in the suit, and the goods be decreed to be subject to the attachment, and liable thereunder to the satisfaction of the debt sued for. After the execution of the bond, but before the rendition of the decree determining the right of property in the goods, he filed his petition in bankruptcy, and in due course was discharged. It was held that this was a contingent liability, under the act of 1867, and that he was released. Chief Justice Waite, delivering the opinion of the court, said upon this subject: "The debt thus created was provable under the bankrupt act. It was payable upon the happening of an event which might never occur, and was therefore contingent. The bond was in full force when the petition in bankruptcy was filed. The sum to be paid was certain in amount. Whether the event would ever occur which would require the payment was uncertain, but if it did occur, the amount to be paid was fixed. This clearly is such a case as was provided for in § 5068, Rev. Stat., which is that, 'in all cases of contingent debts and contingent liabilities contracted by the bankrupt, . . . the creditor may make claim therefor, and have his claim allowed, with the right to share in the dividends, if the contingency happens before the order for the final dividend.' There is nothing in the case of Riggin v. Magwire, 15 Wall. 549, 21 L. ed. 232, in conflict with this. That case arose under the bankruptcy law of 1841, which was somewhat, though perhaps not materially, different from that of 1867 in this particular, and not only the happening of the event on which payment was to be made, but the amount to be paid, was uncertain and contingent. The amount to be paid depended materially upon the time when the event happened. Everything was uncertain. The obligation in this case is to pay $10,000 and interest, if upon the trial of the suit in the progress of which the bond was executed, it should be adjudged that the goods attached were subject to the attachment, and liable thereunder for the satisfaction of the debt sued for." We do not regard this case as in any sense weakening the authority of Riggin v. Magwire. It is true that it was distinguished from the case then before the court, but at the same time it was practically conceded that it was applicable as an authority for a similar case arising under the act of 1867, inasmuch as it is stated that the two acts are not materially different in the aspect in which we are course of settlement in the trial of the suit now considering them. Pursuing the analogy furnished by the state of facts in judgment in the case of Wolf v. Stia, 99 U. S. 1, 25 L. ed. 309, we reach the case of Hill v. Harding, 130 U. S. 699-704, 32 L. ed. 1083, 1084. In that case a similar bond was in question, and the court held, through Mr. Justice Gray, who delivered the opinion, that, if the bond was executed before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, the discharge of the bankrupt would protect him from liability to the obligee, but it is added (a significant indication of the trend of the court upon this subject): "If the sureties [the bankrupt being the principal in the bond] should ultimately pay the amount of any such judgment, and thereby acquire a claim to be reimbursed by their principal the amount so paid (which is a point not now in issue), it would be because his liability to them upon such a claim did not exist at the time of the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and therefore could not be proved in bankruptcy, nor barred by the discharge, and consequently would not be affected by any provision of the bankrupt act." In line with the thought contained in the quotation just made is the case of Wyckoff v. Gardner, 4 Cent. Rep. 131, decided by the supreme court of New Jersey. The case was this: John Gardner was elected sheriff in 1875. He gave bond, with William Gardner, John Wyckoff, Samuel Frame, Joseph Vliet, and Joseph B. Cornish as his sureties thereon. By reason of negligence, the sheriff, in his official capacity, became liable for nearly $2,000. His bond was prosecuted, and February 19, 1884, judgment was rendered thereon against John Gardner, John Wyckoff (the complainant), and Samuel Frame. Prior to this action William Gardner and Joseph Vliet had died, and Joseph B. Cornish had been discharged in bankruptcy. The bill, among other things, was filed for contribution against Cornish, and he was held liable, notwithstanding his discharge in bankruptcy, because the liability did not accrue until after the discharge. The court followed the cases of Riggin v. Maguire, 15 Wall. 549, 21 L. ed. 232, and Glenn v. Howard, 65 Md. 40. The latter case was where the subscription price of the stock of an incorporated company was only to be paid in such instalments, and at such times, as it might be called for, and at the time of the bankruptcy of a stockholder and his discharge no call for the payment of his subscription had been made. It was held that a call subsequently made, for an unpaid instalment, was not a provable claim against the bankrupt's estate in the bankruptcy proceedings, and that, therefore, the bankrupt's discharge was no bar to an action for such unpaid instalment. See this same case reported in 65 Md. 40. See also, to the same effect, Sayre v. Glenn, 87 Ala. 631, and White v. Blake, 79 Me. 114. This was a suit by a sheriff against his deputy on the latter's bond, for money which the former had to pay on account of the latter's omission. The bond and the deputy's omission both existed before the deputy's bankruptcy, but the sheriff had not been sued, and the suit was not terminated until after the discharge. It was held that the prior bankruptcy was no defense. So, in our own case of Goss v. Gibson, 8 Humph. 197. This case arose under the act of 1841. It was there held that the discharge in bankruptcy of a surety upon an official bond would not protect him from the claim of another surety on the same bond to contribution, the judgment for the official default having been recovered against the latter, and he having paid the money after the discharge. This case was approved by Judge Cooper in 1875, in the case of Eberhardt v. Wood, 2 Tenn. Ch. 488, 496. This case was subsequently appealed to the supreme court, and at the December term, 1880, Judge Cooper's decision was affirmed, and his opinion adopted as the opinion of the court. Eberhardt v. Wood, 6 Lea, 467, 471. That case of Eberhardt v. Wood, 2 Tenn. Ch. 488, in the actual matter there under consideration, and in distinguishing that case from Goss v. Gibson, 8 Humph. 197, seems to mark the true distinction controlling this class of cases. In that case the exact point ruled was that the claim of one surety against a cosurety on an administration bond for the contribution is provable, and covered by the discharge of the cosurety in bankruptcy, if the liability of the principal had become fixed by judicial proceedings before the petition in bankruptcy, although the amount of the liability was not ascertained nor paid by the surety until several years afterwards. Distinguishing that case from Goss v. Gibson, 8 Humph. 197, Judge Cooper says (p. 496): "There, although there was a breach of the official bond before the proceedings in bankruptcy, yet it does not appear that the fact was known until afterwards. A bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the duty of a public officer is not, prior to its breach, a debt against the surety and provable as such. Loring v. Kendall, 1 Gray, 306; Turner v. Esselman, 15 Ala. 690. Nor afterwards, it may safely be said, if the breach was unknown, or not adjudged, or in the course of being adjudged. Ellis v. Ham, 28 Me. 385. For, until suit brought, or demand made, or, at any rate, until evidence of breach non constat that there will be any debt against the surety. But if, as in the case before us, the breach is judicially declared, the debt is clear, and the amount susceptible of being ascertained. Woodard v. Herbert, 24 Me. 358." See also Kerr v. Clark, 11 Humph. 77. The case of Choate v. Quinichett, 12 Heisk. 427, was decided upon substantially the same principle recognized in the quotation we have just made from Eberhardt v. Wood. The same principle seems also to be recognized in Wolf v. Stia, 99 U. S. 1, 25 L. ed. 309. In that case Chief Justice Waite referred pointedly to the fact that the bond was in full force when the petition in bankruptcy was filed; that it was for a definite amount; and that the matters arising on the bond were then in in the progress of which the bond was executed. The case of Carey v. Mayer, 51 U. S. App. 184, 79 Fed. Rep. 926, 25 C. C. A. 239, was determined upon the same principle. It was there held that the obligation of a subscriber to the stock of the corporation to respond to calls becomes, upon the declared insolvency of the corporation, by the execution of a deed of trust for the benefit of creditors, a liability with a contingency, though not fixed in amount, and not payable until the call has been made; and that when such subscriber has, subsequent to the execution of such a deed of trust, filed his petition in bankruptcy under the act of 1867, and been discharged, his discharge is a good defense to an action to recover the amount of his subscription, though the call on which the action was based was not made until after the discharge was granted. In delivering the opinion of the court in that case, Judge Shipman said: "The decision of this case is placed upon the ground that the deed of the corporation of all its assets to trustees for the benefit of creditors, being a declaration by the corporation of its insolvency, and also the commencement of the winding up, preceded the filing of the defendant's petition in bankruptcy, and that, by reason of these facts, the defendant's obligation as a stockholder became a liability with a contingency, viz., the ascertainment by a court of chancery of the amount to be paid, that this amount could have been made certain, and that it was the duty of the trustees to endeavor to make it certain before the order for a final dividend."

Applying these principles to the case before us, it follows very clearly, as we think, that the claim now sued for was not provable in the defendant's bankruptcy proceeding. Not only did his vendor appear to have title upon the face of the decrees in the case in which he bought the property, and the defect was not discovered until years after he was discharged in bankruptcy, and then by an examination of the process purporting to bring the parties into court, but in addition to this, even if the defect had been known, there was no eviction until long after the discharge. As we have already shown in the discussion of the principles controlling the covenant of warranty, the covenantee was powerless to take any steps to relieve himself from the position in which he stood or to get any redress upon the warranty, even if he had been thoroughly acquainted with the defect in his title, until there had been a hostile assertion of interest in the property on the part of the owner of the paramount title. The claim was in this condition: The owner of the paramount title might never assert his paramount ownership. Until he did so, the covenantee had suffered no injury and had no cause of action. No one could tell whether the paramount owner ever would assert his right. There was no liability on the covenantor until such hostile assertion. That hostile assertion was not made until many years after the defendant's discharge. The complainants yielded to this superior claim, as it was their duty to do, and then it was their cause of action arose. Then, for the first time, there was, in a technical sense, a liability upon the covenantor. Our conclusion is that the claim was not provable in the bankruptcy proceedings, and that the defendant is not protected by the discharge. The result is the complainants are entitled to recover the amounts claimed by them in the bill, with interest, and the costs of this court and the court below.

Reverse the chancellor's decree, and enter decree here in accordance with the foregoing directions.

Barton, J., concurs.

This decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court in an oral opinion.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS. FIRST CIRCUIT.

Frank COLUMB, Plff. in Err.,
v.

WEBSTER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

(50 U. S. App. 264, 84 Fed. Rep. 592, 28 C. C. A. 225.)

Judgment upon the merits in an action for negligence is a bar to another action for the same injury grounded on the defendant's fault or negligence in respect to the same occurrence, although other elements of negligence are alleged.

(January 3, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

NOTE.—the effect of a judgment on the question of negligence as res judicata when a later action is brought for negligence in different particulars connected with the same transaction was referred to in an article in "Case and Comment" for December, 1895, and reference to a statement by a judge that the specific point had never been decided. The article, however, referred to McCain v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 15 43 L. R. A.

Ky. L. Rep. 80, which was marked "Not to be reported," as a decision to the effect that the second action in such case was barred by the judgment in the first case. That decision has since been officially reported in 97 Ky. 804. The question is more fully considered in the above case of COLUMB v. WEBSTER MFG. CO., which reaches the same conclusion.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Colt, Circuit Judge, and Webb and Aldrich, District Judges.

Mr. John L. Hunt, for plaintiff in error:

The precise point involved in the cause as to what is barred by a judgment on the merits in a case of negligence has been considered by the supreme court of New Hampshire in the case of Littleton v. Richardson, 34 N. H. 180, 66 Am. Dec. 759.

The evidence must be confined to the pleadings upon which the issue is tried, and the precise point litigated within the pleadings alone is determined in an action.

Johnson Steel Street Rail Co. v. Wharton, 152 U. S. 260, 33 L. ed. 434; Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. ed. 195; Gaines v. Hennen, 24 How. 573, 16 L. ed. 776.

Messrs. H. Eugene Bolles and Richard M. Saltonstall, for defendant in error:

There is a difference between the effect of a judgment as a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second action upon the same claim or demand and its effect as an estoppel in another action between the same parties upon a different claim or cause of action. In the former case the judgment, if rendered upon the merits, constitutes an absolute bar to a subsequent action. It is a finality as to the claim or demand in controversy, concluding parties and those in privity with them, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose.

Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. ed. 195; Wilson v. Deen, 121 U. S. 525, 30 L. ed. 980; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 142 U. S. 396, 35 L. ed. 1055; Johnson Steel Street Rail Co. v. Wharton, 152 U. S. 252, 38 L. ed. 429; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 327, 38 L. ed. 463; Southern Minnesota R. Extension Co. v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 12 U. S. App. 320, 55 Fed. Rep. 690, 5 C. C. A. 249; Lake County Comrs. v. Platt, 76 Fed. Rep. 567.

The two suits are for the same cause of action, and the fact that the plaintiff in this suit states a different ground of recovery for his injuries sustained in the same accident does not make two distinct causes of action.

Goodrich v. Yale, 8 Allen, 454; Bassett v. Connecticut River R. Co. 150 Mass. 178; Beauregard v. Webb Granite & Constr. Co. 160 Mass. 201; Goodrich v. Chicago, 5 Wall. 566, 18 L. ed. 511; Green v. Bogue, 158 U. S. 478-503, 39 L. ed. 1061-1070; Patterson v. Wold, 33 Fed. Rep. 791; Agnew v. McElroy, 10 Smedes & M. 552, 48 Am. Dec. 772; Girardin v. Dean, 49 Tex. 243; Bagot v. Williams, 3 Barn. & C. 235.

In New Hampshire it has been held that an employer is bound to use due care in selecting competent servants and agents and in providing safe and suitable appliances. For a breach of these duties he is liable to an employee.

Fifield v. Northern R. Co. 42 N. H. 225; Nash v. Nashua Iron & S. Co. 62 N. H. 406.

Though the declaration did not allege in terms a breach of those duties, yet under the New Hampshire statutes and the practice of 43 L. R. A.

its courts the declaration could have been amended, even during the progress of the suit, so as to state these facts.

N. H. Pub. Stat. chap. 222, §§ 7, 8; Gagnon v. Connor, 64 N. H. 276; Morse v. Whitchee, 64 N. H. 591; Peaslee v. Dudley, 63 N. H. 220; Welcome v. Labontee, 63 N. H. 124; Fogg v. Hoskins, 58 N. H. 367.

The plaintiff has had his day in court; he cannot split up his claim.

Dutton v. Shaw, 35 Mich. 431.

Nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa, and Interest reipublice ut sit finis litium.

Stockton v. Ford, 18 How. 418, 15 L. ed. 595; Beloit v. Morgan, 7 Wall. 619, 19 L. ed. 205; Stark v. Starr, 94 U. S. 477, 24 L. ed. 276; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 327, 38 L. ed. 463; Southern Minnesota R. Extension Co. v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 12 U. S. App. 320, 55 Fed. Rep. 690, 5 C. C. A. 249; David Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Eagle Mfg. Co. 18 U. S. App. 349, 57 Fed. Rep. 980, 6 C. C. A. 661; Patterson v. Wold, 33 Fed. Rep. 791; Trask v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 2 Allen, 231; Knowlton v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 147 Mass. 606, 1 L. R. A. 625; Bassett v. Connecticut River R. Co. 150 Mass. 178; Sullivan v. Baeter, 150 Mass. 261; Rogers v. Higgins, 57 Ill. 244; Bell v. McColloch, 31 Ohio St. 397; Hall v. Forman, 82 Ky. 505; State v. Brown, 64 Md. 199; Woolverton v. Baker, 98 Cal. 628; Agnew v. McElroy, 10 Smedes & M. 552, 48 Am. Dec. 772; McCain v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 97 Ky. 804; 1 Van Fleet, Former Adjudication, p. 322.

Extrinsic evidence may be offered to prove:—

Identity of parties.

1 Van Fleet, Former Adjudication, p. 351; Langdon v. Evans, 3 Mackey, 1.

Identity of subject-matter or facts in issue.

Merchant's International S. B. Line v. Lyon, 4 McCrary, 145; White v. Chase, 128 Mass. 158; Foye v. Patch, 132 Mass. 106; Briggs v. Wells, 12 Barb. 567; Walker v. Chase, 53 Me. 258.

Identity of the cause of action.

Driscoll v. Damp, 16 Wis. 106.

Whether or not the former suit was adjudicated upon its merits.

Jepson v. International Fraternal Alliance, 17 R. I. 471; Black, Judgm. § 628.

Aldrich, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover for damages which Frank Columb, the plaintiff, claims he sustained by reason of the defendant's negligence in New Hampshire. The plaintiff brought a prior suit in the New Hampshire state courts against the Webster Manufacturing Company, this defendant, and for the same injury, where he had his trial upon the merits, and upon a cause of action involving the defendant's alleged negligence as a ground of recovery, and where there was a verdict of the jury and judgment for the defendant and the defendant in the circuit court interposed such judgment as a bar to the further prosecution of the plaintiff's action therein.

We think the New Hampshire judgment is a bar to the plaintiff's second action, and it seems quite unnecessary to add anything to the reasoning of the court below. It may be observed, however, that the cause of action (that of the defendant's negligence in respect to the same affair) was identical in both proceedings, although the plaintiff, in this, his second proceeding, varies somewhat his description of the defendant's negligence. It remains, nevertheless, that this action was brought for the same injury, and that the action is grounded on the defendant's fault or negligence in respect to the same occurrence. In the New Hampshire case the plaintiff alleged the defendant's want of care in respect to its duty to furnish a suitable and safe place for the performance of the service which he was expected to render, and that, by reason of the careless and negligent construction of the bridge or trestle, and "by the sudden giving away of said trestle or railroad," he was "thrown into the river below," and injured; while in the proceeding here he alleges that "an unsupported section or part of said bridge, on which plaintiff was so assisting as aforesaid, fell, and, owing to the neglect of the defendant to provide suitable and safe safeguards, instrumentalities, and protection for and in the performance of said work, and owing to the neglect of defendant to provide safe, suitable, and competent servants and agents to assist the plaintiff in the performance of said work, the plaintiff was precipitated into the said river," and was injured. The cause of action in the two proceedings is obviously the same. In the proceeding here the plaintiff alleges other elements of negligence, which he in effect says co-operated with the elements of negligence alleged in the first proceeding to bring about the same result; in other words, he alleges here additional acts of negligence, operating upon the same occurrence, and tending to the same result.

It is not necessary to prolong the discussion of this question further than to say that the scope or extent of the estoppel, operating upon the second action, like that involved in Roberts v. Northern P. R. Co. 158 U. S. 1, 27-29, 39 L. ed. 873, 882, 883, depends upon the question whether the demand or claim or cause of action is the same in the two proceedings. All authorities seem to agree that, if the cause of action is the same, a trial and judgment upon the merits operate as a bar to subsequent litigation between the same parties; and another line of authorities holds that, where the suit is between the same parties, and the claim or demand or cause of action is different, the judgment in the former action operates as an estoppel only as to the particular points controverted, or to those matters which were strictly in issue. Forsythe v. Hammond, 106 U. S. 506, 518, 41 L. ed. 1095, 1100. As to the first class of cases, as said by Mr. Justice Shiras in the Northern Pacific Railroad Case just cited (page 28, 158 U. S. and page 883, 39 L. ed.), in quoting approvingly from an earlier decision of the Supreme Court, "a judgment estops, not only as to every ground of recovery or defense actually presented in 42 L. R. A.

the action, but also as to every ground which might have been presented." Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 50, 42 L. ed. 355, 377.

The Supreme Court decisions are quite decisive, and controlling upon the question before us. In the case of Beloit v. Morgan, 7 Wall. 619, 19 L. ed. 205, it is said, with reference to a former trial before a court having jurisdiction over the parties and the subject, that "under such circumstances, a judgment is conclusive, not only as to the res of that case, but as to all further litigation between same parties touching the same subject-matter, though the res itself may be different."

Again, in referring to the point taken by counsel that the estoppel only operates upon the precise question in issue, it is said: "But the principle reaches further. It extends, not only to the questions of fact and of law which were decided in a former suit, but also to the grounds of recovery or defense which might have been, but were not presented." Again, in the same case it is said: "A party can no more split up defenses than indivisible demands, and present them by piecemeal in successive suits growing out of the same transaction."

This principle was reaffirmed, and the doctrine emphasized, by the Supreme Court in Stark v. Starr, 94 U. S. 477, 485, 24 L. ed. 276, 278, where it is said by Mr. Justice Field: "It is undoubtedly a settled principle that a party seeking to enforce a claim, legal or equitable, must present to the court, either by the pleadings or proofs, or both, all the grounds upon which he expects a judgment in his favor. He is not at liberty to split up his demand, and prosecute it by piecemeal, or present only a portion of the grounds upon which special relief is sought, and leave the rest to be presented in a second suit, if the first fail. There would be no end to litigation if such a practice were permissible."

We have said, in this circuit, of supposed grounds of recovery not presented in the original cause, that, if we were to assume they were sufficient to put in issue the propositions argued, they would not be effectual to give complainants the relief desired; and this was for the reason, as there observed, that in the principal cause the court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of the controversy, and judgment therein must, therefore, be taken as conclusive. Jones v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 33 U. S. App. 703, 713, 76 Fed. Rep. 683, 35 L. R. A. 698, and 22 C. C. A. 483.

The additional allegations of negligent acts, in the cases at bar, are (as said of the new evidence in Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 65, 42 L. ed. 355 382), "simply cumulative," and they merely present elements of negligence which were, in contemplation of law, at least for the fair and reasonable purposes of the res judicata rule, involved in the affair originally complained of, and in the single and indivisible cause of action originally set out,—that of the negligence and fault of the defendant which occasioned the injury to the plaintiff. Beauregard v. Webb Granite & Constr. Co.

160 Mass. 201, 203; Patterson v. Wold, 33 Fed. Rep. 791, 703. The reasons for the res judicata rule have been stated again and again, and they include, among other considerations, the idea that the interests of the public and of litigants alike require that a legal controversy should end with one investigation before a tribunal with ample jurisdiction to do justice, and with ample opportunity for the parties to present their case with such measure of statement and proofs as they see fit. A rule which would allow the plaintiff to split his case, and measure out a part of his grievance and of his proofs, and, in the event of failure, to try again upon a greater measure, would necessarily allow the defendant to stand on a part rather than all of his defense to a given cause of action, and, if this should prove insufficient, a second trial upon a more full statement and a greater measure of proofs would be open to him. Under such a rule, litigation would at once become burdensome and oppressive, interminable and never-ceasing,—a condition which the modern law seeks to avoid, and a situation which the courts of the present age are not disposed to aid in creating.

Is there any safe or reasonable ground upon which a cause of action based upon the supposed negligence of an employer can be treated as divisible? Is there any reason for a rule which would permit a plaintiff, by varying his description of negligence, to have a second trial, if he fails to succeed upon his first description and proofs, but deny him a second trial if he does succeed? No reason has been urged in support of such a rule of law, and it is difficult to see that any could be suggested. Then let us look at the question with reversed light. Suppose the plaintiff had recovered in his New Hampshire case, upon such description of the negligence as he employed there; could he, by varying his description, and alleging additional negligence contributing to the same accident, have another recovery of damages for the same injury? If the affirmative is asserted, how are the damages to be divided? How much for the negligence as first described, and how much for the negligence set out in the second description? It is not believed that anyone would seriously insist upon the right of a second recovery. If it is conceded, then, that under such circumstances a second recovery could not be had, for the reason that the full right of recovery was involved in the description of the defendant's negligence which the plaintiff employed, and in the trial, and therefore merged in the judgment favorable to the plaintiff, upon what logic can it be urged that the full right of recovery is not merged in a judgment unfavorable to the plaintiff, which is based upon the same allegations, the same trial, and the same proofs? A rule which would make the question whether a judgment is conclusive upon the plaintiff depend upon the question whether the judgment is for or against him, and make the result of the trial a conclusive estoppel upon both parties if favorable to the plaintiff, and otherwise not, would be a one-sided rule, discriminating in favor of the plaintiff, and a rule which would at once destroy the fundamental idea of estoppel by judgment.

It is true that the plaintiff, in his second attempt to describe the cause of action, states a stronger case than in his first, for the reason that he includes other elements of negligence; but this does not entitle him to a second trial. A person suffering from a supposed grievance of the character in question must not be permitted to resort to several trials and to different courts, experimenting as to relief, first with a part of his cause of action, then with a little more, and then again with a still stronger description of the co-operating elements which are supposed to have caused the injury. If sound principles permit a second trial, because the second pleader presents a stronger description of the negligent acts contributing to the injury than the first, why not a third, and fourth, and so on without limit, as long as a pleader can be found with sufficient skill and ingenuity to draw a declaration broader than the one next preceding? It follows, from this reasoning, that, the plaintiff having elected the New Hampshire court as the tribunal to settle his rights, and his cause of action being grounded upon the supposed negligence of the defendant, he should have put in evidence all the supposed negligent acts which contributed to the injury, and if, upon the trial, it had turned out that the scope of the evidence was broader than that of the declaration, it is understood that the New Hampshire amendment practice would have permitted the declaration to be recast, to the end that the whole case might go to the jury. If he did not do this, it was his own fault or misfortune, but is not such a misfortune as entitles him to a second trial.

No question is made on argument that the plaintiff, Frank Columb, is not the same person as "Frank Colon," the plaintiff in the New Hampshire case, and it is conceded that the variance between the names is the result of clerical error. This being so, it abundantly appears from the record that the parties and the subject-matter of the cause of action here are the same as in the case presented in the New Hampshire state court, and upon which the plaintiff had a trial upon the merits. The plea in bar interposed in the circuit court, therefore, did not require the aid of matter dehors the record. The circuit court expressly excluded the aliunde evidence, and determined the question—and rightly, we think—upon the record itself. This being so, it is not necessary that we consider the other questions raised by the assignment of errors.

Judgment of the Circuit Court affirmed, with costs in this court to the defendant in error.

Rehearing denied.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Charles A. GLOCK, Resp't.,

v.

HOWARD & WILSON COLONY COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Cal.....)

1. The right of a vendor to retain moneys paid by a vendee who makes default on a contract of which time is the essence is not lost because the parties have declared that such moneys may be retained as stipulated damages, and this provision is valid.
2. Relief to a vendee who has made default on a contract of which time is the essence can be granted only after a showing of fraud, mistake, surprise, or other ground of purely equitable cognisance, excusing the breach.
3. No legal or equitable right to the recovery of moneys paid by a vendee who makes default on a contract of which time is the essence can be acquired by subsequently tendering the amount due, without excusing his default.

(December 18, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Madera County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover money which the plaintiff had paid to defendant as part of the purchase price of land which defendant refused to convey. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Raleigh E. Rhodes for appellant.

Mr. Robert L. Hargrove, for respondent:

Appellant never demanded payment of instalments or brought suit to recover the same, therefore appellant waived any right it had under the "independent" features of the agreement; and, so far as the case at bar is concerned, the "independent" features of the agreement are naught.

The respondent on August 9, 1895, offered to pay appellant all that respondent had agreed to pay under the agreement.

The last payment to be paid under the agreement was on February 21, 1895, therefore at the time respondent made the tender and demand the covenants were "mutual" and "dependent" with both the "vendor" and "vendee."

The vendor at that time could not have sued for the purchase price without offering to convey, and, vice versa, the vendee could not sue for a return of the deposit without offering to pay the amount agreed to be paid by him under the agreement.

Hill v. Grigsby, 35 Cal. 656.

The tender was valid.

Peckham v. Stewart, 97 Cal. 147.

Appellant cannot keep both the land and the money. Under the plain provisions of the Code, respondent would have had the absolute right to have asked, and the court the absolute right to have granted, in addition to the $382.50 and interest, damages for expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, together with the difference between the agreed price for the land, and the value of the same at the time of the breach.

Haynes v. White, 55 Cal. 41; Yates v. James, 89 Cal. 474; Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 535; Turner v. Reynolds, 81 Cal. 214.

Respondent had the right to bring either an action for specific performance of the agreement, or an action for the price paid on the agreement, viz., $382.50 and interest, under the provisions of § 3306, Civil Code.

Haynes v. White, 55 Cal. 41; Yates v. James, 89 Cal. 474; Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 535.

The only grounds under which appellant could recoup damages would be by alleging in its answer and proving the fact that the contract had been rescinded and abandoned on account of respondent's failure to pay the instalments as they fell due.

Dennis v. Strassburger, 89 Cal. 588; Englander v. Rogers, 41 Cal. 420; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 318; Anderson v. Strassburger, 92 Cal. 41; Hill v. Grigsby, 35 Cal. 661; Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 488.

Time stated in the contract was for the benefit of the vendor, and it could, if it had been advised, have demanded payment of the instalments at the stated times or waited and demanded full payment and tendered a deed on February 21, 1895, or at any time afterwards, and thereby placed respondent in default, but appellant did not do it.

Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 105.

On rehearing.

Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, has been cited as authority in the following cases:

White v. Buell, 90 Cal. 179; Townsend v. Tufts, 95 Cal. 259; Merrill v. Merrill, 95 Cal. 338; Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 575; Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 105; Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 337; Shively v. Semi-Tropic Land & W. Co. 99 Cal. 261; Fountain v. Semi-Tropic Land & W. Co. 99 Cal. 683; Easton v. Cressey, 100 Cal. 78; Merrill v. Merrill, 103 Cal. 203.

The rule stare decisis should apply.

Pioche v. Paul, 22 Cal. 106; Hahn v. Courtis, 81 Cal. 402; Smith v. McDonald, 42 Cal. 484.

In a contract for the sale of land for a term, with a provision for the payment of instalments during that term, carrying interest on all deferred instalments, the covenants for the payment of the instalments, except the last one, are independent, and the vendor can sue to recover each instalment as it matures, or may waive that right and let it draw interest or abandon and rescind the contract for reasons known to himself; therefore there could be no default on the part of the respondent to pay the several instalments as they matured.

McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 456; Hill v. Grigsby, 35 Cal. 662.

NOTE.—On the question when time is of the essence of the contract, there is a considerable collection of decisions in a note to Frink v. Thomas (Or.) 12 L. R. A. on page 241. 43 L. R. A.

As appellants did not take any action towards recovering the prior instalments, as they matured, appellant either waived payment and consented to accept interest, or it abandoned and rescinded the contract.

McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 456.

Appellant having failed to demand or bring action to recover the instalments as they matured, suffered the independent covenants of the contract to become merged into mutual, concurrent, and dependent covenants, and before appellant, after the date of the last payment, could put respondent in default, it became its duty at any time thereafter it wished to put respondent in default to tender a deed and demand payment of the respondent; and likewise before respondent could put appellant in default, he was compelled to tender the amount due and demand a deed.

Hill v. Grigsby, 35 Cal. 662; Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 489; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 59; Peasley v. Hart, 65 Cal. 524; Brennan v. Ford, 46 Cal. 16; Kelly v. Mack, 45 Cal. 303; Rourke v. McLaughlin, 38 Cal. 199; Southern P. R. Co. v. Allen, 112 Cal. 455; Peckham v. Stewart, 97 Cal. 147; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 308.

When respondent tendered the money due, and tendered and demanded the deed of appellant, there were only two things for appellant to do: (1) Either to accept the money and execute the conveyance, or (2) to suffer default, and treat the contract as rescinded.

If appellant refused to accept the money and execute the deed, then appellant elected to rescind the agreement.

Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 494.

If appellant rescinded the contract, then it is bound to restore to respondent the price paid, to wit, $382.50, with interest.

Appellant cannot claim damages nor enforce its contract until it tenders a deed and demands payment.

Berry v. Fairmont Town Co. 4 Kan. App. 432; Steele v. Branch, 40 Cal. 13.

Obligations of parties are mutual and dependent where one is to convey, and the other at the same time is to pay the purchase price, and neither can put the other in default, except by tendering performance on his part.

Dennis v. Strassburger, 89 Cal. 583; Merrill v. Merrill, 95 Cal. 337; Peckham v. Stewart, 97 Cal. 150; Bohall v. Diller, 41 Cal. 535; Englander v. Rogers, 41 Cal. 420; Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 319; Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. 138, 56 Am. Dec. 322; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 19, 49 Am. Rep. 679; Bohall v. Diller, 41 Cal. 532; Rourke v. McLaughlin, 38 Cal. 199; Kelly v. Mack, 45 Cal. 303; Brennan v. Ford, 46 Cal. 16; Peasley v. Hart, 65 Cal. 524; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 59; Chatfield v. Williams, 85 Cal. 521.

The vendor may at any time after the date of the contract convey the land to another, without committing a breach of the contract.

Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 335; Shively v. Semi-Tropico Land & W. Co. 99 Cal. 259.

The contract remains still in force, and the vendee still remains liable to the vendor 43 L. R. A.

for the payment of the purchase price, notwithstanding the vendee has parted with his title, and is totally insolvent.

What security has the vendee upon the happening of such an event?

There is no such thing as a condition precedent, that the vendee is compelled to actually pay and deliver the whole purchase money to the vendor before the vendor can be called upon to execute the deed when the object of the contract is that a vendee should pay a certain sum for a parcel of land in consideration of the vendor executing to the vendee a good and sufficient conveyance.

Hill v. Grigsby, 35 Cal. 661; Englander v. Rogers, 41 Cal. 421; Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 489; Southern P. R. Co. v. Allen, 112 Cal. 465; Dennis v. Strassburger, 89 Cal. 583; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 318; Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 494; Merrill v. Merrill, 95 Cal. 337; Townsend v. Tufts, 95 Cal. 257.

The provisions in the contract that all moneys paid thereon are to be considered as forfeited, etc., are void under the provisions of §§ 1670, 1671, Civil Code.

Easton v. Cressey, 100 Cal. 78; Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 450; Eva v. McMahon, 77 Cal. 472.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover from the corporation defendant moneys paid by plaintiff on a contract for the purchase and sale of a tract of land situated in the then county of Fresno, now in the county of Madera. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals therefrom, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial. The appeal is supported by a bill of exceptions. The facts, briefly stated, are the following: On the 21st day of February, 1891, the defendant, as party of the first part, entered into a written agreement with the plaintiff, as the party of the second part, whereby said party of the first part agreed that upon the performance of the covenants to be kept by the plaintiff it would convey to him a tract of 5 acres of land situate in the county of Fresno, and certain water rights, all of which are fully described. Plaintiff was to pay therefor $625, as follows: $125 down, the receipt whereof was acknowledged; $125 on or before February 21, 1892; and a like sum annually until and including February 21, 1895, with interest payable annually on all deferred payments at 6 per cent per annum. Plaintiff, also, by the agreement, requested the defendant to plant the tract of land to fruit trees, and to cultivate them for three years from February 21, 1891, for all of which plaintiff was to pay $375, as follows: $62.50 on execution of the agreement, the receipt whereof was acknowledged, and a like sum semiannually on the 21st days of August and February, until and including August 21, 1893. Plaintiff further agreed to pay all taxes, state and local, and all water rates and dues, assessed or due and payable on said property from and after the date of the agreement. Time was made of the essence of the contract, and performance by the plaintiff was made a condition precedent whereon depended the agreement of defendant to convey; and, if plaintiff failed to perform his covenants, the party of the first part (defendant) was to be released from all obligations to convey, and plaintiff was to forfeit all moneys paid and all rights under the agreement, and the sums so paid were to be treated, not as a penalty, but as liquidated damages. Plaintiff paid on account of the agreement the sum of $382.50, viz., two payments of $125 and interest, as provided in the agreement, and two payments of $62.50 and interest, on account of the planting and care of the trees, which sums were accepted by defendant. On the 9th day of August, 1895, plaintiff, in writing, tendered to defendant all sums due the latter on account of the agreement, and offered to comply with all the terms and conditions of his contract, demanded a deed, and tendered to defendant a deed for its execution. The tender also contained a further demand that, if defendant refused to accept the sum of $1,000, tendered, and to execute a deed, defendant return to plaintiff the sum of $382.50 paid it on account of the contract, all of which was refused by defendant. Plaintiff has never been in possession of the property, or any part thereof.

The complaint contains two counts. The foregoing facts are pleaded in the first count. By the second count the plaintiff seeks a recovery as for money had and received. By the first count, which seems to have been framed upon some theory of equitable relief, the averments of the plaintiff amount to this, and to no more: That he entered into a contract for the purchase of land; that he made certain payments according to his covenants; that he defaulted in later payments; that three and a half years after his first default, and more than six months after default in the time of final payment, he made a tender to defendant of the full amount due under the contract, which tender was refused; that by the express declaration of the parties time was made essential in the contract, and that payment of the moneys upon time was a condition precedent to the right to a conveyance; that, for failure to pay upon time, defendant, by the terms of the agreement, is released from all obligation to convey, and the moneys paid are forfeited as liquidated damages; yet, notwithstanding these covenants, by a tender made and refused long after plaintiff's default, defendant is itself in some way placed in default, and plaintiff may recover his money. This, moreover, without the slightest averment or the shadowiest proof in excuse of plaintiff's breach of contract. The case stands, then, upon this proposition: that under a contract for the sale of realty, where time is of the essence, a vendee, after breach of covenant to pay, performance of which is made a condition precedent to his right to a conveyance, may, without excusing his default, by a tender of the amount due, acquire some legal or equitable right which warrants his recovery of the moneys he has paid. Respondent insists that his position finds abundant support in the line of cases beginning with Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443. The trial judge evidently entertained the same view. If this be the law, it is important that it be so declared without equivocation. If it be not, then it is equally important that the misunderstanding and doubts of the profession should be promptly removed. Land is one of the very highest forms of property. Contracts for its sale are required to be solemnly evidenced by signed writings. The value of such sales amounts to untold millions of dollars annually. It becomes a matter of the utmost consequence, then, that the reciprocal rights and duties of vendors and vendees under the conditions and covenants usually found in such contracts—conditions and covenants in such general use that their employment may be said to be universal—should be clearly defined and understood. It is in this view alone that this case becomes important, for the amount involved is only about $380. But the doubts which seem to exist concerning legal and equitable rights under such contracts demand for their removal a somewhat extended examination of the subject.

It may be as well at the outset to quote the Code provisions bearing upon the question. Their consideration will arise as the discussion proceeds. Civil Code, § 3306: "The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to convey an estate in real property is deemed to be the price paid, and the expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon; but adding thereto in case of bad faith the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed at the time of the breach, and the expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land." Id. § 3307: "The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to purchase an estate in real property is deemed to be the excess, if any, of the amount which would have been due to the seller under the contract over the value of the property to him." Id. § 1670: "Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid, or other compensation to be made for a breach of an obligation, is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except as expressly provided in the next section." Id. § 1671: "The parties to a contract may agree therein upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when from the nature of the case it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage." Id. § 3384: "Except as otherwise provided in this article, the specific performance of an obligation may be compelled." Id. § 3387: "It is to be presumed that the breach of an agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately relieved by pecuniary compensation, and that the breach of an agreement to transfer personal property can be thus relieved." Id. § 3389: "A contract, otherwise proper to be specifically enforced, may be thus enforced, though a penalty is imposed or the damages are liquidated for its breach, and the party in default is willing to pay the same."

Of any contract for the sale of land there may be a breach, either by the vendee refusing to pay, or by the vendor refusing to convey. Actions at law for the breach of contracts are as old as the law itself. As the common law long antedated the system of equity jurisprudence, there was a time when the only recovery available to the injured party was a recovery in damages,—money, for money is the only recompense which the law affords for a private injury. The establishment of equity jurisprudence afforded a different redress, one unknown to the law. Acting upon the wrongdoer, it forced him specifically to perform his contract. This, however, but increased the suitor's remedies, and left it optional with him in proper cases either to rest upon his legal action for damages, or to seek in equity the relief of compulsory performance. Even so, however, there still were, and there must always be, breaches of such contracts for which equity is powerless to afford redress. Thus, if a vendor contracts to convey land to which he has no title, equity cannot compel him to obtain title, and the vendee must of necessity be limited to his action at law. If there were not such an action, and a rule and measure of damage under it, he would be remediless. Again, it is to be remembered that equity, designed but to supplement the deficiencies of the law, will withhold its aid where the law affords full redress. For both these classes of cases, then,—that is to say, for those where the law is sufficient, and for those where equity is powerless to aid,—the injured party must seek legal redress.

The two sections of the Code first above quoted deal with the legal redress to which the party is entitled, either at his option or from the compulsion of circumstances. It is true that under our system the court of law and the court of equity are merged into one, and that a party is awarded such legal or equitable redress, as a simple pleading of ultimate facts shows that he merits; but, nevertheless, the distinctions between the kinds of redress and the modes in which they are administered cannot and are not sought to be obliterated. It was well recognized, however, that the damages of the law afforded inadequate compensation for the breach of many contracts. In contracts for the sale of chattels, for a breach the vendee usually (though not always) received adequate compensation in money, since with the money he could buy another article identical in kind and value. In contracts for the sale of land it was otherwise. No other piece of land upon the earth could duplicate that which the purchaser desired. Præsum affectionis was an important element of the vendee's contract, and this could not be measured. A pecuniary recompense, then, failed to meet the case. On the part of the vendor, since he is selling his land for a money price, it would appear logically that an action at law for the recovery of damages would answer the requirements of his case upon a breach by the vendee, and that he should not be allowed, therefore, to resort to equity for relief. But mutuality is an es-sentia element in contracts for which specific performance may be decreed. In other words, before a contract may be specifically enforced against the one party to it, it must be enforceable against the other; and, moreover, as was said by Lord Eldon in expressing his dissatisfaction with the relief against forfeitures granted by equity: "The result of experience is that, where a man, having contracted to sell his estate, is placed in this situation,—that he cannot know whether he is to receive the price when it ought to be paid,—the very circumstance that the condition is not performed at the time stipulated may prove his ruin, notwithstanding all the court can offer as compensation." Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. Jr. 59. It may frequently be of the utmost consequence to the vendor that he should have the right to enforce the contract and receive payment for his land in money, since he may much prefer the full purchase price to retaining the estate and receiving smaller monetary compensation by way of damages. And, finally, it is to be considered that during the life of such contracts the vendor foregoes his right to convey to another. He may thus lose an opportunity to make an advantageous sale, and, while this right is admittedly valuable, it is extremely difficult to put a price upon it. For these reasons the equitable action for specific performance is as available to the vendor as to the vendee. Pom. Spec. Perf. §§ 6-12.

From this difficulty in meting out adequate compensation at law arose two things: First. The parties, by convention, were allowed to agree upon the value of the injury occasioned by the breach as liquidated or stipulated damages. These damages were not only recoverable at law, but courts of equity would not and could not relieve against them. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1318; Williams v. Green, 14 Ark. 315; Westerman v. Means, 12 Pa. 97. Second. Equity immediately took cognizance of the violation of such contracts, and made whole the injured party by decreeing specific performance. It also did the same in the case of contracts for the sale of chattels, where the peculiar circumstances warranted it. Thus, in Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450, it is said: "The jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree specific performance does not turn at all upon the question whether the contract relates to real or personal property, but altogether upon the question whether the breach complained of can be adequately compensated in damages. If it can, the plaintiff's remedy is at law only; if not, he may go into a court of equity, which will grant full redress by compelling specific performance on the part of the defendant. Accordingly, while it is a general rule that contracts for the sale and transfer of personal property will not be specifically enforced, yet, if there are circumstances in view of which a judgment for damages would fall short of the redress which the plaintiff's situation demands, . . . equity will decree specific performance." In Krouse v. Woodward, 110 Cal. 638, this court was again called upon to consider the question, and decreed the return of specific stock pledged, refusing to allow compensation in money in lieu thereof, because of the peculiar circumstances which rendered damages inadequate and equitable relief necessary. But the presumption is that damages are adequate for the breach of a contract to transfer personal property, and are inadequate, for the reasons we have been considering, for the breach of a contract to convey real property. This is the precise declaration of § 3387 of our Civil Code. It presents the sole reason why liquidated damages are countenanced under § 1671 of the Civil Code, and specific performance is decreed. In further confirmation is found § 3389 of the Civil Code, recognizing the universal rule that liquidated damages are proper in such contracts, and, notwithstanding the fact that damages may be thus stipulated, specific performance will be decreed. This declaration was to set at rest a question which somewhat vexed the courts, namely, that, as the parties made their damages certain by stipulation, uncertainty, which alone justified the interposition of equity, was removed, and therefore only redress at law remained. Whitney v. Stone, 23 Cal. 275; Bagley v. Peddie, 16 N. Y. 469, 69 Am. Dec. 713; Williams v. Dakin, 22 Wend. 201; Hahn v. Conoordian Soc. 42 Md. 460; Chilliner v. Chilliner, 2 Ves. Sr. 528; McCaull v. Braham, 16 Fed. Rep. 37; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 464. Thus, so far as this state is concerned, the question is concluded by the Code, and a party may either rest satisfied with a recovery of stipulated damages, or, waiving them, may resort to equity for specific performance.

One other point invites brief attention before application is made of these well-settled principles to the contract and facts in the case at bar. In this, as is usual in such contracts, time is expressly declared to be essential. It was always considered essential at law, but it has sometimes been said that equity will not or does not so regard it. This, however, means, no more than that, if equitable grounds in excuse of the default are shown, equity, to avoid forfeiture, will relieve the vendee, and uphold a tender made after time. It is the more willing to do this since, the price having been agreed upon, the vendor can usually be compensated for the delay by adding interest. In no other sense is the expression true. Where time is expressly made of the essence of the contract, equity will not ignore the provision for equity follows the law, and will neither make a new contract for the parties nor violate that which they have freely and advisedly entered into. Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359; Martin v. Morgan, 87 Cal. 203; Woodruff v. Semi-Tropio Land & W. Co. 87 Cal. 275; Vorwerk v. Nolte, 87 Cal. 236; Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487; Bennett v. Hyde, 92 Cal. 131.

The equitable rule where time is not of the essence is succinctly stated in § 1492 of the Civil Code. Now, in such contracts, upon a breach by the vendor of the covenant to convey, what courses are open to the vendee? Obviously these: He may stand upon the contract, and sue at law for damages for the breach. Here his recovery will be governed by § 3306 of the Civil Code. Or, still standing upon his contract, he may go into equity, seeking its specific performance; or he may sue at law to recover the amount that may have been agreed upon as stipulated damages; or, finally, treating the vendor's breach as an abandonment, he may himself abandon it, when, the contract having thus come to an end, he may sue at law to recover what he has paid in an action for money had and received, for, the contract being at an end, the vendor holds money of the vendee to which he has no right, and to repay which, therefore, the law implies his promise. Upon the other hand, after the vendee's breach of the covenant to pay, what are the vendor's rights? First, to stand upon the terms of his contract, and sue for its breach under § 3307 of the Civil Code; second, still resting upon the contract, he may remain inactive, yet retain to his own use the moneys paid by the vendee, so that it is of no moment whether or not the contract declares that such moneys shall upon the breach be forfeited as liquidated damages; third, going into equity, still upon his contract, he may seek specific performance; or, finally, if his generosity prompts him so to do, he may agree with the vendee for a mutual abandonment and rescission, in which last case, and in which last case alone, the vendee in default would be entitled to a repayment of his money. One thing more he may do, but this is rather incidental to the fact that he has made the contract than a right growing out of it. It has heretofore been said that in certain cases equity will relieve the vendee from the effect of a breach of his covenant to pay upon a day certain. When such relief is granted, it is only after a showing of fraud, mistake, surprise, or other ground of purely equitable cognizance, excusing the breach. Now, as the vendee in default may maintain such an action, so may the vendor call the defaulting vendee into a court of equity, and compel him to show why all his rights under the contract should not be held to be at an end. The vendor, when he prosecutes such an action, does so to cut off the possibility of any future claim by the vendee to equitable relief, which might embarrass or cloud his title. In some forums this is designated an action for rescission. With us it is commonly called an action to foreclose the vendee's rights. Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 113; Fairchild v. Mullan, 90 Cal. 190.

In the foregoing statement of the rights of the vendor and vendee it has been said that the vendee, upon the breach of the vendor is entitled to recover the moneys stipulated as liquidated damages. The foregoing discussion sets forth the reason: the inability of the law to afford adequate compensation in money, and the right consequently accorded to the contracting parties to stipulate what should be the measure and amount of the detriment caused by the default,—a reason recognized by §§ 3387 and 3389 of the Civil Code. In the case of the vendor, where the vendee's breach is merely a failure to pay money, under the general principle that damages for a failure to pay money can usually be accurately measured, and compensation made by the allowance of interest, courts have inclined to disallow stipulated damages to the vendor, and have limited him to compensatory damages actually proved. But where the breach of the vendee is of some act not thus readily to be measured, stipulated damages will be allowed the vendor. Tingley v. Cutler, 7 Conn. 297; Leggett v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 394; Decamp v. Feay, 5 Serg. & R. 323, 9 Am. Dec. 372; Remington v. Irwin, 14 Pa. 143; Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. Eq. 494.

But while equity will thus, in the cases indicated, refuse to recognize stipulated damages, and will often permit a vendee in default to excuse his breach as to the time of payment, and, after excuse made, compel the vendor to perform, it does not do so arbitrarily. The vendee must always show equitable grounds for relief before equity will interpose. Pom. Spec. Perf. § 335. When an equitable showing is not made to excuse the breach, the vendor has the right in equity, as he always has at law, to retain the moneys paid by the vendee. Therefore we have said that it matters not in such contracts that the parties have declared that the vendor may retain the moneys paid as stipulated damages. The name which the parties thus give does not alter the fact nor change the vendor's rights. If it be said that the clause for stipulated damages is void, still the vendor is entitled to retain the money. Thus, in Hansbrough v. Peck, 5 Wall. 497, 18 L. ed. 520, the Supreme Court of the United States, having under consideration this identical question, says: "No rule in respect to the contract is better settled than this: that the party who has advanced money or done an act in part performance of the agreement and then stops short, and refuses to proceed to its ultimate conclusion, the other party being ready and willing to proceed and fulfil all his stipulations according to the contract, will not be permitted to recover back what has thus been advanced or done." In precise illustration of the proposition may be quoted the language of the learned Chancellor Walworth in Edgerton v. Peckham, 11 Paige, 352: "The contract, it is true, contains a general provision that, if default shall be made in either of the payments, Strobeck shall forfeit all the previous payments, and give up the possession of the premises. This, however, is but the legal effect of the contract without such a provision; for, if no such provision had been contained in the agreement, the defendant might have brought an action of ejectment to recover the possession of the premises, which ejectment suit this court would not have restrained, except upon the terms of paying the balance of the purchase money and the costs of suit. Nor could the payments already made pursuant to the terms of the contract have been recovered back if the vendee had refused to complete his purchase, even if this clause of forfeiture had not been inserted in the contract. The question here presented, then, is whether this clause was intended by the parties to deprive the purchaser of all legal and equitable right to the premises, or to the previous payments, if for any cause the last payment should not be made at the precise moment when it became due and payable; and, if so, whether it is not the duty of this court to relieve against such a forfeiture." Prof. Pomeroy, in his Equity Jurisprudence (§ 455), thus considers the matter: "Where an ordinary contract for the sale of land is so drawn that the vendee's estate, interest, and rights under it are liable to be forfeited and lost upon his failure to pay the price at the time specified, the question whether equity will relieve him ought to be a very plain and simple one; but in the face of the authorities it is impossible to be answered in any general and certain manner. . . . I shall therefore simply state the general conclusion derived from the decided cases. It is well settled that where the parties have so stipulated as to make the time of payment of the essence of the contract, within the view of equity as well as of the law, a court of equity cannot relieve a vendee who has made default. With respect to this rule there is no doubt; the only difficulty is in determining when time has thus been made essential. It is also equally certain that when the contract is made to depend upon a condition precedent,—in other words, when no right shall vest until certain acts have been done; as, for example, until the vendee has paid certain sums at certain specified times, then, also, a court of equity will not relieve the vendee against the forfeiture incurred by a breach of such condition precedent."

It has been said that after the vendee's breach the vendor may agree to a mutual abandonment and rescission, in which last instance, and in which alone, the vendee in default would be entitled to a repayment of his money. Such was the precise condition of affairs pleaded, and not denied, in Drew v. Pedlar, where it is said: "Both the complaint and answer admitted that the agreement had been rescinded and annulled by the parties; and, as the judgment on the pleadings partly rests upon that fact, it is conclusive evidence of the fact." And again: "From the time the defendants elected to rescind the contract, or to consider and treat it as rescinded, it was their duty to refund the money they had received under the contract, and no demand before suit was necessary." Such, indeed, is the law, and, if Drew v. Pedlar be confined to cases in the condition thus represented,—that is to say, to cases where the vendor has rescinded after vendee's breach,—then no misunderstanding need arise, and no confusion will result. What is there said as to the covenant for liquidated damages being void is, as we have seen, of no consequence in contracts such as that and the one at bar, where the liquidated damages are expressed as the moneys paid by the vendee; for in all such cases, as has been shown, the vendor is entitled to retain these moneys, whether designated as liquidated damages or not. Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572, affords a typical instance of such rescission by the vendor. There the vendee was in default, but the vendor elected to rescind, and, notwithstanding the default, refunded to the real-estate agent the moneys that had been paid by the vendee under the contract. The action was against the real-estate agent, and it was correctly decided—and, indeed, over the decision there could be no question—that in such a case the vendee is entitled to recover his money. But while it is essentially true that in case of a rescission the vendee may demand that he be restored to his original condition it does not follow that a vendor who refuses to convey after such breach by the vendee thereby rescinds. To the contrary, in refusing to convey after the vendee's default he is not treating the contract as at an end, but is expressly standing upon it, and basing his rights upon its terms, covenants, and conditions. The misleading feature in Drew v. Pedlar comes from the long statement of facts, from which it appears that all the plaintiff vendee did was to make tender long after his default, which tender the vendor refused to accept. But the vendee likewise pleaded a mutual abandonment and rescission, and, as appears from the opinion, the pleading as to these matters was not denied. It would be to the last degree unjust and inequitable to allow a vendee, after his default under such a contract, to put the vendor in default by a mere tender. The practical effect of such a rule would be that a vendee, without risk, could speculate indefinitely in the land of the unfortunate vendor. The vendee would enter into a contract in which time would be declared of the essence, and stipulate under condition precedent, as in this case, to make payment at a certain time. Failing to make payment, he would, three months, six months, one year, or, as in this case, over three years, after the date of the failure, make an offer to perform, and, if the land had risen in value, according to the theory of respondent here, could compel performance; but in every case he could recover the moneys paid. Lord Loughborough, in Lloyd v. Collett, 4 Bro. Ch. 469, well says: "There is nothing of more importance than that the ordinary contracts between man and man, which are so necessary in their intercourse with each other, should be certain and fixed, and that it should be certainly known when a man is bound and when not. There is a difficulty to comprehend how the essentials of a contract should be different in equity and at law. It is one thing to say, the time is not so essential that in no case in which the day has by any means been suffered to elapse the court would relieve against it, and decree performance. The conduct of the parties, inevitable accident, etc., might induce the court to relieve. But it is a different thing to say the appointment of a day is to have no effect at all, and that it is not in the power of the parties to contract that, if the agreement is not executed at a particular time, the parties shall be at liberty to rescind it. . . . I want a case to prove that, where nothing has been done by the parties, this court will hold, in a contract 45 L. R. A.

of buying and selling, a rule . . . that the time is not an essential part of the contract. Here no step has been taken from the day of the sale for six months after the expiration of the time at which the contract was to be completed. If a given default will not do, what length of time will do? . . . An equity [arising] out of . . . [one's] own neglect! It is a singular head of equity." In Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 102, this court, having under consideration Drew v. Pedlar, said: "That case does not go to the extent of holding that a vendee can elect to consider the contract at an end, and recover what he has paid, when the vendor has not abandoned the contract." In Merrill v. Merrill, 103 Cal. 287, Drew v. Pedlar was again under review, and it is said: "Nor do I think it was held in any of the cases cited that a rescission was effected simply by the act of a vendor in claiming a forfeiture. In some of the cases the contract provided that the vendor might rescind upon default of the vendee. In such cases the rescission is by consent of the parties. In others it seems to be held that when the vendor refuses further performance, and claims the damages according to the contract, he abandons the contract, and thereupon the vendee may also abandon it, and reclaim his money. Whether the conclusion be correct or not is not a question here. Unless the rescission is by consent, it is difficult to understand how it has been brought about; for, as respondent justly says, it is, in effect, enacted in § 1691 of the Civil Code that rescission cannot be otherwise effected without a compliance with that section. The idea must be that the abandonment of the contract by the vendor is equivalent to a claim of rescission on his part which may be acquiesced in by the vendee. In Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, it was simply held that the vendor was also in default, in that he did not tender a deed on the very day it was due on the contract. Both being in default, either could treat the contract as rescinded. It was not there held that when a vendor refuses to complete performance because of a breach on the part of the vendee, and claims damages as stipulated in the contract, he thereby rescinds or consents to a rescission. It has been said in several cases that this doctrine was announced in Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 449. Perhaps it does so hold, but such conclusion seems to be based in that case partly upon the pleadings in which both parties recognize the fact of a rescission. In other words, it was a rescission by mutual consent."

In the case at bar the payment of the final amount under the contract, at the time and in the manner agreed upon, was a condition precedent to the right of the vendee to demand a conveyance. Upon his failure to make payment the vendee committed a breach, and no affirmative act upon the part of the vendor was necessary to bring about this result. Months after, and without any equitable showing to relieve the default, the vendee makes tender, and because of its refusal claims the right of recovery. But the vendor, in refusing to accept the tender and to repay the money, is neither violating his contract nor rescinding it, nor treating it as at an end. He is standing squarely upon its terms. The vendee is within the rule declared by Pomeroy, and above quoted. The contract is made to depend upon a condition precedent. By its terms no right is to vest in the vendee until certain acts of payment have been done by him, and a court of equity no more than a court at law will relieve a vendee, under such circumstances, from the penalties arising from the breach of such condition, in the absence of an equitable showing to excuse his default. None is here even attempted to be made.

It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded, and it is ordered accordingly.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Temple, J.

Harrison, J., concurring:

I concur in reversing the judgment and order appealed from upon the following grounds:

The plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written agreement February 21, 1891, whereby the defendant agreed that "in consideration of, subject to, and upon the full and due performance of the covenants and agreements on the part of the party of the second part hereinbefore contained," it would convey to the plaintiff a certain tract of land; and whereby the plaintiff, in consideration of said agreement, agreed to pay to the defendant the sum of $625, as follows: $125 upon the execution and delivery of the agreement, $125 on or before the 21st day of February, 1892, and $125 on or before the 21st day of each succeeding February, the last of said payments to be made on or before the 21st day of February, 1895, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent payable annually on the 21st day of February of each year on each and all deferred payments. The agreement also contained the following provisions: "It is expressly understood and agreed between the parties hereto that in all matters and things hereunder to be done, and all payments hereunder to be made, time is and shall be of the very essence of this agreement. The due performance of all covenants and agreements on the part of the party of the second part is a condition precedent, whereon depends the performance of the agreements on the part of the party of the first part. In the event of a failure of the party of the second part to comply with the covenants and agreements, or any thereof, on his part entered into, the party of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or in equity to transfer and convey said properties, or any thereof, and the said party of the second part shall forfeit all rights under this agreement, and all rights to any and all moneys which he shall theretofore have paid hereunder, as liquidated damages for such default, and not as a penalty." Other provisions, not necessary to be considered herein, are also found in the agreement. At the execution of the instrument the plaintiff paid to the defendant the sum of $125 therein provided for, and on February 21, 1892, paid the further sum of $125, together with $7.50 for interest. No other instalment of the purchase price of the land, or interest thereon, was paid. The plaintiff did not enter into possession of the land. August 9, 1895, the plaintiff tendered to the defendant the full amount then unpaid upon the said agreement, and demanded a conveyance of the land, tendering at the same time a deed for execution proper in form. The defendant refused to make the deed, and thereupon the plaintiff brought the present action to recover the money which he had paid to the defendant under the provisions of the contract. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff as prayed for in his complaint, from which the defendant has appealed.

Under the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant neither could maintain an action thereon against the other without having performed all of the conditions previously to be performed by himself. The plaintiff could not maintain an action for a conveyance of the land until he had paid or tendered the money which he was to pay therefor. By the terms of the agreement he agreed to pay certain instalments of the purchase price at designated times, and although the defendant could have brought an action for each of these instalments except the last, at its maturity, without tendering a conveyance, yet, if it failed to bring such action until after the maturity of the last instalment, it could not maintain an action therefor without a previous tender of the conveyance. McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 455. Each of the parties to the contract had the right to compel the other to comply with its terms, and any action of this nature would be an action upon the contract, and to enforce it according to its terms. A contract for the purchase and sale of real estate does not differ from any other contract so far as the rights of the parties under its terms are affected. Parties have the right to make their contracts in such form and with such terms as they desire, and it is the function of courts to construe and enforce them as they have been made by the parties. Each has the right to the enforcement of the obligations of the other, and neither can free himself from his obligation against the will of the other, so long as the contract remains in force. Whether the action be to enforce the contract or to recover damages for its breach, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff in such action to show a performance on his part of all the acts required to be performed by him before he can call upon the other to comply with his part of the agreement, or respond in damages for a failure so to do. Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307.

There have been many cases before this court involving the rights of parties to agreements for the sale and purchase of real estate, in which it has been held that after the parties have rescinded the agreement, or mutually agreed to abandon it, the vendee may recover the money which he had paid in part performance of his contract (Dreio v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443; Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572; Shively v. Semi-Tropic Land &

W. Co. 99 Cal. 259); but it has never been held that while the contract was insisted upon by the vendor, and he had done no act by which it might be contended that he had abandoned the contract, or was in any respect in default, the vendee could recover the money paid by him in part performance of the contract. On the contrary, it has been held that the vendee, who was himself in default in the payment of a portion of the money, could not, against the will of the vendor, repudiate the contract, and recover the portion already paid. Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 102; Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 335; Garberino v. Roberts, 109 Cal. 125. In the present case the parties have made their agreement in clear and definite terms. The plaintiff agreed with the defendant that he would pay to it certain sums of money at certain times, and the agreement of the defendant is equally explicit and clear that in consideration of the full and due performance of the agreements on the part of the plaintiff it would execute to him a conveyance of the land. That there might be no misunderstanding of these respective obligations, they further declared that it was expressly understood and agreed between them that in all matters and things to be done, and all payments to be made, by virtue of the contract, "time shall be of the very essence of this agreement;" and, further, that the due performance of all covenants and agreements on the part of the plaintiff was a condition precedent to the obligation of the defendant to perform its agreement. The plaintiff does not claim that he performed his covenants and agreements according to the terms of the contract, but by express allegation shows that he did not do so; nor does he offer any excuse for their nonperformance. Neither does he allege nor contend that the defendant has violated any of the obligations assumed by it under the contract. By the terms of the agreement the defendant was not required to make the conveyance except upon the full payment of the purchase price by the 21st of February, 1895, and it is not alleged in the complaint that such purchase price was then paid, or that it was tendered until many months thereafter. The plaintiff could not maintain an action against the defendant to recover the money paid by him, unless there had been a breach of the contract by the defendant; and the defendant was not guilty of a breach of its obligation by failing to execute the conveyance, when the plaintiff was himself in default, or by refusing to comply with the demand of the plaintiff made many months after he had lost his right to the enforcement of the contract. Section 1490, Civ. Code, provides: "Where an obligation fixes a time for its performance, an offer of performance must be made at that time, within reasonable hours, and not before nor afterwards." The time for the performance of the obligation by the plaintiff was fixed by the contract, and under the provisions of this section he was required to perform his contract at that time, and not before or afterwards. As the contract also declared that time was of the essence of the obligation, the provisions of § 1492, Civil Code, are inapplicable, and the offer of performance subsequent to the time fixed by the contract was unavailing.

The provision that in case of default by the plaintiff to comply with his agreement he should forfeit his right to whatever moneys he might theretofore have paid, and that the defendant should be released from all obligation to convey the property, was but a declaration in express terms of what would have been the legal rights of the parties without such provision. The plaintiff had agreed to pay the money to the defendant as a condition precedent to his right to demand a conveyance of the land, and as the consideration for the defendant's agreement to make the conveyance, and he could not, by his mere default, become entitled to repossess himself of the money which he had paid under this express agreement. Whether the money thus paid was styled by the parties as penalty, or forfeiture, or liquidated damages, is immaterial. This provision was not an executory agreement for "damage to be paid or compensation to be made for the breach of an obligation," for which provision is made in § 1670, Civil Code, but the money therein referred to was money that had been paid by the plaintiff in discharge of an obligation which he had assumed, and the right of the defendant to receive and retain it was not impaired by the terms in which it was styled in the agreement.

We concur: Garoutte, J.; Van Fleet, J.

Rehearing denied.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

Flora A. DEEDS et al., Appts.,

v.

John STRODE, Resp't.

(.....Idaho.....)

*Plaintiff, a married woman, having a

*Headnote by HUSTON, J.

NOTE.—For right of action growing out of cohabitation under void marriage, see Morrill v. Palmer (Vt.) 33 L. R. A. 411, and note; also Payne's Appeal (Conn.) 33 L. R. A. 418. 43 L. R. A.

husband from whom she had never been lawfully divorced, married defendant. The latter marriage having been declared null and void, plaintiff brings action to recover damages from defendant for injuries alleged to have been received by her from defendant while they were cohabiting together, by reason of the defendant's having inoculated her with a venereal disease. Held, that, it not appearing that defendant had induced plaintiff to enter into marital relations with him by any fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation, no recovery could be had.

As to divorce or annulment of marriage because of venereal disease, see Smith v. Smith (Mass.) 41 L. R. A. 800; and McMahon v. McMahon (Pa.) 41 L. R. A. 802.

(December 14, 1898.)

APPPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the District Court for Ada County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the communication to the female plaintiff of a venereal disease while she was living with defendant as his wife. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hawley & Puckett and E. J. Dockery for appellants.

Mr. W. E. Borah, for respondent:

If plaintiff could be treated as the wife of the defendant for the purposes of action, she could not have cause of action against her husband for tort.

Bandfield v. Bandfield (Mich.) 40 L. R. A. 757; Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 394, 24 Am. Rep. 27; Peters v. Peters, 42 Iowa, 182; Freethy v. Freethy, 42 Barb. 641; State v. Oliver, 70 N. C. 60; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 216; Nickerson v. Nickerson, 65 Tex. 283.

The plaintiff was not the wife of Strode, but was another man's wife, and received alleged injuries or damages by reason of her criminal relations with a man not her husband.

Under our statute the plaintiff Flora A. Deeds was guilty of bigamy at all times while she was living with Strode, and could have been convicted as a bigamist; in other words, she was living in open violation of law.

Idaho Rev. Stat. §§ 6805, 6809; Davis v. Com. 13 Bush, 318.

No man can make his own misconduct the ground for an action in his own favor.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 187; Hall v. Coppel, 7 Wall. 544, 19 L. ed. 244; Holt v. Green, 73 Pa. 198, 13 Am. Rep. 737; Spalding v. Oakes, 42 Vt. 343; Percy v. Clary, 32 Md. 245; Wallace v. Cannon, 33 Ga. 199, 95 Am. Dec. 385; Barrow v. Landry, 15 La. Ann. 681, 77 Am. Dec. 199; Brown v. Tuttle, 80 Me. 162; Squires v. Parson, 5 Watts & S. 357; Lyons v. Desotelle, 124 Mass. 389; McGrath v. Merwin, 112 Mass. 467, 17 Am. Rep. 119; Beach, Contrib. Neg. §§ 3, 4, pp. 7, 9, 15, 26; Churchill v. Holt, 131 Mass. 68, 41 Am. Rep. 191; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. p. 1; Jetter v. New York & H. K. Co. 2 Abb. App. Dec. 464; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 36 L. ed. 759; Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, 33 L. R. A. 750; Morrison v. Bennett, 52 Pac. 553; Bartle v. Nutt, 4 Pet. 184, 7 L. ed. 825.

The same principle which we invoke in this case is involved in a case of seduction, wherein it is universally held that as a woman is particeps criminis to the wrong, she cannot recover.

Woodward v. Anderson, 9 Bush, 624; 3 Sutherland, Damages, p. 737; Bartley v. Richtmyer, 4 N. Y. 38, 53 Am. Dec. 347; Weaver v. Bachert, 2 Pa. St. 80, 44 Am. Dec. 159; Freer v. Cameron, 4 Rich. L. 228, 55 Am. Dec. 663; Cline v. Templeton, 78 Ky. 550; Hamilton v. Lomax, 26 Barb. 615; Paul v. Frazier, 3 Mass. 71, 3 Am. Dec. 95. 43 L. R. A.

Plaintiff and Strode stood in the same relation as if they had never been married; their assumed marriage would not have even protected them from criminal prosecution for bigamy or adultery.

State v. Whitcomb, 52 Iowa, 85, 35 Am. Rep. 258; Carpenter v. Smith, 24 Iowa, 200; Comstock v. Adams, 23 Kan. 513, 33 Am. Rep. 191; Stewart, Marr. & Div. § 46; Smith v. Smith, 13 Gray, 209; Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 46 Iowa, 444; Adams v. Adams, 51 N. H. 388, 12 Am. Rep. 134; Johnson v. Coleman, 23 Wis. 452, 99 Am. Dec. 193; Crouch v. Crouch, 30 Wis. 667; Yorke v. Yorke, 3 N. D. 343.

Huston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages brought by the plaintiffs, husband and wife, against the defendant. A demurrer was interposed by the defendant to the complaint of the plaintiff upon the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This demurrer was sustained, and from the judgment entered thereon this appeal is taken.

This action is brought by and for the benefit of the plaintiff Flora A. Deeds. The complaint states that said Flora A. and her said husband "have, by mutual agreement and understanding, lived separate and apart from each other for more than seven years last past," and "that plaintiff Rufus M. Deeds is made a party hereto by reason of his being the husband of the plaintiff Flora A. Deeds, and for that reason only." The complaint further states that in the year 1890, at the town of Eugene, in the state of Oregon, plaintiff Flora A. Deeds and her said husband Rufus M. separated, and have since that time lived separate and apart from each other; that in February, 1892, the plaintiff Flora A. Deeds commenced suit in the district court for Ada county, Idaho, against her said husband to procure a divorce; that such proceedings were had in said suit that on the 22d day of December, 1892, a judgment and decree were entered in said court pretending to grant a decree of divorce to said plaintiff Flora A. Deeds from the said Rufus M. Deeds; that on the 31st day of October, 1893, at Boise City, in Ada county, Idaho, the plaintiff Flora A. Deeds, believing, by reason of the judgment and decree hereinbefore referred to, that she was a single woman, and no longer the wife of the plaintiff Rufus M. Deeds, at the solicitation and request of the defendant assented to a marriage ceremony being performed between them, and they were at said time and place married, and from that time, and at all times until the 26th day of February, 1897, lived together in Ada county as husband and wife; that on the 14th day of May, 1897, the plaintiff Flora A. Deeds, still believing she was the wife of defendant, and that the decree and judgment hereinbefore referred to granting a divorce from her said husband Rufus M. Deeds was in full force and effect, commenced in the district court for Ada county, Idaho, an action for divorce against the defendant herein, alleging as the basis and grounds of said divorce cruel and inhuman treatment on his part. Defendant filed a cross complaint in said action, alleging that the marriage between himself and the said plaintiff Flora A. Deeds was null and void, among other things, because the court, in granting the divorce between herself and plaintiff Rufus M. Deeds, had no jurisdiction to make or enter such judgment and decree; whereupon, and on the 29th day of November, 1897, and after said cause had been heard and determined in said district court, said court rendered its judgment, deciding, among other things, that the judgment and decree in said cause of Deeds against Deeds was null and void, and appeal from said judgment of the district court to the supreme court of the state of Idaho was taken by said Flora A. Deeds, and the said judgment and decree of the district court was by said supreme court affirmed (52 Pac. 161); that while the plaintiff Flora A. Deeds was living with the defendant as his wife aforesaid, and believing herself to be his wife as aforesaid, and in the month of May, 1895, in Ada county, state of Idaho, the defendant, without fault of said plaintiff, and without her knowledge, connivance, privity, or consent, became affected with a certain loathsome and infectious disease, commonly and generally known as gonorrhea, and communicated said disease to plaintiff, and infected her therewith. The complaint then goes on to elaborate the sufferings of plaintiff by reason of said disease, and the neglect and ill treatment of her by the defendant, and closes with a demand for damages in the sum of $25,000.

It does not appear that the defendant in any way misled the plaintiff, that he made any false representations to her, or practised any fraud upon her, to induce her to enter into the marriage relation with him. If there was fraud or deceit practised in bringing about the relation, it was presumably, under the statements in her complaint, attributable to the plaintiff. She was the incapacitated party. It was by her procuration—upon her motion—that the pretended divorce from Deeds, her former husband, had been procured. She was in a position to know, and is presumed to know, whether that divorce was legal or not; whereas the defendant cannot be presumed to have any knowledge or information upon that subject. There is no allegation in the complaint that defendant knew of the existence of the divorce in Deeds against Deeds. The plaintiff, holding herself out as one capacitated and qualified to enter into the marriage relation, accepted the proposals of the defendant to, and did, enter into such relations with him. Her act was at least a fraud upon the defendant. Plaintiff claims that by, through, and in consequence of said relations she has been damaged, and asks the court to award her compensation for such damage. We know of no principle of law or equity which will support this contention. Appellants' counsel cite 2 Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 1023. The language there used is as follows: "The woman is relieved of her incapacity to sue and be sued. She may sue the man who has entrapped her into a void marriage, and compel him to account for rents and profits of property he took under such marriage. Where a woman is induced by fraud and deceit to enter into a void marriage, she may recover damages for such tort without first having the marriage annulled." This may be accepted as a correct statement of the law; but how is it made applicable to the case made by the record under consideration? The plaintiff has undoubtedly the right to sue and be sued, but to avail herself of that right she must, like every other person, have a cause of action. There is no question of property rights involved in this case. It is not claimed that the plaintiff brought to the community any estate or property whatever, or that the defendant derived any pecuniary benefit from said relation. The complaint alleges that the defendant is the owner and possessed of property of the value of $150,000. It is not claimed or pretended that the plaintiff was "induced by fraud and deceit to enter into a void marriage." The case of McDonald v. Fleming, 12 B. Mon. 285, cited in note to § 1023 of Nelson on Divorce and Separation, was one in which the parties, after having cohabited together as husband and wife for several years, separated, and the woman brought action to recover for her services during the time of such cohabitation, and also for money advanced by her to the defendant for the purchase of certain real estate. The court held that, while she could not recover for services, she might for the money advanced, and so decreed. The parties in that case were in pari delicto. While this decision supports the text in Nelson, it has no application to the facts in the case at bar. Blossom v. Barrett, 37 N. Y. 434, 97 Am. Dec. 747, cited by appellants in their brief, was an action "brought [by the plaintiff] to recover damages of the defendant for fraudulently inducing the plaintiff to marry the defendant, and to cohabit with him, he having another wife living from whom he was not lawfully divorced, and the defendant being at the time incapacitated to marry any one while his prior wife was living." The plaintiff's right to recover in that case was based upon the fraud of the defendant. It could not be considered an authority in support of the contention of the plaintiff in this case. In Robbins v. Potter, 98 Mass. 532, cited by appellants, the plaintiff sued to recover money advanced to defendant by her while they were living together as husband and wife under a marriage which both parties knew to be void. The court in that case held, in substance, that while the plaintiff would not be allowed to recover for services rendered to defendant during the existence of the illegal relation between them, still she could recover for money loaned defendant during that period, and which he had expressly contracted to pay. Cooper v. Cooper, 147 Mass. 370, cited by appellants, was an action for services,—held no recovery could be had. The case of Higgins v. Breen, 9 Mo. 497, is not in point,—another case of fraud by defendant. We have examined carefully all of the cases cited by counsel, and have found not one which supports, even by implication, the contention of appellants. Cooley, Torts, p. 279, has, under the head of "Fraudulent Marriage," the following: "A very serious wrong may be accomplished by inducing anyone through misrepresentation and fraud, to enter into an illegal marriage. . . . The tort in such a case consists in the fraud accomplished, to the woman's serious, and perhaps permanent, injury." Counsel for appellants insist that, the injury of which plaintiff complains having been the result of the wrongful act of defendant, plaintiff should be entitled to recover therefor, the same as though defendant had assaulted or poisoned her. We do not recognize the parallel contended for.

The injury complained of in this case could scarcely have arisen but for the illegal relations existing between the parties, and such relations were entered into voluntarily by plaintiff, and were not induced by any fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the defendant; and the plaintiff's incapacity to enter into marriage relations constituted the illegality. The injury was consequent upon her own illegal act, and we know of no principle of law authorizing recovery for injuries in such a case.

Judgment of the District Court affirmed, with costs to respondent.

Sullivan, Ch. J., and Quarles, J., concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

Emma BEEBE, Admr., etc., of Charles I. Beebe, Deceased.

(174 Ill. 13.)

1. Refusal to take the case from the jury is not error if there is evidence tending to support the cause of action set up in the declaration.
2. Failure of a railroad company to have a good, substantial, and safe track for its trains, or to see that its trains are properly managed, will render it liable for an injury to a passenger therefrom.
3. A passenger lawfully on a freight train, who in the exercise of due care arises when the train comes to a standstill either to leave the train or to feed stock which his contract requires him to do, may recover from the carrier for injuries caused by a sudden start or unusual jerking of the train.
4. A stockowner on a freight train, under a contract to care for his stock but to ride in the caboose, will not be negligent in remaining in the stock car if before he has finished attending to the stock the train starts and proceeds upon its journey.
5. A carrier cannot contract for relief from liability for injuries to a passenger paying fare, caused by its own negligence.
6. A shipper traveling on a freight car with the consent of the carrier, to care for his stock, is regarded as a paying passenger.
7. The law of the state in which a contract for carriage is made controls as to its nature, interpretation, and effect if it is entire and indivisible, although it is to be performed partly in that state and partly in another.
8. If the trial court sustains the objection of the losing party to remarks by the opposing counsel in argument to the jury, he cannot complain on appeal that they were not ruled out if he did not ask that they should be.

(June 18, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for McLean County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

Statement by Magruder, J.:

This is an action on the case brought by appellee against appellant for alleged negligence in causing the death of her intestate. The jury found the issues for the plaintiff, assessing her damages at $5,000. A new trial was denied, and judgment was rendered on the verdict. Upon appeal to the appellate court this judgment has been affirmed, and the present appeal is prosecuted from such judgment of affirmance. The facts out of which the questions involved arise are substantially as follows: On April 15, 1894, the appellee's intestate, Charles I. Beebe, who lived at Webster City, Iowa, chartered a car over the appellant's railroad from Webster City, Iowa, to West Lebanon, Indiana, and placed his horses (seven in number) in one end of the car, and his household goods in the other end thereof, to be carried to West Lebanon, Indiana, by way of Dunbar, Freeport, LaSalle, and Wenona, Illinois. Between the doors of the car were two barrels of water, and hay and oats and boxes. The train, of which the car chartered by the deceased was a part, was a through freight train, which left Webster City, about 7 o'clock on the morning of said 15th day of April. The train reached Freeport, Illinois, some time after 11 o'clock in the night of that day. The car in question was then put into another train going south, and was the seventh car from the engine. The train leav-

NOTE.—On the question of the risk assumed by a passenger on a freight train, see note to Ohio Valley R. Co. v. Watson (Ky.) 19 L. R. A. 810.

As to the rights of a person riding on a pass, 43 L. R. A.

see note to Muldoon v. Seattle City R. Co. (Wash.) 22 L. R. A. 794. See also Meuer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. D.) 25 L. R. A. 81; and Davis v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Wis.) 33 L. R. A. 654.

ing Freeport reached Lasalle at about a quarter past 5 o'clock on the morning of April 16, and there stopped to change engines. At Lasalle, Beebe watered his horses, with the consent of the conductor, and pursuant to an arrangement with him. The horses were in the back part of the car, with their heads to the east, and separated from the household goods by a plank nailed across the car, some 3 feet above the floor. The horse next to the plank was a small broncho pony, which had been used for family driving. On account of the way in which the goods were loaded, the east door of the car could not be opened. The deceased was assisted in watering his stock by the conductor and the brakeman. As soon as the last bucket of water was handed up to the deceased through the door on the west side of the car, which was the only door open, the train pulled out,—Beebe being still in the car,—and did not stop again until it reached Wenona, 20 miles to the south. The train arrived at Wenona a little after 6 o'clock on the morning of April 16. At Wenona the appellant's road crossed the road of the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company on an up grade. As the train pulled down over the crossing of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, it was subjected to a severe and violent jerking and jumping; and Beebe who had remained in his car all the way from Lasalle, fell or was thrown out of the west door. His right foot and ankle being caught under the wheels, were crushed, and within three hours amputated by the company's local surgeon. About 7 o'clock in the evening of the next day he died. The appellant introduced in evidence a certain live-stock contract executed on April 15, 1894, between the deceased, Beebe, as shipper, and the appellant, by its agent. Certain provisions in print precede the contract, and refer to the contract as one to be executed in duplicate by the shipper and the agent of the company. The provision hereinafter quoted seems to be a part of the preface to the contract, and not of the contract itself; but, as both parties treat it as being embodied in the contract, it is here set forth as a part thereof. The provision referred to is as follows: "The owner will feed, water, and take care of his stock at his own expense and risk. Free transportation will be given to the owner or his bona fide employees in charge of the stock, as per current instructions given to agents. Persons so passed will be conveyed at their own risk of personal injury from any cause whatever, except injuries arising from gross carelessness of the company, and must ride in the caboose attached to the train conveying the stock."

Messrs. Williams & Capen for appellant.

Messrs. Fifer & Barry and A. B. Davidson, for appellee:

The law of the state in which the contract for carrying is made controls as to its nature, interpretation, and effect.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Fairchild, 69 Ill. 260; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Smith, 74 Ill. 43 L. R. A.

197; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Boyd, 91 Ill. 268; Rorer, Inter-State Law, p. 68; McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412; Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245; Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 242, 28 L. ed. 415; Rue v. Missouri P. R. Co. 74 Tex. 474; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 145 U. S. 393, 36 L. ed. 738; Anstedt v. Sutter, 30 Ill. 164.

A passenger paying fare by traveling on a pass in charge of his stock, when he pays the regular freight for transportation of his stock, is a passenger for hire, and the company cannot limit its liability for injury caused by its negligence.

New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Stevens, 95 U. S. 655, 24 L. ed. 535; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788; Monroe v. The Inca, 50 Fed. Rep. 561; Lewisohn v. National S. S. Co. 56 Fed. Rep. 602; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Curran, 19 Ohio St. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 362; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471; Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Beaver, 41 Ind. 493; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Selby, 47 Ind. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 719; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Nickless, 71 Ind. 271; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Henderson, 51 Pa. 315; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Ivy, 71 Tex. 409, 1 L. R. A. 500; Maslin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 14 W. Va. 180, 35 Am. Rep. 748; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Miles, 40 Ark. 298, 48 Am. Rep. 10; Carroll v. Missouri P. R. Co. 88 Mo. 239, 57 Am. Rep. 392; Wabash R. Co. v. Brown, 152 Ill. 484.

Where there is no evidence to show just what the intestate was doing at the time of the injury, for the purpose of showing that he was in the exercise of ordinary care, it is competent to show what his habits were as to being careful and cautious for his own safety.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark, 108 Ill. 113.

The stop at Lasalle only being for two or three minutes Beebe didn't have sufficient time within which to get out of the car and get back to the caboose before the train pulled out. All the trainmen knew that he was in the car at the time the train pulled out.

Florida R. & Nav. Co. v. Webster, 25 Fla. 394; Illinois C. R. Co. v. O'Keefe, 154 Ill. 508.

It is only when the conclusion of negligence necessarily results from the statement of fact that the court can be called upon to say to the jury that a fact establishes negligence as a matter of law.

Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 119 Ill. 586; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Voelker, 129 Ill. 540; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Johnson, 135 Ill. 647; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Byrum, 153 Ill. 137; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Nelson, 153 Ill. 89.

If Beebe was properly and necessarily in the car he did not lose his rights as a passenger, and the same degree of care was due him as if he had remained in the caboose.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnol, 144 Ill. 261, 19 L. R. A. 313.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. At the close of the evidence the defendant presented to the court a written instruction saying to the jury "that there is no evidence to support a verdict for the plaintiff, if rendered in this case, and you are accordingly instructed to return a verdict for the defendant." This instruction was refused, and its refusal is assigned as error. After a careful examination of the case, we are of the opinion that there was evidence tending to support the cause of action set up in the declaration, and therefore the court committed no error in refusing to take the case from the jury. The declaration alleges, in substance, that, the train having come almost to a standstill, the engineer, negligently, carelessly, suddenly, violently, and without warning, started the engine forward, and thereby, with great force and violence, jerked the car in which the deceased was a passenger, by means of which he was thrown down and out of it, and received the injuries from which he died. One of the questions of fact in the case is whether or not there was any unusual violence in the jerking or bumping of the car, beyond that which is inevitable to freight trains under the circumstances mentioned in the statement preceding this opinion. There was testimony on both sides of this question. Another question of fact was whether the death of appellee's intestate was caused by the fall from the car, or by a kick which he is alleged to have received from one of the horses in the car. There is testimony on both sides of this question. Another question of fact was whether or not the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. Upon both sides of this question, also, there was much testimony. Upon all these matters of fact the jury were elaborately instructed; thirteen instructions having been given for the plaintiff, and eighteen for the defendant. Six of the instructions given for the defendant were first modified by the court before they were given. Six others asked by the defendant were refused. The verdict of the jury, and the judgment entered thereon in the circuit court, and the judgment of the appellate court affirming the judgment of the circuit court, are conclusive upon these questions of fact, so far as this court is concerned. It is the duty of a railroad company to have a good, substantial, and safe road track for the use of its trains; and it is also its duty to see that its trains are properly managed. When a passenger is injured from a failure to perform this duty, the railroad company is guilty of negligence, for which it may be held responsible in damages. Where a passenger is lawfully upon a freight train, and arises, when the train comes to a standstill, either for the purpose of alighting from the train, or for the purpose of feeding stock, where a contract with the company requires him to do so, and is injured by a sudden start of the train, or by an unusual jerking or bumping of the train, the jury will be justified in finding that the railroad company is guilty of negligence, if it be shown that the plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care for his safety at the time of the injury. Florida R. & Nav. Co. v. Webster, 25 Fla. 394; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnol, 144 Ill. 261, 19 L. R. A. 313. It is claimed that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, upon the alleged ground that when injured he was in the car chartered by him, where his horses and household goods were, instead of being in the caboose attached to the freight train. It is true that the contract required the deceased to "ride in the caboose attached to the train conveying the stock." But the contract also states that "the owner will feed, water, and take care of his stock at his own expense and risk." The contract must be so construed as to be consistent with itself. If the deceased was obliged to feed, water, and take care of his stock, he had the right to go into the car where the stock was, in order to fulfil this obligation. Counsel for appellant claim that while the train was in motion it was the duty of the deceased to be in the caboose, and that only when the train stopped did he have any right to go to his own car, and was there engaged in watering his stock, and was assisted in so doing by the conductor and brakeman of the train. While he was thus engaged in feeding and watering his stock, the train suddenly started, and did not again stop until it reached the place where the accident occurred. The stop made, at Lasalle would appear to have been a very short one, and not long enough to enable the deceased to finish the acts of attention which he was giving to his stock. It was a fair question to be submitted to the jury, whether, under all the circumstances, the servants of the appellant in charge of the train did not fail to give the deceased sufficient time to feed and water his stock and return to the caboose before the train started. After the train started, and while it was in motion, it was not possible for him to reach the caboose. It was a question, therefore, for the jury to determine, whether or not the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in being in the car, and whether or not he was not forced to remain there by reason of the conduct of the servants of the appellant, in causing the train to start before he had finished caring for the stock. If there had been no provision in the contract of shipment requiring the deceased to feed and water his stock, it would have been the duty of the appellant to do so, and appellant would have been liable to the deceased for a loss or injury occurring to the stock in case it had failed to discharge this duty. But inasmuch as, by the terms of the contract, the duty of caring for the stock was assumed by the deceased, as the shipper thereof, the appellant was under obligations to afford him a reasonable opportunity and reasonable facilities for doing what the contract required him to do. It failed to furnish him such reasonable opportunity and facilities, if it refused to detain its train long enough at a proper stopping place to enable him to feed and water his stock and return to the caboose before the starting of the train. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 436, 437.

2. It is assigned as error by the appellant that the court gave certain instructions for the appellee upon the trial below. Complaint is made of the first and second of such instructions. These instructions announce, in substance, that such portion of the contract as required the intestate to be conveyed at his "own risk of personal injury, from any cause whatever, except injuries arising from gross carelessness of the railroad company," was null and void, and of no binding effect. The question presented by the objection to these instructions is whether a common carrier can by contract exempt itself from liability for negligence in the conveyance of a passenger, provided only such negligence is not gross in its character. Many of the cases make a distinction between negligence and gross negligence, and hold that a carrier may exempt itself from liability for the former, though not for the latter. Undoubtedly the great weight of authority is in favor of the position that the carrier cannot by contract exempt itself from liability for ordinary negligence. It would certainly seem to be against public policy that a common carrier, owing a duty to the public to carry its passengers safely, and to exercise the highest degree of care and skill in doing so, should be allowed to exempt itself from liability for any degree of negligence which should cause an injury to a passenger. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 618. It is said, however, that in Illinois a carrier may by contract limit its liability for all negligence, except gross negligence. This rule has been laid down in some cases in reference to the shipment and carriage of property, but does not apply when a carrier intends to limit its liability for personal injury to a passenger paying fare. Where a passenger was traveling in the cars of a railroad company upon a free pass given him by the company, and received injuries to his person, it has been held that a contract exempting it from liability for any other species or degree of negligence than gross negligence was valid. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Read, 37 Ill. 464, 87 Am. Dec. 260; Toledo, W. & W. R. R. Co. v. Beggs, 85 Ill. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 613. But in the present case it cannot be said that the deceased intestate was riding upon a free pass. A person who is traveling, with the consent of the railroad company, upon a freight train, in charge of stock or goods carried by the company for him, is a passenger. (Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Beaver, 41 Ind. 493; Lawsen v. Chicago St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 64 Wis. 447, 54 Am. Rep. 634. Even where such a person is traveling in charge of cattle, on a drover's pass, he is a passenger for hire. The consideration for his passage is the service he renders in taking care of the cattle, or the charge made against him or his employer for shipping the cattle. New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. ed. 898; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Curran, 19 Ohio St. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 362; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 16, and cases cited in notes; Lake Shore & M. S. R. 43 L. R. A.

Co. v. Brown, 123 Ill. 162; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Blumenthal, 160 Ill. 40. Inasmuch as the deceased was a passenger, the degree of care required of the appellant for his safety was "the highest reasonable and practicable skill, care, and diligence." Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnol, 144 Ill. 271, 19 L. R. A. 313, and cases there cited. In the case of Arnold v. Illinois C. R. Co. 83 Ill. 273, 25 Am. Rep. 386, it seems to have been held that a railroad company could make a contract with a passenger on a freight train to exempt itself from liability for any other negligence than gross negligence. That case proceeded upon the theory that there was a difference between the obligation of a railroad company to carry a passenger upon a freight train, and its obligation to carry a passenger upon a passenger train, in respect to the degree of care required to be exercised. In later cases, however, it has been held that a carrier will be held to the same strict accountability for the negligence of its servants, resulting in injury to a passenger who is lawfully and properly on a freight train, as governs its liability for such negligence where the transportation is upon a train devoted to passenger service exclusively. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Arnol, 144 Ill. 271, 19 L. R. A. 313; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Blumenthal, 160 Ill. 40. A railroad company cannot exempt itself from the exercise of care and diligence in conveying its passengers, and cannot, even by contract, limit its liability for injuries to passengers to gross negligence alone. It is responsible for any degree of negligence which is sufficient to cause the injury, whether the negligence be called gross or ordinary. The requirement of such responsibility is demanded upon grounds of public policy.

It is contended by appellee that under the law of Iowa, where the contract was made, it was void and of no binding effect. Upon the trial of the case the plaintiff below introduced in evidence § 1308 of the Iowa Code, which is as follows: "Sec. 1308. No contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt any corporation engaged in transporting persons or property by railway from liability of a common carrier or carrier of passengers, which would exist had no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation been made or entered into." The plaintiff below also introduced in evidence the opinion of the supreme court of Iowa in the case of McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412, holding that a contract similar to that here under consideration was made void by said § 1308, and could not be enforced in Iowa. Whether or not the restriction of appellant's liability, as contained in this contract, was void or not by reason of said § 1308, depends upon the further question whether it is to be construed according to the law of Iowa or the law of Illinois, if the law of Illinois were such as it is claimed to be by the appellant. The contract was executed in the state of Iowa. As a general rule, the law of the state in which a contract for carrying is made controls, as to its nature, interpretation, and effect. In Pennsylvania Co. v. Fairchild, 69 Ill. 260, we said (p. 263): "The rule upon that subject is well settled, and has often been recognized by this court, that contracts are to be construed according to the laws of the state where made, unless it is presumed from their tenor that they were entered into with a view to the law of some other state." See also, Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Smith, 74 Ill. 197. We discover nothing in this contract to indicate that in entering into it the parties had in view the law of any other state than that of Iowa. In Michigan C. R. Co. v. Boyd, 91 Ill. 268, where the goods were shipped from Massachusetts to Lincoln, Ill. and the contract of shipment was made in Massachusetts, we said (page 271): "The contract for the carriage of the goods having been made in Massachusetts, the law of that state must control, as to its nature, interpretation, and effect." It is contended by counsel for appellant that this contract should be interpreted in accordance with the law of the place where it is to be performed. This action is brought in Illinois, and the injury resulting in Beebe's death occurred in Illinois. There is nothing in the terms of the contract itself to indicate that the parties intended any performance thereof in the state of Illinois. If there was any intention that the contract should be performed in any other state than Iowa, the performance must have been contemplated as taking place in the state of Indiana, rather than in the state of Illinois, because the property carried was to be taken to Indiana. The performance of the contract was to be consummated in the latter state. If, however, the contract be regarded as one which was to be partly performed in Iowa and partly in Illinois, it yet must be said of it that it is a contract which is entire and indivisible. "If a contract be entire and indivisible, and is to be partly performed in the state where it is made, and partly in another, then the lex loci contractus, or the law of the state where it is made, governs as to its validity; and, if invalid there, it is invalid everywhere else." Rorer, Interstate Law, p. 69; McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412; Western & A. R. Co. v. Exposition Cotton Mills, 81 Ga. 522, 2 L. R. A. 102. Inasmuch, therefore, as the contract, under the construction contended for by appellant, was partly to be performed in Iowa, it must, as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation, be governed by the law of Iowa. This being so, it was void, under § 1308, and the instructions complained of were not erroneous.

The objections made by the appellant to the third and eighth instructions given for the appellee are disposed of by what has already been said. As to the objections to the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth instructions given for the plaintiff below, it is sufficient to say that appellant asked similar instructions in its own behalf, which were given, and therefore it is estopped from complaining. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Latimer, 128 Ill. 163; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Haenni, 146 Ill. 614.

3. The appellant further complains that counsel for plaintiff below was guilty of making improper remarks to the jury. The counsel was severe in his comments upon the character of some of appellant's witnesses. These comments, however, were called forth and justified by the remarks previously made in his address to the jury by one of the counsel for appellant. Aside from this, however, when the remark complained of was made by the counsel for the plaintiff below in his closing address to the jury, counsel for appellant objected to the same, and the court sustained the objection. Counsel for appellant are estopped from here complaining of a ruling made by the court below which was in their favor. After the court made a remark which amounted, in substance, to a sustaining of the objection so made, counsel for the appellant did not ask the court for any further ruling upon the subject. They were content with the action of the court, so far as it went. They did not request the court to rule out the objectionable remark, and therefore it cannot now be said that there was a refusal to rule it out. In arguing cases to the jury, attorneys must be allowed to make reasonable comments upon the evidence, and upon the bearing of the witnesses giving the evidence. The interests of public justice require that counsel should not be subjected to any unreasonable restrictions in this regard. We discover nothing erroneous in the action of the court below upon this subject.

The judgments of the Appellate Court and of the Circuit Court are affirmed.

Boggs, J., took no part in the decision of this case.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

E. E. McPEEK

v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. A certified copy of a proclamation of the governor which has been deposited

NOTE.—As to the measure of damages for failure to deliver a telegram relating to a business transaction, see also cases in note to Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Brown (Tex.) 2 L. R. A. 766; Alexander v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Miss.) 3 L. R. A. 71; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Collins (Kan.) 10 L. R. A. 515, and note; Fed-42 L. R. A.

in the office of the secretary of state is admissible in evidence under statutes permitting such proof of records in his office where the statutes require him to keep papers deposited to be kept in his office, although no express provision is made as to proclamations.

2. Upon the question of liability for failure to promptly deliver a telegram directing the sendee to "come on first per v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Tenn.) 4 L. R. A. 660; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Lathrop (Ill.) 7 L. R. A. 474; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wilson (Fla.) 22 L. R. A. 434; Fererro v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (D. C. App.) 35 L. R. A. 548; and Fergusson v. Anglo-American Teleg. Co. (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 554.

train" to arrest a fugitive from justice who had been entrapped by the sendee, evidence of the arrangement between sender and sendee with reference to the capture is admissible.

3. The action by sendee of a telegram for failure to promptly deliver it is based, not on breach of contract, but upon defendant's neglect of its duty as a public carrier of messages.
4. The sendee's damages for failure to promptly deliver a telegram are not limited to what might reasonably have been in contemplation of the parties, but will include compensation for all injurious results which flow therefrom by ordinary natural sequence without the interposition of any other negligent act or overpowering force.
5. Damages for failure to promptly deliver a telegram advising the sendee of the whereabouts of a fugitive from justice may include loss of a reward offered for the capture, although the message did not contain such information on its face, if the company knew that it was important and that the sendee was expecting a message relating to such capture, and although neither the company nor the sendee knew at the time of the offer of reward, since the company was charged with knowledge that the reward might be made and that negligence might result in its loss.
6. Whether or not the failure to capture a fugitive from justice was due to neglect to deliver the telegram conveying information of his whereabouts is a question for the jury, where he had been enticed to a room and disarmed while a person having three assistants and a team engaged was waiting 12 miles away for notice to come and make the arrest.
7. Liability for neglect to deliver a telegram requiring the sendee's presence at another town that night cannot be defeated by showing that no train went until morning, where he had made arrangements to go with horses.
8. A telegraph company which received a message under the agreement to deliver it about 9 o'clock p. m. cannot refuse to deliver it because that is out of office hours.
9. A telegraph operator is acting within the scope of his authority in agreeing that a telegram shall be delivered out of office hours, so that his act will bind the company.
10. Whether or not sufficient diligence was exercised in attempting to deliver a telegram of the importance of which the company was notified is a question for the jury, where the messenger testifies that he went to the sendee's house at the proper time, and repeatedly rapped loudly on the door, but received no response, and members of the sendee's family testify that they were in the house at that time and heard no rapping, although they would have been likely to have heard it had there been any.

(January 26, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Henry County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for failure to promptly deliver a telegram. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Blake & Blake, for appellant:
The copy of the governor's proclamation offering a reward for the arrest of the fugitive McPherson was not competent testimony in this action.

43 L. R. A.

The journal kept in the executive office is the best and primary evidence of the official acts of the executive department.

Morrison v. Coad, 49 Iowa, 571; McCollister v. Yard, 90 Iowa, 621.

The evidence of conversations between plaintiff and Mrs. McPherson is objectionable for the reason that it would open a wide door for fraud.

Chapman v. Neary, 115 Cal. 79.

The damages claimed are not such as may be fairly supposed to have been within the contemplation of both parties at the time of making the contract as the probable result of a breach of it.

Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341.

Special circumstances involved in the case cannot be considered in estimating the damages, unless it can be made to appear that the company was informed as to them at the time the contract of sending was made.

25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 841; Dubuque Wood & Coal Asso. v. Dubuque, 30 Iowa, 176; Prosser v. Jones, 41 Iowa, 674; Mihills Mfg. Co. v. Day Bros. 50 Iowa, 250; Primrose v. Western U. Tele. Co. 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 883; Leonard v. New York, A. & B. Electro Magnetic Tele. Co. 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446; Baldwin v. United States Tele. Co. 45 N. Y. 744, 6 Am. Rep. 165; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 76 Tex. 217; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Smith, 76 Tex. 253; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Bryant, 17 Ind. App. 70; Croswell, Electricity, §§ 590-594; Thompson, Electricity, §§ 312, 313.

A proximate cause may be defined as that cause which in natural and continuous sequence unbroken by any efficient intervening cause produced the result complained of, and without which that result would not have occurred.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 436; Leonard v. New York, A. & B. Electro Magnetic Tele. Co. 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446.

There is nothing but the merest surmise, bare probability, or conjecture, and inconclusive inferences as to the success of plaintiff's undertaking had he received the telegram, which are wholly insufficient to authorize a recovery.

Kerr v. Keokuk Waterworks Co. 95 Iowa, 509; Central U. Teleph. Co. v. Swoveland, 14 Ind. App. 341.

Even granting that plaintiff would have been successful in effecting the arrest of McPherson, can the jury be allowed to presume, without any evidence, that he would without any uncertainty whatever have delivered him to the proper authorities. There was no evidence on the point whatever.

Central U. Tele. Co. v. Swoveland, 14 Ind. App. 341; Chapman v. Western U. Tele. Co. 90 Ky. 265; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Smith, 76 Tex. 253; McAllen v. Western U. Tele. Co. 70 Tex. 243; True v. International Tele. Co. 60 Me. 9, 11 Am. Rep. 156; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Kendzora, 77 Tex. 257; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Crull, 39 Kan. 580; Hampton v. Jones, 58 Iowa, 317;

Riech v. Bolch, 68 Iowa, 526; Mond v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 40 S. C. 524; Clay v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 81 Ga. 285; Stafford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 73 Fed. Rep. 273; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444, 31 L. ed. 479; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. 307, 14 L. ed. 157; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489, 69 Am. Dec. 718; Booth v. Spuyten Duyvil Rolling Mill Co. 60 N. Y. 487.

In the category of remote damages are to be included all those damages which result from the operation of an intervening efficient cause.

25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 839, 840; Rodkin v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 124; Lowery v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 60 N. Y. 198, 19 Am. Rep. 154; Scheffer v. Washington City, V. M. & G. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 252, 26 L. ed. 1071.

The defendant had the right to establish reasonable office hours for the receiving, transmission, and delivery of messages.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Harding, 103 Ind. 505; Given v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 119.

The damages for the breach of a contract must be such as might naturally be expected to follow its violation, and they must be certain both in their nature and in respect to the cause from which they proceed.

Leonard v. New York, A. & B. Electro Magnetic Teleg. Co. 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446.

Messrs. Babb & Babb and John D. Dill, for appellee:

There was no denial under oath of the genuineness of the signature of the governor of Iowa to said proclamation, nor an allegation that defendant had no knowledge or information sufficient to enable him to form a belief of the genuineness of said signature.

This being so the law cast the burden of proof on the defendant to show that it was not genuine.

Clark v. Polk County, 19 Iowa, 258; Blackshire v. Iowa Homestead Co. 39 Iowa, 624; Templin v. Rothweiler, 56 Iowa, 259; Thompson v. Leuth, 94 Iowa, 455.

Under these circumstances the proclamation was to be deemed genuine and admitted until overcome by proof to the contrary on the part of the defendant.

The certificate of the secretary of state to the proclamation in question certifies that he is the custodian of said paper. This is a fact which it was his duty to certify, and is proper evidence of the fact.

Clark v. Polk County, 19 Iowa, 259.

The arrangement made between plaintiff and Mrs. McPherson for the capture of Orman McPherson was part of the res gestæ.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 108; State v. Cross, 68 Iowa, 180; Sweet v. Wright, 57 Iowa, 510; Van Tuyl v. Quinton, 45 Iowa, 459.

This action is brought, not by the sender of the message, but by the one to whom it was addressed.

His right to recover is based, not on contract, but on the tort of the telegraph company.

Croswell, Electricity, §§ 462-466; Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 43 L. R. A.

28 L. ed. 72; Ellis v. American Teleg. Co. 13 Allen, 226; Smith v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ky. 104; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Dubois, 128 Ill. 248; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Allen, 66 Miss. 549; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. James, 90 Ga. 254.

The rule for recovery of damages in case of negligence is much broader in this class of actions than in case of contract.

The rule in the former class of cases is that the particular damages need not have been in contemplation of the parties at the time of the commission of the act complained of, provided the damages are the direct result of the act.

Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L. R. A. 72; Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 324, 41 Am. Rep. 41; 1 Sedgw. Damages, p. 130, note; Eten v. Luyster, 60 N. Y. 252; Hill v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 251; Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 136; Keenan v. Cavanaugh, 44 Vt. 268; Little v. Boston & M. R. Co. 66 Me. 239; Collard v. South-Eastern R. Co. 7 Hurlst. & N. 79; Hart v. Western R. Corp. 13 Met. 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64; Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 354; Perley v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 414, 96 Am. Dec. 645; Kellogg v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 223, 7 Am. Rep. 69; Patten v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 32 Wis. 524, 36 Wis. 413; Williams v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 217, 84 Am. Dec. 333; Ward v. Vanderbilt, 34 How. Pr. 144; Bowes v. The Pioneer Tow Line, 2 Sawy. 21.

In the case at bar the company had full knowledge that this was an urgent and important despatch, not only from the wording of the despatch—"Come on first train. Answer,"—but from the undisputed evidence that Mr. Ridgeway, the agent for the defendant at Winfield, had been fully informed of the anxiety of the plaintiff in regard to receiving it.

Telegraph messages are almost always brief, owing to the expense of sending them, and the court does not require that the defendant should be informed of the particular transaction to which they refer, or the particular loss that may be expected to follow in those states where there is no statute and the rule is not so broad as it is with us.

Garrett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Iowa, 257; Herron v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 90 Iowa, 129; American U. Teleg. Co. v. Daugherty, 89 Ala. 191; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hyer, 22 Fla. 637; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Fatman, 73 Ga. 285; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Reynolds Bros. 77 Va. 173, 46 Am. Rep. 715.

In actions for damages, the requirement that damages must not be uncertain is satisfied with reasonable certainty in this respect.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 610, 611.

Where a message is sent to take some action in regard to securing in some way a debt by attachment, execution, or otherwise, and by some negligence of the company it is delayed and the debt is lost, the company is liable for the full amount of that debt.

Parks v. Alta California Tele. Co. 13 Cal. 423, 73 Am. Dec. 589; Fleischner v. Pacific Postal Tele. Cable Co. 55 Fed. Rep. 742; Bierhaus v. Western U. Tele. Co. 8 Ind. App. 246; Bryant v. American Tele. Co. 1 Daly, 575; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Sheffield, 71 Tex. 570; Brown v. Western U. Tele. Co. 6 Utah, 219; Taylor v. Western U. Tele. Co. 95 Iowa, 740; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Cooper (Tex.) 20 S. W. 47.

But for the negligence of defendant, plaintiff would have captured McPherson before he left, and that was the question submitted to the jury, and they so found.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 572-574; Bishop, Non-Contr. L. §§ 450-452.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

September 20, 1896, after mortally wounding John Finley, the marshal of Morning Sun, Orman McPherson, fled. A few days later the plaintiff saw his wife, who promised to assist him in procuring the arrest of her husband. McPeek obtained McPherson's pension papers from Keithsburg, Illinois, for her; and she advised him (being in secret correspondence under an assumed name) of having these, and he came to her room at the hotel at Morning Sun, where she was employed as cook, October 22, 1896, at about 10 o'clock P. M. (having so arranged earlier in the evening), and there remained until between 3 and 4 o'clock the following morning. Before coming in, he gave up his revolvers, and she placed them in a bureau, where they remained during his stay. She had agreed to write to McPeek when she expected her husband, but, if he came unexpectedly, then to telegraph him. At about 7 o'clock P. M. of the 22d, she delivered to the defendant's agent at Morning Sun this telegram: "E. E. McPeek, Winfield: Come on first train. Answer. M. E. M.," telling him she wanted it "sent right away and delivered, and wanted an answer." Ridgeway, the agent at Winfield, usually closed his office at 6 o'clock, but was ordinarily at the station at about 9 o'clock. He received the message at 9:15 o'clock P. M. and carried it to the plaintiff's house, reaching there at about 9:30. After repeatedly rapping on the door, and being unable to arouse anyone, as he says, he placed the message over the door knob, with the end of the envelope between the door and the jamb, where it was found the next day at between 9 and 10 o'clock A. M. It seems the agent supposed the family was away from home, and would find it upon their return. They had in fact retired, and all testify that they did not hear the rapping of Ridgeway, or any noise at the door, and that they would have heard it, had there been any. The only train carrying passengers leaving Winfield for Morning Sun, a distance of about 12 miles, left the former place at 6 o'clock A. M. McPeek had told Ridgeway he was making an effort to capture McPherson, and might get a telegram from Morning Sun concerning the matter, and that if a message came, and he was unable to find him, to deliver it to Siberts, a constable. Both had repeatedly called at the office for such a telegram. It also appears that Siberts, by direction of McPeek, had arranged for a team at the livery stable and a driver to be ready for him at any time, and that Siberts was to go with McPeek in case McPherson should come to Morning Sun. The constable at the latter place, and another, had agreed to assist him, though not advised as to the nature of the business, except that it was to make an arrest. The evidence was such that the jury was warranted in finding the facts as stated, though it must be added that Ridgeway denies having previously talked with either the plaintiff or Siberts; and McPherson, who was afterwards arrested, declared he was not at Morning Sun as testified by his wife, and did not correspond with her. On the 21st day of October, 1896, the governor of Iowa, by proclamation, offered a reward of $300 for the arrest of McPherson, and his delivery to the proper authorities. The plaintiff's action is based on the allegation that he lost this reward through the negligence of the defendant in not delivering the message on the evening of October 22d. With these preliminary statements we shall be able to consider the different questions presented by the record.

1. A copy of the governor's proclamation, duly certified by the secretary of state, was received in evidence over the objection of defendant. That such a reward was authorized by § 58 of the Code of 1873 is not questioned. The method of making the offer is not pointed out, but it is to be paid upon the certificate of the governor. Usage has approved offering such rewards by way of proclamations, and this fully complies with the statute. That original proclamations made by the executive of a state should be preserved, admits of no doubt. The statutes make no express provision for such preservation, but by § 61 the secretary of state "shall have charge of and keep . . . papers which are now or may hereafter be deposited to be kept in his office." The secretary certified that he was the custodian of the record of the official acts of the executive department, and that the proclamation was a part of the files of his office. We take it, then, that this was deposited, to be kept by the secretary of state. Section 4649 provides, in substance, that acts of the executive of this state are proved by the records of the state department. The very evident purpose is to avoid the necessity of calling the governor before a co-ordinate branch of government to give evidence or answer for any of his acts. While the statute does not in express terms make such papers a part of the files to be kept and preserved by the secretary of state, we are of opinion that § 66 is broad enough to include them, that by fair implication § 4640 authorizes them to be so kept, and that, under §§ 4649 and 4635 of the Code, a certified copy thereof is admissible in evidence in lieu of the originals.

2. The defendant also interposed objections to the testimony of the plaintiff, Siberts, and Mrs. McPherson to the arrangement made between them with reference to the capture of McPherson. This was original, and not hearsay, evidence. It related to circumstances and facts essential to be proved as leading up to the sending of the telegram, and had a direct bearing upon the probability of the plaintiff effecting the arrest of McPherson, had the telegram been promptly delivered. It was necessary to show the exact situation, and all that had been done to accomplish that purpose. The appellant is impressed by the danger of fraud in this class of evidence. It is suggested that, if there be possibility of fraud, it may readily be obviated by the exercise of diligence.

3. It is insisted that the damages were remote, and not such as either party might have contemplated from the wording of the message. But extrinsic evidence was admissible to show that defendant had notice of the importance of the message. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Lathrop, 131 Ill. 575, 7 L. R. A. 474; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Edsall, 74 Tex. 329. The appellant argues the case on the theory that the action of plaintiff is for the breach of contract. He made no contract with the defendant. This is conceded by appellant in its opening argument, and denied in its reply. The first impression was undoubtedly the correct one. The contract was with the sender of the message, and whether recovery might be had for breach thereof, because made for plaintiff's benefit, we need not determine. This action is based on the negligence of the defendant in the performance of a duty in its public capacity as a common carrier of messages. In all such actions, sounding in tort, the injured party is not limited to damages which might reasonably have been within the contemplation of the parties, but recovery may be had "for all the injurious results which flow therefrom, by ordinary natural sequence, without the interposition of any other negligent act or overpowering force." Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 757, 28 L. R. A. 72; Code, § 2163; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Dubois, 128 Ill. 248; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Allen, 66 Miss. 549; Ellis v. American Teleg. Co. 13 Allen, 226; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1; Smith v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ky. 104; Milliken v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 110 N. Y. 403, 1 L. R. A. 281; Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L. R. A. 669; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 6 L. R. A. 844. There was evidence tending to show that immediate delivery was requested, and that the agent at Winfield knew that McPeck was expecting a message, that it would relate to the capture of McPherson, and that prompt delivery was required. If so, while he may not have known of the reward being offered, he may well be credited with understanding that McPeck was putting forth his efforts to accomplish a purpose from which he anticipated some benefit to accrue to himself. The law authorizes the offering of such rewards, and it is not too strict a rule to hold the defendant responsible for such losses as may reasonably be anticipated to follow its negligence, whether informed definitely what these may be or not. It was charged with knowledge that such a reward might be made, and it might reasonably reckon on such a contingency, in omitting its duty with reference to such a message. Nor was the plaintiff advised that the reward had actually been offered on October 22d, though he understood it would be, and was acting to secure this and others proposed by local officers. That the omission of the defendant caused greater loss than he then supposed, does not affect its liability, or his right of recovery. Certainly the loss of the reward was the direct result of the failure to arrest and deliver McPherson to the proper authorities, for this was the very condition of its payment.

4. The burden was on the plaintiff to prove that in all reasonable probability the loss resulted from the negligence of the defendant. Hendershott v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Iowa) 76 N. W. 828. Had the plaintiff proceeded by team to Morning Sun, with the assistance of the two constables and another, there seems no good reason to doubt that he would have arrested McPherson, who had been disarmed by his wife. This is not absolutely certain, for many contingencies may be supposed which could have intervened. While these might well be considered, they do not warrant us in saying that these men would not have accomplished that which has often been done before, and which is ordinarily done by officers in like situation. Whether they would in all probability have succeeded, was for the jury to determine.

5. It is suggested that, as the train did not go until 6:06 in the morning, even if the message had been delivered the plaintiff could not have reached Morning Sun in time to make the arrest. But the plaintiff had made every arrangement to go by team. This message was understood by the plaintiff to require immediate attention owing to his agreement with Mrs. McPherson.

6. It may be that the defendant can fix office hours which are reasonable, and that those from 8 A. M. to 6 o'clock P. M. are not unreasonable. This we do not decide. But see Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Harding, 103 Ind. 505; Given v. Western Union Teleg. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 119. The company received this message, if Mrs. McPherson is to be believed, with the understanding that it was to be delivered at about 9 o'clock. The agent at Winfield received it, and the company, having undertaken to deliver it, was bound to do so with reasonable diligence. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Bruner (Tex.) 19 S. W. 149; Thompson, Electricity, § 300. He was acting within the scope of his agency, although not within the hours fixed for the active discharge of his duties. This could not relieve the company from discharging the obligation incurred by receiving the message to be delivered out of office hours.

7. The defendant asserts that no negligence in failing to deliver the message has been shown. If the testimony of Ridgeway be accepted as true, it might be that, in loudly rapping on the door repeatedly, and receiving no response, he exercised reasonable diligence. This is in dispute. The daughter of the plaintiff testified that she was at his home from 9 o'clock P. M., and did not retire until a half hour later, and that she heard no noise at the door. Mr. and Mrs. McPeek also testified that they heard no such noise, and that they would have been likely to have heard it, had there been any.

Whether Ridgeway made any effort to arouse the family is put in question by this evidence. If he was advised of the importance of the message as claimed by the plaintiff, he was bound to exercise diligence accordingly, and whether he did so was for the determination of the jury.

Some other matters are discussed, but they are not of sufficient importance to call for special attention.

We discover no error in the record, and the judgment must be affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

George H. PISTEL et al., Appts.,
v.

IMPERIAL MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA, of Baltimore City.

(.....Md.....)

1. A promise to pay an acknowledged indebtedness at such times and in such sums as the debtor "might feel able to pay" creates a legal and moral obligation to pay when the debtor is able, and, although the debtor is made the judge of that fact, his judgment must be honestly exercised.
2. An allegation that defendant has failed and refused to pay, although "able to do so," is not sufficient to show a right of action on a promise to pay when defendant "might feel able to pay," in the absence of any allegation that defendant felt able, or knew it was able, or something equivalent thereto.
3. A promise to pay certificates on condition that all certificates of similar import should be paid pro rata and no preference given to any of them over others entitles the holder of such certificates, when all the others have been surrendered and extinguished, only to such amount, if any, as was paid on the others, if they were surrendered without fraud or collusion.

(December 20, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an instrument executed by defendant. Affirmed.

The count in the declaration setting forth the obligation alleged that on the 26th day of April, 1893, defendant made, executed, and issued to plaintiffs' assignor its obligation under seal, or certificate of indebtedness for the sum of $2,100 in consideration of an indebtedness of that amount then due and payable by defendant to said assignor for value received by it, whereby defendant promised and covenanted to pay said amount

NOTE.—For similar cases as to the effect of agreements to pay on a certain condition, to be determined by the promisor, see also Smithers v. Junker (C. C. N. D. Ill.) 7 L. R. A. 264; and Page v. Cook (Mass.) 28 L. R. A. 759.

For the analogous question of promises to give satisfaction to the promisee, see note to Church v. Shanklin (Cal.) 17 L. R. A. 207. 43 L. R. A.

to said assignor at such time and in such sums as it, defendant, might feel able to pay the same; provided that all certificates of similar import should be paid upon pro rata, and that no preference should be given to any such certificate over others; and said company has received and accepted a surrender and extinguishment of all other certificates of similar import, but has failed and refused to pay the certificate herein named, although able so to do.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Charles W. Field, for appellants:

The legal meaning of these words is that the money should be payable within a reasonable time; or that it should be payable in whole or in part whenever the company should in point of fact be able to pay the whole, or a part thereof.

The certificate being dated April 26, 1893, and the suit having been brought in the summer of 1898, ample time had elapsed for its payment.

The law always sustains written contracts if possible, rather than destroys them.

The benefit of the doubt, therefore, should be given to the holder of the contract, and the court should lean strongest to the rule of construction that makes the paper valid rather than invalid.

Davies v. Smith, 4 Esp. 36; Mitchell v. Clay, 8 Tex. 443; Salinas v. Wright, 11 Tex. 512; Works v. Hershey, 35 Iowa, 340; Ramot v. Schotenfels, 15 Iowa, 458, 53 Am. Dec. 425; Brannin v. Henderson, 12 B. Mon. 61; Atwood v. Emery, 1 C. B. N. S. 110; Crooker v. Holmes, 65 Me. 199, 20 Am. Rep. 687; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 44; 1 Wait, Act. & Def. pp. 120-124.

The plaintiffs are entitled to recover either within a reasonable time, which has certainly elapsed, or they are entitled to recover upon proof of defendant's liability to pay the whole or a part of the money, which ability the seventh count sets forth in terms, and which the plaintiffs are prepared to prove at the trial.

Penniman v. Winner, 54 Md. 136.

If all the other certificates had been voluntarily surrendered and canceled by the holders thereof, it is identically the same thing, for the purposes of this cause, as if they had all been paid in full.

For now no possible question can arise of any preference being shown to the certificate sued upon over the other certificates mentioned.

As soon as they surrendered them voluntarily, they at once ceased to have any further rights against the appellee, and the appellee ceased to have any further right to claim as against the appellants, that it could not pay their certificate, because it was not also able to pay all the other certificates of similar import.

Mr. Richard K. Cross, for appellee:

The alleged contract is too vague and uncertain to create any legal obligation.

Blakistone v. German Bank, 87 Md. 302; Thomson v. Gortner, 73 Md. 475; Taylor v. Brewer, 1 Maule & S. 290; Roberts v. Smith, 4 Hurlst. & N. 315; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 842; Buckmaster v. Consumers' Ice Co. 5 Daly, 313; Delashmutt v. Thomas, 45 Md. 140; Guthing v. Lynn, 2 Barn. & Ad. 232; Sherman v. Kitsmiller, 17 Serg. & R. 45; Anson, Contr. p. 5; Brantly, Contr. Introduction 1; Pollock, Contr. pp. 1, 43; Cummer v. Butts, 40 Mich. 322, 29 Am. Rep. 530; Barnard v. Cushing, 4 Met. 230, 38 Am. Dec. 362; Nelson v. Von Bonnhorst, 29 Pa. 352.

A court should not allow loose expressions, such as this, to go to the jury for the purpose of raising obligations and rights between parties.

Thomson v. Gortner, 73 Md. 475; Delashmutt v. Thomas, 45 Md. 140; Recknagle v. Schmaltz, 72 Iowa, 63; Taylor v. Brewer, 1 Maule & S. 290; Roberts v. Smith, 4 Hurlst. & N. 315; Guthing v. Lynn, 2 Barn. & Ad. 234; Sherman v. Kitsmiller, 17 Serg. & R. 47.

No obligation has been created, and no contract has been made. To call such an agreement a contract, is simply a misuse of terms. Agreements or promises, which in fact reserve an unlimited option to the promisor, are illusory and cannot be regarded as contracts.

Pollock, Contr. p. 44; Anson, Contr. pp. 1, 6; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 842; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Brydon, 65 Md. 226, 57 Am. Rep. 318; Walter A. Wood Reaping & M. Mach. Co. v. Smith, 50 Mich. 565; Gelston v. Sigmond, 27 Md. 334; Griffith v. Frederick County Bank, 6 Gill & J. 441; Walsh v. Gilmore, 3 Harr. & J. 293, 6 Am. Dec. 503; Smith v. Crandall, 20 Md. 500; Brantly, Contracts, 18, notes, 1, 7.

A promise on condition is absolutely void, unless the condition be performed. It will not remove the bar of the statute.

Higdon v. Stewart, 17 Md. 105; Wilmer v. Gaither, 68 Md. 342.

Boyd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The declaration filed by the appellants against the appellee contains eight counts,—the first six being the common counts, and the other two on instruments under seal. There was no demurrer filed to the whole declaration, on account of the misjoinder of actions; but there was a demurrer to the seventh count, which the court sustained, and the parties went to trial on the others, which resulted in a verdict for the defendant. Judgment having been entered, the 43 L. R. A.

plaintiffs appealed, and the only question before us is the ruling of the court on that demurrer.

The first objection to this count, urged at the argument was that it alleges that the defendant promised to pay the amount of "the obligation under seal or certificate of indebtedness," described in it, "at such times and in such sums as it, said defendant, might feel able to pay the same;" and it is contended that there can be no recovery on an instrument subject to such conditions. Although we are of the opinion that such allegations as are necessary are not made, even if a suit can be maintained on this instrument, we will refer to some of the cases in which the courts have determined the effect of language somewhat similar to, or resembling, that before us. There is some apparent conflict between them, owing to the fact that many of the cases turned on the question whether the paper sued on was a promissory note or a negotiable instrument, and not whether there could be a recovery in any form of action, when such limitations had been inserted in the evidences of debt sued on.

Most of the decisions hold that a suit on an obligation payable "when the maker is able," or words to that effect, can be maintained upon an allegation and proof that he was able before suit brought. In Davies v. Smith, 4 Esp. 36, the defendant admitted he was "bound in honor, and should pay when he was able." Lord Kenyon held that he was liable, upon proof of ability to pay. That was followed in Mitchell v. Clay, 8 Tex. 443. In Salinas v. Wright, 11 Tex. 572, the suit was on an instrument which said, "Which sum I bind myself to pay so soon as circumstances will permit me." It was held not to be a promissory note, and that the plaintiff could not recover, on that instrument alone, without proof of the ability of the defendant to pay. In Veasey v. Reecer, 6 Ind. 406, a note was made payable by the maker "when able," and it was held that it matured so soon as the maker was able. In Ex parte Tootell, 4 Ves. Jr. 372, there was a promise to pay "at such a period of time that my circumstances will admit without detriment to myself or family, and not to be distressed upon any account whatsoever until such time that my circumstances will be as above described;" and the conclusion was that an action did not lie without proving that he was in good circumstances.

There is another class of cases in which the makers of the instruments have undertaken to limit the time of payment to their convenience. In Works v. Hershey, 35 Iowa, 340, it was held that the maker of a note which read, "On demand, after date, I promise to pay. . . . payable at Cincinnati, when convenient," was bound to pay it within a reasonable time. The court said the latter words could not nullify the words, "On demand, after date, I promise to pay." In Lewis v. Tipton, 10 Ohio St. 88, 75 Am. Dec. 408, a note payable "when I can make it convenient with 10 per cent interest till paid," was held to create a legal liability upon the maker, and to be payable within a reasonable time after its date. In Smithers v. Junker, 41 Fed. Rep. 101, 7 L. R. A. 284, Judge Gresham held that a note "payable at my convenience, and upon this express condition, that I am to be the sole judge of such convenience and time of payment," may be enforced by an action, after the expiration of a reasonable time, on demand and refusal of payment. In Barnard v. Cushing, 4 Met. 230, 35 Am. Dec. 362, a note was given by which defendants promised to pay a sum named on demand, with interest. At the same time the payees indorsed on the note, "We agree not to compel payment for the amount of this note, but to receive the same when convenient for the promisors to pay it." It was held that no action could be maintained upon the promise. But in Page v. Cook, 164 Mass. 116, 28 L. R. A. 759, the suit was on a note which read, "On demand, after date, I promise to pay, . . . payable when payor and payee mutually agree;" and it was construed to mean that it was payable, on demand, when and after the payor ought reasonably to have agreed. The court referred to the case of Barnard v. Cushing, and emphasized the fact that by the indorsement on the note in that case the payees agreed that they would not compel payment, and concluded its reference to it by saying, "Possibly, if the question arose now, a different result might be reached from that arrived at in that case." In Ramot v. Schotenfels, 15 Iowa, 458, 33 Am. Dec. 425, after the maturity of a note the parties indorsed thereon this agreement, "Renewed for an indefinite time at $10 interest per month, and the whole amount then to pay when both parties may agree." It was held that, as no definite time was fixed for payment, the note was payable within at least a reasonable time. In Brannin v. Henderson, 12 B. Mon. 61, an acceptance, on the back of an order, that "I will see the within paid eventually," was held payable within a reasonable time, if not forthwith. In Crooker v. Holmes, 65 Me. 195, 20 Am. Rep. 687, a note was made "payable when I sell the place where I now live." Held that the maker was bound to sell the place within a reasonable time, and, failing in that, the note was due.

We have thus referred to a number of cases which show that the tendency of the courts is to hold the makers of notes and other written obligations responsible whenever they admit indebtedness but are only uncertain as to the time of payment. In the last-mentioned case the court said: "The debt is due in presenti. Its payment is postponed to a future time, but the debt, none the less, exists. The debt is absolute; the time of its payment indefinite." All of the authorities seem to agree that, on an obligation to pay "when able," the holder can recover upon proof of the ability of the promisor to pay; and when it is payable "when convenient," or "eventually," or like expression, the courts have generally held it is payable within a reasonable time. The case which seems to be most in conflict with any of the above, and, indeed, the only one we have found that is difficult to reconcile with them, is that of Nelson v. Von Bonnhorst, 29 Pa. 352. There 43 L. R. A.

a party gave an instrument of writing, under seal, acknowledging an indebtedness to another, which he agreed "to pay whenever, in my opinion, my circumstances will enable me to do so." It was held that such contract imposed no legal obligation, and that no action would lie upon it, even though the court and jury should find that the party was of sufficient ability to pay the debt, because by the terms of the contract, the debtor was made the sole judge of that fact. But we cannot give our assent to that decision without some qualification. If the indebtedness is unqualifiedly acknowledged, as is done in the certificate sued on in this case, but the payment is simply postponed until the circumstances of the debtor will enable him to pay, he is morally and legally under obligations to pay when that condition exists, and, although he is made the judge of the fact, his judgment must be honestly exercised. Upon the allegation and proof that his circumstances did enable him to pay, and that he fraudulently refused to do so, although he knew he was able, such a promisor should be held liable. Any other conclusion, it seems to us, would encourage dishonesty and unfair dealings. The question of fraud was not raised in that case, and hence the court may not have felt called upon to qualify its decision, or the language used, which was, of course, only intended to apply to the facts before the court.

We do not understand a case of this character to be governed by such as those where it is stipulated that an article is to be furnished subject to the approval or satisfaction of the proposed purchaser, which approval or satisfaction is made a condition precedent to the right to recover compensation or the contract price. There the defendant does not get the plaintiff's property and then wilfully refuse to pay for it, and, as the contract is made subject to the condition that he shall approve of or be satisfied with it before accepting it, the court will not dispense with the condition, and say that the article was of a quality or character that ought in reason to have been accepted as satisfactory. But in cases such as this the defendant has received the money or other consideration, and has acknowledged his indebtedness, and the only question is when it shall be paid. The parties contract with the understanding that it is to be paid when the conditions mentioned exist, and, if they do exist, it would be a fraud for the promisors to wilfully refuse to pay, notwithstanding their ability to do so.

Now let us apply the law as thus established to the case before us. If this certificate of indebtedness had been simply to pay "at such times and in such sums" as the defendant was able, upon proper allegations and proof that it was able to pay the whole, or such part as gave the court jurisdiction, the plaintiffs could unquestionably have recovered. The amount being payable when the defendant was able, and it being shown to be able, the obligation would have matured by the very terms of the contract. But the terms are, when it might "feel able." To say that a corporation can "feel able" may seem odd, at first glance; but, as it must act through its agents, it means, when its officers, directors, or agents, whoever they may be that have charge of such matters, feel able,—that is to say, as we understand the use of that term, when they are “conscious of being” able, or know it is able. It was necessary to make such allegations as would bring the defendant within the meaning of the contract. This count should not only have alleged that the defendant was able to pay either the whole of the obligation or whatever part of it the plaintiff proposed to prove it could pay (so as to embrace the terms, “at such times and in such sums,” etc.), but that it “felt able,” or “knew it was able,” or something that would be equivalent to the terms used in the certificate of indebtedness sued on. If the facts so justified, there could have been added the allegation that it fraudulently refused to pay, etc. If the declaration had so alleged, we think it would have been sufficient, so far as this part of the certificate of indebtedness is concerned, under the authorities we have already cited.

The only cases referred to by the appellee which seem to be to the contrary are those of Barnard v. Cushing and Nelson v. Von Bonnhorst, and what we have already said will relieve us of a further discussion of them, excepting to add that the case of Smithers v. Junker, supra, is in conflict with the Pennsylvania case. We do not understand that the cases of Blakistons v. German Bank, 87 Md. 302, Thomson v. Gortner, 73 Md. 475, and other authorities cited in connection with them, in any wise conflict with these views. In them the question was whether valid contracts had been entered into, and it was determined that the terms used were too vague and indefinite to enable the court to so find. But in this case the contract is sufficiently definite. The amount of the indebtedness is clearly stated, and the only question in doubt was the times of payment; and, as we have already said what the contract means in that respect, a recovery cannot be denied by reason of the contract being too vague and uncertain. As it was not to pay “when able,” but when it “might feel able,” the statement in the narr. that the defendant “has failed and refused to pay the certificate herein named, although able to do so,” was not sufficient, and the demurrer was properly sustained for that reason.

But this count is defective in another respect. The promise to pay was further qualified by saying: “Provided, that all certificates of similar import should be paid upon pro rata, and that no preference should be given to any such certificate over others.” That is attempted to be avoided by alleging that “said company has received and accepted a surrender and extinguishment of all other certificates of similar import.” There is no allegation that anything had or had not been paid on them, nor is it stated under what circumstances the other certificates had been surrendered and extinguished. We have nothing to inform us as to the circumstances under which they were issued, and are confined to the narr. But, suppose the holders of all the other certificates only received a small sum,—5 or 10 per cent, for example,—and then surrendered their certificates, it is apparent that the appellants could not recover, in an action on this certificate, more than was paid to the others, without at least some allegation and proof of fraud or collusion. Or, if all were surrendered and extinguished without any payment, on the belief that they were worthless, or for other reasons satisfactory to the holders, how can the appellants recover on this certificate at least without alleging and proving something that will avoid the effect of that provision, if that is possible? The very contract sued on expressly prohibits the recovery beyond the amounts paid on the other certificates. If the holders of them chose to surrender them without any payment, it may be unfortunate for the appellants; but that is the contract their assignor made with the defendant and, in the absence of fraud or collusion, the effect of the surrender of these certificates on the plaintiffs’ right to recover is fatal, and cannot be avoided. There is not enough in this count to entitle them to recover on the certificate sued on, and the demurrer was therefore properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed, appellants to pay the costs above and below.

Charles H. LINVILLE, Garnishee of Natchaug Silk Company, Appt.,
v.

Harold F. HADDEN et al.

(.....Md.....)

1. After the appointment of a receiver for a corporation the directors cannot ratify a transfer of property previously made without authority.
2. Nonresident creditors of a corporation in the hands of a receiver, when they are not residents of the state in which the receiver is appointed, have the same right to contest the receiver's title to property that domestic creditors have.
3. A claim filed with a receiver of a corporation by a nonresident creditor, with an express reservation or condition that by filing it he does not intend to abandon any rights gained by reason of an attachment suit previously brought in another state, does not estop the creditor from pursuing the attachment.

(December 20, 1898.)

A PPEAL by the garnishee from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City in favor of plaintiffs in an attachment proceeding to reach funds of the Natchaug Silk Company, a foreign corporation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—For rights of foreign receiver as against attachment creditors, see Gilman v. Hudson River Boot & Shoe Mfg. Co. (Wis.) 23 L. R. A. 52; also Holbrook v. Ford (Ill.) 27 L. R. A. 324; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Matherwell Iron & S. Co. (Tenn.) 29 L. R. A. 164; and Robertson v. Stead (Mo.) 33 L. R. A. 203.

Messrs. William Reynolds and Paul M. Burnett, for appellants:

Assuming the decree in Connecticut to be valid as against Hadden & Co., it was effectual to vest in Hayden as receiver the title to all the goods in Linville's custody unless such title had already passed to some third party, and it therefore follows that in either of these events Hadden & Co.'s attachment must fail.

When a receiver has been appointed to wind up the affairs of an insolvent corporation, any creditor who files his claim in the case in which the receiver was appointed, and seeks to participate in the fund in his hands for distribution, becomes a party to the cause.

Re City Bank, 10 Paige, 382; Thomas v. Farmers' Bank, 46 Md. 45; Links v. Connecticut River Bkg. Co. 66 Conn. 277.

An adjudication of insolvency under a state law, which vests in a trustee all the insolvent's property, and releases him from all future liability for his then existing debts, is, while binding on citizens of the same state, invalid to release him from liability to his nonresident creditors, unless they voluntarily become parties to the insolvency proceedings, in which case they are held to have waived all extraterritorial privileges.

Jones v. Horsey, 4 Md. 306, 59 Am. Dec. 81; Brown v. Smart, 69 Md. 327; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 114, 33 L. ed. 542.

The same principle is applied to creditors, who, by filing their claim in an equity case in which a receiver has been appointed, have voluntarily become parties to it.

Loney v. Bayly, 45 Md. 450; Horsey v. Chew, 65 Md. 557; Chaffee v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 71 Me. 514, 36 Am. Rep. 345; Pierce v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 145 Mass. 56; Ferguson v. Oliver, 99 Mich. 161.

The decree of the Connecticut court vested the receiver with a title to the goods here, which our courts are ready and willing to recognize and enforce upon the principle of comity between states, whenever they can do so after completely protecting its own citizens and laws.

Castleman v. Templeman, 87 Md. 546, 41 L. R. A. 367; Bagby v. Atlantic, M. & O. R. Co. 86 Pa. 291; Gilman v. Ketchum, 84 Wis. 60, 23 L. R. A. 52; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania Steel Co. 57 N. J. L. 336; Long v. Girdwood, 150 Pa. 413, 23 L. R. A. 33; Catlin v. Wilcox Silver-Plate Co. 123 Ind. 477, 8 L. R. A. 62.

The board of directors never interfered with Mr. Chaffee or attempted to exercise any supervision or control over him down to the time when they seem to have considered their functions terminated by the appointment of the receiver.

Hadden v. Natchaug Silk Co. 84 Fed. Rep. 83.

The offer of the garnishee to show that on April 22, 1895, Mr. Fenton, the secretary and treasurer, upon the mere verbal order of Mr. Chaffee over the telephone, shipped some $5,000 worth of the company's goods to Morimura, Arai, & Co. in payment of a debt which was just about to fall due, was admissible to prove that the secretary and treasurer had no doubt of Mr. Chaffee's authority to turn over to a creditor of the company $5,000 worth of its goods in satisfaction of his bill against it, without consulting the directors about it.
43 L. R. A.

After completely protecting its own citizens and laws the dictates of international comity would seem to require that the officer of the foreign tribunal should be acknowledged and aided.

Castleman v. Templeman, 87 Md. 546, 41 L. R. A. 367; Hurd v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. L. 1.

Messrs. Nicholas P. Bond and Edward Duffy for appellees.

Fowler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs, Hadden & Co., a New York firm, were creditors of the Natchaug Silk Company. The latter became insolvent, and James E. Hayden was appointed its receiver by a decree of the superior court of Windham county, Connecticut, on the 26th of April, 1895. On the 27th of December of the same year the plaintiffs caused to be issued from the superior court of Baltimore city a foreign attachment against the silk company, and it was laid in the hands of the appellant, Charles H. Linville, as garnishee. We held in the former appeal (Hadden v. Linville, 86 Md. 210), growing out of this same attachment proceeding, that the transfer from the silk company to the First National Bank of Willimantic, Connecticut, also a creditor of the silk company, was invalid, because it was made by him [the president] without the authority of the board of directors. We also held in the former case that, the transfer we have just mentioned, which was relied on to defeat the attachment, being invalid, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain their attachment, and the judgment in favor of the garnishee was reversed, and the case was remanded for a new trial. The first step which appears to have been taken in the court below after the case was remanded was a motion to quash the attachment filed by James E. Hayden, receiver of the silk company, on the ground that the plaintiffs had voluntarily made themselves parties to the suit in the Connecticut court by filing their claim there against the silk company, and that they were, therefore, estopped from proceeding in the Maryland courts. But the court below overruled this motion, and the receiver has failed to appeal. However, the same question is presented by the fifth and sixth exceptions of the garnishee, and we will consider it when we discuss them. The judgment below was for the plaintiffs against the garnishee, and the latter has appealed.

The first exception of the garnishee was to the refusal by the court to allow him to prove that Mr. Chaffee, the president and general manager of the silk company, had directed the secretary and treasurer of the silk company to transfer to another creditor several thousand dollars' worth of goods in payment of a debt, and that the goods were in fact shipped, and that Mr. Chaffee's action in this matter was never questioned thereafter by any member of the board of directors, although it came to their knowledge very soon. It appears very clear, in view of the conceded facts, that the ruling complained of was correct. The transfer to the New York creditors was made on the 22d of April, but it was not until the 29th of that month that Chaffee informed his board what he had done, saying that he had transferred all the goods of the silk company in New York, Chicago, and Baltimore to the bank. But the board refused to ratify Mr. Chaffee's action upon the ground that the decree of the Connecticut court of the 28th of April, appointing a receiver for the silk company, deprived them of all power to act. The transfer in Baltimore to the garnishee was not made until the afternoon of the 28th of April, and therefore after the receiver had been appointed, and had taken possession of the silk company's affairs. Therefore, even if the board of directors had attempted, after the appointment of the receiver, to ratify the act of Mr. Chaffee in transferring the property of the silk company to the garnishee, or to any other creditor, their action would have been futile; for it is text-book law that "the appointment of a receiver over a corporation is generally equivalent to a suspension of its corporate functions, and of all authority over its property and effects, and is also equivalent to an injunction restraining its agents and officers from intermeddling with its property." High, Receivers, § 200. This must necessarily be so, otherwise both the receiver and the board of directors would be competent to exercise the rights, privileges, and franchises of the corporation, and endless confusion would be the result. If, therefore, we are correct in the conclusion reached in the former case that the transfer by Chaffee of the silk company's property in Baltimore was invalid, it follows that the evidence offered to show that the directors of that company acquiesced in it or ratified it after they ceased to have any power to act, as well as all the evidence which was offered for the purpose of showing that the transfer was made to continue the silk company as "a going concern," was clearly inadmissible. The invalidity of the transfer being established, all evidence tending to prove the good faith of Chaffee in making it, or the valuable consideration which the bank offered for it, was wholly immaterial and irrelevant. We need say nothing further to show that, in our opinion, the rulings of the court below which form the first four exceptions are free from error.

But it was urged that the plaintiffs, being nonresidents, have no standing in our courts, and that they will not be allowed to set up a claim against the title of the Connecticut receiver. The decree appointing the receiver in Connecticut had no extraterritorial force, and therefore, although while a citizen of that state might not be allowed to set up a claim either there or here which ignored the validity of that decree, yet citizens of this state, or of other states than Connecticut, are not bound by it, outside of the last-named state, and, in spite of the Connecticut decree, either our own citizens or the citizens of third states may proceed here to collect their debts. The general principle is thus expressed in Beach, Receivers, old ed. § 268, and supported by the citation of many authorities: "Because of the principle of 'judicial comity,' a phrase of well-defined and accepted meaning, a receiver of one state or jurisdiction will be recognized and permitted by the courts of another to do all that is necessary to take and possess the property of the debtor there located, provided that to do so will not violate any law or policy of the latter, or embarrass or do injustice to any of its citizens, or those of a third state who have come there to enforce the payment of their claims against the debtor." It cannot be doubted that if the plaintiffs were citizens of Maryland the inchoate lien and rights secured by the attachment would not be set aside in favor of a foreign receiver. Bartlett v. Wilbur, 53 Md. 485; Lycorning F. Ins. Co. v. Langley, 62 Md. 196; Day v. Postal Teleg. Co. 66 Md. 354. And the fact that the plaintiffs in this case happen to be citizens of New York does not lessen their rights as suitors in the courts of this state. In the case of Mason v. Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co. 81 Md. 446, 29 L. R. A. 273, which was also an attachment case, we held that the plaintiffs, who were citizens of Rhode Island, were equally entitled with the citizens of this state to the aid of our courts in enforcing their claims by way of attachment against a foreign creditor. See also Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Price (Md.) 42 L. R. A. 206. And so it has been held almost universally. Nor does it appear to us that the fact that the foreign debtor has become insolvent, and that a receiver has been appointed in the state where he resides, to take possession of his property there, alter or diminish the rights of Maryland creditors, or of foreign creditors suing here, if they do not reside in the same state in which the receiver is appointed, because, as we have already said, the authority of the receiver has no force outside of the state where he is appointed.
43 L. R. A.

It was suggested that we have held in the case of Castleman v. Templeman, 87 Md. 546, 41 L. R. A. 367, that the claims of a foreign receiver to the personal property of his corporation located in this state will be given precedence to those of all nonresident creditors. But the opinion of the court in that case, delivered by Boyd, J., does not go to that extent. The question there was whether the appellant, after obtaining a decree in the Virginia court appointing a receiver of an insolvent corporation with power to sue for and collect unpaid subscriptions either in Virginia or in other states, could herself sue in Maryland to recover such subscriptions from Maryland stockholders; and it was held that the plaintiff's right to sue was merged in the Virginia decree under which the receiver was appointed and which was passed on a bill filed by her, and that the Virginia receiver, and not the plaintiff, should bring the suit in Maryland. The principle that the functions and powers of a receiver for the purposes of litigation are limited to the courts of the state within which he has been appointed is recognized in the case just cited. And it is also said that the tendency is to recognize the claims of foreign receivers when it can be done without injustice to our own citizens and laws. But, as we have already seen, the citizens of third states have an equal claim upon us for the protection of our laws in this respect. The only remaining question is that presented by the fifth and sixth exceptions, namely, what is the effect, under the facts of this case, of the filing by the plaintiffs of their claim against the silk company with the receiver of that company in Connecticut? It seems to us that this question is a very simple one. Whatever doubt there may be, if any, in regard to the general question, which was much discussed, all difficulty disappears, we think, when we recall the fact that this attachment suit was instituted in Maryland long before the claim was filed with the receiver in Connecticut, and that, when filed, it was accompanied with an express reservation or condition that the plaintiffs, by filing it, did not intend to abandon any rights that they had gained by reason of this attachment suit. But assuming that we could with any show of reason hold that the act of the plaintiffs now relied on as a waiver or an estoppel has that effect in spite of their express declaration that they did not intend it to have any such effect, and notwithstanding the receiver, in whose behalf this defense is now set up, by his silence, at least, acquiesced for a long time in the position taken by the plaintiffs, yet we think that the authorities cited to sustain the view of the garnishee are very far from doing so. It is, of course, well settled that when a foreign creditor comes into the same state in which insolvent proceedings are pending, and files his claim there, and thus accepts the benefit of such proceedings, he makes himself a party, and he will be accorded the same, and no greater, rights than resident creditors. Jones v. Horsey, 4 Md. 306, 59 Am. Dec. 81; Brown

v. Smart, 69 Md. 327. But we have no such question here, there being no insolvent proceeding either here or in Connecticut. In Loney v. Bayly, 45 Md. 450, and Horsey v. Chew, 65 Md. 557, it was held "that a creditor who participates in proceedings in equity for the distribution of property sold under a deed of trust so far makes himself a party to the deed," and will not be allowed to deny its validity, and will be held to have waived any lien or claim he may have against the property, and will be required to look alone to the proceeds of sale. But it will be observed that in the two cases last cited all the proceedings were had in this state, and that the property involved was also here. Of course, if we should allow creditors here to proceed simultaneously in our courts, both at law and in equity, against the same property, great confusion and injustice would result. But the situation is very different in the case now before us, for there is but one proceeding here,—the attachment,—and the other proceeding to which it is contended the plaintiffs have become parties was had in Connecticut. It is, or must be, conceded, under the decisions of this court, that the Connecticut proceedings and the decree therein have no force here, except, perhaps, to enable the receiver, who was thereby appointed, to ask permission in certain cases to sue in the Maryland courts. But, irrespective of authority, we think, under the facts of this case, the filing of the claim by the plaintiffs in the Connecticut proceeding can have no such effect as that imputed to it by the garnishee. It follows, therefore, that in refusing to allow the garnishee to offer in evidence the claim as filed with the receiver, which constitutes the fifth exception, and in rejecting his prayer based upon the theory that the filing of such claim prevented a recovery in this case, which forms the sixth exception, no error was committed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs, except costs of printing documents, pages 16, 27, and 32.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

HOUSTON, EAST & WEST TEXAS RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

F. CAMPBELL.

(91 Tex. 551.)

1. A heavy statutory penalty will not be awarded in a case which does not come strictly within the terms of the statute.

NOTE.—Duty of a railroad company to furnish cars to shippers.

- I. General or statutory duty.
- II. Contract duty.
- III. Interstate Commerce Act.

I. General or statutory duty.

At common law a carrier was under some obligation to furnish cars for shippers who wished
43 L. R. A.

2. A penalty for failure to furnish cars to a shipper under Rev. Stat. arts. 4497-4502, cannot be imposed for failure to furnish cars at a switch where the carrier has no agent, as "the agent" to whom, under art. 4500, a deposit must be made of one fourth the freight charge for the car means the agent at or for the station where the cars are desired.

3. The proviso in Rev. Stat. art. 4498, to ship by the carload. This duty has in many states been defined and supplemented by statute. The measure of this duty is that the carrier must use reasonable care and diligence to provide the cars in view of all the circumstances of the case.

The law implies an agreement on the part of a railroad company to furnish necessary cars on a particular day when a request therefor has in due time been made to an authorized that the place designated in an application for cars "shall be at some station or switch on the railroad," was not intended to require cars to be furnished at such switches as were not otherwise within the terms of the statute.

4. The act of 1887, imposing a penalty on railroad companies for failure to furnish cars to shippers, is in no manner extended or controlled by the laws then existing.
5. A receiver has no power to make a contract to extend beyond the receivership, and to impose a liability upon one who purchases the property under the foreclosure sale made by the court.
6. The duty of a railroad company to furnish cars for transportation to a person making a timely demand therefor is imposed by Rev. Stat. 1895, arts. 4494, 4496, without the necessity of a contract for the cars.
7. Failure of a railroad company to furnish cars to a shipper who has property ready to ship under a contract and demands cars will render the carrier liable for his damages on account of the failure, although he does not continue to prepare and offer for shipment the remainder of the property required to fill the contract.

8. The damages for failure to furnish cars to ship property in fulfillment of a contract are the profits which the shipper would have made on the contract if the cars had been furnished.
9. Excluding evidence of a fact which is otherwise indisputably true is not material error.
10. A carrier's knowledge of a shipper's contract is not necessary in order to make it liable for failing to furnish cars when demanded in order to make shipments to fill the contract.
11. Declarations of a conductor when leaving cars on a switch, that the railroad company has determined to furnish no more cars for the shipments that were being made, are evidence against the carrier in an action for failure to furnish cars.
12. The cause of the animosity between a railroad company and a per-agent of the corporation. Newport News & M. Valley R. Co. v. Mercer, 96 Ky. 475.

But a wreck on the road which delays the delivering of the cars will exonerate the corporation from liability for breach of its contract implied by law to furnish cars to a shipper at a particular time. Ibid.

A mere request to furnish cars to ship stock on the following day, followed by a request made on the day of the intended shipment to have the cars ready for a certain train, does not show a contract to furnish the cars for that train. Gann v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 65 Mo. App. 670.

The carrier is bound to furnish cars upon reasonable notice whenever it can do so with reasonable diligence without jeopardizing its other business. Ayres v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 71 Wis. 372.

The railroad is bound to furnish reasonable and ordinary facilities for transportation, such as will meet the ordinary demands of the public. It is not bound to provide in advance for or anticipate extraordinary occasions or an unusual influx of freight to the road. Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Rae, 18 Ill. 488; 68 Am. Dec. 574.

The amount of business ordinarily done by a railroad is the only proper measure of its obligation to furnish transportation. The cars should be distributed among the different stations in proportion to such business so that all freight may be shipped in a reasonable time. Ballentine v. North Missouri R. Co. 40 Mo. 491; Dawson v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 79 Mo. 296.

The liability of common carriers of freight for failure to furnish sufficient accommodation for the transportation of such property as they may be legally called upon to carry, attaches only in favor of those who come, or offer to come, into contractual relations with them as shippers. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Conster, 61 Ark. 560.

A common carrier having a monopoly, who invites public commerce, is bound to provide sufficient power and vehicles to carry all goods which his invitation naturally brings him. He is not at liberty to injure local shippers whose wants he can foreknow for the purpose of accommodating freight from foreign parts which by reason of its unexpected amount will inconvenience local shippers, if he furnishes cars enough to provide for it in full. Branch v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 77 N. C. 347; Keeter v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 86 N. C. 346.

A railroad company should anticipate that 43 L. R. A.

more business will be offered at some times than at others, and it should therefore have a reasonable supply of extra cars and engines, but it is not bound to provide for a great, sudden, and unexpected influx of business so as to prevent all accumulation of freight. Wibert v. New York & E. R. Co. 19 Barb. 36.

And this ruling was affirmed in Wibert v. New York & E. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 245, but the question in that case was rather as to the capacity of the road than the failure to furnish cars.

If the carrier is unable to furnish cars at the time demanded for transportation of property without undue interference with its business or with the rights of other shippers, it may show such fact in defense of an action to hold it liable for losses occasioned by its neglect to furnish transportation. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Wolcott, 141 Ind. 267.

A common carrier is not bound by its general public obligation to provide other means of transportation than such as it owns and uses or holds out to the public on its own route for that purpose. So if cars of a particular through transportation company, such as the White Line, are demanded of which the carrier has none of its own, it will be bound to furnish them only as fast as they can be obtained from connecting roads which own them. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Morton, 61 Ind. 539, 28 Am. Rep. 682.

A carrier is not bound to anticipate an unprecedented condition of affairs and take steps to provide against it. So in case a strike occurs in the mines at which it is in the habit of obtaining its coal, necessitating the sending of all its cars to a distant point to procure a supply of coal for its engines, it will not be liable for refusal to furnish cars to the one mine in operation in the strike district to transport the coal mined by it. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Queen City Coal Co. 99 Ky. 217, Affirming 13 Ky. L. Rep. 832.

A carrier will not be liable for failure to furnish cars to transport the property offered if it is unable to do so by reason of sudden and unusual demand. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Racer, 10 Ind. App. 508, 5 Ind. App. 209.

The carrier will not be liable for delay caused by unusual press of business if it allots all carriers their due proportion of cars, and has cars enough to transact the usual business coming to it. Newport News M. V. R. Co. v. Reed, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 1020.

sem to whom shipments were being made is not material in an action by the shipper against the carrier for failure to furnish cars, although the existence of the animosity may be relevant.

13. A notification to a railroad company by a person to whom shipments were being made under a contract, not to receive any more such shipments, will not relieve the carrier for failure to furnish cars to the shipper when demanded.

(March 14, 1898.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the First Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment which reversed so much of a judgment of the District Court for Polk County as refused to permit plaintiff to recover damages for defendant's refusal to furnish cars for plaintiff's use as a shipper over their road, and affirmed so much as permitted a recovery of penalties. Modified so as to effect a complete reversal of the judgment of the trial court.

The carrier will not be liable for failure to furnish cars for shipping cotton if the failure is caused by an increased crop and the fact that the cars on which it has been in the habit of transporting cotton have been rejected by a connecting carrier so that the remaining cars are not sufficient to do all the business, and there is not sufficient time after the notification of rejection before the cotton is offered to procure new cars. Whitehead v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 87 N. C. 235.

A carrier is not bound to be prepared for an emergency such as followed the Chicago fire. Michigan C. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6.

To meet the objection that the carrier had no empty cars at the point where the property was delayed, waiting shipment, the shipper may give evidence that empty cars passed that place going in the opposite direction upon the road, from that in which the shipper's property was bound. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Lockhart, 71 Ill. 627.

If the property for transportation has not been received into the possession of the carrier, and its road is under the control of military authorities who require the use of all the cars for shipment of other property, the carrier will not be liable to the property owner for failure to furnish cars for shipment of his property. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hornberger, 77 Ill. 457; Phelps v. Illinois C. R. Co. 94 Ill. 548; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ashmead, 58 Ill. 487.

That some of the cars are off from the carrier's line upon other roads and will not return in time to enable the carrier to provide for an extra press of business, will be no defense to an action for failure to furnish cars. Newport News M. V. R. Co. v. Reed, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 1020.

A carrier cannot, in the furnishing of cars for the shipment of grain, discriminate in favor of one warehouse and refuse to furnish cars for grain stored at other places, especially where the statute requires it to furnish suitable cars to any and all persons who may apply for them. Rhodes v. Northern P. R. Co. 84 Minn. 87.

A statute requiring every railroad company to run cars for the transportation of such property as shall within a reasonable time previously thereto be ready or offered for transportation, cannot be extended so as to include coal not yet mined so as to require the cars to be placed where they can be loaded as the coal is raised from the earth. People v. Illinois & St. L. R. 43 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. H. Wilson and Baker, Botts, Baker, & Lovett, for plaintiff in error:

Penal statutes are strictly construed, and a written notice or demand, which is made a condition precedent to a penalty, cannot be artfully inserted into a report regularly made to a railway company in the course of its business, in such a way as not to attract its attention, and so made the basis of a penal liability, when the very purpose of this written demand was to put them upon unequivocal notice.

Rev. Stat. 4227a, §§ 1-6; Sayles's Stat.; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 84 Tex. 200; Schloss v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 85 Tex. 602; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 75 Tex. 583.

Where a promise is a consideration for a promise, in order for a contract enforceable at law to arise, there must be such absolute mutuality of engagement that each party has the right at once to hold the other to a posi-

Co. 122 Ill. 506, Affirming Illinois & St. L. R. & Coal Co. v. People, 19 Ill. App. 141.

To hold the carrier liable for not furnishing the cars under the Wisconsin statute, reasonable notice must be shown to have been given, and also that it was within the carrier's power to furnish the cars. Richardson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 61 Wis. 596.

The Texas statute requiring carriers to furnish sufficient accommodations for shippers is but declaratory of the common law, and does not compel the shipper to take all freight offered at a time of unexpected and unprecedented press of business. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 Tex. 322.

Under the Texas statutes the carrier cannot give any preference between shippers as to the acceptance and forwarding of freight. Ibid.

The Texas statute prescribing a penalty for refusal to transport goods does not apply to a case of refusal to furnish cars. San Antonio & N. P. R. Co. v. Bailey (Tex. App.) 15 S. W. 203.

Under the Texas statutes the carrier is bound upon application for cars to furnish them within a reasonable time not to exceed six days from the receipt of the application. Easton v. Dudley, 78 Tex. 236.

The Texas statute provides that as soon as a reasonable time elapses after cattle are offered for transportation, the carrier should furnish sufficient cars or be liable for the injury caused by the delay, and the question of reasonable time is for the jury. Davis v. Texas & P. R. Co. 91 Tex. 505, Reversing 42 S. W. 1008.

Under the Texas statute providing a penalty for failure to provide the cars when demanded, which requires application for the cars to be made to the superintendent and a deposit of a certain part of the freight to be made with the agent at the time of making the application, the deposit need not be made with the superintendent, but may be made with the station agent. Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Campbell (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 431.

II. Contract duty.

If the railroad company has made a contract to furnish cars at a certain time its obligations are much more onerous than those imposed by law. When the obligation is imposed by law the law will admit a reasonable excuse for failure to perform it. But if the obligation is im-tive engagement, otherwise there is no contract.

Chicago & G. E. R. Co. v. Dane, 43 N. Y. 240; Tarbow v. Gotzian, 20 Minn. 142; Bailey v. Austrian, 19 Minn. 535; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Scott, 72 Tex. 72.

The receiver of a railroad company has, incidental to his power, the right to make such contracts as are essential to the running of a railway as a railway.

International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wentworth, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 5; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Herndon, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 465.

The obligation of a railway company in the transportation of freight, under the common law and our statutes, is to transport such freight as is offered, ready and prepared for shipment, in the order in which it is offered, without discrimination against persons or places, and no more.

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 Tex. 326; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Conatser, 61 Ark. 560.

posed by contract the carrier will be held liable in all cases where the circumstances are not such as to relieve from the performance of contracts generally.

If the carrier agrees to furnish cars at a certain rate he will be liable for the damages caused by his failure to do so. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Roberts, 71 Ill. 540.

If the carrier makes a special contract to furnish cars to transport the property at a certain time it will be liable for the injuries caused by its failure to do so. East Tennessee & G. R. Co. v. Nelson, 1 Coldw. 272; Southern Exp. Co. v. Womack, 1 Helsk. 256.

The company will be liable for the damages in case it fails to comply with its agreement to furnish a car for the transportation of property at a certain time. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Perishow, 61 Ill. App. 179.

If the carrier agrees to furnish the shipper with a certain number of cars at a certain time the carrier will be liable for the damages caused by its failure to comply with the contract. Baker v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 91 Mo. 152; Louisville, N. A. & C. B. Co. v. Flanagan, 113 Ind. 488; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Racer, 5 Ind. App. 209, 10 Ind. App. 503; Wood v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 491, 56 Am. Rep. 861; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Nicholson, 61 Tex. 491; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McCorquodale, 71 Tex. 41; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McCarty, 82 Tex. 610; Cross v. McFaden, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 461; 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson & W.) § 91; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hamm, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 491, p. 436; Curtis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 18 Wis. 812; Ayres v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 537; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Martin (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 576; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hodge (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 986; Missouri, K. & T. B. Co. v. Woods (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 237.

If the carrier agrees to have cars in readiness to carry the goods he will be liable for failure to do so. Geivin v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 21 Mo. App. 278.

A severe and unforeseen storm which blocks the road is no defense for failure to comply with the contract to furnish cars at a certain time. Miller v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 62 Mo. App. 252.

If the carrier agrees to furnish the cars at a certain time its inability to do so will be no defense to an action against it for the damages 43 L. R. A.

Damages which are purely contingent and of such a character that all that a party can claim, he lost was the opportunity of selling something that he would have procured for the purpose of selling same, if the railway had been prompt in furnishing cars to ship the wood which he actually had, are too remote and consequential in their nature to be recovered, in the absence of a special contract made with special reference to the transaction the plaintiff was endeavoring to carry through, and would be too remote, even in such a case, unless he had clearly shown the parties intended to be responsible for damages of that character.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444, 31 L. ed. 479.

Messrs. Adams & Campbell, for defendant in error:

Plaintiff shows, by his petition, that he had a good, valid, and binding contract, a thing of value, concerning which plaintiff alleges that defendant had been fully advised caused by its failure to comply with its contract. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hays, 49 Ind. 207.

The performance by a railroad company of its unconditional contract to furnish cars on a day certain for the purpose of transporting freight is not excused by unavoidable accident preventing the arrival of the cars at the stipulated time. Harrison v. Missouri P. R. Co. 74 Mo. 364, 41 Am. Rep. 318.

The mere fact that the shipper wishes his property to reach destination for the purpose of taking advantage of a Sunday market, which is illegal, will be no defense to the carrier for the failure of its agreement to furnish cars. Waters v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 849, 110 N. C. 338, 16 L. R. A. 834.

The action for breach of contract to furnish cars is not defeated by the fact that a state statute provides a penalty for failure to furnish them upon demand. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Harmonson (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 539.

The failure of the carrier to comply with its agreement to have cars ready for shipment on a certain day is not waived by the issuance and acceptance of a bill of lading issued when the goods are shipped on a later day. Hamilton v. Western N. C. R. Co. 96 N. C. 398; McAbsher v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 844.

If the carrier receives the property for transportation it cannot plead lack of cars as an excuse for not promptly forwarding the property. London & L. F. Ins. Co. v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 144 N. Y. 200.

If the carrier has made a contract to furnish cars at a certain time it cannot relieve itself from liability for breach by showing that the cars were furnished to a third person under a contract which the carrier had made with him. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wright, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 198.

If the carrier contracts to carry goods within a specified time he cannot absolve himself from liability for failure to do so by showing an unexpected rush of freight which came upon the road at the time the contract should have been performed. Deming v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 N. H. 455, 2 Am. Rep. 267.

Heavy and unprecedented traffic will not relieve a railroad company from liability for breach of its contract to furnish cars. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hume, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 653.

Inability to furnish cars according to contract because of unusually heavy business is no of all its terms, conditions, and requirements; that defendant had induced plaintiff to enter said contract, and had agreed with plaintiff to furnish him sufficient transportation to enable him to carry out said contract. Plaintiff pleads that he was amply able, willing, and ready to carry out said contract to deliver said wood, and would have done so, and complied with the terms of his contract to the letter, but for the wilful refusal, on the part of defendant, to furnish transportation, and the determined efforts on the part of defendant to break this plaintiff up in business, which plaintiff alleges defendant did do, and in so doing destroyed this valuable contract of plaintiff's, damage and margin of profit on which plaintiff sues for as the measure of his damage. The issue on facts, as pleaded by plaintiff, should have been submitted to the jury.

Alamo Mills Co. v. Hercules Iron Works, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 691; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 Tex. 322; Maloney v. Roberts, 32 Tex. 140; 3 Storey, Com. p. 123.

excuse for the breach of the contract. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hume Bros. 87 Tex. 211. Affirming on this point, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 658; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hodge, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 543.

There is a Massachusetts case which takes a somewhat different view of the liabilities of the carrier under its contract. But in that case the circumstances were perhaps sufficiently peculiar to make the case an exception to the general rule rather than in conflict with it.

The fact that the carrier has contracted to furnish cars to transport certain property will not render it liable for delay which is caused by a pressure of business beyond its facilities,—especially where the shipper's agent attends to the loading of the cars and does not use all the room for him, but distributes it between him and other shippers for whom he is also acting as agent. Thayer v. Burchard, 99 Mass. 508.

The presumption that a railroad company was able to furnish cars as promised can be overcome only by the testimony of some person who had knowledge of the general resources of the corporation in that respect at the time in question. Ayres v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 75 Wis. 215.

A provision in a bill of lading in an interstate shipment releasing a railroad company from liability for breach of a prior verbal contract to furnish cars at a specified time is an unreasonable and oppressive limitation of its common-law liability. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Graves (Tex. App.) 16 S. W. 102.

In Texas if the shipper desires to recover the statutory penalty for failure to furnish cars he must comply with the terms of the statute and make his contract with the superintendent or person in charge of the transportation, but he may recover the damages caused by breach of contract in case he has a valid contract for cars with the carrier, which the carrier fails to fulfil. McCarty v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 79 Tex. 83.

Where a railroad company is not required by the order for cars to furnish them at a particular hour the delivery at any hour of the day will do. McGrew v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 582.

If the shipper relies on breach of contract it is incumbent on him to prove the contract. Voorhees v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 785. 60 Am. Rep. 823; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Stults, 81 Kan. 752. 43 L. R. A.

A railway company cannot destroy its corporate existence; therefore its charter duty to the public is not affected by a receiver-ship, and contracts made by a receiver for transportation of freight and passengers, when made at the usual and customary rate, will bind the railway company in the hands of subsequent purchasers.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morris, 67 Tex. 692.

The law will not permit a party to accumulate damages, but requires him to make them as light as is in his power to do.

Sayles's Civ. Stat. arts. 4239, 4272a, § 3; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 Tex. 322; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Hill, 63 Tex. 387, 51 Am. Rep. 642.

Gaines, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error, Campbell, brought this suit against M. G. Howe, as receiver of the Houston, East & West Texas Railway Company, against Appleby and Downey as

A shipper's order calling for a specified number of cars for a particular day will not, unaccepted by the carrier, constitute a contract binding on either. If the carrier agrees to furnish the cars the contract will bind it to furnish them, and will bind the shipper to furnish goods to load the cars. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 864, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 434.

'Acceptance of freight.'

It is usually held that the acceptance of the freight by the carrier is sufficient to impose upon it the duty to furnish cars.

If the railroad company receives the property it cannot exonerate itself from liability for failure to furnish cars to transport it by the fact that its cars were in the possession of military authorities who had taken possession of the road. Porcher v. Northeastern R. Co. 14 Rich. L. 181.

A carrier cannot defeat its liability for delay in transporting property for lack of cars if it received the property for transportation without notifying the shipper that there might be delay because of lack of cars. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Lockhart, 71 Ill. 627.

If the railroad company has received the goods for shipment, the unusual press of business will not relieve it from liability for not promptly making the transportation, but it may, under such circumstances, refuse to receive the property. Faulkner v. Southern P. R. Co. 51 Mo. 811; Pruitt v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 62 Mo. 527.

If the property has been received the carrier cannot defend its delay to transport it by alleging press of business. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anderson, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 8.

In Helliwell v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 7 Fed. Rep. 76, where the carrier had accepted property for transportation on a through contract which involved an ocean voyage, the court assumed that when it accepted the property it was its duty to use diligence and reasonable promptness in furnishing the means of transportation.

If property is left at a railroad warehouse for shipment, and the carrier is notified to furnish a car for transporting it, which he promises to do, he will, after the expiration of the time when the car was to be provided, hold the goods as a carrier, and not as a warehouseman. Millroy v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 28 Ont. Rep. 454.

his successors in the receivership, and against the Houston, East & West Texas Railway Company to recover under the statute a penalty for failing to furnish cars upon demand and actual damages resulting from the default. The petition showing that the receivership had been closed, and the receivers discharged, a demurrer by them was sustained, and the suit was dismissed as to them. The case as to the railroad company was tried before a jury, who returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the statutory penalties, but, under the instructions of the court, found for the company on the second cause of action. The railroad company appealed, and the plaintiff filed cross assignment of errors. The court of civil appeals affirmed the judgment for the penalties, but reversed it in so far as it denied the plaintiff the right to recover actual damages, and remanded the cause for a trial of the issues growing out of that ground of action. The railroad company has applied for and obtained a writ of error to the judgment of the court of civil appeals, and the whole case is before us for review.

We will first dispose of the judgment for the penalties, and will here state briefly the facts which bear upon that question. The plaintiff was engaged in the business of manufacturing stove wood to be shipped to Houston. At his solicitation, a switch had been put in on the company's road at a point which was subsequently known as "Campbell's Switch." It was not made a regular station, and the company had no agent there. Livingston was the nearest regular station, and there was a station agent at that place. The statute under which the recovery of the penalties was sought in this case was passed in 1887, and is now embodied in our present Revised Statutes, as follows:

"Art. 4497. When the owner, owners, or managers of any freight of any kind shall make application in writing to the superintendent or person in charge of transportation, to any railway company operating a line at the point the cars are desired upon which to ship any freight, it shall be the duty of such railway company to supply the number of cars required at the point indicated in the application within a reasonable time, not to exceed six days from the receipt thereof, and shall furnish such cars to the persons applying therefor in the order applied for, without giving preference to any person.

"Art. 4498. Said application for cars shall state the number of cars desired, the place at which they are desired, and the time they are desired: provided that the place designated shall be at some station or switch on the railroad.

"Art. 4499. When cars are applied for under the provisions of this chapter, if they are not furnished, the railway company so failing to furnish them shall forfeit to the party or parties so applying for them the sum of $5 per day for each car failed to be furnished, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction, and all actual damages that such applicant may sustain.

"Art. 4500. Such applicant shall, at the time of applying for such car or cars, deposit with the agent of such company one fourth of the amount of the freight charge for the use of such cars unless the said road shall agree to deliver said cars without such deposit, and said applicant shall within forty-eight hours after such car or cars have been delivered and placed as hereinbefore provided, it shall be the duty of the applicant to fully load the same, and upon failure to do so he shall forfeit and pay to the company the sum of $25 for each car not used. And if the said applicant shall not use such cars so ordered by him and shall so notify the said company or its agent, he shall forfeit and pay to the said railroad company in addition to the penalty herein prescribed the actual damages that such company may sustain by the said failure of the applicant to use said cars.

"Art. 4501. When cars have been supplied

If the railroad refuses to furnish cars because the tracks at the terminal are so obstructed that the property cannot be unloaded, and the shipper obtains the cars upon the promise that he will unload them, he cannot hold the carrier liable for delay in transportation if it occurs through his own failure to unload the cars when they reach their destination. Cobb v. Illinois C. R. Co. 88 Ill. 394.

It is the duty of the carrier when applied to for cars to advise the shipper of the situation and circumstances which would likely occasion an unreasonable delay, and if it does not so advise and obtain the consent of the shipper to it, either express or implied, he becomes bound to carry the goods within a reasonable time, and he will not be heard to say that his delay was caused by some contingency. Guinn v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 20 Mo. App. 453.

III. Interstate Commerce Act.

The provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, prohibiting discrimination, have been made to have some bearing on the question of duty to furnish cars.

Where there is a sudden and unexpected demand for cars to transport a particular class of freight, the inability of the railroad company 43 L. R. A.

to furnish enough to transport all freight offered is no violation of the Interstate Commerce Act, but it is the duty of the carrier to operate its cars so as to keep them as much as possible on its own line, and to endeavor to furnish its cars to shippers in proportion to their shipments over the line upon a basis that is relatively and substantially just. Riddle v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 688.

A shipper cannot complain of discrimination under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act in the failure to furnish him cars as soon after the lifting of an embargo as they were furnished to rivals, if he made no inquiry or request for cars, as he should have done, while his rivals did so. Riddle v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 778.

Under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, if the equipment of a carrier for the transportation of a particular kind of merchandise is not equal to the demand upon it, it is its duty to appropriate other cars to such service or to obtain cars elsewhere, and in the meantime the cars subject to use for the service must be distributed equally among the shippers so as not to give some shippers preference over others. Riddle v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 787.

H. P. F.

and loaded it shall be the duty of the railway company to deliver the same to the party or parties to whom they are consigned within a reasonable time, and the party or parties to whom the cars are consigned shall unload the same within forty-eight hours after delivery and notice, or forfeit to the railway company the sum of $25 per day for each car so left unloaded, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"Art. 4502. It shall be necessary for the party or parties bringing suit against any railroad company under the provisions of this law to show by evidence that he or they had on hand at the time any demand for cars was made the amount of lumber, cotton, wool, hides, or other freight necessary to load the cars so ordered: provided, that the provisions of this law shall not apply in cases of strikes or other public calamity."

The statute imposes a heavy penalty, and it is an elementary rule that such statutes must be strictly construed. This does not imply that the courts are authorized to refuse to give effect to the intention of the legislature, but it proceeds upon the theory that it is not reasonable to presume it is their intention to impose a punishment, except in so far as that purpose is clearly manifested by the language employed in the statute. It results as a corollary from this rule that the penalty will not be awarded in a case which does not come strictly within the terms of the statute. Such is the established canon of construction in this court. Schloss v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 85 Tex. 601, and cases there cited.

Does the present case come within the terms of the statute? As a condition precedent to the recovery, article 4500 provides that "such applicant shall at the time of applying for such car, or cars, deposit with the agent of such company one fourth of the amount of such freight charges for the use of such cars," etc. The words "the agent" do not mean any agent. They clearly imply that a particular agent is meant, and the only reasonable construction is that it is the agent at or for the point of the proposed shipment with whom the deposit was to be made. We cannot interpret the terms as meaning the nearest agent (when the company has no agent at or for the point) without importing into the language words which are neither necessarily nor reasonably implied. They mean the agent at or for the station where the cars are desired, and hence the law cannot be applied to a switch where the company has none. In a remedial statute, the construction might possibly be different; but in a penal act the question is not what the legislature ought to have provided, nor what they may possibly have intended to provide, but what is the reasonable and clear meaning of the words employed.

But it is insisted that the proviso contained in article 4498 shows that the statute was intended to include a place of the character of that in question in this case. But we cannot accede to that proposition. The object of the provision was, in our opinion, merely to exclude what may have been thought a possible construction of the act without such provision. It was intended to preclude the idea that it was made the duty of a railroad company to furnish cars at a point not established by it for the reception and delivery of freight. A switch is a mere side track, so constructed as to permit the passage of cars from and to the main track, and it is a matter of common knowledge that railroads have many switches where freight is neither received nor discharged. So that to give the proviso the construction claimed for it would be to give it an effect contrary to that intended, and to empower an applicant to require cars to be furnished at a point not provided for shipping goods, and would make every switch a receiving and discharging station. Clearly, the legislature did not intend this. The difficulty in the plaintiff's way is not that the place of shipment of his wood was a switch. It is that it was not a switch at or for which there was an agent, and therefore does not come within the terms of the statute.

But it is also insisted that article 4522 of the Revised Statutes also shows that the statute in question should apply in this case. That article is as follows: "When a company constructs a switch on its road for the accommodation of freighters, they shall be bound to furnish a sufficient number of cars for the transportation of freight therefrom when requested so to do, and in default shall be subject to the same penalties as in other cases of neglect of the like character." This provision is article 4239 of the Revised Statutes of 1879. The act under which this proceeding for the penalties is prosecuted was passed in 1887 as an independent statute and was not passed as an amendment of, or as an addition to, the Revised Statutes, and we are of opinion that it was in no manner extended or controlled by the laws then existing. This case arose before the adoption of the Revised Statutes of 1895, and hence it is not necessary for us to consider the effect which the incorporation of those laws in that revision as parts of our general statute should have upon their construction.

But, even if article 4522 had been passed subsequent to the act of 1887, we do not see that our ruling should be different. Our construction of the latter act is that it does not apply to either station or switch for which there is no agent, and we think that there is nothing in the article which tends to change that construction. The statute in question is probably a salutary one; but, in view of the heavy penalties provided, it seems to us that the legislature may very probably have recognized a distinction between stations and switches where freight was received and discharged for the public at large and for which agents are provided and those private stopping places established for the convenience of private individuals. They may have thought that the penalty should not be imposed at a point for which the companies had no agent to superintend the business and to look after the movement of the cars. The trial court and the court of civil appeals having failed to hold in accordance with the foregoing views, the judgment for the penalty must be reversed.

But we concur in the judgment of the court of civil appeals in so far as it reversed the judgment of the trial court in favor of the defendant upon plaintiff's claim for actual damages. The Houston, East & West Texas Railway Company was placed in the hands of a receiver by the district court of Harris county. Howe was first appointed receiver, but was succeeded by Downey and Appleby. In the suit a mortgage was foreclosed, and the property of the company sold, and became the property of the present Houston, East & West Texas Railway Company, the plaintiff in error. During the receivership of Howe, the plaintiff, Campbell, began a negotiation with one Keller for shipment to him at Houston, from Campbell's switch, 10,000 cords of stove wood. He testified that he approached Howe, and told him of the negotiation, and proposed that he should agree to furnish him a certain number of cars to carry out the contract; that Howe declined to promise any number of cars, but told him to go ahead, and he would give him all the transportation wanted. The contract was made with Keller. The plaintiff entered upon its performance on his part, and for a while cars were furnished as demanded. But after the road had been sold, and had passed into the hands of the defendant company, the plaintiff made repeated demands for cars that were not acceded to; and there was evidence at least tending to show that its agents finally refused to furnish any more cars upon which to ship wood to Keller.

In the view we take of the case, we deem it unnecessary to determine whether or not there was evidence tending to show a binding contract with Howe as receiver to furnish the necessary transportation to ship the wood. There is no evidence to show that he obtained any order from the court which appointed him authorizing him to make such a contract. In the case of International & G. N. R. Co. v. Herndon, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 465, it was held by the court of civil appeals of the first district that, without an order of court, the receiver cannot make a contract to bind the property in his hands, and an application for a writ of error in that case was refused by this court. As a general rule, parties dealing with a receiver must be deemed to contract with reference to a termination of the receivership, and the contract must be limited accordingly. A receiver is the mere agent of the court for the preservation and management of the property placed in his control, and certainly has no power to make a contract to extend beyond the receivership, and to impose a liability upon one who purchases the property under the foreclosure sale made by the court. The receiver is not the agent of the purchaser in any sense, and his acts as receiver are not the subject of ratification by the latter. The purchaser may renew the contract in his own behalf; but we fail to find any evidence of renewal, or even of recognition in this case.

But, in the absence of a contract, it was none the less the duty of the defendant to furnish the plaintiff cars for the transportation of his wood upon his making a timely demand therefor. Rev. Stat. arts. 4494, 43 L. R. A.

4496. But article 4494 contains this language: "Every such corporation shall start and run their cars for the transportation of passengers and property at regular times, to be fixed by public notice, and shall furnish sufficient accommodations for the transportation of all such passengers and property as shall within a reasonable time previous thereto offer or be offered for transportation at the place of starting;" and it is insisted that the plaintiff did not even have the wood prepared for shipment in this case, and that, therefore, he cannot recover. There was but a small part of the wood ready for shipment at the time the cars were demanded which the defendant failed to furnish. But was the plaintiff bound to provide the wood with which to fulfil his contract with Keller, and to offer it at the depot for transportation, after the agents of defendant had refused to furnish cars for that purpose? We think not. A similar question arose in the case of Texas P. R. Co. v. Nicholson, 61 Tex. 491, and it was there held that a tender of the property was unnecessary where the proposed shipper had been informed in advance that it was not required and would not be accepted. That was a case of a breach of contract to ship at a certain time; but the principle is the same. The rule announced is a general one, and applies to all offers and tenders. When the defendant knew that the transportation would not be furnished, he was not bound, in order to recover for the wrong done him, to prepare and offer the wood. As argued by his counsel, it was his duty to pursue that course best calculated to lessen the damage resulting from the wrong. We are also of the opinion that the measure of damages was the profits the plaintiff would have made on his contract with Keller, provided, but for the refusal of defendant to furnish the cars, he could and would have carried out that contract. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Hill, 70 Tex. 51. The case cited was one of a contract to furnish transportation, but in so far as there is a difference in respect to damages between cases of contract and tort, the measure for a breach of a contract is the more restricted. For these reasons we think the trial court erred in its charge upon this branch of the case, and in not giving the special instruction, the refusal of which is complained of in the fourteenth cross assignment of error.

The other assignments which we deem it proper to notice relate to the introduction and exclusion of evidence, and we will pass upon them briefly.

We think there was no error in excluding the bond entered into between the plaintiff and Keller, by which each bound himself for the faithful performance of the contract on his part. The contract was otherwise indisputably proved. There were no sureties upon the obligation, and hence it did not tend to strengthen the plaintiff's case as to Keller's ability to comply with his contract.

We also think the testimony as to Downey's knowledge of the contract with Keller was properly excluded. It is not necessary, in a case of this character, to show knowledge in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover the damages that may have been inflicted, to the full extent to which they may be reasonably ascertained.

We are of opinion, however, that the court erred in excluding the testimony shown by the plaintiff's ninth bill of exceptions. The conductor, whose language the plaintiff offered to prove, in setting out the cars was acting as agent of the defendant corporation, and hence his declarations are evidence against it. They tended to show that the company had determined to furnish no more cars for the shipment of wood to Keller, and to give the plaintiff notice of that fact.

But we think there was no error in excluding the testimony of the witness Hill as to the cause of the animosity between Keller and the company. It may have been proper to show the existence of the animosity, in order to strengthen the plaintiff's theory that the defendant refused to furnish the cars. But the cause of the animosity was immaterial.

The testimony of Calhoun, as to his having written a letter to defendant instructing it not to receive any more wood from Campbell's switch consigned to him, was improperly admitted. Calhoun, it seems from his testimony, was Keller's agent; but the fact that Keller did not desire the wood to be shipped, and so notified the defendant, did not absolve the defendant from its duty to furnish the transportation. The plaintiff as long as he complied with the agreement on his part, had the right to ship the wood regardless of Keller's wishes, and to hold him to the performance of his contract.

We also think that the testimony of Timpson was erroneously admitted. It was the plaintiff's right to ship his wood to Keller under his contract, and he was not charged with the duty of seeing that the cars were unloaded at the point of destination. For his failure to unload the company had its remedy against the consignee.

For the reasons given the judgment of the court of civil appeals, in so far as it affirms the judgment of the district court, is reversed, but in so far as it reverses that judgment, it is affirmed.

The judgment of the District Court, as a whole, is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

BIRMINGHAM TRACTION COMPANY et al., Appts.,

v.

BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY & ELECTRIC COMPANY.

(.....Ala.....)

1. An injunction against the construction and operation of an electric railway on a public street cannot be granted to an abutting owner on the ground that the company has no legislative authority to construct the road even by condemnation and payment of compensation, since, if this is true, the construction of the road will constitute only a private trespass which may be adequately compensated at law.
2. An electric-motor street railway built upon street grade, doing no special injury to the fee, is not the imposition of a new or additional servitude upon the highway for which the owner of the fee is entitled to compensation,—especially when the law at the time when the street was made authorized the use of electricity by street railways.

(October 29, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Jefferson County in favor of complainants in a suit brought to enjoin defendants from placing a street railway in a street belonging to complainant without making compensation to it for the right to do so. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—For electric railway as an additional burden on the street, see also Zehren v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. (Wis.) 41 L. R. A. 575, and cases cited in footnotes thereto; as 43 L. R. A.

Messrs. John London and A. T. London, for appellants:

The injunction should be dissolved, there being no insolvency or irreparable injury shown.

East & West R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 75 Ala. 275; Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Birmingham Union R. Co. 93 Ala. 505.

In determining whether the injunction shall be continued the court will consider the relative inconvenience to the parties.

East & West R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 75 Ala. 275; Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Birmingham Union R. Co. 93 Ala. 505; Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Withe-row, 82 Ala. 190; Harrison v. Yerby, 87 Ala. 185; Clifton Iron Co. v. Dye, 87 Ala. 468; Whitley v. Dunham Lumber Co. 89 Ala. 493; Western Railway of Ala. v. Alabama G. T. R. Co. 96 Ala. 272, 17 L. R. A. 474.

Irreparable injury is a conclusion of law, and the facts showing it must be alleged.

1 High, Inj. § 722; Bowling v. Crook, 104 Ala. 130; Kingsbury v. Flowers, 65 Ala. 486, 39 Am. Rep. 14; Bank of Florence v. United States Sav. & Loan Co. 104 Ala. 297; Kellar v. Bullington, 101 Ala. 267; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 163; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 836.

The construction of a street railroad through the streets of a town is not an additional burden, which entitles abutting owners as the ultimate owners of the fee in the street to any compensation therefor.

well as cases in note to Western Railway of Ala. v. Alabama G. T. R. Co. (Ala.) 17 L. R. A. 478.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, pp. 58, 59, 170; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 537c; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. St. Joseph Terminal R. Co. 97 Mo. 457, 3 L. R. A. 240; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Steel, 47 Neb. 741, 41 L. R. A. 481; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 156 Ill. 255, 29 L. R. A. 485; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 65 Conn. 410, 29 L. R. A. 367.

Messrs. Walker, Porter, & Walker and R. H. Pearson for appellee.

Head, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

For the purpose of determining how the largely discretionary powers of the chancellor in the matter of retaining and dissolving temporary injunctions should be exercised in the present cause, the facts of the case (though the parties are in dispute as to some of them) may be briefly stated as follows: The appellee, the electric company, owned in fee simple, for a number of years, beginning before the incorporation of the town of Woodlawn, a strip of land from a point in Birmingham to a point in East Lake, passing through what is now the incorporated town of Woodlawn. This strip is 100 feet wide, and appellee has for more than seven years used it as a way for the operation of a street railway belonging to it, which it was authorized by its charter to operate. The railway track was located in the center of the strip. In April, 1896, by a contract, upon valuable consideration, the appellee agreed to grant and convey to Woodlawn, "for the use of the citizens and the public generally, an easement over that part of its right of way which is within the corporate limits of the town of Woodlawn, and which is not absolutely essential for the operation of its road, this amount being about 25 feet for double track, and such room as is necessary to erect poles and proper waiting stations;" and the strip, saving any interference with the reserved rights of the appellee, has since been a public street of Woodlawn, and so recognized and used by the public generally, the appellee continuing to use the track, stations, etc., as before. The appellant, the traction company, was incorporated as a street-railway company in August, 1897, under the general laws of the state authorizing the purchasers, three or more in number, of other street railroads, to organize as a corporation (Code 1896, §§ 1199, 1200); the corporators having previously purchased, at judicial sale, a line of railway, constructed and in operation, from a point in Birmingham to Gate City, in the same county, by a certainly defined route, "to the village of Woodlawn, at a point near the eastern suburb of said village," thence, by a certainly defined route, to Gate City. The ground over which this company now seeks to build a street railway, and to enjoin which the electric company files this bill, is a part of, and along, the said 100-foot strip, through a portion of the town of Woodlawn, and outside of the central 25 feet of the strip, and not any portion thereof used by, or actually necessary for the use of, the 43 L. R. A.

electric company for the operation of its railway, but being a portion of the strip covered by the easement agreed by the electric company to be granted to Woodlawn, as aforesaid. The traction company having regularly procured the consent of the municipality of Woodlawn to build this line of street railway through said street, insists upon a legal right to do so, without making compensation to the electric company, as the owner of the fee, saying that it only proposes to share the easement of the town, by the town's express consent, and not to take or injure the fee; hence, it says, it is not about to take the private property of the electric company for public use, under the right of eminent domain, and is not obliged to make compensation to that company. The correctness or not of this contention is the vital question presented by the record.

The electric company contends, in the first place, that, under the peculiar terms of its charter, the traction company has no authority to build on said strip, even by condemnation and payment of compensation; that it is confined, in its charter powers, to the operation of the line of road it purchased at the judicial sale. The electric company is not in a position to maintain its bill on this contention, for if the traction company has no legislative authority to condemn a right of way outside of its constructed line, purchased as aforesaid, and if the proposed act of building along said strip is, as the electric company contends, a taking or injuring of its fee in the land, then the bill shows merely a threatened private trespass, which may be adequately compensated at law. It is only where a party authorized by law to exercise the right of eminent domain proceeds in its exercise without a legal ascertainment and payment of compensation, by condemnation proceedings, that a court of equity will enjoin, without regard to the question of irreparable injury or adequacy of legal remedies. East & West R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 75 Ala. 280; Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. v. Matthews, 99 Ala. 24, 14 L. R. A. 462; Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. (Ala.) 24 So. 368. We therefore dismiss that branch of the case, and will consider that the traction company was authorized to condemn and build the proposed line of street railway.

It will be borne in mind that no part of that portion of the 100-foot strip which was reserved by the electric company from its equitable grant to the town (the same, in this case, as an executed grant) of the easement aforesaid is sought to be entered upon by the traction company, as was the case in Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. (the same parties as here), recently decided by this court, where the traction company undertook to cross the reserved central 25 feet of the strip actually occupied by the electric company with its tracks, without condemnation or making compensation. That authority (the case recently decided by this court) showed, no doubt correctly, the general principle that the crossing by one company, invested with the right of eminent domain, of the right of way of another, even though such other had only the easement of a way, was a taking of the private property of the owner of such easement, within the meaning of our Constitution, for which condemnation and payment of compensation must first be had. We do not question the correctness of that general proposition, always applicable where no municipal easement and control are involved, as in that case. So, the inquiry to which we address ourselves is: Has the owner of the fee, under the laws in force at the time of the grant, who has granted to a municipal corporation the easement of a public street upon the land, a right to demand compensation for the building and operation upon the street, with municipal consent, of a street railway by a duly chartered street-railway company, the erection being assumed to be upon grade, and not shown to be specially injurious to the fee? The proposed railway of the traction company now sought to be enjoined was to be operated by electricity, according to the methods now of common knowledge. The settlement of this inquiry evidently depends upon the further question whether or not electric street railways, such as they have now come to be commonly known, are to be regarded as additional servitudes upon the streets of towns or cities not within the implied contemplation of the dedicators or grantors at the time of the dedication or grant.

It has been adjudicated with practical unanimity throughout the country, for many years, that street railways operated by horse power, though the cars were confined to fixed tracks built upon the surface of the street for their special use, were, so far as the right of the owner of the fee to complain was concerned, no more than the drawing of any other carriage or vehicle upon the streets, and were therefore legitimate uses of the streets, which the municipality was authorized to permit without violating any right of the owner of the fee. It has been decided by this court that the building of an ordinary steam passenger and traffic railroad upon the public street of a town or city does impose a new servitude, entitling the owner of the fee to compensation (Western Railway of Ala. v. Alabama G. T. R. Co. 96 Ala. 272, 17 L. R. A. 474); and the weight of authority elsewhere is to the same effect. The Tennessee court holds that a street railway operated by a dummy steam motor imposes a new servitude). East End Street R. Co. v. Doyle, 88 Tenn. 747, and 9 L. R. A. 100), though some courts hold otherwise. The electric railways, such as we are now considering, are a comparatively recent development; yet, as is of common knowledge, they have practically superseded all systems of street-railway enterprise (saving the cable systems in the larger cities), and their nature and modes of construction and operation, as affecting or not the legitimate use of streets within the implied contemplation of the dedication, have been subjects of frequent consideration and adjudication by courts of last resort in this country; and it may be said that there is almost unanimity in the adjudications that such uses are legitimate uses of streets, by the permission of municipalities, without any right of the owner of the fee to compensation therefor. That most excellent series, the Lawyers' Reports Annotated, has given care to the collection, in its reports of cases and notes, of the authorities upon this subject, and we will cite the following from that series, supporting the view above expressed: Koch v. North Ave. R. Co. 15 L. R. A. 377 (75 Md. 222); Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. 16 R. I. 668, 7 L. R. A. 205; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Braddock Electric R. Co. 1 Pa. Dist. R. 628; Lockhart v. Craig Street R. Co. 139 Pa. 419; Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634; Dean v. Ann Arbor Street R. Co. 93 Mich. 330; People v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co. 92 Mich. 522, 16 L. R. A. 752; Halsey v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 380; State, Kennelly, v. Jersey City, 57 N. J. L. 203, 26 L. R. A. 281; State, Roebling, v. Trenton Pass. R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 129 (58 N. J. L. 666); Louisville Bagging Mfg. Co. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 95 Ky. 50; Williams v. City Electric Street R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 556; Ogden City R. Co. v. Ogden City, 7 Utah, 207; San Antonio Rapid Transit Street R. Co. v. Limburger, 88 Tex. 79; Doane v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 97 (165 Ill. 510); Reid v. Norfolk City R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 274 (94 Va. 117). See also the following other cases: Canastota Knife Co. v. Newington Tramway Co. 69 Conn. 146; Simmons v. Toledo, 8 Ohio C. C. 535; Oviatt v. Akron Street R. Co. 2 Ohio N. P. 84; Sanflet v. Toledo, 10 Ohio C. C. 460; Hove v. West End Street R. Co. 167 Mass. 46; Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. v. St. Joseph Terminal R. Co. 97 Mo. 467, 3 L. R. A. 240. The case of Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 156 Ill. 255, reported with extended notes in 29 L. R. A. 485, is a valuable discussion of the question involved here. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad ran on a public street in Chicago, the fee of which was in that company. It was contended that the street-railway company, having the city's authority, had no right to build its line of street railway along another public street across the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Company, without condemning and paying compensation to that company, as the owner of the fee. The court discussed the question fully, reviewing the authorities, and held against the claim of compensation. It is true the street railway was to be operated by horse power, but the discussion of the case and authorities reviewed showed there was no distinction between that power and electricity. We have seen but two authorities to the contrary,—a Nebraska case (Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co. 53 Neb. 631, 39 L. R. A. 751) and a New York case. We are not aware that the question has ever received the consideration of this court. In the case of Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. v. Birmingham Union R. Co. 93 Ala. 505, neither of the companies owned the fee, both having mere easements in the public streets of the city; the fee being in some other, not complaining. The question was really involved in the case of Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 113 Ala. 239, but was not considered or decided by the court, for the reason that the peculiar physical conditions of the proposed crossing were such as to cause detriment to the public if the crossing should be effected, and the party seeking to cross was shown to have another feasible place of crossing without causing such public detriment. On these accounts the injunction was allowed, without considering the private constitutional right of the Highland Avenue & Belt Railroad Company to compensation as for taking its property for public use.

Unless we can set at naught a most overwhelming volume of well-considered adjudged cases, we are compelled to hold that the now almost exclusively known system of street-railway travel,—the electric-motor system,—built upon street grade, doing no special injury to the fee, is not the imposition of a new or additional servitude upon the highway, for which the owner of the fee is entitled to compensation, and, consequently, that injunction in the present case, upon the facts as they now appear before us, should not be allowed.

There is another consideration specially applicable to this case. At the time the electric company granted to Woodlawn the easement of a public street over the locus in quo, the statute now embodied in subdiv. 8 of § 1193 of the Code of 1896 provided that street-railway companies have power "to use steam or electric force or mechanical power or animals as a motive agent, subject to the control of the authorities of the city, town, or country, through which the road runs." Did not the grant of the easement, without reservation, carry to the town of Woodlawn, by contract, these specific uses of the street?

Decree of the chancellor reversed, injunction dissolved, and cause remanded.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Oliver W. INGERSOLL, Appt.,
v.

NASSAU ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Resp't.

(157 N. Y. 458.)

1. The provision against private or local bills found in Constitution, art. 3, § 18, as amended in 1874, and continued in the revision of 1894, does not affect previously existing legislation.
2. An absolute right of a corporation to use the street-railway tracks of another corporation cannot be burdened by a subsequent statute so as to make the exercise of the right depend on the consent of abutting owners.
3. The consent of abutting owners is not necessary to the exercise by a street-railway company of its contract right to use the tracks of another company.
4. The operation of a street surface railway for which the consent of abutting owners is required under railroad law, § 91, does not include the use of the tracks of one company by another company which has a contract right to use them.

(Vann, J., dissents.)

(January 10, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Kings County in favor of defendant in an action brought to restrain defendant from operating its railroad on a street in front of plaintiff's property on the ground that it had not obtained the consent of the majority of the property owners to do so. Affirmed.

NOTE.—For street railway as burden on street, see Birmingham Traction Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. (Ala.) ante. 233. 43 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wood & Hill and William G. Cooke, for appellant:

It was held in Colonial City Traction Co. v. Kingston City R. Co. 153 N. Y. 540, that, under the constitutional amendment of 1874, the fact that one street surface railroad company has the consent of both local authorities and abutting owners to build and operate a railroad through a street does not relieve a second company from the necessity of obtaining further consents from both of these sources to enable it to use the tracks of the first.

The constitutional amendment of 1874 made the consent of abutting owners an immediate and indispensable prerequisite to the use by one street railroad of the tracks of another.

People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75, construes the provision according to the strictest and most technical rules of lexicography instead of applying the well-established method of interpretation which finds the meaning in the spirit rather than in the letter of the law.

Holmes v. Carley, 31 N. Y. 290; White v. Wager, 32 Barb. 253; Re New York Dist. R. Co. 42 Hun. 625; People, Jackson, v. Potter, 47 N. Y. 379; People, Twenty-Third Street R. Co., v. New York Comrs. 95 N. Y. 558; Bell v. New York, 105 N. Y. 144.

It was considered worthy of a constitutional provision, that no street railroad should be authorized by law without the consent of a fixed proportion of the adjacent property owners; or if that consent could not be obtained, without the determination of commissioners.

Re Kings County Elev. R. Co. 82 N. Y. 98.

The clearly expressed purpose was to limit the application of the act of 1839 to cases where consent had been given, and that that law should not, after January 1, 1875, be deemed a justification of the construction or operation of a street railroad, unless the condition imposed by the amendment was complied with.

When the language employed is ambiguous or a word admits of two meanings, it shall, if possible, be so read as to make the provision salutary and effective.

Farmers' Turnp. Co. v. Coventry, 10 Johns. 389; Mohawk Bridge Co. v. Utica & S. R. Co. 6 Paige, 554; Pillow v. Bushnell, 5 Barb. 156; Smith v. Helmer, 7 Barb. 416; People, Sinkler v. Terry, 108 N. Y. 1; Sage v. Brooklyn, 89 N. Y. 189.

The decision in 89 N. Y. was a mistake.

Under the railroad law of 1890, the consent of abutting owners was necessary to the operation of defendant's road.

The Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company possessed no such right to make and carry out the contract in question that it could not be taken away by the amendment of 1874, or the statute of 1890.

The right conferred by the act of 1839 was not a franchise.

Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 595, 10 L. ed. 311; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 170; People, Atty. Gen., v. Utica Ins. Co. 15 Johns. 387, 8 Am. Dec. 243; 3 Kent, Com. p. 458.

The very definition of the word exhibits the absurdity of including within its category the right to make a contract which every citizen owning the same sort of property could make as matter of course.

It merely authorized railroad corporations to enjoy their property as an individual might enjoy his.

The rights of a person considered in their natural capacities are of two sorts, absolute and relative. Absolute, which are such as appertain and belong to particular men, merely as individuals or single persons; relative, which are incident to them as members of society, and standing in various relations to each other.

1 Bl. Com. p. 123.

The inalienable prerogative of government to regulate the enjoyment of this second class of rights is what is known as "police power."

4 Bl. Com. p. 162; Cooley, Const. Law, p. 704; License Cases, 5 How. 583, 12 L. ed. 291; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 125, 24 L. ed. 84; People, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 606; Brick Presby. Church v. New York, 5 Cow. 540.

The lawful exercise of this power often so operates upon property as to materially interfere with its free use, even to the extent of seriously impairing its value.

People, Schwab, v. Grant, 126 N. Y. 473; People, Dorr, v. Thacher, 52 Hun, 549; People, Cumisky, v. Wurster, 14 App. Div. 556.

If it be discovered that railroads have a property right in the provisions of the act of 1839 with which no legislative interference is admissible, then individuals have precisely the same property right in the existing provisions of the usury laws and the statute of frauds, so that the rate of interest can never be reduced, nor can any new law regulating contracts ever be enacted.

43 L. R. A.

That a statute impairs the value of property does not make it unconstitutional.

Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323.

Corporate property is entitled to no higher degree of protection than that of an individual.

Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 704, 709; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 150, 62 Am. Dec. 625.

The legislature may impose upon railroad corporations such additional restrictions and burdens as the public good requires.

People, Kimball, v. Boston & A. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 569; Kerr v. Dougherty, 79 N. Y. 327; Ayres v. Methodist Episcopal Church, 3 Sandf. 361; People, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593.

Messrs. Charles A. Collin and Henry Yonge, for respondent:

The traffic agreement between the Nassau Electric Railroad Company and the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company, authorizing the former company to run its cars over the tracks of the latter, is a valid, qualified assignment of the franchise of the one to the other. The consents of the abutting property owners are not necessary to render it effectual.

The right of railroad companies to contract with each other for the use of their respective roads, and thereafter to use them in the manner prescribed by such contract, does not at this late day admit of successful question.

Laws of 1839, chap. 218; Railroad Law, § 78; People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255; Ingersoll v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 89 Hun, 213; Roddy v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 23 Misc. 373, 32 App. Div. 311; Kunz v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 25 Misc. 334.

Section 18, art. 3, of the Constitution, taking effect January 1, 1875, limited the powers of the legislature as to future legislation only, and did not repeal or otherwise affect the legislation theretofore enacted and then in force (Laws 1839, chap. 218), authorizing railroad corporations to enter into traffic contracts and leases.

People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75; Beveridge v. New York Elev. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 648.

The act of 1839 applies to both steam and street surface railroad corporations, and authorized both traffic agreement and leases.

People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255; People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75; Woodruff v. Erie R. Co. 93 N. Y. 609.

The Revision of 1890 continued the act of 1839 in § 78 of the railroad law, and continued § 15 of the act of 1884, supra, omitting the provision prohibiting the leasing of parallel roads in § 103 of the railroad law.

Sections 90 and 91 of the railroad law do not require the consents of property owners to the use by one railroad company of the tracks of another under a traffic contract.

The constitutional amendment of 1875 and subsequent legislation were not intended to affect the assignability of railroad franchises theretofore perfected and made assignable by the act of 1839.

The right of the Atlantic Avenue Company to assign its railroad franchises on Bergen street to the extent permitted by Laws 1839, chap. 218, and by Laws 1884, chap. 252, § 15, was "a right accruing, accrued, or acquired," under and by virtue of such laws so repealed, within the meaning of the saving clauses of the general corporation law, which provide that such right may be asserted and enforced as fully and to the same extent as if such laws had not been repealed, and were expressly saved by the saving clauses from being in any manner affected or impaired by the revision.

Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Watervliet Turnp. & R. Co. 135 N. Y. 393; Cameron v. New York & Mt. V. Water Co. 133 N. Y. 336; People, Standard Gaslight Co., v. Gilroy, 67 Hun, 323; New York Cable Co. v. New York, 104 N. Y. 1.

The right of the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company, acquired under the laws of 1839, to grant by contract the use of its tracks to any other railroad corporation, is a property right of which it could not thereafter be divested except in the proper exercise of the right of eminent domain or of the police power.

People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 524, 31 L. ed. 721; Roddy v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 32 App. Div. 311.

The legislation under consideration appears from its nature not to be an exercise of the police power.

Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 108, 50 Am. Rep. 636.

An owner of an abutting property bounded by the exterior line of a street, and not owning the fee of any portion of the street, has no cause of action on account of the construction, maintenance, or operation of street surface-railroad tracks on the street, even though such construction, maintenance, or operation be unlawful and a nuisance, unless he alleges and proves special damage to his property, different from that suffered by the public at large.

Fobes v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 121 N. Y. 505, 8 L. R. A. 453; Uline v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 98, note to 53 Am. Rep. 123, 54 Am. Rep. 661; Rummel v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 30 N. Y. S. R. 235; Hier v. New York, W. S. & B. R. Co. 40 Hun, 310.

So far as interference with his access is concerned he suffers only in theory, and he suffers in common with others, and his greater or less proximity does not count.

Doolittle v. Broome County Supers. 18 N. Y. 160; Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 146; Dougherty v. Bunting, 1 Sandf. 1; Pierce v. Dart, 7 Cow. 609.

Parker, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I quite agree that if all the views expressed in the opinion in Colonial City Traction Co. v. Kingston City R. Co. 153 N. Y. 540, were intended to be applicable to every conceivable case in which the tracks of one surface railroad might be used by another, then would we, indeed, be placed in an embarrassing position, as we stand confronting a statute that has been in existence since 1839, providing that "it shall be lawful hereafter for any railroad corporation to contract with any other railroad corporation for the use of their respective roads, and thereafter to use the same in such manner as may be prescribed in such contract." That is precisely what the Atlantic Avenue Company undertook to do in contracting with this defendant for the use by the latter of the former company's double tracks through a portion of a certain street in the city of Brooklyn. This statute was not pressed upon the attention of the court of the Colonial Traction Co. Case, because there it was not directly involved. Instead of a contract between two railroads by which one was permitted to use some portions of the tracks of the other, that was a proceeding by the one to condemn the right to use the tracks of the other, and was, by that other, resisted to the uttermost. On a motion for a reargument the possible effect of some of the expressions made use of in the opinion, in a situation like this, was pointed out, and the court promptly gave assurance that it had not decided to override the statute of 1839, that statute not being directly involved. This assurance was furnished by an opinion written by the learned judge who had spoken for the court in the decision of the case, and he said: "It is also suggested that our opinion has raised apprehension as to its effect as a precedent upon railroad leases and traffic agreements, of which there are said to be many now in force all over the state. It was not our intention to decide any case but the one now before us, which simply involved the standing of the plaintiff to make the application in question, and our opinion should be read in the light of that purpose. If, as sometimes happens, broader statements were made by way of argument or otherwise than were essential to the decision of the questions presented, they are the dicta of the writer of the opinion and not the decision of the court." [154 N. Y. 495.] We are thus brought to the consideration of a question which may have been incidentally written about, but has never been decided by this court. It has never been decided because it has not been involved. Aye, more than that, it has not been considered; for there has been nothing in any situation actually presented to this court to suggest that such a question might arise. This defendant, relying upon the statute to which we have referred, entered into a contract, made in conformity with the provisions of such statute, by which it acquired the right to run its cars over some portion of the tracks of the Atlantic Avenue Railroad. The plaintiff, an abutting owner, sought to restrain the defendant from enjoying the privilege for which it contracted, but the courts have so far held that the defendant's acts were entirely legal, and that the plaintiff has no legal right or interest with which the defendant interferes through the use of the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company. That this decision cannot be questioned on principle is certain if it be the fact that at the time of the acquisition of the franchise over the street in question by the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company such a statute as the act of 1839 was in existence, and was not in conflict with the Constitution or some other statutory provision. All these questions were discussed by the court in People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75. The assignor in that case, as in this, was the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company; in each case the right sought to be acquired by the defendant was the right to run its cars over certain tracks of the assignor company, and the justification for the contract according the right was the act of 1839 (chap. 218, § 1). It was claimed in that case that the act of 1839, by the authority of which the contract was made, was rendered invalid by the constitutional provision of 1875 (art. 3, § 18), continued in the revision of 1894. But the court held that the act of 1839 was unaffected by that constitutional provision, in that it did not undertake to affect existing legislation, but instead to restrict legislative power as to future legislation. Said the court: "The whole scope of the section is to dictate to the lawmaking power what it may or may not do thereafter, what bills it may pass and what it shall not, and not at all to affect or act upon past legislation which at the time was entirely lawful." That decision has not been questioned in the slightest degree in any case to which our attention has been called, prior to the present review. But, as it is now challenged, a brief consideration of the reasons justifying it will not be out of place.

It is conceded that the act of 1839, entitled "An Act Authorizing Railroad Companies to Contract with Each Other," has been continued in force from the time of its enactment to the present, and is now to be found in § 78 of the Railroad Law. Upon its incorporation into § 78 of the railroad law by the Revision of 1890, the act of 1893 was, with many other laws, in terms repealed by § 182 of the railroad law. Laws 1890, chap. 565. Section 182, however, declared that: "The provisions of this chapter, so far as they are substantially the same as those of laws existing on April 30, 1891, shall be construed as a continuation of such laws, modified or amended according to the language employed in this chapter, and not as new enactments." Independently of this provision, under the settled doctrine of statutory construction, the effect of the revision of the statutes by a re-enactment of previous statutes would have operated as a continuance of the provisions of the former statute instead of a repeal and a new enactment. But the legislature, by the provision that we have quoted, took away all opportunity for question by enacting that such revision constituted a continuation of the enactments incorporated therein. Thus is fully supported the assertion that the act of 1839 has been in full force and effect from the day of its enactment to and including the present time.

The act applies to both steam and street-surface railroad corporations, and authorizes both traffic agreements and leases. People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255; People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75; Woodruff v. Erie R. Co. 93 N. Y. 609. It is unaffected by the provision of the Constitution that "the legislature shall not pass a private or local bill in any of the following cases." Thirteen specifications follow, one of which contains, among other things, the following: "The legislature shall pass general laws providing for the cases enumerated in this section, and for all other cases which in its judgment may be provided for by general laws. But no law shall authorize the construction or operation of a street railroad except upon the condition that the consent of the owners of one half in value of the property bounded on, and the consent also of the local authorities having the control of, that portion of a street or highway upon which it is proposed to construct or operate such railroad be first obtained, or, in case the consent of such property owners cannot be obtained, the appellate division of the supreme court, in the department in which it is proposed to be constructed, may, upon application, appoint three commissioners who shall determine, after a hearing of all parties interested, whether such railroad ought to be constructed or operated, and their determination, confirmed by the court, may be taken in lieu of the consent of the property owners." Const. art. 3, § 18, as amended in 1874 and continued in the revision of 1894.

Statutory enactments in existence at the time of the adoption of this provision of the Constitution were not aimed at, for the reason doubtless that chapter 140 of the Laws of 1850 (§ 28, subd. 5) provided that the assent of the corporation of a city was necessary to authorize the construction of any railroad upon the streets of a city, and chapter 140 of the Laws of 1854 (§ 1) prohibited the construction without the consent of a majority in interest of the owners of property upon the streets upon which a railroad is to be constructed. But as it was possible for the legislature to change the statutes in that respect, in the language of Judge Finch, in 89 N. Y. 75, "it [the Constitution] commands the legislature not to 'pass' a private or local bill for certain specified purposes, and ordains that those purposes shall be accomplished through the aid of general laws, and then restrains their range by a further condition that even by a general law the legislature shall not authorize 'the construction or operation of a street railroad' except in certain cases." The framers of the amendment to the Constitution of 1874 apparently saw no objection to the principle of the act of 1839; otherwise they would have prohibited the making of a contract with one railroad by another for the use of its tracks without the consent of the abutting owner. This they did not attempt to do, either in terms or by indirection, and yet they knew, or must be presumed to have known, the legislation pertaining to that general subject. The attempt was to place restrictions upon the legislative power, but, so far as the section quoted is concerned, it had relation only to the building of new roads, and necessarily to the acquisition of new franchises. It aimed, not at the destruction of vested rights, such as the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company had acquired in the street in front of the premises of this plaintiff, either directly by overthrowing the statute, or indirectly by compelling the assignee under the contract to obtain the consent of abutting owners. Such consent was in fact given when the abutting owners first consented to the building of the railroad, for the consent was necessarily given in the presence of a statute declaring that the franchises would permit the corporation to contract with another railroad corporation for the use of its road. This assertion is based upon the assumption that the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company acquired its franchise after the passage of the act of 1854, which required the consent of the abutting owners. We do not, however, rest our decision upon that ground, for we are not advised by the record of the date on which the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company acquired the right to construct and operate its railroad on Bergen street, between Rogers and Nostrand avenues; but in any event, as we have already seen, both on reason and authority (People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75), the act of 1839 has not been affected by the Constitution, and hence the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company has a right to contract with another corporation for the use of its tracks. If the Atlantic Avenue road acquired its franchise after the act of 1854 had been passed, then the plaintiff necessarily consented to the making of such a contract, as we have already observed; if the franchise was acquired before, that road, nevertheless, became vested with the right to make such a contract by the statute of 1839. The Constitutional Amendment of 1874 did not, as we have seen, attempt to take away that right, nor did it attempt to vest in the legislature the power to take it away by legislative enactment. Those provisions had relation solely to future legislation that might affect the creation of new corporations, and not the destruction of old ones, or any of the rights such corporations had secured under statutory authorization. If, then, it be true (as we shall attempt to show later that it is not) that the legislature has since the Constitutional Amendment of 1874 attempted to deprive the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company and other surface-railroad corporations similarly situated of a valuable part of their franchises, such legislation is unconstitutional and void. If the purpose of the legislation under consideration was to deprive an assignee corporation of the right to use the tracks of another corporation without the consent of abutting owners, then the effect intended and actually accomplished (if the enactment be valid) is to burden what was an absolute right with a necessity for the consents of abutting owners before the right can be made available to the assignee corporation. Such a burden in practical effect might destroy that which was originally vested in the assignor corporation as a part of its franchise; for, as the law now stands, a railroad corporation desiring to use the tracks of another railroad cannot acquire from the municipality or the abutting owners a franchise to run cars over those tracks. Every part of the franchise was given to and acquired by the corporation constructing the railroad; no part of it was retained, nor any right to carve out of it another franchise, in whole or in part. The consent of the abutting owners that one railroad corporation should use the tracks of another could not, therefore, confer or contribute towards the bestowal of a franchise, and in the event of their refusal to consent they might very well claim that the appellate division is not authorized to grant consent in such a case under our present statutes, and thereupon insist that they were in a position to prevent the use of the tracks by the assignee corporation until their demands should be complied with. If, however, this contention should not avail, the appellate division might in the exercise of its discretion refuse to consent, and thus operation under the contract would be prevented. But if the burden were less onerous,—indeed, if it were only slight,—it would be beyond the legislative power to impose it.

It is well settled that a perfected railroad franchise, constituted either by direct legislative grant or by consent of local authorities and property owners in pursuance of the Constitution and general laws, especially when followed by actual construction and operation, is a property right that cannot be afterwards taken away or diminished, either by subsequent constitutional amendment or by legislative or municipal action, except in the exercise of the police power or the right of eminent domain. People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255, and cases cited. In that case Chief Judge Ruger, at page 41 of the opinion, says: "We will refer to a few only of the statutes on this subject from which the implication arises, not only that the state intended to invest these franchises with the character of property, but also to enable their mortgagees, purchasers, and assigns to enjoy their use under an indefeasible title. Thus, railroad corporations, having been authorized to contract with other corporations for a qualified transfer of such franchises for terms unlimited except by the agreement of the parties. Laws 1839, chap. 218. . . . The statutes cited, as well as others not specially referred to, indicate the general policy of the state to render such interests independent of the life of the original corporation, and transferable as property by means of judicial proceedings and otherwise, under certain restrictions not pertinent to our present purpose particularly to consider. People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 84." Salability is an essential element of property, and the destruction or the diminution thereof is a taking of property that cannot be done except through the exercise of the right of eminent domain or of the police power. Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98 50 Am. Rep.

436; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255; Roddy v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 32 App. Div. 311. In the latter case the court had under consideration the question now before us, and Mr. Justice Hatch, in delivering the opinion of the court, well stated the conclusion necessarily resulting from his argument, as follows: "The right or privilege to contract for its use with other railroads, and thereby derive a profit, was as much a part of its franchise as was the right to lay its tracks or operate its cars. This was a source of use which made its property and franchise valuable, and the corporation could no more be deprived of this right than the right of operating in any other respect as authorized by law." The salability of the property right in question is affected, and its value diminished, if not destroyed, if the assignee thereof cannot make use of it without the consent of the abutting owners. It therefore follows that if the legislation under consideration on its face attempts to prevent a railroad corporation from possessing the right to contract for the use of its road with another corporation, from conferring on that other the absolute right to make such use, it is wholly without authority and void, and for that reason the judgment under review is right. But it seems to us very clear that the legislature has made no such attempt; for there is no statute that has for its purpose the cutting down of railroad franchises so as to eliminate therefrom the element conferred by the statute of 1839. Instead of §§ 91 and 102 being in conflict with § 78, they are in harmony with it, and together clearly state the legislative policy as it has been understood from the beginning by the profession and the courts. They mark out the methods for the creation of franchises, and, together with other sections, measure their extent. The legislation has relation to the creation of surface railroads, not their total or partial destruction. It points out, on the one hand, how, if at all, a franchise to operate a street-surface railroad may be obtained. One of the necessary steps is the obtaining of the consent of the municipal authorities; another is that the consent of a majority in interest of the abutting owners shall be obtained, but if it cannot, then the consent of the appellate division may be obtained in its stead, when the road may be constructed notwithstanding the refusal of the abutting owners to consent. Other sections declare the rights that are thus acquired, which together are called a franchise, and among those sections is § 78, which provides that one of the rights thus acquired is that of contracting with another corporation to lease to it the right to use its road. Thus, somewhat in advance of orderly argument, have I presented my deductions from a consideration of the whole subject. My justification, however, is in the hope that thereby the purpose of the statutes to be referred to may be more readily appreciated.

We have already seen that § 78 of the railroad law continued in force chapter 218 of the Laws of 1839. Indeed, we are all agreed in that respect, and it means much; for it points out that it has been the public policy in this state for a period of nearly sixty years to permit railroad corporations to contract with other railroad corporations for the use of their roads, a public policy unchallenged in any direction by the people, either through their organic law or through statutory enactments, unchallenged directly in any case by the courts, and challenged indirectly but once. Upon the subject of the granting of similar franchises the Constitution has been the subject of amendment, and later of revision, but no single sentence can be pointed out that indicates a purpose of changing the established public policy so far as it authorizes railroad corporations to contract with other railroad corporations for the use of their roads. This § 78 of the railroad law, therefore, rests on sure foundation, and is buttressed by many more years of influence in railroad construction than the consent of the abutting owners, which was not deemed necessary in this state prior to the year 1854. This assertion may seem strange in the light of the attempt to subordinate every other feature of the railroad law to that of the consent of the abutting owners; but such consent has not been for a very long time really necessary; and, if it be refused, the consent of the appellate division may be had in its stead. Let us now look at the legislation upon the subject of consents. In the early history of the statutes the consent of local authorities and property owners to the construction of street-surface railroads in city streets was not required. The first appearance of legislation upon that subject was a single sentence contained in subdivision 5, § 28, chap. 140, of the Laws of 1850, reading as follows: "Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to authorize . . . the construction of any railroad not already located in, upon, or across any streets in any city, without the assent of the corporation of such city." This subdivision was amended by chapter 582 of the Laws of 1864; but the sentence quoted was not affected, and it was continued in the general railroad act of 1850 without change until its re-enactment in § 91 of the railroad law of 1890. It was not until 1854 that the legislature saw fit to require, as a condition precedent to the construction of a street-surface railroad in a city, the consent of a majority in interest of the owners of property abutting upon streets; but by § 1, chap. 140, of the Laws of 1854 it was provided: "The common councils of the several cities of this state shall not, hereafter, permit to be constructed in either of the streets or avenues of said city a railroad for the transportation of passengers, which commences and ends in said city, without the consent thereto of a majority in interest of the owners of property upon the streets in which said railroad is to be constructed being first had and obtained." This sentence continued in force without change until it was re-enacted in § 91 of the railroad law of 1890. The next general legislation upon this subject was § 3, chap. 252, of the Laws of 1884, which continued in force without amendment until its re-enactment in § 91 of the railroad law.

Since the enactment of the general railroad law, §§ 90 and 91 have been amended by § 91, chap. 676, Laws 1892; Laws 1893, chap. 434; Laws 1895, chaps. 545, 933; and by chapter 855, Laws 1896. A reference to the character of the amendments will not be serviceable, but such portions of existing §§ 90 and 91 of the railroad law as are material to the present discussion read as follows:

"Sec. 90. Street Surface Railroad; General Provision. A corporation organized for the purpose of building and operating or extending a street railroad, or any of its branches, for public use in the conveyance of persons and property in cars for compensation, upon and along any street, avenue, road, or highway, in any city, town, or village, or in any two or more civil divisions of the state, must comply with the provisions of this article."

"Sec. 91. Consent of Property Owners and Municipal Authorities. Such railroad shall not be built, extended, or operated, unless the consent in writing, acknowledged as are deeds entitled to be recorded, of the owners of one half in value of the property bounded on, and also the consent of the municipal authorities having control of that portion of a street or highway upon which it is proposed to build or operate such railroad, shall have been first obtained."

We have thus given a review of the legislation in this state as to the necessity of consents of local authorities and property owners to the construction, maintenance, or operation of street-surface railroad tracks in streets. It is evident that the legislature, from the beginning to the end of this general legislation, has never intended to require consents of local authorities or property owners to the operation by one railroad company of its cars over the tracks of another railroad company by virtue of a traffic contract with such other railroad company, but that it intended to require such consents only to the construction, maintenance, or operation of new railroad tracks constituting either main lines, branches, or extensions. Giving to the phraseology of the statute its ordinary meaning, we have a perfectly working harmonious system, one that accords, not only with the professional understanding of its purpose, but with the history surrounding the development of the different branches of the law, until finally they were consolidated into one general act. When the legislature incorporated chapter 218, Laws 1839, into the general railroad act, and provided that it should constitute a continuance of that chapter, and not a repeal and re-enactment thereof, it made it perfectly clear that it was the legislative intent, not only that such a right should thereafter be continued to all railroad corporations created under and by virtue of the provisions of the general law, but that it should preserve the statute from even an opportunity of controversy as to whether it was in violation of the spirit of the Constitutional Amendment of 1874. That amendment did not, as we have seen, affect past legislation, and therefore could not by any possibility be said to affect a provision of law upon that subject that 43 L. R. A.

should be continued in a general railroad law instead of being re-enacted. So, too, it continued the legislation upon the subject of the consents of the municipalities, and also the legislation upon the subject of the consent of the abutting owner. It is quite evident that it was the legislative understanding that these several enactments were in harmony with each other and could stand together, and there really does not seem to be any room for questioning it; but, if there were, it would be the duty of the courts to harmonize the enactments. No such effort, however, is needed. By the general railroad law, in order to acquire the right to construct, extend, or operate a railroad upon a public street there must be obtained—First, consent of the municipal authorities; second, consent of a majority in interest of the abutting owners, or, if that cannot be had, the consent of the appellate division. When these consents have been obtained, and the railroad corporation obtaining them has in all other respects complied with the commands of the general railroad law, it acquires what is known as a franchise, and one of the important features of that franchise consists in the right to contract with another corporation for the use of its tracks, which right becomes a part of the franchise. Thus reading together the several sections of the railroad law (and we see no other way in which they can possibly be read except by eliminating absolutely from consideration the oldest and most firmly grounded of all the statutes we have referred to), we come necessarily to the conclusion that the court below was right in holding that the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company, when it acquired its franchise, secured as a part of it the right to contract with another railroad company to use its tracks, a right that neither the municipality nor the abutting owner could take away or impair.

Already our consideration of the general subject has proceeded to unreasonable length, but it may not be out of place to state the point of divergence resulting in such totally different views. On the one hand, the underlying idea is that, in order to run over the tracks of another railroad, a railroad corporation must acquire a new franchise for that particular purpose, which, if true, would necessarily require the consent of the municipality and the abutting owners; while, on the other hand, it is that such railroad acquires a franchise as to streets upon which it constructs its railroad, but its right to use the tracks of the other railroad it gets by contract with the corporation owning the franchise, and all of it, which includes by the express terms of the statute the right to make a contract for such use. Let us stop a moment to see what is involved in the claim that a new franchise is required to operate on the tracks of another railroad. (1) It necessarily denies that the constructing railroad obtained by its franchise all that the statute provided for. (2) It assumes that there can be more than one franchise over the same right of way, and indeed as many franchises as there might be railroad corporations desiring its use. (3) That the right to confer it was reserved to the abutting owner, notwithstanding the statute positively declared it should pass to the constructing railroad. (4) That what the statute granted was not an absolute right, but something which might ripen into one provided the necessary consents could be obtained, notwithstanding the absence of a sentence, phrase, or word suggesting such a limitation. (5) That the right to contract for the use of its property conferred by the statute upon the constructing railroad is not interfered with by enjoining every other railroad corporation from making use of the tracks, although a contract for that purpose be obtained. That such a holding would be of far-reaching effect no one can doubt. That it would confer as a right that which at present is but a shadow, and deprive others of rights vested as firmly and as sacredly as any of the rights we treasure and enjoy, there can be no doubt. And where is to be found the basis for this radical change in the well-understood law of the state,—this claim that, notwithstanding the statute invests a corporation with such a right, it is not available, because § 91 of the statute provides that “a street-surface railroad, or extensions, or branches thereof, shall not be built, extended, or operated unless the consent in writing . . . of the owners of one half in value of the property” be obtained? The words “or operate” in that sentence are seized hold of to the exclusion of all the other portions of the railroad law, to destroy the right expressly conferred by another section. There is no rule of construction which will permit a court to give these words such an effect. The history which occasioned the incorporation of the words “or operate” does not suggest that it was intended for such a situation as we have here presented; on the contrary, it is well known that early in the history of street-surface railroad building it was quite common to construct extensions on Sundays or legal holidays, and then for the managers to say, “What are you going to do about it? You can’t tear up our tracks, and you can’t prevent us from using what is our own.” Hence a mandate of the Constitution, and a statute depriving a corporation of any advantage by reason of such construction, by denying to it the right to operate in the absence of consents. The statutes, considered together, as we have already pointed out, show that it was intended to apply to the creation of new franchises, and the language employed is entirely appropriate to that end, and as thus construed it is in harmony with § 78. Special attention is called to § 102 of the railroad law, as clearly indicating the legislative understanding of the sense in which the words used by it were employed. It prohibits a street-surface railroad corporation from “constructing, extending, or operating” its road in any portion of a street in which there is already a street-surface railroad, without the consent of the latter corporation, but authorizes it to use the tracks of the other street-surface railroad for a certain distance upon condemning the right to do so by proceedings in court. A 43 L. R. A.

franchise, in the full sense of that term, to operate in such a street, cannot be obtained without the consent of the other corporation, the municipal authorities and abutting owners. But something that the corporation has can be obtained, viz., the right to run cars over its tracks in that street, and this by condemnation proceedings. The point of view from which it is possible to see in the words “or operate” such portentous meaning as to cause them to override and destroy rights vested by virtue of the command of solemn statutory enactments is taken through sympathy for the abutting owner. No statute has ever, in terms, conferred upon him an absolute right to prevent the operation of cars. He never had any consideration in the premises under the laws of this state until the act of 1854, and from that day to this his refusal to consent has been of no avail if, in the judgment of the appellate division, the public interest required that a railroad should be constructed. But it is said that the language of the statute that was intended to measure out just the amount of consideration that should be paid to him does not do so in fact, because the potency of the words “or operate” enables him to claim as a right that he can prevent the use of the tracks in front of his premises by a new railroad under a contract with the old railroad, to whose construction he had consented. In no judicial opinion reaching such a conclusion have the provisions of the act of 1839 (now § 78 of the railroad law) received consideration, and it is submitted that when read in connection with the other provisions of the railroad law, as it is the duty of the court to do, and read for the purpose of ascertaining the true intent and meaning of the several provisions, the conclusion must be reached that this defendant has the right to use the tracks on the block in question by contract with the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

Gray, J., concurring:

Although I was not present when the Colonial City Traction Case was decided (153 N. Y. 540), I should yield a loyal obedience to its authority, however much I might differ in my views from those expressed in that decision, if I thought it foreclosed the discussion in the present case. But I think it does not do so, and that the question of the effect of the act of 1839 is now so presented, under the facts, as to enjoin upon us, not a nullification of what was decided in the former case, but a consideration of whether the right possessed by a street-railway company to contract with another for the use of its track has been abrogated. The former case did not, necessarily, involve the present question. The opinion of the Chief Judge has pointed out the distinction between the cases, and I feel myself free to concur with him in the conclusions which he has reached.

Bartlett and Martin, JJ., concur in result.

Vann, J., dissenting:

On the 25th of October, 1894, the plaintiff, an abutting owner upon Bergen street, in the city of Brooklyn, brought this action to restrain the defendant, a domestic corporation organized under the general railroad act of 1890, from constructing, operating, or maintaining a surface railroad through Bergen street in front of his premises, upon the ground that it had not obtained the consent of the property owners as required by law. Upon the trial it appeared that on the 19th of June, 1894, the defendant received the consent of the local authorities of said city to construct and operate a street railroad through several streets, including one block on Bergen street, upon condition that it should comply with all the provisions of the railroad law, but it had not obtained the consent of a majority of the property owners on said block or of the appellate division of the supreme court to the construction or operation of said road thereon. The Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company, organized in 1872, had for many years prior to the commencement of this action operated a double-track street-surface railroad along Bergen street in front of the premises of the plaintiff, who owned no part of the street. On the 13th of October, 1894, an agreement was entered into between the defendant and the Atlantic Company, which, among other things, provided that "the Nassau Company, for the purpose of operating its railroad on said portion of Bergen street [being the part in question], may use the tracks and wires of the Atlantic Company thereon, and may, upon and along said portion of Bergen street, place and maintain its feed wires upon the poles of the Atlantic Company, and shall pay the Atlantic Company a proper rental for such use of said tracks, wires and poles." After the commencement of this action, and on the 2d of November, 1894, a second agreement was entered into between said companies, which provided that "the cars of the Nassau Company may be moved over the tracks of the Atlantic Company on Bergen street [through the block in question], and the Atlantic Company agrees to furnish the power to move the said cars on said portion of Bergen street. The Nassau Company agrees to pay the Atlantic Company annually for the use of said tracks and power such sum as the parties hereto may hereafter agree upon, and, if they fail to so agree, the annual compensation shall be determined as provided in § 102 of the railroad law." The action was tried at a special term of the supreme court, and the justice presiding held that the defendant, under "an agreement" (not specifying which), had "the legal right to operate its railroad over the tracks of the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company in Bergen street, . . . notwithstanding the property owners upon Bergen street . . . have not given their consent to the construction and operation of the defendant's railroad; that the proposed operation by the defendant of its railroad on Bergen street is lawful, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction enjoining and restraining the defendant from such 43 L. R. A.

operation; that the defendant, not having the consent of the property owners on Bergen street, . . . is not entitled to construct a railroad thereon," and judgment was directed accordingly, without costs to either party. The trial court thus held that the consents of abutting owners were not required for the operation of a street railroad, as distinguished from the construction thereof, and the general term affirmed the judgment, one of the learned justices dissenting.

There is no dispute as to the facts, and the question presented for us to determine is whether the defendant had a legal right, as against the plaintiff, under the circumstances stated, to operate its railroad upon the tracks of the Atlantic Avenue Company through that portion of Bergen street passing in front of the plaintiff's premises. The determination of this question requires us to consider § 18 of article 3 of the Constitution (Laws 1839, chap. 218), and several sections of the railroad law. Said section of the Constitution provides that "the legislature shall not pass a private or local bill in any of the following cases." Then follow thirteen specifications, and among others this: "Granting to any corporation, association, or individual, the right to lay down railroad tracks." After this enumeration the section provides that "the legislature shall pass general laws providing for the cases enumerated in this section, and for all other cases which in its judgment may be provided for by general laws. But no law shall authorize the construction or operation of a street railroad except upon the condition that the consent of the owners of one half in value of the property bounded on, and the consent also of the local authorities having control of, that portion of a street or highway upon which it is proposed to construct or operate such railroad, be first obtained, or in case the consent of such property owners cannot be obtained, the appellate division of the supreme court, in the department in which it is proposed to be constructed, may, upon application, appoint three commissioners who shall determine, after a hearing of all parties interested, whether such railroad ought to be constructed or operated, and their determination, confirmed by the court, may be taken in lieu of the consent of the property owners." Const. art. 3, § 18, as amended in 1874 and continued in the revision of 1894. The statute of 1839, entitled "An Act Authorizing Railroad Companies to Contract with Each Other," provides that "it shall be lawful hereafter for any railroad corporation to contract with any other railroad corporation for the use of their respective roads, and thereafter to use the same in such manner as may be prescribed in such contract." Laws 1839, chap. 218. While this act was repealed in 1890, the repealing statute provided that the provisions of the railroad law, so far as they are substantially the same as those of laws previously existing, "shall be construed as a continuation of such laws, modified or amended, according to the language employed in this chapter and not as new enactments." Laws 1890, chap. 565, §

182. By § 78 of the railroad law, the provision already quoted from the act of 1839 is repeated in hæc verba. Section 90 of the railroad law, so far as now material, is as follows: "The provisions of this article shall apply to every corporation which under the provisions thereof, or of any other law, has constructed or shall construct or operate, or has been or shall be organized to construct or operate, a street-surface railroad, or any extension or extensions, branch or branches thereof, for public use in the conveyance of persons and property for compensation, upon and along any street, avenue, road, or highway, in any city, town, or village, or in any two or more civil divisions of the state, must comply with the provisions of this article." Laws 1890, chap. 565, § 90; Laws 1893, chap. 434, § 90. Section 91, the next in order, provides that "a street-surface railroad, or extensions or branches thereof, shall not be built, extended, or operated unless the consent in writing, acknowledged or proved as are deeds entitled to be recorded, of the owners of one half in value of the property bounded on, and also the consent of the local authorities having control of that portion of a street or highway upon which it is proposed to build or operate such railroad, shall have been first obtained." The rest of said sections are not material in this controversy, nor are the amendments passed in 1895 and 1896. Laws 1895, chap. 545; Laws 1896, chap. 855. Section 102 prohibits street-surface railroad corporations from constructing, extending, or operating their roads or tracks in that portion of any street in which there is already a street-surface railroad without the consent of the corporation owning and maintaining the same, except that any street-surface railroad company may use the tracks of another street-surface railroad company for a certain distance, varying with the population of the place where it is located, upon condemning the right to do so by proceedings in court. These are all the provisions of the Constitution or statutes that are regarded as material to the determination of the question before us.

The act of 1839 must be regarded as having been continuously in force from the date of its passage, until the present time, for, although that statute has been repealed in form, it has been continued in fact by consolidation with many others in the comprehensive act now known as the "Railroad Law." The statute of 1839, in connection with the constitutional amendment above quoted, received consideration from this court in People v. Brooklyn, F. & O. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 75, where it was held that said act was not affected by the constitutional provision, which prohibits future legislation only, without reference to previously existing laws. In no other respect is that case regarded as analogous to the one before us, for it was an action brought by the state through its attorney general to restrain the defendant therein from running its cars upon Atlantic avenue in the city of Brooklyn. There was no defendant except the railroad proceeded against. The abutting owners were not parties, and their rights were not passed upon. On page 91 the court said: "It is the state which sues. No private citizen is seeking to vindicate his individual rights. That would present a very different case from the one before us. It is the state, representing the whole people, which seeks to restrain the defendant from exercising the right which the state, representing the whole people, expressly conferred." The case of People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255, was also brought by the attorney general, while Beveridge v. New York Elev. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 648, was brought by a stockholder, and in neither were the rights of abutting owners involved. The act of 1839 was doubtless passed with reference to steam railroads only, as no other kind was then in existence. It is questioned whether, as continued in force by § 78 of the railroad law, it has any other application, for it is not found in the article entitled "Street Surface Railroads." Assuming, however, that it now has a general application, the question remains whether the defendant, by virtue of its agreement with the Atlantic Avenue Company, can run its cars over the tracks of the latter in Bergen street, without the consent of the abutting owners or the approval of the supreme court. As stated in another form, the question is whether the running of its cars through its own operating agents, by means of the power furnished by the Atlantic Company on the tracks of the latter, is operating its road; and, if so, is such operation prohibited by Constitution or statute, except on compliance with the conditions mentioned? In Colonial City Traction Co. v. Kingston City R. Co. 153 N. Y. 540, we held that "the use by a street-surface railroad company of a few hundred feet of the intervening tracks of another company, to form a connection between the main portions of its own track, over which to run its own cars and transport its own passengers as part of a continuous route," was "an 'operation' of its road, within the meaning of the provisions of the Constitution (art. 3, § 18) and of the statute." The question there presented was whether the Colonial Company could condemn the right to use the tracks of the Kingston Company to connect main portions of a line to be operated as an independent railroad without first obtaining the consent of the local authorities and the abutting owners. That case is therefore analogous to this, to the extent of determining what is meant by the phrase "operating a railroad." In discussing that question, we said: "If the appellant shall finally succeed in acquiring the right to run its cars for a short distance on the respondent's tracks, it will still be operating its own railroad, not that of another company, over that part of its route as well as any other. It clearly would not be operating the respondent's railroad, but using a portion of the tracks of the respondent to operate its own railroad. Two different companies cannot operate the same railroad at the same time, although both may use the same track in part to operate their respective roads. When the statute provides that "any street-surface railroad company may use the tracks of another street-surface railroad company" upon certain conditions, permission to 'use the tracks,' implies use for the purpose of operating its cars thereon. Manifestly no other use is intended. A railroad is none the less in operation between two points because it runs its cars for a part of the way over the tracks of another road. When a railroad corporation acquires the right to run its cars over a street, whether upon its own track or that of another, that right becomes a part of the railroad, and in exercising that right the corporation operates its own road. The operation of a railroad includes the running of cars, and when a company runs its own cars, receives its own passengers, and collects its own fares over a continuous route of 4 miles, and all the trackage belongs to it except a connecting link of a few hundred feet in the middle, which it acquires the right to use through the power of eminent domain, we think it is to be regarded as operating its own railroad over the entire route, within the meaning of the Constitution and the statute. The prohibition is in the disjunctive, and is directed against operation the same as it is against construction." While in discussing that case language was used not applicable thereto, because it was a case of condemnation, but applicable to a case like this where there is a consent by one railroad to permit another to use its tracks, still the language above quoted was directly applicable and germane to the case then in hand. Upon the reargument we limited the effect of the decision to proceedings in invitum to acquire the right to use the connecting track of another company, but in no other respect did we modify our previous conclusion. 154 N. Y. 493. There is no difference between the two cases so far as the meaning of the word "operation" is concerned, except that in this case the power is furnished by the company owning the tracks, while in that case it was to be furnished by the company running the cars. I think the decision was correct, and that, unless it is distinctly overruled in an essential feature, we are bound to hold that the defendant under its agreement with the Atlantic Avenue Company was to operate its own railroad through that portion of Bergen street in question. It adopted the tracks of that company as its own for the purpose of operating its railroad. If running cars is not operating a railroad it is difficult to understand what the statute means by "operate" or "operated." As it was not to operate the Atlantic Avenue Railroad, what road could it operate except its own? The courts below have held that a street-surface railroad may be operated upon a public street without the consent of a majority of the abutting owners or of the supreme court, notwithstanding the command of the Constitution and the railroad law. As we said in the Kingston Case, "the consent required is not simply to the laying of the tracks, but also to the operation of the road. . . . An abutting owner might be willing to permit one company to operate its line through the street in front of his property, which would involve the passage of but three or four cars an hour, but not be willing that several companies should have that privilege, which might involve the passage of a car every two minutes. It is not the laying of tracks, but the running of cars, that constitutes the chief burden, both upon the street and the property of the abutting owners. Consent to the burden of one road should, in reason, be limited to that road with whatever increase of business it may have, but should not be extended to as many roads as can crowd their cars into operation upon the street. It would be an unreasonable construction to hold that this is what the public authorities or the private citizens intend when they consent to the building and operation of a street railroad. Instead of an advantage to the public or to those owning property on the street, which is the inducement to obtain consent, it might result in a heavy and unexpected burden upon both, without any power to prevent it, and yet with no intention to consent to it. It would be a perversion of the consent given by extending it far beyond the intention of the parties." I do not wish to retreat from the position thus taken, which was concurred in by every member of the court who took part in the decision. The legislature had the power to prevent railroad companies from operating their roads without first obtaining the consents of the abutting owners, for it has all the power of legislation that the people can grant except as it is restrained by the Constitution, which contains no prohibition upon the subject. Koch v. New York, 152 N. Y. 72, 75. The legislature exercised that power in the very act under which the defendant was organized, and the restriction was, therefore, a part of the charter which gave it the right to exist. By accepting the charter it became bound to comply with all the provisions of the railroad law applicable to corporations of its class. The prohibition was clear and distinct, for § 91 provides that a street-surface railroad "shall not be built, extended, or operated" without the required consents. The operation of the road is as distinctly forbidden as the building or extension thereof. It is impossible to separate the prohibition from any one of the three acts of building, extending, or operating without violence to the language used. If a railroad cannot be built without the consents, it cannot be operated without the consents. The command of the statute applies with the same force to the one act as to the other. We have no power by construction to strike any of the forbidden acts from the statute, but it is our duty to give equal force to each. A forced construction weakens respect for the law and impairs the confidence of the public in the courts.

It is, however, contended that the right of the Atlantic Avenue Company to contract, under the act of 1839, for the use of its tracks by another road, was a property right of which it could not be deprived except by the power of eminent domain or the police power. If the contract had been made between the two roads before the passage of the act requiring consents as a condition precedent to the operation of the defendant's road, a different question would have arisen, as to which I express no opinion. In this case, however, the prohibition was in force, not only before the traffic agreement was made, but before the defendant was in existence, and it has no right to enter into the agreement without complying with the condition required by its charter. The Atlantic Avenue Company is not a party to this action, and its rights are not involved. If the legislature had the right to create the defendant, it had the right to restrict its power in any way that it saw fit, either by wholly preventing it from making certain kinds of contracts, or by preventing it from making them except upon a prescribed condition. A corporation can make no contract whatever except through the permission, express or implied, of the legislature. It is a "mere creature of law," and has no powers except those conferred by statute, either specifically or by necessary implication. When the legislature created the defendant it had the right to prevent it from operating its railroad, under a traffic agreement or otherwise, without the consent of the abutting owners or the procedure in court authorized in lieu thereof.

It is contended that, if we hold that a traffic agreement cannot be made between two surface-railroad companies so that one may operate its railroad over the tracks of the other without the consent of the abutting owners, the precedent will injure the value of railroad properties as well as the bonds secured by mortgages thereon in the hands of purchasers in good faith. The argument based upon inconvenience does not change the meaning of the statute, although in a case of doubtful construction it is worthy of attention. The meaning of § 91 of the railroad law, however, is not doubtful, and, if the managers of street-railroad corporations have misunderstood or disregarded it, the evil should be at once arrested. Moreover, those who have made investments in street railroads are not alone to be considered, but the thousands of abutting owners whose property is diminished in value by the constant running of cars before their doors are also entitled to consideration. The capital invested in street railroads is small when compared with the capital invested in homes that are disturbed, as well as accommodated, by the great traffic on these roads. The rights of both classes of investors are to be considered, but it is for the legislature, under the Constitution, to so regulate their rights as to do the most good with the least harm. We must take the law as it is written, and, as we require obedience from others, must obey it ourselves. The legislature has not left the railroads in the hands of abutting owners, but, in lieu of their consent, has provided a reasonable substitute through judicial proceedings, and it is safe to assume that the railroad companies are quite as capable of taking care of themselves as the abutting owners. It is our province to declare the law, and I think we should discharge that duty in this case by holding that the railroad law prohibits the defendant from operating its road upon the tracks or another company, through a public street, without first obtaining the consents required by that act. The judgment should be reversed and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, Respt.,
v.

Frank DUNN, Appt.

(157 N. Y. 528.)

1. The constitutional right of trial by jury is not violated by a statute providing that a jury in a criminal case shall be selected from a special list made from the general list by a jury commissioner.
2. Due process of law is not denied by requiring the jury in a criminal case to be composed of persons taken from the body selected by a special commissioner of jurors from the general list.
3. Judicial powers are not delegated to a special jury commissioner providing that he shall eliminate from the jury list persons declared by law to be unfit or disqualified to sit in criminal cases, and thus prepare a list from which a panel of fit and impartial jurors may be chosen.
4. It is not an unconstitutional discrimination against persons who are to be tried in a criminal branch of the court to require them to be tried by jurors taken from the body of the county whose general qualifications have been more particularly ascertained by a special jury commissioner, but who are still subject to judicial inquiry as to their qualifications and impartiality as in the case of an ordinary panel.
5. The right to appeal from the rulings of the trial court upon challenges to jurors is entirely within the legislative judgment.
6. A statute providing for special juries in each county having a population of 500,000 or more is a general, and not a local, act.

(January 10, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, granting a motion for a special jury to try an indictment against defendant for the crime of murder. Affirmed.

Statement by Gray, J.:

The defendant was charged with the crime of murder in the first degree, and, upon being arraigned, pleaded not guilty. Thereafter the people applied for a special jury to try the issue, under the provisions of chapter 378 of the Laws of 1896. The application was granted by the appellate division of the supreme court in the first department. Leave to appeal to this court was then granted, upon the ground that a question of law was presented which ought to be here reviewed, and the following question was certified, to wit: "Is the act of the legislature embodied in chapter 378 of the Laws of 1896, providing for a special jury in criminal actions in certain cases, a valid and constitutional exercise of legislative power?" The title of the act is as follows: "An Act Providing for a Special Jury in Criminal Cases in Each County of the State Having a Certain Population and for the Mode of Selecting and Procuring Such Special Jurors; also Creating a Special Jury Commissioner for Each of Such Counties and Regulating and Prescribing His Duties." The first six sections of the act provide, with respect to the manner of appointment of special jury commissioners, "for each county of the state having a population of 500,000 or more," their terms of office, compensation, etc., and that they shall be furnished by the commissioners of jurors of the counties with lists of persons liable to serve as trial jurors, from which to select special jurors, as the justices of the appellate division shall direct, etc. Section 7 prescribes the qualifications for each special juror, namely: He must be: "(1) A male citizen of the United States of at least ten years' standing, and a resident of the county. (2) Not less than thirty nor more than seventy years of age. (3) In possession of his natural faculties, and not infirm. (4) Free from all legal exceptions; of good character; of approved integrity; intelligent; of sound judgment; able to read and write the English language understandingly; and well informed; and he shall have an adequate knowledge of the duties of a juror." Section 8 provides that the commissioner shall not select as a special juror any person by law disqualified or exempt from service as a trial juror; nor one who has been convicted of a criminal offense, or found guilty of fraud or other misconduct, by the judgment of any civil court; nor one whose conscientious opinions are opposed to the death penalty; nor one who doubts his ability to render an impartial verdict, uninfluenced by newspaper reading or hearsay; nor one whose opinions would prevent his finding a verdict of guilty upon circumstantial evidence; nor one whose prejudice against a law of the state would preclude his finding a defendant guilty of violating such law; nor one whose prejudice against any particular defense would prevent his giving a fair and impartial trial upon its merits; nor one who avows that he cannot in all cases give to a defendant who fails to testify as a witness in his own behalf the full benefit of the statutory provision that no presumption is thereby created against him. Section 9 empowers the commissioner with respect to inquiries and examinations into the qualifications of special jurors, etc. Sections 10, 11, and 12 provide for the keeping of a list of the jurors selected, for the preparation of suitable ballots, and for the exemption of special jurors from service as ordinary jurors, etc. Section 13 provides that either the district attorney or the defendant may apply to the appellate division for a special jury, where it is made to appear "that a fair and impartial trial of such issue cannot be had without a special jury, or that the importance or intricacy of the case requires such jury, or that the subject-matter of the indictment has been so widely disseminated or commented upon by the press or otherwise as to induce the belief that an ordinary jury cannot, without delay and difficulty, be obtained to try such issue, or that for any other reason the due, efficient and impartial administration of justice in the particular case requires that the trial of such issue be had by a special jury." The other sections of the act are unnecessary to be referred to particularly, as they relate to the machinery for the drawing of special jurors and for the formation of a special jury, except that § 19 provides that the rulings of the trial court in admitting or excluding evidence upon the trial of any challenge for actual bias shall be final.

NOTE.—As to the constitutionality of a struck jury, see also Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. (Minn.) 83 L. R. A. 487.

Messrs. David Mitchell and Otto A. Rosalsky, for appellant:

Everyone has a right to demand that he be governed by general rules, and a special statute which without his consent singles his case out as one to be regulated by a different law from that which is applied in all similar cases would not be a legitimate legislation, but would be such an arbitrary mandate as is not within the province of free governments.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 483; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; White v. White, 5 Barb. 474; Green v. Shumway, 39 N. Y. 426.

The act is in violation of the right of trial by jury.

State v. McClellan, 11 Nev. 39.

The act delegates to the special jury commissioners judicial powers which the Constitution has vested in the courts.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 504; People, Akin, v. Kipley, 171 Ill. 44, 41 L. R. A. 775; Roberts v. State, 30 App. Div. 106; Miller v. Alexander, 122 N. C. 718; Re Dumford (Kan. App.) 53 Pac. 92; People, Tyroler, v. Warden of City Prison, 157 N. Y. 116.

The act is in violation of the provisions against local or private bills being passed by the legislature.

People v. Petrea, 92 N. Y. 128; Re Henneberger, 155 N. Y. 420, 42 L. R. A. 132; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Louisiana Bd. of H. 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237.

The act is in violation of the constitutional provisions for equality of privileges and equal protection under the law, and an act discriminating against individuals.

Middleton v. Middleton, 54 N. J. Eq. 692, 36 L. R. A. 221; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 391; Ho Ah Kow v. Numan, 5 Sawy. 552; State, Bramley, v. Norton, 5 Ohio N. P. 183; Barnes v. People, Moloney, 168 Ill. 424; State v. Gardner, 58 Ohio St. 599, 41 L. R. A. 689.

To be deprived of a juror who is competent impairs a substantial right of a defendant.

Hildreth v. Troy, 101 N. Y. 234, 54 Am. Rep. 686; People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284, 1 L. R. A. 273; People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115.

Messrs. Asa Bird Gardiner and Charles E. Le Barbier, for respondent:

The act in question is not unconstitutional.

No right of the defendant has been invaded.

The provision of the United States Constitution, that "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the state where the said crimes shall have been committed" (U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2, subd. 3); and the provisions of the Constitution of the state of New York that "the trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used, shall remain inviolate forever" (N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 2),—provide for a common-law jury of twelve men.

Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492; Walter v. People, 32 N. Y. 147; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; United States v. Shive, Baldw. 510; United States v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 23; United States v. Battiste, 2 Sumn. 240.

The legislature may constitutionally change the law as to the mode of procuring and empanelling a jury.

Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 65 Minn. 196, 33 L. R. A. 437; Cooley, Const. Law, chap. 7, p. 440; Perry v. State, 9 Wis. 20; Proffatt, Trial by Jury, § 106; Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492; Walter v. People, 32 N. Y. 159; Gardiner v. People, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 193. Irregularity even in the drawing of petit jurors is not ground for reversing a conviction, unless it appears that it operated to the prejudice or injury of the defendant.

Friery v. People, 2 Keyes, 425; Ferris v. People, 35 N. Y. 125.

Under the provisions of the Constitution, there was nothing, nor is there to-day anything, to prevent the selection of a jury to try a man charged with a crime according to the methods in selecting an ordinary struck jury, providing only that the three requisites of impartiality, indifference as between the parties, and an unanimous agreement between the jury, is preserved, together with the requisite number.

The provisions of this law do not conflict with the provisions of the United States and state Constitutions, that no person shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law, for that provision does not even guarantee the right of trial by jury.

Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Re McAdam, 27 N. Y. S. R. 353; Happy v. Mosher, 48 N. Y. 313; People, Witherbee, v. Essex County Supers. 70 N. Y. 228; Re Curry, 25 Hun, 321.

The act in question is a general law and not in conflict with Constitution, art. 1, §§ 2-6, art. 3, § 18.

Re New York Elev. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 327; Re Church, 92 N. Y. 1; People, New York Electric Lines Co., v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593; Ferguson v. Ross, 126 N. Y. 459; Sun Printing & Pub. Asso. v. New York, 8 App. Div. 230, Affirmed 152 N. Y. 257, 37 L. R. A. 788, 43 L. R. A.

The duty of the commissioner is in the main ministerial.

People v. Petrea, 92 N. Y. 140; Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 65 Minn. 196, 33 L. R. A. 437; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578.

The right of appeal is not guaranteed by the Constitution. That is a matter entirely within the legislative judgment.

Ex parte McCordle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L. ed. 264; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 25 L. ed. 231; Grover v. Coon, 1 N. Y. 536; Croveno v. Atlantic Ave. R. Co. 150 N. Y. 225.

Special juries were known to the common law from earliest times.

Forsyth, Trial by Jury, 143; King v. Edmonds, 4 Barn. & Ald. 477; Rot. Parl. V. 213.

The special jury list was made from the ordinary jurors' book, and from among those described in that book as esquires, or as persons of higher degree, or as bankers or merchants.

Rule in Trinity Term, 8 Wm. III. 6 Geo. IV. chap. 50.

In some of the states juries are selected from the tax lists.

United States v. Collins, 1 Woods, C. C. 499.

Struck juries, which are special juries selected in a particular way, have been known from early days in English law.

Fowler v. State, 58 N. J. L. 423, 59 N. J. L. 585; Moschell v. State, 53 N. J. L. 505; United States v. Loughery, 13 Blatchf. 267; United States v. Shackelford, 18 How. 588, 15 L. ed. 495; United States v. Stowell, 2 Curt. C. C. 153; United States v. Woodruff, 4 McLean, 105.

Even the number of peremptory challenges allowed in capital cases in the different states has always been subject to the legislative will.

Rapalje, Crim. Proc. § 185; Walter v. People, 32 N. Y. 147; Archbold, Crim. Pl. 7th ed.: 1 Waterman, p. 560; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 346; 12 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 478; Moschell v. State, 53 N. J. L. 505, 54 N. J. L. 390.

The number of peremptory challenges is a matter of legislative discretion, and may vary according to the Constitution of different communities, and the difficulties in each of securing intelligent and impartial jurors.

Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I think that the question which has been certified to us should be answered in the affirmative, and, were it not for the general interest and the importance which it possesses, we might well leave the discussion with the opinion as delivered at the appellate division. It must be perfectly apparent that the act has but the one direct object, of facilitating the administration of justice in criminal cases, by providing for the impaneling of a fair, competent, and impartial jury, without the difficulty and delay with which the procedure is so frequently attended. If it can be upheld as a valid exercise of the legislative power, it will confer no inconsiderable boon upon the community,—a consideration which comes somewhat to the aid of the rule that every intendment shall be in favor of the constitutionality of legislative enactments.

The appellant objects to this act as being unconstitutional and invalid upon several grounds. He charges that it is violative of the right of trial by jury; that it creates two classes of jurors and discriminates unequally; that it delegates judicial powers to the special jury commissioner to determine the qualifications of jurors; that it takes away the right of appeal from the ruling of the court on a challenge to the special juror; and that it violated the constitutional provision against the passage of private and local bills.

Is the statute violative of the right of trial by jury, as secured by the Constitution of the state? That instrument provides that "the trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolate forever." Article 1, § 2. This provision, as well as that which secures a person against deprivation of life, liberty, or property without "due process of law" (Id. § 6), were imposed by the people as restraints upon the power of the legislature. The guaranty of the trial by jury is substantially the same as it stood in the original Constitution, and its insertion simply preserved the right as it had been exercised before the adoption of the organic law of the state. This act does not appear, upon its face, to be violative of any constitutional provision; but, upon looking back of the adoption of a Constitution and into the usages of the English people under the common law, do we find anything which would lead us to the belief that the creation of a system of special juries for the trial of causes is subversive of personal and inalienable rights? I find nothing, and we are certainly able to point out that special juries were known to the common law from early times. The institution of trial by jury is entitled to all the reverence which a custom deserves that is so historically interwoven with the growth and development of the rights of the English people. But it should be no superstitious reverence, warping and prejudicing our inquiry into the true significance and extent of the custom which has become a constitutional right. The system of trial by jury had its origin, through many sources, in the early institutions of the English people, and the provision in Magna Charta that no man should be deprived of his life, liberty, or property, or be condemned, "but by lawful judgment of his peers," has been generally credited with establishing, or defining, the right of trial by jury. The correctness of this belief is somewhat open to doubt, inasmuch as the provision more probably referred to the existing custom of a trial by peers. 3 Reeves, Eng. Law, 247; Forsyth, Jury Trial, 108. In Reeves's work it is said that trial by jury was not then known. But, however that may be, it did guarantee a procedure in trials, from which, it is generally agreed, eventually sprang the modern jury system as practised 43 L. R. A.

under the common law of England. That the jury should be composed of twelve persons was due to the fact that twelve was a favorite number in the earliest times for various kinds of legal ceremonies or functions, and, for its great antiquity, was held in reverence. 1 Reeves, Eng. Law, 84 et seq. It is not without interest to observe that in the earlier times the jurors were witnesses, who pronounced upon their knowledge of the facts, and it was not until the times of Edward VI. and Queen Mary that the old procedure was softened by the selection of jurors dispassionate and indifferent between the parties, before whom witnesses were called to inform their consciences. 1 Reeves, Eng. Law, 271. That special juries were known to the common law is shown in Forsyth's work on Trial by Jury (p. 173), and an instance is cited, in 1450 (29 Hen. VI.), of "a petition for a special jury; that is, jurors 'who dwell within the shire, and have lands and tenements to the yearly value of xxf,' to try a plea which it was supposed might be pleaded in abatement on a bill of appeal of murder." In King v. Edmonds, 4 Barn. & Ald. 471, which was a criminal case tried before a special jury, it was observed of special juries by Chief Justice Abbott that it had not "hitherto been ascertained at what time the practice of appointing special juries for trials à nisi prius first began," and that it was "introduced for the better administration of justice, and for securing the nomination of jurors duly qualified in all respects for their important office. It certainly prevailed long before the stat. 3 Geo. II. chap. 25. and was recognized and declared by that statute, which refers to the former practice." See also Thomp. & M. Juries, § 12. Under the provisions of 6 Geo. IV. chap. 50, the special jurors' list was made from the ordinary jurors' book, and from among those described in that book "as esquires, or as persons of higher degree, or as bankers or merchants." There were statutes which, in the reigns of Henry VIII. and of Philip and Mary, authorized the impelling of bystanders, if a sufficient number of jurors returned by the sheriff did not appear, and such a practice was very early authorized in the United States courts. See U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 804, 805.

From this brief inquiry, we would seem to be justified in saying that special, as well as struck, juries were resorted to at common law, and that the mode of selection of jurors was a matter for legislation.

It is to be observed that our Constitution does not secure to the defendant any particular mode of jury trial, nor any particular method of jury selection. It secures, simply, the right to a trial by a common-law jury of twelve men. Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 458. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Law, 3d ed. p. 321, says: "By 'jury' in the Constitution is meant a common-law jury. This is a tribunal of twelve persons, impartially selected for the purposes of the trial, in accordance with rules of law previously established." In Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 173, 13 Am. Rep. 492, it was held that the mode of procuring an impartial jury "is regulated by law, either common or statutory, principally the latter, and it is within the power of the legislature to make, from time to time, such changes in the law as it may deem expedient, taking care to preserve the right of trial by an impartial jury." It was further said that "the end sought by the common law was to secure a panel that would impartially hear the evidence, and render a verdict thereon uninfluenced by any extraneous considerations whatever." In Walter v. People, 32 N. Y. 147, it was held that the constitutional provision carried no limitation of, or restriction upon, the legislative power, except as to the right guaranteed, viz., a jury trial in all cases in which it had been used before the adoption of the Constitution. In the same case it was considered that, even if the right to peremptory challenges were a right given by the common law, it could, nevertheless, be restrained, or withheld altogether, at the legislative will. In People v. Petrea, 92 N. Y., at page 143, it was held competent for the legislature to regulate the mode of selecting and procuring grand jurors (citing Stokes's Case),—in institution equally regarded as one of the securities of civil liberty.

The system of trial by jury, as it grew up at common law, had its root in the endeavor to secure to a defendant a trial of his cause by a fairly-selected body of his equals, rather than by his rulers, or by magistrates, or by persons designated by them, and the usage finally obtained of taking twelve jurymen from the vicinage to judge upon the facts developed by the evidence of witnesses. The right was conceded to the citizen of having the judgment of an impartial committee, or body, of his fellow citizens, upon charges involving his life, or his liberty, or his property, and two elements became essential ingredients of the right, viz.: That the jurors should be twelve in number; and that they should be capable of deciding the cause fairly and impartially. I know of no authority, and I can perceive no good reason, for holding that there is some inherent right, superior to legislative regulation, to any particular mode by which the panel of jurors is returned from which the twelve are to be chosen to sit. The ordinary reading of the constitutional provision does not suggest it, and the decisions of this court in the cases referred to negative the idea. That the mode of selecting a jury is within legislative regulation, and that it is not necessary, in order to preserve the right of trial by jury, to preserve any particular mode of designating jurors, however such mode may have been previously in force, is a doctrine which has received the support of the decisions of courts in other jurisdictions. Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 65 Minn. 196, 33 L. R. A. 437; Perry v. State, 9 Wis. 20; State, Kansas City & S. R. Co., v. Slover, 134 Mo. 607; and see, upon the question of struck juries, Fowler v. State, 58 N. J. L. 423.

Whether, therefore, we examine the question in the light of authority, or of reason, we find that the object aimed at under the common law, and which the constitutional provision must be deemed to have intended, is the obtaining of an impartial jury of twelve men, and how that shall be accomplished is a matter within legislative regulation. Of what consequence is it that the trial jury is to be taken from a particular body of persons liable to serve as jurors, which the legislature has provided to be created out of the general body of the county, if the jurors who compose it, in fact, represent the citizens of the defendant's vicinage? Will it be any the less an impartial and a representative jury? While the ordinary commissioner of jurors is to draw from the citizens of the county and pass upon their qualifications and exemptions, the special commissioner of jurors provided for by this act is invested with additional power to facilitate the administration of justice by sifting out from the general body drafted, and eliminating therefrom those who should not sit, or who should be disqualified from acting, in the criminal branch of the court, whether from the standpoint of the prosecution or of the defendant.

Nor can it be rightly said that the defendant is denied that "due process of law" which the Constitution guarantees to him. There is no peculiar magic in these words. They were used in Magna Charta in the same sense as the words, "by the law of the land." 2 Co. Inst. 50. They mean law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice, and they secure to the defendant the benefit of those fundamental rules of the common law by which judicial trials are governed. People v. Stokes, 156 N. Y. 547. If the law of the state has made provision for the choosing of an impartial jury for the trial of a defendant, his trial is none the less by due process of law because the jury is composed of persons taken from the body selected by the special commissioner of jurors, from the general list, as being generally free from those defects which must, or should, cause them to be rejected, either by the prosecution or by the defendant. That official merely exercises similar functions to those of the ordinary commissioner of jurors, and their exercise is restricted to the list as furnished to him by the latter. As it was observed in the opinion below, "the ordinary jury commissioner does not select the particular panel which is summoned to try a man. Still less does the special jury commissioner. Nor does the latter exercise any judicial function as to the qualifications of the twelve men who may ultimately be chosen to serve. His work is preparatory and tentative. In the end, the court alone exercises the judicial function of deciding upon the qualifications of the jurors, and it does so entirely unhampered by the previous examination and inquiry of the commissioner." [31 App. Div. 139.] I think that we may dismiss the objections that the defendant is deprived by this act of due process of law, or that it subjects him to any unequal discrimination, with the remark that, if he is secured a trial before an impartial jury taken from the county and conducted according to the law of the land, he has had all the benefit of the constitutional guaranty. No substantial right is infringed upon; for, as it is suggested in the opinion below, neither the letter nor the spirit of the Constitution guarantees to him a chance to select an ignorant or partial jury.

It is quite to misapprehend the object effected by this act to say that it creates two classes of jurors, and therefore discriminates adversely, in its operation, upon those who are to be tried in the criminal branch of the court. The defendant is to be tried by twelve of those men, taken from the body of the county, whose general qualifications to sit in criminal cases have been, by the machinery of law, more particularly ascertained, but who are still to be subjected to judicial inquiry as to their qualifications and impartiality, as in the case of an ordinary panel. We might assume that there were, in a sense, two classes of jurors provided for in the trial of civil and criminal cases, and still find nothing in the point which affects the validity of the legislation. As we have seen, special juries were known to the common law, and that the legislative body has the power to regulate the method of selecting jurors, within the limitations only that the right to a trial by an impartial jury is not taken away, has been repeatedly recognized in the courts.

Nor are any judicial powers delegated to the special jury commissioner. He exercises the same ministerial power that the ordinary commissioner of jurors does, in examining the qualifications of those liable to serve as jurors. He is the official created by the law, upon whom is devolved the duty of eliminating from the jury list persons declared by law to be unfit, or disqualified, to sit in criminal cases, and of having in readiness, for the time when a special jury is ordered by the court, for the better administration of justice, a list from which a panel of fit and impartial jurors may be chosen. To say, as the appellant does, that the special jury commissioner has the power to select the jurors who are to determine the case, is as incorrect as it is to say that the qualifications of each class of jurors are entirely different. In the first place, all that that official does, or can do, is to prepare such a list of jurors, from the general list of the county, as will enable, not only the prosecution, but the defense, to choose a jury for the impending trial, without that difficulty and delay which would be occasioned by the examination and necessary rejection of persons on the county list who are unfit to serve, morally, mentally, or physically. In the second place, while it is, in a sense, true that the persons upon the two lists are differently qualified with respect to service in the criminal branch, it would be incorrect to regard that difference as other than one based upon their fitness for the jury service demanded. The argument that the defendant has more chances for success, or more rights, before a jury drawn from the general list, is incomprehensible, unless upon the theory that he has some inherent or substantial right to the chance of making his defense before a jury composed of men whose ignorance, or partiality, or mental constitution, might result in a disagreement, if not in an acquittal. That would be reducing the constitutional guaranty to an absurdity.

As to the objection that the right to appeal from the rulings of the trial court upon challenges is taken away, the opinion below has sufficiently answered it in holding that no right of appeal is guaranteed by the Constitution, and that such a right is entirely within the legislative judgment. The defendant's right to challenge is not taken from him, as in the Nevada case cited by him (State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39), but only the privilege of an appeal from the rulings of the trial judge.

One more objection remains to be considered, which is that the act is repugnant to § 18 of article 3 of the Constitution, providing that the legislature shall not pass a private or local bill as to "selecting, drawing, summoning, or impaneling grand or petit jurors." The 1st section of the act makes it applicable to "each county of the state having a population of 500,000 or more." The general operation of the law is subject, therefore, but to the one restriction, that the county where it is to apply must have a certain population within the cases of Re Church, 92 N. Y. 1, and of Ferguson v. Ross, 126 N. Y. 459, this must be regarded as a general, and not a local, act, although, by reason of the limitation based on population, only a limited number of counties of the state may receive its benefit. The Henneberger Case, 155 N. Y. 420, 42 L. R. A. 132, affords no support to the appellant's contention. It was decided upon its special circumstances, as it was perfectly proper to do. People, Clauson, v. Newburgh & S. Pl. Road Co. 86 N. Y. 6. The act in that case was a most palpable device to evade the constitutional prohibition against passing local bills for laying out highways. It contained seven conditions, which had all to be met before it could become operative. The combination of restrictions was unprecedented in any other act, and was so remarkable as to practically localize the operation of the law, and so we held that it would be absurd to call it a general law. What was said in the course of the opinion sufficiently meets the point now made as to its bearing upon the present case, viz., that, "in so far as acts have been made, by their terms, applicable to counties, cities, towns, or villages, according to their limits of population, or to the cases of counties or towns which adjoin cities of a certain population, although, by strict construction, they might be deemed to contravene the section of the Constitution, they will be saved from condemnation by the rule of construction which determines their validity as general laws upon a consideration of the special circumstances, and declines to view them as only local, because by reason of a limitation based on population, or some condition having reference to population, but one locality, apparently, may actually receive their benefits." There is nothing in this act to limit its general application in all cases where the population of the county has attained a certain size, and such a condition might reasonably be considered as possible generally. As it was pointed out in the Henneberger Case, there are good reasons why, in a general law, reference should be had to conditions of population. I think that the act in no respect operates to the prejudice of the defendant, and I am unable to see any good reason for pronouncing the legislation invalid.

The question certified to this court should be answered in the affirmative, and the order appealed from therefore affirmed.

All concur except O'Brien, J., not voting.

Paul WILLIAMS, Respt.,

v.

William HAYS, Appt.

(157 N. Y. 541.)

1. The charterer of a vessel who is in command is not liable for her loss because of a lack of care or skill in her navigation after he has become irresponsible, on account of physical and mental exhaustion resulting from his being on duty almost continuously for three days and nights in efforts to save the vessel during a storm.

2. The question of negligence of the mate of a vessel in failing to resort to strong measures to obtain command of the ship because the captain has become mentally deranged is for the determination of the jury.

(Bartlett, J., dissents.)

(January 10, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the New York County Circuit in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to hold defendant liable as master of a vessel for its loss which was alleged to have resulted from his negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry W. Goodrich, for appellant:

If defendant's condition was solely in consequence of his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, such disability would be a defense to the claim of the plaintiff in this action.

Neither the master nor the ship is liable for a wreck growing out of the sudden disability of the master.

Hays v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 25 Jones & S. 199, Affirmed without opinion, 127 N. Y. 656; Copeland v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 2 Met. 432.

Messrs. Black & Kneeland, for respondent:

The vessel was intrusted to the defendant, not as agent, but as to the other owners as charterer, lessee, or bailee, and if he caused her destruction by what in sane persons would be called wilful or negligent conduct, the law holds him responsible.

Williams v. Hays, 143 N. Y. 451, 26 L. R. A. 153.

Let it be assumed that the alleged insanity was the effect of the strain of the storm; yet that result upon the ability of the master would be no greater than if he had become totally insensible by a blow, and the mate

NOTE.—As to the civil liability of insane persons for torts or negligence see note to the decision of the above case on a former appeal in 26 L. R. A. 153.
43 L. R. A.

would be in the same position as he actually was, viz., bound to see the incapacity of the defendant, and still charged by the duties of his office with the care of the vessel; and yet if he does nothing to save her, not even taking in sail or anchoring, and refuses the assistance of tugs when he knows the rudder is useless, the master, who employs him, cannot escape responsibility for his neglect.

Cross v. Andrews, Cro. Eliz. pt. 2, p. 622.

The subrogation of the Phoenix Insurance Company to the rights of Parsons & Loud follows from—

Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Erie R. Co. 73 N. Y. 309, 29 Am. Rep. 171; Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Jurey, 111 U. S. 594, 28 L. ed. 531.

The employment of the crew by the defendant as master made him responsible for their conduct.

Story, Agency, § 314.

Haight, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the plaintiff, as assignee of the Phoenix Insurance Company, to recover the amount of insurance paid by the company to Parsons and Loud under a policy of insurance issued to them as the owners of one sixteenth of the brig Emily T. Sheldon. The brig had been wrecked on Peaked Hill Bar, on Cape Cod, near Provincetown, Massachusetts; and it is alleged that the loss occurred through the negligence of the defendant, who was the master and part owner of the brig, and who commanded her at the time of the loss. The plaintiff claims the right to recover in this action upon the theory that the insurance company became subrogated to the rights of the owners, whom it had insured. The answer denied the allegations of the complaint that the loss was caused through the negligence, carelessness, misconduct, and improper navigation of the defendant, and alleges that at the time of the wreck he was unconscious of his acts, and irresponsible therefor, and was not in a condition to navigate the brig, on account of sickness, etc. At the conclusion of the evidence, the trial court directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, holding that the insanity of the defendant furnished no defense. The defendant's counsel objected to the direction of the verdict, and asked to go to the jury upon the questions: "First, whether or not the defendant became insane solely in consequence of his efforts to save the vessel during the storm; second, whether the defendant became insane solely in consequence of a sickness occasioned by his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, and the quinine which was taken therefor; third, whether the mate was so cognizant of the condition of the master, of the insanity or other incompetency of the master, as to require him to take the command of the vessel away from the master; fourth, whether the mate exercised due judgment in regard to the condition of the master; fifth, whether the defendant, in consequence of his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, became mentally and physically incompetent to give the vessel any further care than he did." These requests were refused by the court, and a verdict was directed, to which rulings the defendant's counsel duly excepted.

On Thursday, the 18th day of March, 1886, the brig Emily T. Sheldon left Boothbay, Maine, with a cargo of ice, bound for Annapolis, Maryland. At the time of sailing, the weather was fair, and remained so for about sixteen hours, at which time a storm commenced, with high winds and rain, with a light snow. At the time of the commencement of the storm, the vessel was in George's channel, and the defendant tacked to work her about, trying to find his way out, until it became practically impossible to tell where he was. He headed her in what was supposed to be the direction of Cape Cod, but, not being able to make the cape, she was hove to, to ride out the gale. This was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the 20th, and she remained hove to until about that time in the afternoon of the 21st and then the defendant stood her off for what was supposed to be Cape Cod. On Monday morning, the 22d, between 4 and 5 o'clock, Thatcher Island lights were sighted by the defendant. The storm had then abated, but there was a heavy roll of the sea. The defendant then turned the vessel over to the mate, telling him to keep her by the wind until he made Cape Cod light. He then went below, and laid down upon a lounge in his cabin, but, before doing so, took fifteen grains of quinine. It appears that during the storm he had had but little rest; had not gone to his berth or undressed; had eaten but little, and that for the last forty-eight hours he had been constantly upon deck; that he was worn out, exhausted, felt sick, and feared he was to have an attack of malaria. At about 11 o'clock, the second mate, to whom the vessel had been turned over, called the mate, saying that the vessel did not act very well. The mate then went upon deck, and about half past 11 the steward called the defendant. He was lying, dressed, upon the lounge. He did not get up at the first call, and subsequently the steward pulled him off from the lounge, in order to arouse him. He then got up, but within a few minutes was again found lying upon the lounge, and the steward went to him again, and finally succeeded in getting him up on the deck of the vessel. There are some little differences in the testimony of the witnesses in reference to the order of events thereafter occurring. According to the recollection of some of the witnesses, the captain came on deck about half past 12, after the crew had been at dinner. After he came on deck, the tug Storm King came up on their weather quarter, and said that the rudderpost of the brig was split, and asked the captain if he did not want a tow. He said that he did not; that he guessed "we are all right." The Storm King then went away, and about 1 o'clock another boat came up under the stern of the brig, and offered a tow, but was refused by the captain. McDonald, who kept the log of the vessel, testified: "After the boats went away, the vessel began to go off and come to, and she would not mind her helm at all, and the sea was edging her into the beach all the time. Then I went over, and looked over the stern, but I could see nothing. Then I got into the bowline; that is a rope with a noose in it, being around my waist; and I was let down over the stern, and I looked at the rudderpost, and it was split, but I could not tell how badly. I went back on deck, and said that the rudderpost was split, and the captain said he didn't think it was, and said, 'I can't see it, and you can't, I think.' Then I began to think there was something wrong with the captain; that he did not act as he used to. Still, I could not see anything wrong with his manner, except when he spoke to me about the vessel; and he then told me to square the yards to see if the vessel would go off again, and we did, and she did go off, but she came right back again; and I lowered the main trysail down again, and hove the helm up again, but she did not go off; she went sideways in onto the beach, and struck," at about 2:30 o'clock. Considerable evidence was taken with reference to the condition of the captain, all of which tends to show that he staggered about the vessel, making irresponsible answers to questions, appeared to be in a dazed condition, and to be either drunk or insane. After the brig struck, a life-saving boat came alongside, and offered to take him ashore; but he refused to go, and the crew of the life boat had to remain for several hours before they finally succeeded in coaxing him to go with them. He was taken ashore, but, according to his testimony, remembers nothing that occurred until the next day. The brig became a total wreck.

This action was considered in this court on a former review (143 N. Y. 442, 26 L. R. A. 153), at which time the law of the case was settled, except upon two points. It was then held that the defendant, as charterer of the brig, was liable for losses which occurred through his want of care or skill in the navigation of the vessel; that he was required to exercise such care and skill as a reasonably careful and prudent owner would ordinarily give to his own vessel; and that an insane person is responsible for his torts the same as if sane. The opinion contains some comments of the judge, which have been understood as indicating an intention to do away with any distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance, and to hold that lunatics and infants were just as liable for their failure to act as they were for their affirmative torts. But, when the judge comes to sum up the result of his examination of the authorities, he concludes by stating the rule to be that, if the defendant "caused her destruction by what in sane persons would be called wilful or negligent conduct, the law holds him responsible." The final conclusion reached by the judge we accept as the law of this case. Whether a lunatic or a person mentally incapacitated should be held responsible in all instances for his nonfeasance or failure to act we will not stop to consider.

The judge then proceeds in his opinion to say: "If the defendant had become insane solely in consequence of his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, we would have had a different case to deal with. He was not responsible for the storm, and while it was raging his efforts to save the vessel were tireless and unceasing, and if he thus became mentally and physically incompetent to give the vessel any further care, it might be claimed that his want of care ought not to be attributed to him as a fault. In reference to such a case we do not now express any opinion. . . . If it should be found upon the new trial of this action that the defendant's mental condition was produced wholly by his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, and it should, therefore, be held that no fault could be attributed to him on account of what he personally did or omitted to do, then the question would still remain whether the carelessness of his mate and crew, who were his servants, could not be attributed to him, and his liability be thus based upon their carelessness." We thus have two questions presented for consideration: First, Did the defendant become mentally and physically incompetent to care for and navigate the vessel, solely in consequence of his efforts to save the vessel during the storm? And, second, if he was thus mentally and physically incapacitated, were his mate and crew guilty of negligence in not taking the command of the vessel, and procuring a tow? Upon directing a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, the trial court said: "Assuming, as we must, for such purpose, that the condition of the defendant was the result of exhaustion, caused by his efforts to save the ship from the perils of the storm, and the heavy dose of quinine which he took as a remedy, I fail to see how that presents any exception to the principle laid down by the court of appeals, that a person of unsound mind is responsible for the consequences of acts which in the case of a sane person would be negligent. In other words the standard by which he is to be judged is the same as that which must be applied to the actions of a sane person. It certainly seems to be a cruel doctrine; but as it is apparently based upon the principle that, as between two innocent persons, the loss must fall upon him who caused it, rather than upon the other, the best that can be said about it is that it is a rule which serves the convenience of the public, to which individual rights must give way." It will thus be observed that the case was disposed of below upon the ground that the defendant was liable even though assuming that his condition was the result of exhaustion caused by his efforts to save the ship from the perils of the storm, and the question as to whether the mate was guilty of negligence was not considered. The appellate division has affirmed, following in its opinion, the reasoning of the trial judge.

We cannot give our assent to such a view of the law. To our minds it is carrying the law of negligence to a point which is unreasonable, and, prior to this case, unheard of, and is establishing a doctrine abhorrent to all principles of equity and justice. In this case, as we have seen, the storm commenced on Friday, continued through Saturday and Sunday, and it was not until 5 o'clock Monday morning that the defendant was relieved from the care of his vessel. For three days and nights he had been upon duty almost continuously, and for the last forty-eight hours had not been below the deck. The man is not yet born in whom there is not a limit to his physical and mental endurance, and, when that limit has been passed, he must yield to laws over which man has no control. When the case was here before, it was said that the defendant was bound to exercise such reasonable care and prudence as a careful and prudent man would ordinarily give to his own vessel. What careful and prudent man could do more than to care for his vessel until overcome by physical and mental exhaustion? To do more was impossible. And yet we are told that he must, or be responsible. Among the familiar legal maxims are the following: The law intends what is agreeable to reason; it does not suffer an absurdity. Impossibility is an excuse in law, and there is no obligation to perform impossible things. Co. Litt. 78; [Case of Accury], 9 Coke, 22; Co. Litt. 29; 1 Pothier, Obligations, pt. 1, chap. 1, sec. 4, § 3. Applying these maxims to the case under consideration, we think the fallacy of the reasoning below is apparent, and that it cannot and ought not to be sustained.

As to whether the mate should be chargeable with negligence is a question which has not as yet been determined. It is said that he did nothing to save the vessel. It appears that he was on deck, obeying the orders of the captain. The circumstances surrounding him were peculiar. Possibly he might have put the captain in irons, and taken the command of the vessel, but mutiny at sea is criminal, and heavily punished. In order to justify such action, he must be satisfied of the derangement of his superior officer, and be able to command the assistance of the crew. Whether the condition of the captain was so apparent at the time as to charge the mate with negligence in not resorting to strong measures, we think, was a question of fact for the determination of the jury, and that it was not within the province of the court to dispose of it as a question of law.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

All concur except Bartlett, J., who reads for affirmance.

Bartlett, J., dissenting:

I am of opinion there was no question for the jury in this case. The learned counsel for the defendant asked to go to the jury on two questions:

First, "Whether or not the defendant became insane solely in consequence of his effort to save the vessel during the storm." It is true that Judge Earl, writing in this case for the court on the former appeal, stated that, if the defendant had become insane solely in consequence of his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, we would have had a different case to deal with. It is, however, undisputed that the record now before us is identical in all essential respects with the one then under examination, and it therefore follows that the determination of this court that the insanity of the defendant was no defense is the law of this case, and was properly followed by the trial judge when he directed a verdict for the plaintiff.

Second, "Whether the defendant became insane solely in consequence of a sickness occasioned by his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, and the quinine which was taken therefor." Judge Earl stated in his opinion upon the former appeal that if it were found upon a new trial that the defendant's mental condition was produced wholly by his efforts to save the vessel during the storm, and it should therefore be held that no fault could be attributed to him on account of what he personally did, or omitted to do, then the question would still remain whether the carelessness of his mates and crew, who were his servants, could not be attributed to him, and his liability be thus based upon their failure to act. There is no conflict of evidence on this latter point, and only a question of law is presented to this court on undisputed facts,—whether the captain was not liable for this loss, not only on account of his insanity, but for the reason that the mates and crew, having full knowledge of the captain's mental incapacity, and that the rudder was useless, failed to intervene and save the vessel, but allowed her to drift with the dead swell upon the beach, with all sails set and no anchors out, in a light wind blowing off shore, in the middle of a pleasant afternoon, with two steam tugs lying by, and offering a tow to a port 9 miles distant. There was no request to go to the jury as to the conduct of the crew. The liability of the captain for the acts of his mates and crew is well settled. Story on Agency (§ 314) states: "The policy of the maritime law has therefore indissolubly connected his [the master's] personal responsibility with that of all the other persons on board, who are under his command, and are subjected to his authority." With the same record before us as on the former appeal, I am unable to understand why the former decision of this court should not be followed. 143 N. Y. 442, 26 L. R. A. 153. I vote for affirmance.

Haskell B. WARREN, by Edward P. Coyne, Guardian ad Litem, et al., Appts.,
v.

UNION BANK OF ROCHESTER et al.,
Respts.

(157 N. Y. 259.)

1. The general guardian of an infant has no right to carry on business in the name and with the capital or on the credit of the infant.

2. The use of the word "fraud" or "fraudulent" is not necessary to charge that acts are fraudulent.

3. No jurisdiction to authorize the NOTE.—On the subject of the protection of infants by the courts, see also Roche v. Waters (Md.) 7 L. R. A. 533; Wilson v. Hughes (W. Va.) 39 L. R. A. 292; and Kromer v. Friday (Wash.) 32 L. R. A. 671, and note.

43 L. R. A.

mortgage of an infant's property is acquired under Code Civ. Proc. chap. 17, art. 4, tit. 7, where the petition, proofs, and all the papers show that the sole purpose is to mortgage the property of the infant to pay a debt contracted by his guardian in carrying on business, without authority, in the infant's name.

4. No presumption can be indulged in favor of the jurisdiction of the court in authorizing the mortgage of an infant's property, as the jurisdiction for that purpose is special and limited, and wholly dependent upon the statute.

5. An original action in equity to set aside an order of court for the mortgage of an infant's property, and the mortgage made under it, can be maintained when they were in fraud of the infant's rights, and were procured by fraud and collusion.

(November 22, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, reversing a judgment of a Monroe County Equity Term in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to set aside a mortgage on plaintiffs' real estate. Reversed.

Statement by Martin, J.:

This action was to set aside proceedings to mortgage certain real estate of the infant plaintiff, including the mortgage as a part of such proceeding. The mortgage was executed on behalf of the infant by his special guardian appointed in that proceeding, was payable to Gilman H. Perkins, and by him assigned to the Union Bank of Rochester. It was made to secure the sum of $25,000, and was upon the real property described in the complaint. The proceeding was instituted in the supreme court by Holmes B. Stevens as general guardian of the infant. At the commencement of this action the plaintiff Warren was under fourteen years of age, and resided with his mother, in the city of Rochester. In February, 1895, and for several years before, he was the owner in fee simple and in possession of the premises described in the complaint, upon a portion of which there was a brewery, with the appliances for manufacturing beer and ale. Prior to November 25, 1891, Holmes B. Stevens was the general guardian of the person and property of such infant, and was the administrator with the will annexed of Edward K. Warren, who died seised and possessed of the real property in question, and who was the grandfather of the infant. For some time prior to November 25, 1891, the defendant Stevens, as such administrator, had carried on upon the premises the business of a brewer, buying and selling barley, and manufacturing beer and malt and ale. On that day the accounts of Stevens as administrator were finally settled, and all the personal property used in connection with the brewery was turned over by him as administrator to himself as guardian of the infant plaintiff, in pursuance of a decree of the surrogate's court. From that time until the 1st day of July, 1893, Stevens, claiming to act as general guardian of the infant, conducted upon the premises the business of a brewer, buying and selling barley and malt, manufacturing beer and malt and ale, selling the products of the brewery for cash and upon credit, and buying supplies for cash and upon credit. He then sold all the personal property used in that business to a corporation, and took in payment its stock of the par value of $23,000. During that time he borrowed money of the Union Bank, which he used in the business, and gave notes therefor, signed "Haskell B. Warren, by Holmes B. Stevens, General Guardian," and on the 6th day of May, 1895, he made and delivered to the bank a promissory note of that date for $25,431.90, which was signed in the same manner. This note represented the money, and interest unpaid thereon, which was borrowed by Stevens of the bank while carrying on the brewery business, between the 25th of November, 1891, and the 1st of July, 1893. In the month of February, 1895, as such general guardian, Stevens presented a petition to the supreme court, setting forth the existence of the indebtedness to the bank upon such note; alleged that it amounted to $24,500 and upwards; that the bank was pressing for the payment of it, and threatened to sue therefor unless it was paid; that the real property of the infant would be thus sacrificed if it was not paid; that the interests of such infant would be promoted by paying the debt to the bank; that the income of the infant from his property was not sufficient to pay that indebtedness; and that, unless the money could be raised to pay the bank, the property of the infant would be sacrificed to pay it. It was then alleged that William S. Kimball had offered to loan the sum of $25,000 upon the property, subject to the existing mortgage, at the interest or rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable quarterly, the principal to be paid one year from date, and the petitioner, Stevens, then asked that the real estate mentioned might be mortgaged for $25,000 under the direction of the court. Such proceedings were had therein that the attorney for the defendant bank was appointed the special guardian of the infant. The usual order of reference and proceedings before the referee were had, and a contract was made between the special guardian and Kimball, the president of the bank, by which it was agreed that a mortgage should be executed to him by the special guardian upon the real estate described in the complaint for the sum of $25,000. While the proceedings were pending, Kimball died, and a new agreement was made between the special guardian and the defendant Perkins, who was vice president and a director of the bank, for the execution and delivery of a mortgage for the same amount. The referee reported that it would be for the benefit of the infant to mortgage the property mentioned, for the reason that the brewery business conducted by Stevens as guardian was not productive, and resulted in loss; that when the business was transferred to the corporation it was largely in debt, and it became necessary to pay those debts to protect the estate; that a large sum of money was borrowed of the bank upon the notes of Stevens as guardian, aggregating $24,500; that the bank had called in such loans, and threatened to sue the notes unless paid, and that there was no money to pay the same unless it could be realized by mortgaging the property of the infant; that the latter had no funds or property to draw upon to pay that debt; that Perkins would loan $25,000 upon the property, and that from that sum should be paid the amount of the debt due the Union Bank, so far as the money would pay the same. This report was received, and the special guardian was ordered to contract for mortgaging the infant's property. Subsequently he reported that he had entered into an oral agreement to mortgage the property to Perkins for $25,000. He was then directed to execute the mortgage, and from the $25,000 first to pay the expenses of the proceeding, which amounted to $430.50, and to pay the remainder, $24,569.50, upon the note of Stevens held by the Union Bank. Subsequently the special guardian executed and delivered to Perkins the mortgage mentioned, and received therefor the sum of $25,000, which was paid as directed by the previous order. Shortly afterwards Perkins executed and delivered to the bank an assignment of the mortgage, and the bank paid him the $25,000 he advanced. The sole purpose of the proceeding to mortgage the infant's real estate was to discharge Stevens' indebtedness to the bank, and it was instituted in pursuance of an agreement between Stevens and the officers of the bank to secure that end. Perkins advanced the $25,000 to the special guardian under an agreement with Stevens and the bank that the net proceeds thereof should be applied upon the debt of the bank, and to no other purpose, and that the bank should refund to Perkins the money paid by him, and the mortgage should be assigned to the bank. The bank received the assignment of the mortgage with full knowledge that the money paid by the special guardian had been applied upon the indebtedness of Stevens which was secured by his notes, and that the purpose and effect of the proceeding to mortgage the infant's real estate was to secure and pay the individual debt of Stevens to the bank, and for that purpose alone. Nothing has been paid upon this mortgage since its execution and delivery, but it remains an apparent lien upon the real property described.

Mr. Charles J. Bissell, for appellants:

The complaint states a cause of action, and the proper, and indeed the only, remedy available to the infant plaintiff to set aside the mortgage and the proceedings resulting in its execution is by action.

The universal rule in the English court of chancery, and which rule was ingrafted upon our procedure in the state of New York, was that an infant had a year and a day after becoming of age in which to show cause against a decree rendered against him which deprived him of his estate, or any part thereof.

Cooper, Eq. Pl. pp. 88 et seq.; Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 737; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 164; Freeman, Judgm. § 513; Bank of

United States v. Ritchie, 8 Pet. 128, 8 L. ed. 800; Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 548, 2 Ball & B. 451; McLemore v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 58 Miss. 514; Lloyd v. Malone, 23 Ill. 43, 74 Am. Dec. 179; Kuchenbeiser v. Beckett, 41 Ill. 172; Lloyd v. Kirkwood, 112 Ill. 329; Kingsburg v. Sperry, 119 Ill. 280; Allison v. Drake, 145 Ill. 500; Wright v. Miller, 1 Sandf. Ch. 103, 4 Barb. 600, 8 N. Y. 9, 59 Am. Dec. 438; Lozey v. Stanley, 147 N. Y. 560; Re Price, 67 N. Y. 231; Lefevre v. Laraway, 22 Barb. 167; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1334, 1337.

Where the inevitable result of the act of a person is to defraud another, the alleging and proof of those acts is sufficient without using harsh language and making use of the word "fraud" or "collusion."

National Tube Works Co. v. Gilfillan, 124 N. Y. 303; Douglass v. Ireland, 73 N. Y. 100; Boytton v. Andrews, 63 N. Y. 93; Knowles v. Duffy, 40 Hun. 486; Whittlesey v. Delaney, 73 N. Y. 571; Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 145 N. Y. 313; Delaney v. Valentine, 154 N. Y. 692; Sharp v. New York, 40 Barb. 256; Warner v. Blakeman, 4 Keyes, 487.

The fraud and the fraudulent intent necessarily flow from the acts themselves.

The proceedings leading up to the mortgage and the mortgage itself were properly set aside by the judgment of the special term upon the ground that the proceedings were collusively set on foot and conducted, and the debt for which the mortgage was given was not the debt of the infant, but that of another.

A general guardian cannot bind the infant's estate by his promissory note, although made in the name of the infant. It is the guardian's debt, and not the infant's.

Forster v. Fuller, 6 Mass. 58, 4 Am. Dec. 87; Schouler, Dom. Rel. pp. 464, 479.

A guardian will not be allowed to risk the capital of his ward, or even the income from the capital in trade. He certainly will not be allowed to speculate with it, and certainly will not be allowed to embark it in the hazards of a manufacturing business carried on upon credit.

Hooper v. Eyles, 2 Vern. 480; Macpherson, Infants, pp. 265, 271, 277; Killick v. Flewney, 4 Bro. Ch. 161, note 4; Booth v. Booth, 1 Beav. 125; Cotham v. West, 1 Beav. 380; Ryan v. Smith, 165 Mass. 303.

There is no question in this case of a bona fide purchaser. The bank had full knowledge that Stevens was carrying on the business of a brewer, buying and selling on credit.

Neither the petition filed in the proceedings to mortgage the real estate of the infant, nor the proceedings subsequently had thereon, gave the supreme court jurisdiction to direct the execution of the mortgage.

The supreme court has no inherent jurisdiction to direct the sale or mortgage of an infant's real estate; its jurisdiction rests wholly upon the statute, and it is only by virtue of a strict observance of statutory requirements that a court in decreeing a sale or mortgage comes within its jurisdiction.

Rogers v. Dill, 6 Hill, 415; Re Turner, 10 Barb. 552; Baker v. Lorillard, 4 N. Y. 257; Onderdonk v. Mott, 34 Barb. 106. 43 L. R. A.

There is no presumption of compliance in the absence of proof.

Ellwood v. Northrup, 106 N. Y. 172; Battell v. Torrey, 65 N. Y. 294.

The purpose of the proceeding being in fact one to substitute a mortgage in the place of the outstanding note, and not one to pay the infant's debt, was a purpose unauthorized by the statute and made the proceedings absolutely void.

Weinstock v. Levison, 26 Abb. N. C. 244.

The appointment of the attorney of the Union Bank as the guardian ad litem for the infant was of itself an irregularity sufficient to invalidate all of the proceedings, and ought to render them absolutely void at the suit of a person interested.

Becker v. Sexton, 43 Hun, 593; Re Van Beuren, 13 N. Y. Supp. 261; Buderus v. Inmen, 20 N. Y. Week. Dig. 88; Knickerbacker v. De Freest, 2 Paige, 304.

The extreme rigidity and care with which the courts uniformly hold to the rule that these proceedings must be conducted in direct accordance with the mandate of the statute is exemplified in a large number of cases.

Re Lampman, 22 Hun, 239; Re Valentine, 72 N. Y. 184; Ellwood v. Northrup, 106 N. Y. 172; Stillwell v. Swarthout, 81 N. Y. 109.

Mr. George F. Danforth, for respondent:

If the action or proceeding has an independent purpose, and contemplates some other result or relief, although the overturning of the judgment may be important or even necessary to its success, the attack upon the judgment is collateral and falls under the rule which prohibits one court from re-examining the decisions of another court of competent authority on the same subject.

Black, Judgm. § 252.

All that the plaintiffs were entitled to prove were the facts contained in the complaint, and if those are insufficient to establish a cause of action the defendants were entitled, as a matter of legal right, to have the complaint dismissed.

Tooker v. Arnous, 76 N. Y. 397; Pope v. Terre Haute Car & Mfg. Co. 107 N. Y. 61.

The court under whose direction the mortgage was executed had competent jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and over the parties; power to entertain the application to mortgage, and make the order. That order is conclusive until set aside or reversed; and is obligatory upon the parties who have rights depending upon the same matters embraced within that proceeding.

The petition and report not only described the debts or demands against the estate, but their origin and consideration and circumstances of the estate, and other smaller debts. There arose an equitable obligation, binding the infant's estate, incurred by his guardian in good faith, to be determined upon equitable principles.

Hyland v. Baster, 98 N. Y. 610; Clarke v. Van Surlay, 15 Wend. 436, Affirmed, 20 Wend. 365.

From the time of filing the petition praying for an order directing a mortgage, the infant was by statute a ward of the court with respect to its real property and matters concerned.

Code, § 2360.

By virtue of its authority to control procedure and administer justice between its ward and parties dealing with him, it could act without seeking for a contract enforceable at law, but upon the inquiry and ascertainment of "what is just" it could recognize and enforce an equitable claim, or one good in equity, even if not at law.

Dyett v. North American Coal Co. 20 Wend. 570; Noyes v. Blakeman, 6 N. Y. 567; Randall v. Dusenbury, 7 Jones & S. 174, Affirmed, 63 N. Y. 645; New v. Nicoll, 73 N. Y. 131, 29 Am. Rep. 111; Hyland v. Baxter, 98 N. Y. 610.

When the condition of the property demands, for its protection or preservation, the expenditure of money which the trustee or guardian is unable to provide from the income of the estate, he may advance it and even pledge the credit of the trust estate to provide for its necessities.

Vilas v. Page, 106 N. Y. 439; 2 Perry, Tr. § 476.

The adjudication which resulted in the mortgage is founded upon the equity of the case as one within the statute.

Code, § 2348; Noyes v. Blakeman, 6 N. Y. 567; New v. Nicoll, 73 N. Y. 127, 29 Am. Rep. 111; Van Slyke v. Bush, 123 N. Y. 50.

The court adopted the report of the referee upon this matter, and after examination directed the execution of the mortgage as a means of raising money for payment of the described demand. This conclusion, within well-settled rules, is an adjudication binding all the parties in this proceeding.

Thompson v. Tolmie, 2 Pet. 157, 7 L. ed. 381; Voorhees v. Jackson Bank of U. S. 10 Pet. 449, 9 L. ed. 490; Blakeley v. Calder, 15 N. Y. 617; Simpson v. Hart, 1 Johns. Ch. 91; Bateman v. Wilcox, 1 Sch. & Lef. 201; Ludlow v. Dale, 1 Johns. 16; New York v. Brady, 115 N. Y. 616; Stilwell v. Carpenter, 59 N. Y. 423.

It was competent for the court entertaining the proceedings to determine whether the statute had been complied with (Howell v. Mills, 56 N. Y. 229), and decide whether the case was a proper one in which to award the relief asked by the petition.

Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106, 86 Am. Dec. 283.

If the court or officer has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, then the exercise of that jurisdiction, however irregular or erroneous, is conclusive until reversed.

Roderigas v. East River Sav. Inst. 76 N. Y. 320, 32 Am. Rep. 309; Black, Judgm. § 245; Blake v. Lyon & F. Mfg. Co. 77 N. Y. 626; Re Macfarlane, 2 Johns. & H. 673; Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas. 492, 1 Am. Dec. 121.

There is in the complaint no averment of fraud or collusion, imposition, mistake, or any other ground of equitable jurisdiction.

No decree can be made in favor of a plaintiff on grounds not stated in his complaint, nor relief granted for matters not charged.

Bailey v. Ryder, 10 N. Y. 363; Rome Exch. 43 L. R. A.

Bank v. Eames, 1 Keyes, 588; Kelsey v. Western, 2 N. Y. 506.

It is not sufficient merely to raise a suspicion, or to show what is sometimes called constructive fraud, but there must be actual fraud; there must be a fraudulent affirmative act, or a fraudulent concealment of a fact for the purpose of obtaining an undue and unjust advantage of the other party, and procuring an unjust and unconscionable judgment.

Ward v. Southfield, 102 N. Y. 287; Revere Copper Co. v. Dimock, 90 N. Y. 33; Heiser v. New York, 104 N. Y. 68; New York v. Brady, 25 Jones & S. 14, Affirmed, 115 N. Y. 599; Webb v. Pell, 3 Paige, 368; Ross v. Wood, 70 N. Y. 10; Stilwell v. Carpenter, 59 N. Y. 423, 2 Abb. N. C. 263; Verplanck v. Van Buren, 11 Hun, 328; Patch v. Ward, L. R. 3 Ch. 203; Davoue v. Fanning, 4 Johns. Ch. 199; Krekeler v. Ritter, 62 N. Y. 372.

In the absence of fraud the proceedings and the mortgage should be upheld.

Davoue v. Fanning, 4 Johns. Ch. 199; Krekeler v. Ritter, 62 N. Y. 372; Patch v. Ward, L. R. 3 Ch. 203.

The mortgage to Perkins, under whom the Union Bank claims as assignee, was for a valuable consideration, given in good faith under the order of the supreme court and conformed to it. It has by force of the statute the same validity and effect as if it was executed by Warren, and as if he was of full age.

Code, § 2358; Clarke v. Van Suray, 15 Wend. 436, 20 Wend. 365.

Martin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is obvious that the sole purpose and object of the proceeding to mortgage the infant's real estate was to obtain about $25,000, with which to pay the debt of Holmes B. Stevens to the defendant bank. It is equally apparent that the proceeding was commenced and continued to its conclusion, and that the assignment of the mortgage to the bank was made under and in pursuance of an agreement between the officers of the bank and the general guardian that the real estate of the infant should be mortgaged to secure the debt of the former, and that the mortgage thus obtained should be substituted as security for and in place of his debt to the bank. Stevens, as the general guardian of the infant plaintiff, had no right or authority to embark in or conduct the business of brewing, or the purchase and sale of barley or other merchandise, in the name of his ward, and employ therein the capital or credit of the latter. It is a well-established and elementary principle of the law relating to the rights and liabilities of trustees that, in the absence of an express and sufficient authority therefor, the employment of trust property in trade or speculation, or in manufacturing, is a gross breach of trust upon the part of the trustee. This rule applies even where he simply continues the business or trade of a testator. It is the duty of a trustee to close up the trade or business, to withdraw the funds, and invest them in proper security at the earliest convenient moment. Perry, Trusts, § 454. The employment by trustees of the property or credit of an infant in trade, or in the prosecution of manufacturing or speculative enterprises, has been uniformly condemned as illegal, and constituting a devastavit of the estate. Wilmerding v. McKesson, 103 N. Y. 329, 336; King v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76, 90; Fellows v. Longyor, 91 N. Y. 324; Wetmore v. Porter, 92 N. Y. 70.

Another principle firmly established by the cases is that trust funds invested by trustees in the hands of third persons, who have knowledge of their character, still remain impressed with the obligation of the trust in the hands of the holder, and are subject to be reclaimed and restored to the trust fund. Wilmerding v. McKesson, 103 N. Y. 329, 336; Wetmore v. Porter, 92 N. Y. 76; Rogers v. Squires, 98 N. Y. 49; Clark v. Hougham, 2 Barn. & C. 149; Perry, Tr. §§ 828, 832; Wms. Exrs. p. 801; Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. 150, 11 Am. Dec. 441. It is beyond the power of a trustee to bind the estate he represents to any use of its funds by contract with third persons who have knowledge of the character of the property transferred, except in the ordinary and usual course of administration of the trust, and in furtherance of its object. Deobold v. Oppermann, 111 N. Y. 531, 538, 2 L. R. A. 644. That these rules apply with much greater force where a trustee seeks to dispose of the real property of his cestui que trust, who is an infant of tender years, to pay losses of a business carried on by himself without any semblance of authority, there can be no manner of doubt. The relation which existed between Stevens as guardian and his infant ward was that of trustee and cestui que trust. Therefore the debt for which the real estate of the infant was mortgaged was not the debt of the infant at all, but was the debt of the guardian, for which, so far as the record discloses, he had no claim against the infant or his estate either in law or in equity.

This transaction, plainly and correctly stated, is that Stevens was individually indebted to the bank in the sum of about $25,000. For the purpose of imposing a liability upon the property of the infant for what must be regarded as his own debt, and to relieve himself from its burden, he entered into an agreement with his creditor, by which it was agreed that a proceeding in court should be instituted to secure a transfer of the individual debt of the guardian to the property of the infant, and thus obtain the payment of the guardian's debt to the bank from the infant, who was in no way liable therefor. This was a clear and palpable fraud upon his rights. The guardian was guilty of a breach of his trust in embarking the property of his ward in business. When it proved disastrous, he, in conjunction with his creditor, sought to impose the consequences of his own disaster upon his infant ward. This purpose was obvious. It is equally manifest that the bank and its officers must have understood that the purpose of the proceeding to mortgage was to wrongfully deprive the infant of his legal rights and property. That such was the effect of the transaction is clear, 43 L. R. A.

and it must be presumed that the parties who conferred and acted in concert in instituting and prosecuting the proceeding intended the natural consequences of their acts. Therefore it must be regarded as conclusively established that, in pursuance of a plan or scheme contemplated and agreed upon, the officers of the bank and the general guardian intended to substitute, and procured the property of the infant to be substituted, in place of the debt of the guardian, and thus, to that extent, defrauded the former of his rights in the property. It was the plain legal duty of the general guardian not to waste the property of his ward, or suffer it to be wasted, and, above all, not to be instrumental in effecting its loss. It was his duty to protect, and not to destroy. Utterly disregarding that duty, he entered into an agreement with his own creditor to inaugurate a proceeding which would necessarily and wrongfully deprive his ward of his property. This arrangement between the officers of the bank and the general guardian amounted to collusion. "Collusion," as defined by Bouvier, is "an agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law or to obtain an object forbidden by law." Thus, the mortgage was secured in pursuance of a collusive agreement between the defendants, the purpose of which was to deprive the infant of his property without sufficient consideration, and for their own benefit. Having entered into a collusive agreement to illegally deprive the infant of his property, in furtherance of it the general guardian alleged in his verified petition that, unless the property of the infant was mortgaged, it would be sacrificed, and that the interests of the infant would be promoted by paying the debt to the bank. The guardian in no way apprised the court of the collusive agreement between himself and the officers of the bank, or that the debt for which he sought to mortgage the infant's property was his own, and not that of the infant. On the other hand, he employed language in the petition which was well calculated to convey the idea to the court that the debt was the debt of the infant, although that fact was not directly alleged.

It is not seriously denied by the respondents that the infant's just rights have been imperiled by the execution and delivery of this mortgage. Nor is it claimed that he has no remedy for the injury he has sustained. Their principal contention is that a court of equity has no authority in this case to award the relief to which the infant plaintiff is entitled. It is difficult to believe that a court of equity is so impotent, or its arms so paralyzed, that it cannot reach out and remedy this wrong. More than twenty years since, this court declared: "It is the just and proper pride of our matured system of equity jurisprudence that fraud vitiates every transaction; and, however men may surround it with forms, solemn instruments, proceedings conforming to all the details required in the laws, or even by the formal judgment of courts, a court of equity will disregard them all, if necessary, that justice and equity may prevail." Warner v. Blake-man, 4 Keyes, 487, 507. There seems no doubt of the general power of a court of equity, in proper cases, in one suit to grant relief from a decree or order in another, either by a bill of review, or by a supplemental bill in the nature of a review, or by an original bill. The general grounds upon which the interposition of a court of equity may be successfully invoked do not include cases where the sole ground of relief is that the former decision was contrary to equity or good conscience. While the courts of England and of this country have, with great uniformity, refused aid in all cases where their action would involve either the usurpation of appellate jurisdiction or the granting of a second opportunity of presenting a cause upon its merits, they have, upon the other hand, invariably extended it over a large and well-defined class of cases, to prevent the retention of an unconscientious advantage by a party in a court of law or equity, through his own fraud, or through some excusable mistake or unavoidable accident on the part of his adversary. Where it appears to be against conscience to execute a judgment which the injured party could not have prevented, or where he might have prevented it except for fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or negligence of himself, a situation is presented which will justify a court of equity in granting the necessary relief. Without pursuing this subject further to ascertain all the cases in which a party may avail himself of such an action where his defense was not available in the original action, or he was, without fault on his part, prevented from asserting it, it is sufficient for the determination of this case that the rule is firmly established that a judgment of either a legal or equitable tribunal may be vacated by a court of equity if obtained by fraud or collusion. Smith v. Nelson, 62 N. Y. 288; Ward v. Southfield, 102 N. Y. 287; Freeman, Judgm. chap. 22. The proposition upon which the respondents rely to uphold the judgment of reversal relates to methods and procedure rather than to substantive rights of existing equities. They contend that in no aspect of the case does the complaint herein state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Examining it, we find that it is alleged that the plaintiff Warren is an infant; that he owned real estate, of which the brewery and mortgaged property constituted a part; that the defendant Stevens carried on the business of a brewer there, and borrowed money, as general guardian of the infant, for that purpose; that he conducted the business in the name of the infant without any authority, and contracted individual debts at the Union Bank, for which the infant was in no wise liable; that he and the officers of the bank entered into an agreement by which proceedings to mortgage the real estate of the infant were to be undertaken, and the premises mortgaged, for the purpose of discharging the indebtedness of the guardian, and for no other purpose; that in pursuance thereof the general guardian as such presented to the court a petition, setting forth such indebtedness as the debt of the estate, and praying that the real estate of the infant might be mortgaged for its payment; that upon that petition proceedings were had which resulted in a mortgage upon the infant's real property to secure $25,000 and interest, and that the moneys secured thereby were employed to pay the expenses of that proceeding and the debt of the guardian; that the mortgage was given and the money was paid for those purposes, and those alone; and that in pursuance of the original agreement between them the mortgage was assigned to the bank with full knowledge in both the mortgagee and assignee that the moneys paid to the special guardian were obtained for and applied to the indebtedness of Stevens. Thus, the complaint shows that the guardian, as trustee of his ward, was guilty of a breach of his trust, thereby incurring an individual liability of about $25,000. This was known to the bank and its officers. Notwithstanding these facts, the guardian and officers of the bank entered into an agreement to employ the processes and machinery of the court to mortgage the real estate of the infant to pay the individual debt of the guardian. This was a fraud upon the court as well as upon the infant and his rights. We think the complaint fully sets forth all the wrongful acts of the parties, and as fully states a cause of action as it would if it had charged all the acts thus alleged to have been fraudulently and wrongfully performed. The Code only requires a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting a cause of action. That the complaint in this action contained. If the acts charged were wrongful, or necessarily fraudulent, it was not essential to a cause of action that they should be charged as having been wrongfully or fraudulently performed. The acts charged were not less fraudulent because the word "fraud" or "fraudulent" was not employed by the pleader in characterizing them. Warner v. Blake-man, 4 Keyes, 487. Where, as in this case, the law presumes fraud because it is the necessary consequence of the acts alleged, and they carry in themselves inevitable evidence of fraud, independent of the motive of the actor, it is unnecessary to characterize the acts alleged as fraudulent or otherwise. Whether or not fraud exists is a conclusion of law derived from facts and circumstances. 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 688; Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 72. Therefore, an allegation in a complaint of facts from which such a conclusion necessarily results must be regarded as sufficient. In Maher v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 290, there was no specific allegation of mistake of facts, but facts were averred in the complaint showing that the parties were mistaken as to the effect of the language employed, and it was held that this was a sufficient allegation to justify a reformation of the contract. In Whittlesey v. Delaney, 73 N. Y. 575, the facts substantially as proved upon the trial and found by the court were averred in the complaint, although the precise and particular charge of fraud as a ground of relief was not specifically, and in terms, put forth. It was there held that it was not necessary to employ the word

"fraud" or "fraudulent" in order to characterize the transaction or specify the ground of relief. We think the general doctrine of these cases is applicable here, and that the absence of the word "fraud" or "collusion" does not render the averments of the complaint less sufficient to constitute a cause of action for the fraud or collusion of the defendants to deprive the infant of his property. In the language of Judge Finch, "Calling names does not alter facts." We are of the opinion that the respondents' claim that the complaint was insufficient cannot be sustained. Moreover, as the proof in the case established all the facts set out in the complaint, we think it was amply sufficient to justify the special term in setting aside the mortgage and proceedings to mortgage the infant's real estate upon the ground that they were procured by the fraud and collusion of the defendants.

The question whether the court before which the proceeding to mortgage was instituted acquired jurisdiction to grant the order directing the mortgage, or to confirm the action of the special guardian in making it, is also presented. The jurisdiction of a court to direct the execution of a mortgage upon an infant's real estate is derived wholly from the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to that subject. Code Civ. Proc. chap. 17, art. 4, title 7. It can only be exercised in such cases, under such circumstances, and in the manner in which the statute directs. Section 2348 of the Code specifically points out the cases in which the real property of an infant may be sold, mortgaged, or leased. The first is: "Where the personal property, and the income of the real property, of the infant, . . . are, together, insufficient for the payment of his debts, or for the maintenance and necessary education of himself and his family." This is the only provision which has any application to this case, and the one under which the general guardian sought to mortgage the infant's real estate. It is to be observed that it is only in case the personal property and the income of the real property are insufficient to pay the debts, or for the maintenance and education of the infant and his family, that his property may be mortgaged. When we turn to the petition in the proceedings to mortgage, we find that the only debt for the payment of which it was sought to mortgage the infant's property was the debt of the guardian, and not the debt of the infant at all. There was no allegation in the petition, nor proof upon the hearing, of the existence of any debt of the infant which the income of his property was not amply sufficient to pay. Indeed, it appears in the petition that he had sufficient personal property and income from his real property to pay all his debts, and hence the condition necessary under the statute to authorize the mortgage was not shown to exist.

The precise question presented is whether, where the petition, proofs, and all the papers in a proceeding under this statute show, without dispute or contradiction, that its sole purpose is to mortgage the property of an infant to pay the debt of another, and 43 L. R. A.

there is no proof or claim that the personal property and income of the infant are insufficient for the payment of all his own debts, and for the necessary education of himself and family, but, on the contrary, the proof tends to show that they are sufficient, a court acquires jurisdiction to direct his property to be mortgaged. We are of the opinion that the court acquired no jurisdiction in that proceeding to direct the property of the infant to be mortgaged for the debt of the guardian, and that there were no facts in the petition which would have justified the court in mortgaging the infant's property, even for the payment of his own debts. The action of the court was invoked therein for a single purpose, which was to direct a mortgage upon the infant's real estate for an object which was wholly unauthorized by the statute. That it had no jurisdiction to do. The filing of a petition which disclosed the existence of a valid outstanding debt of the infant, which required the mortgaging of his property to pay it, was, under this statute, necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the court of the subject-matter. Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Barnard, 96 N. Y. 531. In such a proceeding the requirements of the statute must be strictly followed. This court has repeatedly held proceedings instituted under this statute to be void when not taken in conformity with it. Battell v. Torrey, 65 N. Y. 294; Re Valentine, 72 N. Y. 184; Ellwood v. Northrup, 106 N. Y. 172; Loosey v. Stanley, 147 N. Y. 560, 573. It has also held that a court of equity has no inherent power to direct a mortgage of the real property of infants. If we are correct in our conclusion that the court had no jurisdiction of the proceedings to mortgage, then the proceedings and mortgage are open to collateral attack for that reason, and should be set aside. Risley v. Phenix Bank, 83 N. Y. 318, 38 Am. Rep. 421; Loosey v. Stanley, 147 N. Y. 560. If it be said that the court before which this proceeding was taken was a court of general jurisdiction, still, as the proceeding does not fall within the ordinary proceedings of a court of common law, its jurisdiction is yet special and limited, wholly dependent upon the statute; and no presumption can be indulged in favoring that particular jurisdiction. In that class of cases the statute must be strictly pursued, whatever jurisdiction the court may possess.

The respondents also insist that, as the purpose of this action was to set aside the mortgage, and not solely to set aside the proceedings to mortgage, the attack upon the proceedings was collateral, and falls within the rule which prohibits a court from re-examining its decision upon the same subject; and cite Black, Judgm. § 252, as sustaining the claim. The authority cited is to the effect that, to constitute a direct attack upon a judgment, it is necessary that a proceeding be instituted for that very purpose. But if the action has an independent purpose, and contemplates some other relief or result, although the overturning of the judgment may be important, or even necessary to its success, then the attack upon the judgment is collateral, and falls within the rule. On the other hand, a complaint alleging that a judgment is void, but is apparently a lien upon land described, is said by that author to be a direct, and not a collateral, attack upon it. This action was to obtain a judgment declaring all the proceedings void, including the mortgage. The mortgage was, at most, a part of the proceeding, and had no validity independent of it. It was as much a part of the proceeding as any paper or order in it. Hence, we find nothing in the fact that the plaintiff asked to have the mortgage, as well as the other proceedings, set aside, which in anyway changes the character of the action, or deprives the plaintiff of the right to the relief sought.

It is also claimed that the learned appellate division seems to have, in effect, held that the guardian might have had some equitable claim against the infant, and hence he could properly maintain a proceeding to mortgage his real estate to secure or pay it. We do not perceive any ground upon which such a doctrine can be upheld. We not only find nothing in the statute which authorizes the inauguration of such a proceeding to obtain an accounting in equity between a guardian and his ward, and then impose upon his real estate a mortgage to secure the amount found due, but we find nothing in the record to show even the existence of any equity as a basis for such a claim. The equities of the guardian were in no way involved in that proceeding. It was a special proceeding under a special statute for a single purpose, which certainly did not include an accounting between the guardian and his ward.

The appellants claim that, under a well-established principle or rule in equity, where an important decree, which deprives an infant of his inheritance, has been rendered against him, either with or without actual fraud or surprise, the infant has a remedy during his minority, either by a bill of review, original bill in the nature of a bill of review, or by original bill directly attacking the decree for error, and cite as sustaining that proposition: Cooper, Eq. Pl. p. 97; Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 734; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. p. 164; Freeman, Judgm. § 513; Bank of United States v. Ritchie, 8 Pet. 128, 8 L. ed. 890; Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 548; McLemore v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 58 Miss. 514; Loyd v. Malone, 23 Ill. 43, 74 Am. Dec. 179; Kuchenbeiser v. Beckert, 41 Ill. 172; Lloyd v. Kirkwood, 112 Ill. 329; Kingsbury v. Sperry, 119 Ill. 280; Alhison v. Drake, 145 Ill. 500; Wright v. Miller, 1 Sandf. Ch. 103; Wright v. Miller, 8 N. Y. 9, 59 Am. Dec. 438; Loeey v. Stanley, 147 N. Y. 560; Re Price, 67 N. Y. 231; Lefevre v. Laraway, 22 Barb. 167; McMurray v. McMurray, 66 N. Y. 175. It is impossible, within the proper limits of this opinion, to review these authorities in detail. But a careful examination of them discloses that, while some are not applicable to the question here, yet the weight of their authority sustains the contention of the appellants, at least so far as they claim to be authorized to maintain an original action in equity to set aside the order and mortgage in this case as being in fraud of the infant's individual or property rights, and being procured by fraud and collusion of the parties. Those authorities fully justify this action, and authorize its maintenance upon the ground that the agreement between the defendants to obtain the infant's property to pay the debt of the guardian was collusive, and their action under it was in fraud of his rights; and as the rights of a bona fide purchaser, without notice, were not involved, they fully sustain the judgment of the special term in this case. In those cases many similar questions have arisen, and the courts have, with great uniformity, held that, under circumstances similar to those existing in this case, a court of equity has the right, by original bill, to set aside a judgment thus obtained. As illustrative of the principle of these authorities, we may refer to a few in this state which seem to bear upon the legal questions involved in this controversy. In Wright v. Miller it was said that the jurisdiction of a court of chancery to set aside a decree obtained by fraud, upon an original bill filed for that purpose, has long been unquestioned. In that case an action had been commenced against infants, and a decree obtained setting aside a conveyance made in trust for their benefit, without giving them a day to show cause after they became of age, and it was held that such a decree was erroneous, and that the infants, by an original bill filed, might be relieved against it. When that case reached this court, it was again held that the infants were authorized to bring an action in equity to avoid the fraudulent disposition of the trust property, and that equity would entertain a suit to vacate a decree obtained by collusion between the trustees and tenants in possession of a trust estate to defeat the rights of persons entitled to equitable interests therein in remainder. In the McMurray Case a party died seised of certain premises, which were mortgaged to the defendant. The former devised to his widow, whom he made his executrix, a life estate in a portion of the premises, with remainder to the plaintiffs. The balance, with his personal property, he directed his executrix to sell, and with the proceeds pay and discharge his debts, including the mortgage. After the testator's death, the mortgagees commenced an action of foreclosure, making the widow and the plaintiffs, who were infants, parties. They were served with process, but no guardian ad litem was appointed. The widow answered, but under an arrangement with the defendant that he would lease to her for life, at a nominal rent, a portion of the mortgaged premises, executed a deed to him of a portion of the premises directed to be sold. She withdrew her answer, and stipulated that the defendant might take judgment, which he did, taking judgment by default against the plaintiffs, under which the premises were sold, and bid in by the defendant. An original action was brought to set aside the judgment and sale, and it was held that the facts sustained a finding of fraud and collusion and that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the decree of foreclosure avoided as to them, and could maintain an original action in equity for that purpose. In Michigan v. Phenix Bank, 33 N. Y. 9, 27, it was said: "It is needless to multiply cases showing that the courts, upon bill filed, will set aside as a nullity a judgment, decree, or award obtained by fraud." In Hackley v. Draper, 60 N. Y. 92, where it was conceded that the special term had authority to hear a motion and grant the relief sought, it was held that, even if the motion could have been made, an equitable action would lie to vacate an order of a court obtained for a fraudulent purpose, and a sale made in pursuance of it. In Tiernan v. Wilson, 6 Johns. Ch. 411, a sheriff's sale of real estate was set aside in an action brought for that purpose, upon the ground that it was fraudulent in law, as the sheriff was charged with a gross act of negligence and abuse of trust. The same question was again considered by this court in Stevens v. Central Nat. Bank, 144 N. Y. 50, which was an action to set aside a judgment in the United States circuit court, and it was held that, as it was fraudulent as against the plaintiffs, they might maintain an original action to set it aside. Under the doctrine of these cases it is obvious that the plaintiffs had a right to institute this suit to set aside the proceedings and mortgage which were the result of a collusive agreement between the defendants, and which was obtained by a palpable fraud upon the rights of the infant, which presumably was known to all the defendants.

The contention of the respondents that the same questions were before the supreme court in the proceedings to mortgage as are presented in this action cannot be sustained. Surely, there was no proof in the original proceeding of the collusion between the defendants to procure an appropriation of the infant's property to pay the guardian's debts. After a full and careful examination of the facts and law applicable to the questions presented upon this appeal, we have reached the conclusion that the special term possessed abundant authority to entertain this action, and was fully justified by the facts in setting aside the proceedings to mortgage and the mortgage made therein, and that the learned appellate division erred in reversing the judgment of that court. In reaching this conclusion we have recognized the correctness of the rule, invoked by the respondents, that the judgment of the appellate division should not be reversed, unless there was no error of law committed by the trial court to justify it. We have found nothing in the record to indicate the commission of any such error which authorized a reversal of the judgment entered upon its decision.

It follows that the judgment of the appellate division should be reversed, and that of the special term affirmed, with costs to the plaintiffs in all the courts.

All concur, except Parker, Ch. J., and Gray, J., not voting.
43 L. R. A.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, ex rel.
George TYROLER, Appt.,

v.

WARDEN OF THE NEW YORK CITY PRISON, Respt.

(157 N. Y. 116.).

1. Forbidding all but duly appointed agents of transportation companies from engaging in the business of ticket broker is a violation of the liberty guaranteed to citizens by the Constitution which is not justified by the police power of the state.
2. It is the duty of the courts to examine legislation complained of as a violation of the rights secured to the citizens by the Constitution for the purpose of ascertaining whether the health, morals, safety, or welfare of the public justifies its enactment under the police power of the state.
3. That dishonest persons have engaged in the ticket brokerage business, and that the business enables the transportation companies to engage in unfair competition, will not justify the legislature in prohibiting all persons except those designated by the transportation companies from engaging in it.

(Bartlett, Martin, and Gray, JJ., dissent.)

(November 22, 1898.)

APPEAL by relator from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of a Special Term for New York County dismissing a writ of habeas corpus which sought to obtain petitioner's release from custody to which he had been committed for violation of the statute against ticket brokerage. Reversed.

Statement by Parker, Ch. J.:

The relator is a citizen of the state of New York and of the United States, and immediately prior to his arrest, and for several years before that time, had been engaged in the city of New York in the business of selling, and offering for sale, and procuring, tickets, giving, and purporting to give, the right to a passage and conveyance on vessels and railway trains. He is charged with having received the sum of $6.30 as a consideration for a passage or conveyance upon a ferryboat, train, and vessel from the city of New York to the city of Norfolk, Virginia, and for the procurement of a ticket giving the absolute right of passage and conveyance upon such ferryboat, train, and vessel, he not being at the time an authorized agent of the owners or consignees of such vessel, or of the company running such train. It is not pretended that the relator did not come into the possession of the tickets lawfully, and by purchase from the transportation companies issuing them. The relator sued out a writ of habeas corpus, and demanded his discharge from the custody of the defendant, on the ground that the act of 1897 (chap. 50) violated certain provisions of the Constitution of the state of New York and the Constitution of the United States, and was therefore void. The special term made its order dismissing the writ, and remanded the relator. The appellate division affirmed that order.

NOTE.—For statutes against ticket brokerage, see also Burdick v. People (Ill.) 24 L. R. A. 152, and note; and State v. Corbett (Main) 24 L. R. A. 498.

Messrs. Louis Marshall, Samuel Untermyer, and Abraham Gruber, for appellant:

The statute under which the relator is prosecuted is unconstitutional because it deprives him of his liberty without due process of law; because it deprives him of rights and privileges secured to a citizen of the state, and because it abridges his privileges and immunities as a citizen of the United States, and denies to him the equal protection of the laws.

The prohibitory act invades the liberty of the citizen and fosters monopoly.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, p. 202; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marz, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389.

It has always been supposed that the public welfare demanded the encouragement of competition; that the maxim that "competition is the life of trade" was dictated by the most wholesome considerations of public policy.

People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 263, 23 L. R. A. 221; Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 105.

It certainly is within the power of a railroad company, as well as of a merchant, to carry on business, even without a profit, for a period of time, if it is supposed that thereby business can be attracted.

People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389.

A combination for the purpose of regulating rates and preventing competition among the railroads is violative of the anti-trust law passed by Congress.

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007.

An act which provided for the summary seizure of any boat or vessel used by one person in interfering with oysters or other shell fish belonging to another, and for its forfeiture and sale, was held to be unconstitutional, because it deprived the owner of the vessel of his property without due process of law.

Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188.

In Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, an act of the legislature of Louisiana providing that any person, firm, or corporation who, in any manner whatever, does an act in that state to effect for himself or for another insurance on property then in that state in any marine insurance company which has not complied in all respects with the laws of the state, shall be subject to a fine, was held to be unconstitutional.

See also Baltimore v. Radcke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239.

If this is a police regulation, then any legislation which puts it in the power of one member of the community to prevent his competitor from continuing in the business in which he has competed has the sanction of the Constitution.

Gilman v. Tucker, 128 N. Y. 190, 13 L. R. A. 304; Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577, 18 L. R. A. 543; Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188.

This legislation is likewise unconstitutional, because it deprives the relator of his property without due process of law.

People, Eckerson, v. Haverstraw, 151 N. Y. 75.

It amounts to a regulation of commerce among the several states by the legislature of the state of New York.

Black, Const. Laws, 170, 171; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547; McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 392; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Alabama State Bd. of Assessment, 132 U. S. 472, 33 L. ed. 409, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 726; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649.

A state law is unconstitutional and void which requires a party to take out a license for carrying on interstate commerce, no matter how specious the pretext may be for imposing it.

Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 34, 29 L. ed. 785; Robbins v. Shelby County Tazing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 368, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 637; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658.

A state law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors is void when it comes into contact with an express or implied regulation of interstate commerce by Congress, declaring that traffic in such liquors as articles of merchandise between the states shall be free.

Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691.

A statute providing for the inspection of meat and flour brought from one state to another, and requiring the inspection to be marked thereon, and imposing a penalty for offering such wares for sale without such inspection, has been declared to be repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 3 Inters, Com. Rep. 485; Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 35 L. ed. 638.

An act of the legislature of this state requiring convict-made goods to be branded as such was an unconstitutional attempt to regulate commerce.

People v. Hawkins, 20 App. Div. 494.

The power of Congress is so far exclusive that no state had the power to make any law of regulation affecting the free and unrestrained intercourse of commerce between the states.

Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 300, 38 L. ed. 722, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 41 L. ed. 632; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347.

This legislation further offends the Constitution of the state of New York, because it is practically an abdication of governmental functions in favor of private individuals and corporations.

Barto v. Himrod, 8 N. Y. 483, 59 Am. Dec. 508.

Messrs. James D. McClelland and Charles E. LeBarbier, with Mr. Asa Bird Gardiner, for respondent:

Unless the act of the legislature is plainly at variance with some portion of the Constitution, it will be upheld, and doubtful questions will be resolved in favor of the validity of the act.

Rogers v. Buffalo, 123 N. Y. 181, 9 L. R. A. 579; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 29, 5 L. R. A. 559; Hill v. Thompson, 16 Jones & S. 481, 18 Jones & S. 165; Live Stock Dealers & B. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S.) 388; Slaughter-House Cases, 10 Wall. 36, 106, 21 L. ed. 394, 418; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 398.

The legislature is vested with the entire police power possessed by the people of this state.

People v. Ewer, 8 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 383; Com. v. Wilson, 14 Phila. 384; People v. Cannon, 10 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 497; People v. Bartholf, 139 N. Y. 32.

There is a recognized necessity for the restrictions imposed, and the suppression of a most prolific source of crime.

There is nothing in the act which deprived the petitioner of the property in the ticket.

Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McConnell, 82 Fed. Rep. 65.

Neither individual rights nor the right to property are absolute, and both may be contracted for the welfare of the public without encroaching upon constitutional rights.

People v. Rosenberg, 67 Hun, 52.

Parker, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The statute that appellant insists is in derogation of the limitation placed upon the legislative power by the people, through the Constitution of the state reads as follows:

"Sec. 1. The Penal Code is hereby amended—
43 L. R. A.

ed by inserting therein a new section, to be known as section 615, to read as follows: § 615. Sale of Passage Tickets on Vessels and Railroads Forbidden, Except by Agents Specially Authorized.—No person shall issue or sell, or offer to sell, any passage ticket, or an instrument giving or purporting to give any right, either absolutely or upon any condition or contingency to a passage or conveyance upon any vessel or railway train, or a berth or state room in any vessel, unless he is an authorized agent of the owners or consignees of such vessel, or of the company running such train, except as allowed by sections 616 and 622; and no person is deemed an authorized agent of such owners, consignees or company, within the meaning of the chapter, unless he has received authority in writing therefor, specifying the name of the company, line, vessel, or railway for which he is authorized to act as agent, and the city, town, or village together with the street and street number, in which his office is kept, for the sale of tickets.

"Sec. 2. Section 616 of the Penal Code is hereby amended so as to read as follows: § 616. Sales by Authorized Agents Restricted.—No person, except as allowed in section 622, shall ask, take, or receive any money or valuable thing as a consideration for any passage or conveyance upon any vessel or railway train, or for the procurement of any ticket or instrument giving or purporting to give a right, either absolutely or upon a condition or contingency, to a passage or conveyance upon a vessel or railway train, or a berth or stateroom on a vessel, unless he is an authorized agent within the provisions of the last section; nor shall any person, as such agent, sell, or offer to sell, any such ticket, instrument, berth, or stateroom, or ask, take, or receive any consideration for any such passage, conveyance, berth, or stateroom, excepting at the office designated in his appointment, nor until he has been authorized to act as such agent according to the provisions of the last section, nor for a sum exceeding the price charged at the time of such sale by the company, owners, or consignees of the vessel or railway mentioned in the ticket. Nothing in this section or chapter contained shall prevent the properly authorized agent of any transportation company from purchasing from the properly authorized agent of any other transportation company a ticket for a passenger to whom he may sell a ticket to travel over any part of the line for which he is the properly authorized agent, so as to enable such passenger to travel to the place or junction from which his ticket shall read."

The remaining portion of the section relates to the redemption of tickets purchased from an authorized agent of a railway company, under certain contingencies, and within certain periods of time, and is not in any wise involved in this appeal.

Having observed how the statute reads, it will be well next to analyze it, and see if we can find out what was intended to be accomplished, and is in fact accomplished, by the phraseology of the statute, in order that we may ascertain whether the statute is in contravention of any of the rights secured by the Constitution to the citizen. It will be observed, in the first place, that it does not prohibit the sale of tickets absolutely, nor does it limit to the particular transportation company over whose route he desires to be conveyed the right to sell tickets to the traveler. It may be said in passing, that the last assertion is in conflict with the position taken by the learned judge who wrote the opinion of the appellate division; for he assumes that, as only persons appointed agents can sell, the effect of the provision is that a corporation "shall only sell through its agents, and is merely a declaration that the corporation itself was to sell its tickets."

The 1st section and the first part of the 2d section do restrict the sale of passage tickets to agents specially authorized by transportation companies, and, if there was nothing else in the statute upon the subject, it would bear the construction put upon it, that its only effect is to confine the right to sell passage tickets of a corporation to that corporation itself, which can act only through agents, but between the opening and the closing sentences of the second section may be found the following: "Nothing in this section or chapter contained shall prevent the properly authorized agent of any transportation company from purchasing from the properly authorized agent of any other transportation company a ticket for a passenger to whom he may sell a ticket to travel over any part of the line for which he is the properly authorized agent, so as to enable such passenger to travel to the place or junction from which his ticket shall read." Thus we see that the moment a man becomes the agent of a transportation company he is by that designation authorized to buy tickets of any other transportation company in the United States or the world, and may sell such tickets to any person who applies for them. In the sale of tickets of the various transportation companies, other than those of the company of which he is an agent, he necessarily acts as a broker. He can buy the tickets and sell them again, making a profit that may perhaps depend more or less on the degree of competition between railroads in various parts of the country. Clearly, the agent of a transportation company, in the purchase and sale of tickets of foreign corporations, is not engaged in selling the passage tickets of the transportation company appointing him. It is not the sale of the tickets of his principal alone that the agent is thus engaged in; but when a transportation company appoints an agent to sell its tickets, then the state, by this statute, steps in and attempts to clothe him with the power which it takes from all other citizens to deal in the tickets of as many other transportation companies as he may be able to make satisfactory arrangements with.

This leads us to note another interesting feature of this remarkable statute. The buying and selling of passage tickets is not abolished; it is only condemned where the seller has not authority from some one of the transportation companies to act as its agent. It has happened before that for the protection of the people the lawmaking power has provided for an examination for the purpose of ascertaining whether applicants possessed suitable qualifications as to character, intelligence, and financial responsibility to fill certain positions of trust, or to engage in a business which might prove dangerous to the people in the hands of a person either incompetent or of bad character; but in no instance has it conferred a general and unlimited power of appointment upon a class of persons or corporations wholly unconnected with the state government. It may possibly be that there was such a situation as would have justified an enactment placing some restrictions upon those engaged in the selling of passage tickets, and prescribing penalties by way of fine or imprisonment for those who should break over such restraints. Our excise legislation affords an illustration. By its provisions all are permitted to sell liquor, within certain limitations that apply to all citizens alike, and for the violation of the regulations of the traffic are provided certain penalties that are expected to assure to the public some measure of protection from non law-abiding citizens engaged in the business. But this act simply turns over to the transportation companies the selection of those who are hereafter to be permitted to sell tickets. It imposes no restraints whatever upon the appointing power, nor upon the agents selected, other than that, in the purchase of tickets, he must confine himself to the properly authorized agents of the transportation companies. The business of buying and selling tickets, as to such agents, continues to be a legitimate business, but to all citizens other than those who may be selected by the transportation companies the right to buy and sell tickets is denied, and an actual sale by them constitutes a felony. The act itself is silent as to the motive of its enactment by the legislature, and it contains no suggestion as to the public interests which its purpose is to subserve.

Ticket brokerage as a business has been in existence for many years. It is a matter of common knowledge that at great agencies, such as Cook's and Gaze's, tickets can be purchased over a great portion of the transportation routes of the world. Intending travelers in great numbers have gone to those agencies for advice as to choice of routes to be taken in contemplated journeys and to purchase the tickets for the trip, whether it should require days or weeks or months to make it. The traveling public in large numbers have come to make use of the facilities afforded by such agencies, of which there are now very many. And Cook's and Gaze's are among the agencies that must go out of business in this state if this statute can live, unless some transportation company shall deem it wise to clothe them with the authority to act as its agents.

It is asserted by counsel that the traveling public and the transportation companies have been so defrauded by the acts of the brokers in the selling of unused, or alleged to be unused, passage tickets, as to call for legislation of a protective character, of which this statute is the outcome. The tendency of the times undoubtedly is to rush to the legislature for a cure for all the grievances of citizens, whether real or imaginary, and many novel experiments in legislation are the result. But usually, in case of wrongs, penalties have been provided. It is novel legislation, indeed, that attempts to take away from all the people the right to conduct a given business because there are wrongdoers in it, from whose conduct the people suffer. But where in the statute is to be found the evidence that its purpose is to prevent fraud? "In the title of the act," answers counsel, and with that answer he has to be content; for while the act is entitled "Frauds in the sale of passage tickets," the body of the statute does not contain any reference to forged, altered, used, or stolen tickets. The sale of such tickets is made a punishable offense under other sections of the Penal Code. The provisions of the act, therefore, have reference to the selling of valid tickets, regularly issued by a transportation company. Can the legislature declare such sales to be fraudulent, or prohibit them on the ground that it tends to prevent fraud? If the act prohibited is fraudulent, there can be no doubt that the legislature, under its police power, may provide for its punishment; but whether it may, under such power, interdict the sale of a valid ticket by one person to another, upon the pretext that fraud will thus be prevented, presents a very different question. I confess I am unable to see how such a sale defrauds a transportation company. If a transportation company sells a ticket from New York to San Francisco, it undertakes to carry the holder from one place to the other. It costs the company no more to carry one person than it does the other. How, then, can it be defrauded or in any way prejudiced by the transfer of such a ticket by the purchaser to another person? It is said that the prohibition of such a sale tends to protect the traveler from being defrauded. If it is a sale of a valid ticket, no fraud can possibly result; and if it is not a sale of a valid ticket, then the sale is fraudulent and is prohibited by other provisions of the Penal Code.

Only one prop remains which it is pretended can support the weight of this statute, and that is that the penal laws not having proved sufficiently efficacious to wholly prevent fraud, an emergency is presented which justifies the taking away from the general public the right to engage in the business of ticket selling. It is not contended that the business of ticket brokerage is in itself of a fraudulent character. The business can be honestly conducted; it has been so conducted in the past by honest men engaged in it; and the most that is asserted is that there are some men engaged in the business who have imposed on the public. The same assertion can be made with equal truth of every business, trade, and profession. Because some coal dealers and vendors in sugar cheat in weight, and dealers in paints and oil in measurements, and in tobacco in quality, it has not hitherto, we venture to say, been thought the proper remedy to make it a felony for persons to hereafter engage in such business, unless they shall have been duly appointed as agents by the corporations manufacturing or producing the product.

Still another motive for this enactment is suggested, and that is that its real purpose is to enable transportation companies to compel others with which they may enter into pooling arrangements to preserve their agreement from secret violation, which is frequently the outcome under the present ticket-brokerage system, which offers an avenue by which the weaker corporation to such an agreement can dispose of its tickets at a price lower than that agreed upon.

This subject received judicial attention in Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McConnell, 82 Fed. Rep. 65, and State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L. R. A. 498, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694, where statutes having apparently the same object in view as this one were under consideration, as will appear from the following extract from the opinion: "It was also commonly believed that, in order to evade statutes designed to secure uniformity of rates and to prevent discriminations, some carriers of passengers were in the habit of placing large blocks of their tickets with 'scalpers,' ostensibly not their agents, for sale at cut rates. To remedy these and similar abuses, real or supposed, this statute was passed. That all its provisions have some relation to, and tendency to accomplish, this end, is quite clear."

Counsel argue that the helpfulness of the ticket broker in securing to the traveling public the benefits of such competition was of such a fraudulent character as to wholly justify the legislation, and appeal to the decisions quoted from in support of such contention. But we pass for the present the subject of motive, to be again referred to when we come to consider whether, under the police power, the legislation can be justified. Whatever the legislature's motive, the fact is that it has passed an act which does not declare ticket brokerage unlawful, for it allows any person who may be fortunate enough to secure an appointment as agent for a transportation company to engage in ticket brokerage, but the act does declare that if any person, other than an agent of a transportation company, undertakes to engage in the passenger ticket brokerage business he shall be guilty of a felony; in other words, that it is unlawful for all citizens of New York to engage in the buying and selling of passage tickets unless empowered to do so by the written appointment of a transportation company.

Much has been said in argument with reference to this statute in a more agreeable vein, placing the statute in a somewhat more attractive form, but it is as well to go beneath the surface, and get at the truth, which is that the statute was intended to and does in fact vest the control of the sale of passage tickets within this state, not only of transportation companies doing business in this state, but throughout the world, exclusively in the hands of such companies.

The business of selling passage tickets continues, therefore, to be regarded as a lawful and legitimate business. Public policy is still declared to favor a business which recognizes the propriety of the middleman between the passenger and the transportation company, but the right to engage in it is denied to the general public. The question, then, is whether the organic law prohibits legislation of this character.

Before referring to the provisions of the Constitution that it is confidently asserted condemn such legislation, it may not be out of place to note that the granting of monopolies or exclusive privileges to corporations or persons has been regarded as an invasion of the rights of others to follow a lawful calling and an infringement of personal liberty, from the times of the reigns of Elizabeth and James. The statute of 21 Jac., abolishing monopolies, has been from the time of its enactment regarded as a statutory landmark of English liberty, and that nation has jealously preserved it. It was a part of that inheritance which our fathers brought with them and incorporated into the organic law, to the end that the lawmaking power should be restrained from interference with it.

In this connection, the language employed by Mr. Justice Field in Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 756, 757, 28 L. ed. 585, 590, 591, is most instructive: "As, in our intercourse with our fellow men, certain principles of morality are assumed to exist, without which society would be impossible, so certain inherent rights lie at the foundation of all action, and upon a recognition of them alone can free institutions be maintained. These inherent rights have never been more happily expressed than in the Declaration of Independence, that new evangel of liberty to the people: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident,'—that is, so plain that their truth is recognized upon their mere statement,—'that all men are endowed'—not by edicts of emperors, or decrees of Parliament, or acts of Congress, but—'by their Creator with certain inalienable rights'—that is, rights which cannot be bartered away, or given away, or taken away, except in punishment of crime,—'and that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and to secure these'—not grant them, but secure them—'governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.' Among these inalienable rights, as proclaimed in that great document, is the right of men to pursue their happiness, by which is meant the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity or develop their faculties, so as to give to them their highest enjoyment. The common business and callings of life, the ordinary trades and pursuits, which are innocuous in themselves, and have followed in all communities from time immemorial, must, therefore, be free in this country to all alike upon the same conditions. The right to pursue them, without let or hindrance, except that which is applied to all persons of the same age, sex, and condition, is a distinguishing privilege of citizens of the United States, and an essential element of that freedom which they claim as their birthright. . . In this country it has seldom been held, and never in so odious a form as is here claimed, that an entire trade and business could be taken from citizens and vested in a single corporation. Such legislation has been regarded everywhere else as inconsistent with civil liberty. That exists only where every individual has the power to pursue his own happiness according to his own views, unrestrained except by equal, just, and impartial laws."

From the opinion of Mr. Justice Matthews in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 370, 30 L. ed. 220, 226, the following is taken: "But the fundamental rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, considered as individual possessions, are secured by those maxims of constitutional law which are the monuments showing the victorious progress of the race in securing to men the blessings of civilization under the reign of just and equal laws, so that, in the famous language of the Massachusetts bill of rights, the government of the commonwealth 'may be a government of laws and not of men'—for the very idea that one man may be compelled to hold his life, or the means of living, or any material right essential to the enjoyment of life at the mere will of another seems to be intolerable in any country where freedom prevails, as being the essence of slavery itself."

These principles have also been incorporated into the organic law of this state. Article 1, § 1, of the state Constitution reads as follows: "No member of this state shall be disfranchised, or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof, unless by the law of the land, or the judgment of his peers." Article 1, § 6, of the state Constitution provides that "no person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

The word "liberty," as employed in the provision of the Constitution quoted, was considered by this Court in Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636, in a masterful opinion by Judge Earl. He said (pp. 106, 107, 50 Am. Rep. 640): "So, too, one may be deprived of his liberty and his constitutional rights thereto violated without the actual imprisonment or restraint of his person. Liberty, in its broad sense as understood in this country, means the right, not only of freedom from actual servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. All laws, therefore, which impair or trammel these rights, which limit one in his choice of a trade or profession, or confine him to work or live in a specified locality, or exclude him from his own house, or restrain his otherwise lawful movements (except as such laws may be passed in the exercise by the legislature of the police power, which will be noticed later), are infringements upon his fundamental rights of liberty, which are under constitutional protection."

In People v. Mara, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, this court declared unconstitutional a statute that prohibited the manufacture and sale of any substitute for butter or cheese produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream. Judge Rapallo, speaking for the court, said: "Among these no proposition is now more firmly settled than that it is one of the fundamental rights and privileges of every American citizen to adopt and follow such lawful industrial pursuit, not injurious to the community, as he may see fit. . . . The term 'liberty,' as protected by the Constitution, is not cramped into a mere freedom from physical restraint of the person of the citizen, as by incarceration, but is deemed to embrace the right of man to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare."

In People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, a statute was declared to be unconstitutional which prohibited the sale of any article of food, or offering or attempting to do so, upon any representation or inducement that anything else would be delivered as a prize, premium, or reward to the purchaser. Judge Peckham, in delivering the opinion of the court, after considering the statute, said (p. 399): "A liberty to adopt or follow for a livelihood a lawful industrial pursuit, and in a manner not injurious to the community, is certainly infringed upon, limited, perhaps weakened or destroyed, by such legislation."

Argument certainly is not needed, in the light of these decisions, to support the assertion that the "liberty" of this relator and other citizens of this state to engage in the business of brokerage in passage tickets is sought to be interfered with by the statute under consideration, for brokerage in such tickets has been a lawful business in this state for many years, and many persons have pursued it. It is still a lawful business, although the right to engage in it is limited to such persons as may be appointed by the transportation companies. The statute is therefore in contravention of the state Constitution, and is void unless its enactment by the legislature constituted a valid exercise of the police power. That power is very broad and comprehensive, and has not as yet been fully described, or its extent plainly limited, but it is exercised to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. In each of the last three cases cited it was invoked by counsel to sustain a statute, and it received very careful consideration at the hands of this court. It was held that the power, however broad and extensive, is not above the Constitution, in obedience to the commands of which the courts will protect the rights of individuals from invasion under the guise of police regulations, when it is manifest that such is not the object and purpose of the regulation; and, while it is the general province of the legislature to determine what laws and regulations are needed to protect the public health, comfort, and safety, courts must be able to say, upon a perusal of the enactment, that there is some fair and reasonable connection between it and the ends above mentioned. Unless such relation exists, an enactment cannot be upheld as an exercise of the police power.

43 L. R. A.

The doctrine of these cases was very recently considered and reasserted by this court in Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188, and its further discussion at this time would be a work of supererogation. Under the law of this state, therefore, it is the duty of the courts to examine legislation complained of as in violation of the rights secured to the citizens by the Constitution, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the health, morals, safety, or welfare of the public justifies its enactment. In passing, it may be observed that while it is undoubtedly the rule that railroads, steamboats, warehouses, and other associations of that nature, impressed with a public duty and intended to perform certain quasi public functions, may be the subject of legislative control and regulation so long as the legislature does not transcend the limit of state or Federal Constitution, still that rule is without application to the features of the statute before the court on this review. This inquiry involves such portion of the statute only as undertakes to prohibit citizens of the state from engaging in the brokerage business in passage tickets. That portion of the statute certainly places no burden upon transportation companies, nor does it in any way regulate the manner in which transportation companies shall conduct their business or any part of it. The legislature has no jurisdiction to regulate the methods of business of foreign transportation companies, nor can it prevent them from selling their passage tickets in this state, but by this act it does undertake to prevent any citizen of this state from purchasing the passage tickets of foreign companies for sale to others, unless such citizen shall have been regularly appointed an agent by some transportation company. The right hitherto exercised by citizens to deal in passage tickets over transportation routes without, as well as within, this state, is sought to be cut off.

Again, it may be conceded that it is within the power of the legislature to regulate the manner in which certain kinds of business may be conducted; that it may require one seeking to engage in a given pursuit to secure from the state, or one of its agents, a license; that it may require one pursuing any particular occupation to pay a tax for the privilege of conducting his business; and that, as a condition to the right of carrying on a business that, in the hands of incompetent persons, may be productive of injury to others, the legislature may require that before engaging therein one must satisfy the public authorities that he is competent and morally qualified to conduct it. But none of these methods was adopted. No attempt is made to exclude persons of bad character from engaging in the business, nor are the public authorities given the right to determine, by examination or otherwise, the character of the person to be engaged in it; but the transportation companies alone are invested with the power to allow whosoever they will to engage in the business.

Nor can the contention be tolerated that because there have been, in times past, dishonest persons engaged in the ticket-brokerage business, with the result that frauds have been perpetrated on both travelers and transportation companies, therefore the legislature can deprive every citizen engaged therein of the "liberty" to further conduct such business. Stringent rules undoubtedly may be enacted to punish those who are guilty of dishonest practices in the conduct of such a business, and the machinery of the law put in motion for its rigorous enforcement; but to cut up, root and branch, a business that may be honestly conducted, to the convenience of the public and the profit of the persons engaged in it, is beyond legislative power.

If the law were otherwise, no trade, business, or profession could escape destruction at the hands of the legislature if a situation should arise that would stimulate it to exercise its power, for in every field of endeavor can be found men that seek profit by fraudulent processes. Transportation tickets have been forged, it is said; so have notes, checks, and bank bills. Railroad companies are no more bound to honor forged tickets than the alleged maker of a forged note is bound to pay it. An innocent person who suffers by parting with his money on a forged ticket has his remedy against the vendor just the same as has the bank that discounts a forged note. Such instances might be multiplied, but it would serve no good purpose, for it is well known that no business can be suggested through which innocent parties may not be occasionally victimized. But, because of that fact, honest men cannot be prevented from engaging in their chosen occupations.

Again it is said that ticket brokers enable the railroads to engage in unfair competition. This is accomplished by the sale to the broker by a competing railroad, at much less than the regular rates, of a block of tickets that the broker is enabled to sell to his customers, and this to a certain extent takes travel from its competitors. An opinion is cited in which the court in another jurisdiction denounces the ticket scalper for engaging in a business of this character, and pronounces such business fraudulent alike in its conception and operation; but we pass this opinion without other comment than to say that, whatever may be regarded as the law in other jurisdictions, in this one it is well established that the public welfare is best subserved by the encouragement of competition (People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 263, 23 L. R. A. 221; Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 106); and hence this so-called reason furnishes no support to the claim that this legislation was for the public good.

I have now called attention to all the arguments that have been advanced in support 43 L. R. A.

of the claim that the provisions of the statute under consideration are so evidently intended for the public good as to constitute a valid exercise of the police power by the legislature, and those arguments seem so wholly without merit as to suggest that they constitute a mere pretext put forward to uphold legislation hostile to the liberty of the citizen, as that word is used in the Constitution. If the views expressed be well founded, it follows that it is the duty of the court to declare that portion of the statute we have considered to be in contravention of the Constitution and void.

The order should be reversed, and the prisoner discharged.

O'Brien, Haight, and Vann, JJ., concur.

Bartlett, J., dissenting:

This appeal is based upon the alleged unconstitutionality of chapter 506 of the Laws of 1897, entitled "An Act to Amend the Penal Code, Relative to the Sale of Passenger Tickets." Chapter 12 of title 15 of the Penal Code, amended by this statute, is entitled "Frauds in the Sale of Passage Tickets." The relator insists that the act of 1897 violates article 1, § 1, of the state Constitution, which provides that no member of the state shall be disfranchised or deprived of his rights or privileges unless by the law of the land and the judgment of his peers; also article 1, § 6, of the state Constitution, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; also the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; also article 3, § 1, of the state Constitution, vesting the legislative power of the state in a senate and assembly; also article 1, § 8, subd. 3, of the Constitution of the United States, providing that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several states. The learned counsel for the relator and appellant asks us to consider, in the light of these constitutional prohibitions, the act of 1897, which makes, as he insists, the pursuit of a business which for forty years prior to September 1, 1897, was legitimate and lawful, a felony.

The business referred to is described in the relator's petition for the writ of habeas corpus as "selling and offering for sale, and procuring tickets, giving, and purporting to give, the right to a passage and conveyance on vessels and railway trains." It should be observed that the act of 1897 is merely an amendment of a chapter of the Penal Code containing some twelve sections, and inserts therein one new section and amends another. It is not, in a general sense, new legislation, but ingrafts some additional provisions upon statutory enactments that have existed, in one form or another, for forty years or more.

A short review of this legislation, which is not referred to in the briefs of counsel or the opinion below, may be profitable at this time.

Chapter 470, Laws 1857, is entitled "An Act to Prevent Frauds in the Sale of Tickets to Passengers upon Railroads, Steamboats, and Steamships," and provides that no person, other than the agents or employees of the carriers named, duly appointed by them for that purpose, by a proper authority in writing, shall offer for sale, or sell, within this state, any tickets, etc. A violation of this act is made a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $100, or by imprisonment not less than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Chapter 103, Laws 1860, is entitled "An Act to Prevent Frauds in the Sale of Tickets upon Steamboats, Steamships, and Other Vessels," and is confined to the sale of tickets upon various vessels, and, while longer and more comprehensive than the act of 1857, is similar in its restrictive provisions, and makes the penalty for violation imprisonment in a state prison for a term of not more than two years, or by imprisonment in a county jail not less than six months.

Chapter 820, Laws 1868, amends the act of 1857.

Chapter 201, Laws 1876, is entitled "An Act to Prevent Frauds in the Sale of State-rooms, Berths, and Tickets upon Steamboats, and Steamships, and Other Vessels," and is in harmony with the previous legislation upon the general subject.

While these laws remained upon the statute book, and in 1881, the Penal Code was adopted (Laws 1881, chap. 676), which in title 15, chap. 12, contained practically the same provisions as the laws of 1857 and 1860.

Chapter 384, Laws 1882, amended the Penal Code by repealing § 615, being the opening section of said chapter 12, but the remaining sections were retained, which forbade the sale of tickets by persons other than authorized agents of companies.

Chapter 593, Laws 1886, repealed chapter 470, Laws 1857; §§ 1-7, 9, 11, chap. 103, Laws 1860; and chapter 201, Laws 1876.

Chapter 662, Laws 1892, amended §§ 618 and 621 of the Penal Code, relating to this subject, by increasing the penalty for the violation of the statute to a maximum imprisonment of two years, and declaring that offices kept for the purpose of selling tickets in violation of any provisions of the chapter are to be deemed disorderly houses. This seems to have been the last legislation upon this general subject until chapter 506 of the Laws of 1897, the act now under consideration, which enacted a new section, 615 of the Penal Code, in place of the old section repealed by chapter 384 of the Laws of 1882, and also amended § 616.

While the argument based upon practical construction is not conclusive, it is entitled to great weight. When we are confronted, as in this case, by a declared public policy of the state which has existed for more than a generation, its illegality ought to be made very clearly to appear before the court holds it to be in violation of constitutional provisions. It may be stated, in this connection, that similar legislation exists in several other states, and has been uniformly sustained by the courts. Burdick v. People, 149 Ill. 600, 24 L. R. A. 152; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L. R. A. 498, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694; Com. v. Wilson, 14 Phila. 384.

The only question presented for our decision at this time may be thus stated: Is it competent for the legislature, in the exercise of the police power and in regulating the sale of passage tickets by common carriers, to prohibit sales by ticket brokers, unless they are duly authorized to make such sales by the owners, or charterers of the vessel, or by the company running the railway train upon which passage tickets are offered for sale? We are not now called upon to determine the privileges enjoyed by, or obligations imposed upon, common carriers by this legislation; nor are we to decide whether the individual who has purchased a ticket in good faith, with the intention of using the same, has been deprived of his property without due process of law, when prohibited from selling his unused ticket, and compelled to resort to a more or less imperfect scheme of redemption by the individuals or corporations issuing it. The relator is in no way concerned with these questions, and his appeal must stand or fall upon the proper construction of the law relating to the sale of passage tickets by ticket brokers. The statute might be void as to the passenger holding an unused ticket, and valid as to the ticket broker. The court should express no opinion on this point. We are not only confined to the single question pointed out, but we have nothing to do with those questions of fact that were presented with great ability by the learned counsel for the appellant, as they have no place in the record. We have to deal with the legal question of legislative power only, and are not judicially informed as to the facts that induced the legislature to act, save as they may be inferred from that which appears upon the face of the legislation the validity of which is now challenged.

The acts prior to the Penal Code aver in their titles that they were enacted to prevent frauds in the sale of tickets to passengers upon railways and vessels, and the chapter of the Penal Code that has taken the place of these earlier statutes is entitled, "Fraud in the Sale of Tickets." It may therefore be fairly and reasonably inferred from these declarations on the face of the statutes that the legislature was moved to act in order to prevent frauds upon passengers and common carriers. As this record presents only the constitutionality of the act in question upon its face, we are not advised judicially of the evils which many years of legislation have sought to remedy. So we come to the question whether it is competent for the legislature, in the exercise of the police power, in order to prevent frauds in the sales of passage tickets by land and water, to confine their sale to the individuals and corporations issuing them, or their duly-authorized agents. In other words, has the relator such an inalienable right to deal in these tickets by purchase and sale that to deprive him of it is to strip him of his liberty, rights, privileges, and property without the judgment of his peers and due process of law?

The appellant insists that to confine the sale of tickets to the common carriers, or their agents, not only works these results as to him, but is to discriminate against every citizen and build up a monopoly. We are cited in a learned brief to many cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, our own court, and other courts, to sustain this position. The reasonable limits of this discussion will not permit a review of these authorities, but I am of opinion they have no application to the case at bar. It has been often remarked by judicial writers that it is difficult and undesirable to define the limits of the police power. It has been said to be "the general power of a government to preserve and promote the public welfare, even at the expense of private rights." 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 740. Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, 4th ed. p. 719, says: "The limit to the exercise of the police power in these cases must be this: The regulations must have reference to the comfort, safety, or welfare of society." The supreme court of Illinois, in Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 194, 22 Am. Rep. 71, referring to the police power, said: "It may be assumed that it is a power co-extensive with self-protection, and is not inaptly termed 'the law of overruling necessity.' . . . It may be said to be that inherent and plenary power in the state which enables it to prohibit all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society." The Supreme Court of the United States, (Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 554, 35 L. ed. 574) pointed out that it is within the power of the state to impose restraints and burdens upon persons and property in conservation and promotion of the public health, good order, and prosperity. It was, as it seems to me, a reasonable and proper exercise of the police power by the legislature, when seeking to put an end to frauds in the sale of passage tickets, to require carriers, who are usually created by legislation, to sell their own tickets either directly or through duly-authorized agents. It is always the fact that the exercise of the police power by the legislature leads to loss and inconvenience in the cases of many individuals. It is the inevitable result and must be endured, unless personal and property rights are invaded to such an extent that constitutional provisions are violated. The relator insists that he is deprived of his property without due process of law. We do not have here presented, as before intimated, the question which might arise in the case of the purchaser of a ticket in good faith, intending to use the same, who, being unexpectedly prevented from so doing, desires to sell it. This relator has no such special property in the ticket as the supposed case discloses, but is a mere dealer or speculator in these symbols or tokens. The relator claims the same right to traffic in passage tickets as he would have to buy and sell cotton, grain, or any other article of personal property that can be seen and handled.

43 L. R. A.

The nature of a passage ticket has been repeatedly considered by this court. In Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co. 15 N. Y. 455, 466, the plaintiff was ejected from the train because he refused to show his ticket. The plaintiff recovered damages below, but this court reversed, and in its opinion said: "The ticket is the property of the railroad company, and is a part of the means by which it conducts its business. It is delivered to the passenger to be held by him, temporarily, for a special purpose, and who, to that extent, acquires a special property in it. When the journey is ended, or about to end, it is to be redelivered to the conductor. It serves a threefold purpose: It is evidence in the passenger's hands that he has paid his fare, and has a right within the cars; it insures the payment of the passage money by all who take seats; and when it is redelivered to the company it becomes a voucher, in its hands, against the office or agent who issued it, in the adjustment of its accounts." It thus appears that the original and legitimate function of the ticket is to carry out a transaction between the carrier and the passenger, the ticket being the property of the carrier, while the passenger is entitled to retain it in his possession until the completion of his journey. In Quimby v. Vanderbilt, 17 N. Y. 306, 72 Am. Dec. 469, this court held that passage tickets are generally to be regarded as tokens, rather than contracts, and are not within the rule excluding parol evidence to vary a written agreement. In Rawson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. Y. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 543, the court held that a ticket does not generally contain any contract, and is not intended to. It is a mere token or voucher, adopted for convenience, to show that the passenger has paid his fare from one place to another.

I am of opinion that neither the act of 1897, nor the statute it amends, deprives the relator of his property without due process of law. The relator has no such vested right as a ticket broker to traffic in the purchase and sale of these symbols or tokens, which are the property of the carrier, as has the merchant dealing in goods, wares, and merchandise. If the legislature deemed this interference in the business of the common carrier relating to the sale of passage tickets as leading to great frauds and abuses, it was competent for that body to put an end to them, even if, as may be possible in the relator's case, ticket brokers were unfavorably affected who were in no way responsible for the evils sought to be remedied. This is not the case of the legislature saying to the merchant: "You shall no longer buy and sell and get gain; you must henceforth abstain from dealing in those articles of merchandise the handling of which, by land and sea, constitutes the commerce of the world." This is the case of the legislature saying to the citizen: "You must not interfere with the due and orderly conduct of business between the common carrier and the passenger in the sale and purchase of the symbol or token used for the purpose, as it leads to frauds upon, not only the common carrier and the first-class passenger, but the emigrant as well (see Penal Code, § 626); and, in the exercise of the police power to protect the traveling public, we enact that the passage ticket of the common carrier shall be sold only by it or its agents." In sustaining this exercise of the police power, it is not necessary to refer in detail to the legislation regulating the conduct of business in various ways, in order to prevent fraud and promote the welfare of society, which has been uniformly sustained in this and other states.

It is further insisted on behalf of the relator that the act of 1897 is unconstitutional, because it amounts to a regulation of commerce among the several states by the legislature of this state. It is difficult to understand how any such result is accomplished by this legislation. It has often been said that legislation by a state may, in a great variety of ways, affect commerce and persons engaged in it without constituting a regulation of it, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 487, 488, 24 L. ed. 547, 548; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 103, 23 L. ed. 819, 820; State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 15 Wall. 284, 21 L. ed. 164; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. ed. 94; Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459, 24 L. ed. 525. The act of 1897 does, indeed, affect ticket brokers who were, in a sense, engaged in interstate commerce, but it cannot properly be said that it was an effort on the part of the legislature of this state to regulate commerce, within the meaning of the Federal Constitution. The traveling public is at liberty to freely come and go as heretofore, and the fact that they are prohibited from dealing with the unauthorized ticket broker offers no obstacle to interstate commerce. The act of 1897 deals with the ticket broker as a resident of this state, carrying on his business here, and there is no attempt to usurp the powers of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

It is finally argued on behalf of relator that the legislation offends the Constitution of this state, because it is practically an abdication of governmental functions in favor of private individuals and corporations. The statement of the argument is that the legislature has left it to private agencies to determine who shall and who shall not be permitted to carry on the business of selling tickets. This argument refutes itself. The legislature, in the constitutional exercise of the police power, has said to the common carrier, "You must select and duly commission the agents who are to sell your passage tickets, and no one else can engage in that business." This is certainly not an abdication of governmental functions, but a wise and proper exercise of them, as I view the situation. I have carefully considered the elaborate argument presented in the appellant's brief, but see no reason to disagree with the conclusions reached by the learned appellate division. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

Martin, J., dissenting:

Recognizing the justice of recent criticisms upon the increase of long and argumentative dissenting opinions in this court, still the importance of the principle announced in the decision of this case demands a statement of the reasons which prevent my concurring with the majority. The case involves the validity of a statute which continues a protection to the public and to transportation companies against fraud in the sale of passage tickets which has existed in this state, in substantially the same form, for more than forty years. Therefore the present statute cannot be held unconstitutional without practically determining that for all that time the affairs of this state in that respect have been controlled by statutes which were invalid, as being in excess of the powers of the legislature to enact. The passage and continuance upon the statute books of this and similar statutes for so many years show that during that time a legislative policy has prevailed in this state which has been sanctioned by numerous legislative acts. It has never been questioned by the courts, and has been acquiesced in by the departments of the state government. This constitutes such a practical construction of the constitutional provisions invoked by the appellant as to justify this court in holding the statute to be within the police power of the state, especially as similar statutes had been in force for many years when the present Constitution was adopted. People, Williams, v. Dayton, 55 N. Y. 367, 378; People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 323, 337; Re Washington Street Asylum & P. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 442, 447; People, Einsfeld, v. Murray, 149 N. Y. 367, 376, 32 L. R. A. 344.
43 L. R. A.

The real inquiry here presented is whether the legislature may provide that steamboat and railroad tickets shall not be sold by irresponsible or unknown persons, thus exposing travelers to fraud, and require them to be so sold that the companies issuing them shall be responsible to the traveler who purchases them. While the statute forbids persons other than the companies, or their duly-constituted agents, making such sales, still its purpose was to compel the companies to sell their own tickets, and thus become responsible. Manifestly, the method prescribed by this act was the only efficient one that could be adopted to secure the end sought. If the companies had merely been forbidden to permit such sales, their permission could never be established, and thus the purpose of the statute would be thwarted.

The single question presented is whether the legislature was authorized to enact a statute requiring railroad and steamboat companies, or, where the passage extends over more than one line, one of such companies, to sell the tickets for such passage by their duly constituted agents, and forbidding such sales by persons not sustaining that relation, under penalty of imprisonment. If this act is in conflict with the fundamental law, it is for the reason that it affects the liberty of the citizen to engage in a legitimate employment or business in a lawful way, or because it is destructive of some property right which he lawfully possesses. It has been asserted by counsel that the business of ticket brokerage has been a legitimate one in this state for more than forty years. With that statement I am unable to agree. During that entire time a law has existed making the sale of railroad and steamboat tickets, by others than the companies or their properly authorized agents, a crime.

Nor do I understand how it can be properly said that railroad or steamboat tickets are "property," within the common acceptation of that term, when in the hands of others than passengers, as during all those years the statute has continuously declared that passage tickets should not become property in the hands of others, at least so as to include the ordinary right of sale. Their right of sale was limited to the company over whose route the traveler desired to pass, or, where the route was over several lines, to one of the companies over whose line the passenger intended to travel. The manifest purpose of this statute was to prevent fraud in the sale of passage tickets, and thus protect the purchaser and companies as well. I do not see how it can be correctly said that the legislature was silent as to the motive of passing these various acts. In each the title of the act disclosed that its purpose was to prevent fraud in the sale of passage tickets. The title of an act affords means of determining the legislative intent, and its help cannot be rejected as being extrinsic and extra legislative, as it bears upon its meaning and purpose. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 211; People, Cooke, v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 374.

That the sale of tickets by brokers has long been a source of fraud, both upon the traveling public and the companies issuing them, is a matter of common knowledge, and of its existence there can be no doubt. Indeed, it is doubtful if the business would exist but for the profit derived from improper or fraudulent sales. The fraud of ticket brokers assumes various forms, such as changing tickets which are not transferable by the erasure of the name, the place of destination, or the date, and substituting others, and by otherwise changing the tickets, or by obliterating the dates so as to render their improper use possible. Moreover, the existence of such brokers incites the stealing of tickets, and encourages the employees of the companies in defrauding their employers by furnishing a market for stolen tickets and those not canceled by dishonest officers. That the sale of such tickets is a fraud upon both the carrier and the honest traveler cannot be successfully denied. Again, when a passenger loses his ticket, instead of its being restored to him, resort may at once be had to those agencies to realize upon it. Hardly a week passes when the public prints do not contain one or more accounts of the grossest fraud upon honest, but unwary, travelers, which would not occur but for their existence. Therefore the existence of ticket brokers is a continual menace to both passengers and carriers. It tends to encourage forgery, larceny, the receipt and sale of stolen and fraudulent tickets, the perpetration of frauds upon travelers, and is clearly a disadvantage to the honest traveler as well as to the carrier. Hence the necessity for this statute is obvious, and I think the legislature was wise in adopting it.

While every person has a right to pursue, in a legitimate manner, any lawful calling he may select, and the state can neither compel him to adopt any particular calling nor prohibit his engaging in any legitimate business, still it, in the exercise of its police power, is authorized to subject all occupations to such restraint as may be necessary to prevent their becoming harmful to the public; and where an occupation threatens public injury, and its suppression is essential to the public welfare, the state may prevent its pursuit. Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 487; Metropolitan Bd. of Excise v. Barrie, 34 N. Y. 637. The state has a right to reasonably control the manner in which public corporations shall transact their business, and to protect the public against fraud. This statute does nothing more. Its effect is to require railroad and steamboat companies to sell their own tickets in a manner that will render them responsible to the purchaser for any fraud or mistake that may be perpetrated or may occur. The property and business of these companies is clothed with a public interest which makes them of public consequence, affecting the community at large, and hence they may be controlled by any police regulation which is necessary to secure the public good. People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559; People, Kimball, v. Boston & A. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 569; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77. It is therefore reasonable that the state may provide any preventive remedy necessary when the frequency of fraud or the difficulty in circumventing it is so great that no other means will prove efficacious. A regulation which is instituted for the purpose of preventing fraud or injury to the public, and which tends to furnish such protection, is clearly constitutional. This proposition is sustained by numerous authorities in this state and elsewhere, and is an important element of the police power, which is vested in the legislature.

It seems clear that the judgment in this case should be upheld upon the grounds:

(1) Railroad and steamboat tickets can in no proper sense be regarded as property in which third persons have any vested interest. They are mere tokens or evidences of a right to transportation, in which even the traveler who has purchased one has but a special interest, and to which the companies have title and the ultimate right of possession. Hibbard v. New York & E. R. Co. 15 N. Y. 455, 466; Quimby v. Vanderbilt, 17 N. Y. 306, 72 Am. Dec. 469; Raicon v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. Y. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 543.

(2) The sale of railroad and steamboat tickets by persons other than the companies or their agents, as a business, is not an employment in which they have any unqualified right to engage. A ticket is a mere incident to the business of the companies in transporting passengers. Like a baggage check, it is merely a method adopted by them for the transaction of their own business. The ticket itself possesses none of the ordinary elements of property, and cannot, without the consent of the companies, form the basis of a legitimate independent business. At most, it is but an evidence of the arrangement between the companies and their passengers, in which others have no lawful interest. No right to transfer is given, and, generally, none is intended. To hold that every person has a constitutional right to interfere with the relations between passengers and carriers, which is superior to the control of the legislature, would result in extending the restraints imposed upon the lawmaking power much further than they have hitherto been supposed to exist, and would be an interference with the power vested in the legislative branch of the state government that is wholly unwarranted. Third persons have no constitutional right to interfere with the relations between the carrier and passenger by the purchase and sale, without its consent, of tickets issued by the former, and to establish such a right would be unauthorized by any existing principle of constitutional law. It is true the act recognizes the right of third persons to make sales of passage tickets, but that right is a limited one, and can be properly exercised only by an agent of one of the companies furnishing the traveler with the transportation for which the ticket is purchased. But it is to be observed that, as such sales are to be made by one of the companies furnishing the transportation, the company making it becomes responsible to the passengers and other carriers for any fraud perpetrated by its agent, and is in harmony with the general purpose of the act.

(3) In the exercise of its police power the state was authorized to prevent the pursuit of the occupation of ticket brokers upon the ground that it was harmful to the public, and the difficulty in circumventing the fraud which attended it was so great that no other efficient means could be found.

(4) As railroad and steamboat companies are public corporations, or at least their business is of such public interest as makes it of public consequence, the legislature had power to control their business by any regulation which was necessary to secure the public good. People v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 1 L. R. A. 293; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559; People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 25 L. R. A. 794; People, Nechamcus, v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718; People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 31 L. R. A. 689; Grannan v. Westchester Racing Assn. 153 N. Y. 461. The regulation instituted by this statute was for the purpose of preventing fraud, and consequent injury to the public. It tends to furnish such protection, and is clearly within the police power of the state. For these reasons I am of the opinion that the act under consideration is constitutional, and should be upheld.

Moreover, if this act is unconstitutional, many other statutes which have hitherto been regarded as valid and a part of the existing law of the state are also unconstitutional. This may be illustrated by reference to a few of the many statutes which fall within the principle of this decision. The taking of any conveyance of lands from any person not being in the possession thereof, while they are the subject of controversy or suit, is a crime. Penal Code, § 129. It is a crime to buy or sell any title to lands, real or pretended, unless the grantor or his predecessors in title have been in possession for the space of a year before such sale. Id. § 130. It is a crime to solicit life insurance without a certificate of authority, to issue a policy after a certificate to do business within the state has been revoked, to act for a foreign insurance company which has not designated the superintendent of insurance as an attorney upon whom process may be served, or to act for any foreign corporation not authorized to do business in this state. Id. §§ 577c, 577i, 577j, 593. It is also made a crime to manufacture or sell oleomargarine made in imitation of dairy butter (Laws 1885, chap. 183); to exhibit a female child as a dancer or in a theatrical exhibition, or to consent thereto (Penal Code, § 292); to exclude citizens, by reason of race, color, etc., from the equal enjoyment of any privilege furnished by owners of places of amusement (Id. § 383); to charge for elevating grain a price greater than that fixed by law (Laws 1888, chap. 581); to engage in the trade or business of plumbing without registration (Laws 1892, chap. 602); not to furnish water at one or more places on each floor in tenement houses in the city of New York occupied by families (Laws 1882, chap. 410, as amended by chapter 84, Laws 1887); to sell milk which does not reach a prescribed standard, whether adulterated or pure (Laws 1884, chap. 202); to sell vinegar which contains any artificial coloring, whether wholesome or otherwise (Laws 1889, chap. 515); and for barbers to work on Sunday, except in the city of New York and the village of Saratoga Springs (Laws 1895, chap. 823). If the statute under consideration invades the liberty or property of the individual, it is obvious that the statutes to which we have adverted are subject to the same criticism, and yet most, if not all, of them have been held to be constitutional, and their enactment to be within the police power of the state, as will be seen by examining the following, which are a few of the many cases bearing upon the subject: Danziger v. Boyd, 120 N. Y. 628; Dawley v. Brown, 79 N. Y. 390; People v. Cipperly, 101 N. Y. 634; People v. Arensberg, 105 N. Y. 123, 59 Am. Rep. 483; People v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 1 L. R. A. 293; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559; People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 25 L. R. A. 794; People, Nechamcus, v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718; New York Health Dept. v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L. R. A. 710; People v. Girard, 145 N. Y. 105; People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 31 L. R. A. 689. Indeed, if the principle of this decision is to be regarded as the established law of this state, it renders invalid many, if not all, of the statutes creating offenses where the act made a crime was not such at common law. No such principle has any proper place in the jurisprudence of this state. In the language of Andrews, J.: "It is not a good objection to a statute prohibiting a particular act and making its commission a public offense that the prohibited act was before the statute law, or even innocent, and without any element of moral turpitude. It is the province of the legislature to determine in the interest of the public what shall be permitted or forbidden, and the statutes contain very many instances of acts prohibited, the criminality of which consists solely in the fact that they are prohibited, and not at all in their intrinsic quality." People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 296, 60 Am. Rep. 452.

In considering this case, it should be remembered that a statute cannot be declared unconstitutional, unless it can be shown, beyond reasonable doubt, that it is in conflict with some particular provision of the organic law, nor until every reasonable mode of reconciliation with the Constitution has been resorted to, and reconciliation has been found impossible. The presumption of constitutionality attaches to every statute passed by the legislature, and the burden of establishing its unconstitutionality rests upon, and must be borne by, the party asserting it. People, Henderson, v. Westchester County Supers. 147 N. Y. 1, 30 L. R. A. 74. It is for the legislature to determine what laws and regulations are needed for the protection of the public, and, if its measures are calculated and appropriate to accomplish that end, the exercise of its discretion is not the subject of judicial review.

Applying to this case the principles already stated, it is obvious that the statute in question was within the police power of the state. Its necessity to the public welfare was for the legislature to determine, and, as it has a clear relation to that end, its propriety is not subject to review by this court. To hold that this act is unconstitutional would establish a principle which would impair or destroy nearly every statute that has for its purpose the prevention of fraud. It would practically annihilate the police power of the legislature, and make the courts administrators of that power instead of the body in which it is vested by the Constitution. Besides, if the cases passing upon the validity of the statutes, to which we have called attention, were correctly decided, they establish a principle which, if applied in this case, requires us to hold that this act was a proper exercise of the police power by the legislature, and that it is consequently valid.

The result of this action is of slight importance in comparison with the principles promulgated as the law of this state. An arbitrary and unauthorized interference by the judiciary with the administrative affairs of the state is fraught with quite as much danger as would follow legislative interference with judicial affairs. Neither can occur without affecting the stability and efficiency of our state government. The legislative power of the state is vested in the senate and assembly. When courts seek to control the action of the legislature, or, in effect, to repeal its statutes, by holding them in conflict with some nonexistent or doubtful constitutional limitation, their action ceases to be judicial, and becomes mere usurpation. I think the order should be affirmed.

Gray, J., concurs.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Rufus M. CHOATE

v.

Frederick D. STEVENS et al., Plffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

The negotiability of a note is not destroyed by a clause stating that it is given for certain property the title to which shall not pass until the note is paid, and which is subject to be retaken in case of nonpayment of the note.

(March 1, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of a promissory note. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—Reservation of title to property as affecting negotiability of note for purchase price.

The general rule.

So far as the rule can be regarded as settled by the authorities it seems to be that if there is nothing more in the transaction than a retention of title to the property as security, so that the absolute liability on the note is not affected, the note is negotiable.

The negotiability of a series of notes given for the purchase price of cars is not destroyed by a clause that the "title to said cars shall remain in the said payee until all the notes of said series, both principal and interest, are fully paid, all said notes being equally and ratably secured on said cars." The court says the notes show upon their face that they were given for the purchase price of the cars. The transaction is in legal effect a chattel mortgage. The 43 L. R. A.

agreement by which the vendor retains the title and by which the notes are secured on the cars is collateral to the notes and does not affect their negotiability. It does not qualify the agreement to pay at the time fixed any more that would be done by an agreement of the same kind embodied in a separate instrument in the form of a mortgage. The marks on the cars showed that they were to go into possession of the purchasers, to be used. Chicago K. Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 34 L. ed. 340.

In the lower court the judge said, the construction I should place on the provision of the notes retaining title in the vendor is not that it is a recital of the consideration for which the note is given, and of the fact that the payee was to retain a lien upon the property sold as security for the payment of the notes. The inference which a purchaser of the notes would naturally draw would be that the cars had been sold, and that the payee retained a lien and se-

Messrs. Corliss, Andrus, & Leete, for plaintiffs in error:

This court has held that such paper is non-negotiable, and has stated several times that the modern tendency to interpolate into such instruments (notes) engagements and stipulations not recognized by the law merchant, affecting the certainty as to the amount due and payable thereon or the time of maturity, or superadding duties to be performed by the maker, or additional obligations other than the payment of a sum certain at maturity, should be discountenanced and held to destroy their negotiability and deprive them of the character of promissory notes, and they should be relegated to the domain of ordinary contracts.

Cuyaga County Nat. Bank v. Purdy, 56 Mich. 6; Altman v. Rittershofer, 68 Mich. 287; Wright v. Traver, 73 Mich. 493, 3 L. R.

curity upon them in the way of a mortgage for the payment of the purchase price. If this is so, then the contract was an executed one, the consideration for the amount of the notes had already passed, and the payment of the notes could not be dependent on any condition whatever. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Chicago R. Equipment Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 809.

The incorporation into the note of the clause "said promise made for a colt this day taken; said colt holden for the payment of said amount," does not render the note non-negotiable. Collins v. Bradbury, 64 Me. 37. The court stated the fact that the note states the consideration for which it was given, and that it might operate as a mortgage does not render it any the less a promissory note.

A note reciting that it was given for property which should be and remain the property of the owner of this note until the amount hereby secured is fully paid, is negotiable. The court said this note contained all the requisites of a negotiable note, and the addition of the statement of the consideration, with the statement that it was to remain the property of the owner until the note was paid, did not render it non-negotiable. Mott v. Havana Nat. Bank, 22 Hun, 354.

A note given on express condition that the title and ownership of the property are to remain in the name and subject to the order of the payee until the note is paid, is negotiable. W. W. Kimball Co. v. Mellon, 80 Wis. 133. The court says the agreement reserving title does not affect or change the notes in the least, nor make the time of payment or the amount to be paid at all uncertain.

The mere fact that the title is said to be retained in the payee will not defeat the negotiability of the note. Mansfield Sav. Bank v. Miller, 2 Ohio C. C. 96; Mansfield Sav. Bank v. Flowers, 11 Ohio L. J. 141; National Bank v. Davis, 6 Mont. C. L. Rep. 99; Merchants' Bank v. Dunlop, 9 Manitoba L. Rep. 623; First Nat. Bank v. Slaughter, 98 Ala. 602.

The destruction of the property before the maturity of the note will not prevent the enforcement of the note by the payee. Burnley v. Tufts, 66 Miss. 48.

Modifications of the rule.

But slight additions to the provisions of the note have been held to make the duty to pay uncertain so as to defeat negotiability. There is some slight conflict as to what will make the promise uncertain, so the cases are not fully in accord.

A recital in a note that the property for which it is given shall remain in the payee, and that he shall have the right to take possession of it whenever he may deem himself insecure, even before maturity of the note, will render it non-negotiable. Third Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 25 Minn. 530. The court said defendant's obligation was not such an independent, absolute, and unconditional one for the payment of a precise and definite sum of money at all events and without any contingency as is essential to the 43 L. R. A.

validity of commercial paper. The maker's promise depended upon the contingency of an observance by the payee of the sole condition on which it rested that an absolute transfer of the property with good title would be made whenever the promise was performed. The promise to pay, and the implied obligation to transfer the title, were mutual, and as each was the sole consideration for the other, and both were to be performed at the same time, they were concurrent conditions of the same agreement in the nature of mutual conditions precedent, so that inability or refusal to perform the one would excuse performance of the other. If the payee had rendered himself unable to fulfil his obligation, then no action could be maintained against the payor on his promise. An obligation of this character is altogether too uncertain to serve the purpose of commercial paper as the representative of money in business transactions.

And that case was followed in Deering v. Thom, 29 Minn. 120; Edwards v. Ramsey, 30 Minn. 91; Stevens v. Johnson, 28 Minn. 172.

But if the title to the property is recognised in the maker of the note by a chattel mortgage given as part of the same transaction as that in the note is given, a recital that the title shall remain in the vendor until the note is paid will not defeat the negotiability of the note. Beer v. Aultman-Taylor Co. 32 Minn. 91.

An instrument agreeing to pay money for the recited consideration of a horse, said property to remain the absolute property of the vendor until paid for, and not to be disposed of by the vendee, to be paid for if it died, but if it should be returned to or taken back by the vendor then all the payments made should be retained by the vendor for the use of the property, is not a negotiable note, since payment of it may be defeated by the return of the property. First Nat. Bank v. Alton, 60 Conn. 402.

If an instrument after duly reciting a promise to pay continues: It is hereby agreed that the property for which the note is given shall remain the property of the payee, and in default of payment of the note the property shall be returned to the payee,—it is not a negotiable note. The court says the contract stated in this instrument is not simply a promise to pay money, but a stipulation concerning the title to property, and a promise in reference to the future disposition of the property. You may not incorporate with the promise to pay stipulations and agreements as to other matters, and then say the absolute promise to pay money lifts the contract into the region of negotiable paper. Killam v. Schoeps, 28 Kan. 310, 40 Am. Rep. 313.

So, an agreement in a note that if it is not paid, the payee may take possession of and sell the property for which it is given, will render it non-negotiable. South Bend Iron Works v. Paddock, 37 Kan. 510; Smith v. Marland, 59 Iowa, 645.

On the other hand, in New York it has been held that where the note recited that it is understood that the title does not pass to me, and

A. 50; Lamb v. Story, 45 Mich. 483; Altman v. Fowler, 70 Mich. 57; Second Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 75 Mich. 546.

Messrs. Bowen, Douglas, & Whiting, for defendant in error:

The test of negotiability is as to whether or not the instrument in question is payable in a certain fixed amount, at a certain time, and to a certain person. These requisites being present, the instrument should be deemed negotiable.

Beardslee v. Horton, 3 Mich. 560; Little- field v. Hodge, 6 Mich. 326; Preston v. Whitney, 23 Mich. 200; Mattison v. Marks, 31 Mich. 421, 18 Am. Rep. 197; Wright v. Irwin, 33 Mich. 32; Hovary v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29; Hudson v. Emmons, 107 Mich. 549; Murkey v. Corey, 108 Mich. 184, 36 L. R. A. 117; DeHaas v. Roberts, 59 Fed. Rep. 855; Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 136 U. S. 208, 34 L. ed. 340; First Nat. Bank v. Slaughter, 98 Ala. 602; Mott v. Havana Nat. Bank, 22 Hun, 354; Collins v. Bradbury, 64 Me. 37; Burnley v. Tufts, 66 that until the notes are paid the title shall remain in the vendor, who should have the right in case of nonpayment of the notes to retake immediate possession, the court said there is no provision to abridge the rights of the payee of the notes or to limit their operation; on the contrary, their payment is contemplated, and that event is to determine the time when the title to the property becomes absolute in the purchaser. Beaudrias v. Walck, 45 N. Y. S. R. 7.

So, in Nebraska the mere fact that the payee retains title to the property, and is given full power to declare the note due and take possession of the property at any time he may deem himself insecure, even before maturity of the note, will not defeat the negotiability of the note. Heard v. Dubuque County Bank, 8 Neb. 10, 30 Am. Rep. 811.

Reservation of the right of possession has been in some cases held to be a sufficient circumstance to defeat the negotiability of the note.

An instrument in the form of a promissory note given for the price of an article and containing the condition "that the title and right to the possession of the property shall remain in the vendor until this note is paid," is not a negotiable instrument. The court says that the purchaser is not compellable to pay when the day for payment arrives, unless at the same time he gets the property with a good title, and the payment to be made is not, therefore, an absolute, unconditional payment, at all events such as is required to constitute a good promissory note. Domolion Bank v. Wiggins, 21 Ont. App. 275.

Where the note was given for machinery, and stated that the express condition of the purchase and sale of the property for which the note was given are such that the title, ownership, or right of possession does not pass from the vendor until the note is paid in full, it was held that the note was non-negotiable. The court says if the sale be conditional, and if the title to the property remains in the vendor, must it not follow that it so remains at his risk in the absence of an agreement to the contrary? And if this be true, can it be said there is an absolute and unconditional promise to pay for it, a promise to pay at all events? Would not the vendee be exonerated from liability to pay for the property who purchased before the maturity of the note without his fault or in the event it should be recovered by a title paramount to that of the vendor, he being notified of action brought, and required to defend it? It seems to me these queries admit only an affirmative response. E. M. Birdsall & Co. v. Guill, 3 Va. Law Reg. 895.

In view of the tendency to depart from the old simple form of negotiable notes, it is perhaps a little difficult to determine just how far analogy requires notes reserving title to be held negotiable. The certainty of the contract does not seem to be materially impaired by a mere 43 L. R. A.

reservation of title, but the incorporation into the note of the machinery for its enforcement, which to be available must be assignable with the note, or the insertion of a promise to pay in what is a mere conditional contract of sale, would seem to be too great a departure from the rules governing negotiable paper to find a place under that branch of the law.

The effect of statutes.

A note reciting a promise to pay a certain sum to a person or his order for property "this day delivered to me upon the distinct understanding that the title was not to pass to me until paid for in full, and he is authorized to take possession of the same at any time until fully paid for," is negotiable so as to permit the indorsee to maintain a suit in his own name. But the question of negotiability so as to cut off defenses was not passed upon. Howard v. Walker, 69 Ga. 778.

In a subsequent decision, however, the note was held to be negotiable so as to cut off defenses. But the ruling is placed upon the Georgia statute making all contracts in writing for the payment of money negotiable. Howard v. Simpkins, 70 Ga. 823.

See, however, the later cases of Craig v. Herring, 80 Ga. 709, and Brewster v. Hamilton, 87 Ga. 547, where it was held that the retention of title with the right to sell the property on default did not affect negotiability, and no reference is made to the statute.

The Michigan decisions.

Michigan seems to have changed its rule by CHOATE V. STEVENS. Prior to that decision it had been held that, if the note recites that the conditions are that if not paid "when due the property for which it was given shall be the property of the payee, the recital will defeat its character as a negotiable note." Wright v. Traver, 73 Mich. 493, 3 L. R. A. 50. The court says the clause has the effect to render the instrument a contract and not a promissory note. No one can tell from the reading of this instrument whether the payment therein meant is certain and unconditional or not. The instrument is uncertain and capable of two constructions as to its terms.

And so the instrument is non-negotiable if the option is given to the payee to retake the property or collect the money. Bannister v. Rouse, 44 Mich. 428.

But an instrument in the form of a promissory note, which recites that the property for which it is given shall remain the property of the payee, and that upon default in payment he may take possession of the property and retain what has been paid as rent, will sustain an action in the name of an assignee whether it is a negotiable note or not. Soper v. Mills, 50 Mich. 75.

H. P. F.

Miss. 48; Brewster v. Hamilton, 87 Ga. 547; Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, 67 Iowa, 572; W. W. Kimball Co. v. Mellon, 80 Wis. 133.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants have appealed from a judgment upon three written instruments, substantially alike, of one of which the following is a copy:

$115.00

Detroit, July 25, 1893.

For value received March 16, 1895, after date, I promise to pay to the order of Low's Art Tile Soda Fountain Company one hundred and fifteen dollars, with interest six per cent.

The consideration of this and other notes is the Soda Draught apparatus described in contract of same date as this and other notes, which Soda Draught apparatus the undersigned has received of said Low's Art Soda Fountain Company. Nevertheless, it is understood and agreed by and between the undersigned and the said Low's Art Tile Soda Fountain Company, that the title to the above-mentioned property does not pass to the undersigned, and that, until all said notes are paid, the title to the aforesaid shall remain in the said Low's Art Tile Soda Fountain Company, who shall have the right, in case of nonpayment at maturity of either of said notes, without process of law, to enter and retain immediate possession of said property, wherever it may be, and remove the same. Payable at the Preston National Bank.

Each bears as an indorsement, the name of the payee.

The defendants say that they were improperly admitted in evidence, for the reason that they are not promissory notes, and if the indorsements are to be treated as an assignment of the chose in action, it should have been alleged in the declaration, and further, that there was no evidence that the plaintiff was the owner of the notes sued upon. Both briefs indicate that the question considered most important, if not decisive of the case, is that of the negotiability of the notes. The instruments—to the end of the fourth line—are in form promissory notes. If there were nothing more, they would be as perfect and complete promissory notes as it is possible to make. The writing proceeds to state the consideration for said notes, which, though not essential, was harmless. Wright v. Irwin, 33 Mich. 32.

This is followed by the statement that the parties agree that the title to the property for which the notes were given shall remain in the payee, who, in case of nonpayment at maturity of either of said notes, may "enter and retain immediate possession of the property, without process of law, wherever it may be, and remove the same." If it can be said that this writing shows a sale of the soda fountain, as contradistinguished from a contract to sell, the provisions as to title amount to no more than a chattel mortgage. Mr. Justice Harlan said in the case of Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 136 43 L. R. A.

U. S. 286, 34 L. ed. 349. "The fact that by agreement the title is to remain in the vendor of personal property, until the notes for the purchase price are paid, does not necessarily import that the transaction was a conditional sale." In that case the court was able to find from the evidence that the parties intended to effect a sale, and that the title reserved was merely the title of a mortgagee. The distinguished jurist added that "each case must depend upon its special circumstances," which proposition is emphasized by the case of Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 30 L. ed. 285, where the facts were held to show a conditional, and not an absolute, sale. If we can place this construction on the transaction, i. e., that it was a sale, there is no difficulty in sustaining the negotiability of this note under our own decisions. See Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562, 35 L. R. A. 536; Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580, 35 L. R. A. 544.

The record shows that the soda fountain was furnished under a written contract, and that these notes were given some days later after delivery, in accordance with its terms. If we were to consider the provisions of this contract, we should not hesitate to say that this was a sale with a reservation of title by way of security. As said in Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562, 35 L. R. A. 536, there are cases which hold that a contemporaneous writing may be examined to determine the negotiability or non-negotiability of a note. See cases cited.

While perhaps this contract is not strictly a contemporaneous writing, it was one of the surrounding circumstances under which the notes were made. But we find it unnecessary to pass upon that question, as we think the same is implied by the notes. These being negotiable notes, a declaration upon the common counts was sufficient, under our well-settled rule. The judge allowed the jury to consider defendants' right to damage by way of recoupment, and, apparently, such damages were allowed. We think the ownership established. No question appears to have been raised at the trial over the genuineness of the indorsement.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

John E. CARLAND
v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The abandonment of common counts makes the failure to elect between them and others immaterial.
2. An action for breach of the contract of a telegraph company may be brought in assumpsit, and need not be ex delicto.

NOTE.—As to delivery of telegraph messages to company by telephone, see also People, Calro Teleph. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Ill.) 36 L. R. A. 637.

3. The sender of a telephone message to the agent in charge of a telegraph office, with directions to send it by telegraph, does not make such agent his agent, although the telegraph company requires all messages to be given to the agent in writing, unless that fact is known to the sender.
4. The meaning of a cipher telegram may be proved by the person who sent it.
5. A statement by a telegraph agent to the sender of a message, that it has not been delivered, made as a report of his efforts to trace the telegram, is admissible as against the telegraph company to show the fact of nondelivery.
6. Testimony as to the price of wheat at a certain market, by one who testifies that he knew what it was, is sufficient to go to the jury.

(October 18, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Shiawassee County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for neglect to promptly transmit and deliver a telegram. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John T. McCurdy, for plaintiff in error:

Suits against telegraph companies can be maintained only on the grounds of negligence.

Negligence must not only be alleged.

Western U. Tele. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525; Birkett v. Western U. Tele. Co. 103 Mich. 367, 33 L. R. A. 404.

But such negligence must be proved by the party asserting it.

Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51, 40 Am. Rep. 453; Smith v. American Exp. Co. 108 Mich. 573.

The declaration failed to state a cause of action. Such objection was properly made at the trial of the cause.

Devereaux v. Hubbard (Mich.) 5 Det. L. N. 165.

If the declaration states a cause of action, it can only be upon the theory that it contains two counts: (1) A count in assumpsit, and (2) a count on the case. If this be so, the two counts cannot properly be joined.

Friend v. Dunks, 37 Mich. 25, 39 Mich. 733; Schafer v. Boyce, 41 Mich. 256; Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

The misjoinder should have been disposed of at the outset of the trial, and plaintiff made to choose between them, instead of being allowed to go over the whole range of testimony without doing so.

Ives v. Williams, 53 Mich. 636.

Young acted without any authority from the company, and not as its agent, but as the agent of the plaintiff, and with a desire to accommodate him.

Young's actions and statements in carrying out plaintiff's instructions are in no wise binding upon the defendant company, for a principal cannot be held liable for the acts of an agent performed outside the scope of his authority.

Mechem, Agency, §§ 740, 741; Haggerty v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 59 Mich. 366, 60 Am. Rep. 301; Taylor v. Downey, 104 Mich. 534, 43 L. R. A.

29 L. R. A. 92; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Foster, 64 Tex. 220, 53 Am. Rep. 754.

The wording of the telegram in question is ambiguous, and capable of being variously construed.

Plaintiff's testimony that it instructed the G. W. Wylie Company to buy 3,000 bushels of wheat for May delivery is inadmissible.

Palmer v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co. 32 Mich. 274; McElroy v. Buck, 35 Mich. 434; Hall v. Soule, 11 Mich. 494.

The agent of the telegraph company who at the request of the sender of the message, or under and by his direction, writes it out, acts in that capacity (of writing the message) as the agent of the sender.

Western U. Tele. Co. v. Edsall, 63 Tex. 668; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Foster, 64 Tex. 220, 53 Am. Rep. 754; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Geer, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 349; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Phillips, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 608; Giren v. Western U. Tele. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 119; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Harding, 103 Ind. 505; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Terrell, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 60; Stamey v. Western U. Tele. Co. 92 Ga. 613; Beasley v. Western U. Tele. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 181; Carroll v. Southern Exp. Co. 37 S. C. 452.

The conditions contained in the contract or agreement, on the back of the blank, as to delay and failure to deliver, are valid.

Western U. Tele. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525; Birkett v. Western U. Tele. Co. 103 Mich. 361, 33 L. R. A. 404.

The courts have held that a telegraph company has the right to stipulate that all claims on account of faults in its service shall be presented within a reasonable time after the service is performed.

Western U. Tele. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Dougherty, 54 Ark. 221, 11 L. R. A. 102; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Dunfield, 11 Colo. 335; Western U. Tele. Co. v. James, 90 Ga. 254; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Yopst, 118 Ind. 248, 3 L. R. A. 224; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Trumbull, 1 Ind. App. 121; Young v. Western U. Tele. Co. 65 N. Y. 165; Sherrill v. Western U. Tele. Co. 109 N. C. 527; Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 269, 22 L. ed. 558; Webbe v. Western U. Tele. Co. 64 Ill. App. 331; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Beck, 58 Ill. App. 564; Lester v. Western U. Tele. Co. 84 Tex. 313.

Messrs. Watson & Chapman, for defendant in error:

This is an action upon a simple contract, and is therefore properly an action in assumpsit.

1 Green, Pr. 67.

There is a special assumpsit upon which actions may be brought for the recovery of a mutual promise, either oral or written, expressed or implied.

1 Chitty, Pl. *111.

The agent is in the office for the transaction of that business, and the information that he gives a customer as to whether the message has been delivered or not is certainly just as binding upon the company as it is when he informs him of the price of the message, or undertakes to send the same; the company cannot escape its liability by saying that its agent had some secret instructions.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 350.

The question as to whether or not this was a gambling contract was properly submitted to the jury.

Gregory v. Wendell, 39 Mich. 337, 33 Am. Rep. 390, 40 Mich. 432.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's action was brought to recover damages from the defendant for its failure to promptly transmit and deliver a telegram, whereby the plaintiff is said to have suffered a loss. The record contains testimony tending to show that the plaintiff, a merchant, residing at Corunna, called the office of the defendant at that place by telephone. Mr. Young, defendant's agent, responded, whereupon the plaintiff asked him to take a message, which he did. The message was as follows, viz.:

Corunna, Mich., Jan. 25, 1898.

To G. W. Wylie Company, 145 Van Buren Street, Chicago, Ill.

Buy three May. John E. Carland.

It was intended to be understood to mean "Buy three thousand bushels of May wheat." After waiting twenty-four hours without response to his message, the plaintiff called the defendant's office by telephone, and was answered by Mr. Read, Young's assistant, who, in response to his inquiry, assured him that the message was sent. Twenty-four hours later the plaintiff called upon Young, who said he would trace the message, and he reported later that the message was never received at the Chicago office, and a duplicate of the message was sent on January 28. The testimony tended to prove further that the price of wheat advanced meantime, and plaintiff's agent was obliged to pay a higher price than would have been necessary had the first message been sent promptly. A verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has brought the case to this court by writ of error.

The action was commenced before a justice of the peace. The docket shows that:

"Plaintiff declared orally on all matters provable under the common counts in assumpsit, and especially on a contract with said defendant, and files a written memorandum of said contract, and claims damages three hundred dollars or under.

"Written Memoranda of Plaintiff's Declaration Herein: Plaintiff says that heretofore, to wit, on the 25th day of January, A. D. 1898, said defendant was, and still is, a telegraph company and corporation engaged in the telegraph business, and were common carriers of telegraph messages. And on, to wit, the 25th day of January, 1898, said defendant undertook, for a valuable consideration, to wit, 40 cents, to convey and deliver for said plaintiff a telegraph message to G. 43 L. R. A.

W. Wylie & Co., No. 145 Van Buren street, Chicago, Ill., which message was as follows:

Corunna, Mich., Jan. 25th, 1898.

To G. W. Wylie & Co., 145 Van Buren Street, Chicago, Ill.

Buy three May.

J. E. Carland.

— which message instructed G. W. Wylie to purchase for said plaintiff three thousand bushels of wheat, to be delivered to said plaintiff on May first. And said defendant, by its contract with said plaintiff, owed said plaintiff a duty to deliver said telegram promptly, and without unnecessary delay. But, notwithstanding such contract and duty, said defendant wholly failed to deliver said telegram in any manner, and wholly failed and neglected so to do, and on account of such failure and neglect of said defendant said plaintiff was deprived of and lost large gain and profits on said wheat which the said George W. Wylie would have purchased for this plaintiff, and said plaintiff was deprived of the opportunity of purchasing said wheat on said 25th day of January, 1898, and on account of which said plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $300, for the recovery of which this suit is brought. J. E. Carland."

Several assignments of error relate to the declaration, it being claimed that it does not state a cause of action; that there is a misjoinder of counts; that the addamnum clause being $300, was fatal to the jurisdiction of the justice; and that, if none of these points are valid, the court should have compelled an election of counts.

It is manifest from the record that the plaintiff did not recover upon the common counts, and that there being nothing in the case that tended to support them they were practically abandoned, and an election would have been an empty form. The special count appears to have been intended as a count in assumpsit for the breach of a contract, and not a count in case for a negligent injury in the nature of a tort. See Tiffany, Justice's Guide, 183. It follows that, being a count in assumpsit, it was properly joined with the common counts, as "all causes of actions enforceable in assumpsit may be joined." 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 169.

But it is contended that there can be no recovery in assumpsit in such cases, and that the action must be case for a breach of duty, and not assumpsit for breach of contract. Counsel say that the "gist of these actions is negligence," quoting the language of Mr. Justice Grant in Birkett v. Western U. Tele. Co. 103 Mich. 367, 33 L. R. A. 404. We think counsel has misinterpreted this language, and that there is nothing in that case which compels one having contract relations with a telegraph company to forego an action of assumpsit upon breach of the contract, and resort to an action ex delicto. It was true that negligence was the gist of that action, because the conditions which were made a part of the contract made it es-essential to recovery. In this case the plaintiff's claim is that the usual conditions are not a part of the contract. "Where the sender can show that through the negligence of the company in transmitting or delivering a message he has suffered a legal injury, there can be no question as to his right to sue for damages, and this whether the right of action be regarded as resting in contract, or in tort for the breach of public duty." Gray, Telegraphs, § 84; [Playford v. United Kingdom Electric Teleg. Co.] L. R. 4 Q. B. 706, 10 Best & S. 759; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 824. Again: "The action is properly one ex contractu, and based on the contract of sending." 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 830. In the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525, cited by counsel, the action was assumpsit, and, though the case was reversed, the court seems to have recognized the propriety of the form of action by ordering a new trial. There may be cases where an action upon contract would not be appropriate, as where the plaintiff was not a party to the contract. In actions brought by a person to whom the message is addressed, some of the courts so hold. This is so in England, where the rule is strictly enforced, but in this country there is a want of harmony upon the subject. See 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 824.

This also disposes of the jurisdictional question, as the statute (2 How. Anno. Stat. § 6814) confers concurrent jurisdiction upon justices of the peace in all civil actions upon contract where the debt or damages do not exceed $300. The declaration was entitled to the liberal treatment which the courts accord to pleadings in justice court, and sufficiently set forth the alleged contract, and its breach, to apprise the defendant of the plaintiff's claim. This also disposes of the objection made to the introduction of the depositions.

A number of questions relate to the alleged contract. It is contended that the contract to send the message was subject to the conditions which the defendant usually imposes upon its patrons; that Young was, by the plaintiff, made his agent to write the telegram upon the blank containing the conditions; and that receiving a message upon any other terms than such conditions would be outside of the scope of Young's authority. Young, being the person in charge of the defendant's business, and authorized to receive telegrams, was acting within the general scope of his authority in so doing, and the plaintiff was not bound, at his peril, to ascertain the secret instructions that the defendant had given in relation thereto. In Maryland some recognition has been given to the defendant's contention by cases which hold that the sender of a message must be supposed to be informed in regard to the rules and regulations of the telegraph company, but the weight of authority is to the contrary. See Thompson, Electricity, §§ 211, 212, for a discussion of this subject; also, 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 804; Beasley v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 181. But, while this is true, if the plaintiff had knowledge of the rules and regulations under which the defendant did business, he would be bound by them so far as they were valid and binding upon others, and it was a question for a jury to determine whether he had such knowledge or not, if a question in the case. Should it be said that Young, in receiving by telephone and writing such message, was the agent of the plaintiff? We are cited to several cases holding that the operator is such agent, under somewhat similar circumstances. Thus, in the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Edsall, 63 Tex. 677, where, at the request of the sender of the message, it was written by the operator upon a blank of the company, which the sender signed, it was held that the operator was, as to that message and its preparation, the agent of the sender. The court said: "Evidently the operator, in the preparation of messages, was acting for the appellee, and not the company. True, he was the agent of the company to receive and forward messages, but not to write messages for others." This case was followed in the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Foster, 64 Tex. 220, 53 Am. Rep. 754. In that case the sender wrote the message, and, upon its being read over by the clerk, he (the sender) detected a mistake in it, and the clerk undertook to correct it by an interlineation, which he made in a wrong place. The court held that he was not acting within the scope of his authority, and was the agent of the sender. In a still later case the Texas court of civil appeals has sustained this doctrine. See Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Geer, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 349. The original message, written upon a piece of brown paper, was rejected by the operator, as unintelligible, and by him handed back to the person sent by the plaintiff to deliver the same. Plaintiff's messenger stated to the operator that he was hot and nervous, and asked the operator to write down the message. He wrote it, on a telegraphic blank, as dictated, and sent it. It was held that the operator, in the preparation of the message, was acting for the sender, and not the company, and that the plaintiff could not, therefore, complain of his act in writing the message upon the form commonly used for the purpose, and that the conditions upon the blank were binding upon the sender. It seems to us that in the cases cited the Texas court went too far if it took judicial notice that the scope of the agent's authority did not permit him to write messages for those desiring to send them, who, from infirmity, were incapacitated from writing the same, or were, from ignorance, unable to do so. The law does not forbid such authority, nor does it make it the duty of the sender to write the message. If the rules of the company forbade it, there is nothing in the case to show that the fact was brought home to the knowledge of the patron, and the rule would have no greater force than any other of which he was ignorant. We cannot conclude, in the absence of proof, that the telegraph companies expect their operators to turn away patrons who cannot write, or that they keep telephones in their office, but do not permit their use in their business by their patrons who send and receive messages. And we are of the opinion that such use should not be altogether at the peril of the patron, or that he should suffer for mistakes made at either end of the line, merely because such are the instructions to the operator, or made the subject of a rule of which the patron has no knowledge. It would seem more reasonable to hold such acts to be within the general scope of his authority, or, at least, hold it to be a question for a jury. There is sufficient justification for the decisions in the Edsall Case without invoking such a rule, for the sender signed the message upon the blank, thus making it his own, under the current weight of authority that so holds, although the conditions be not read. 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 805, and cases cited in note 1. So, in the case of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Geer, the message was written upon the blank by request. The Foster Case more nearly sustains plaintiff's contention. We are cited to no authorities in support of the Texas cases. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the court committed no error in holding that Mr. Young acted as agent for the defendant, under the proofs contained in the record; and might properly have instructed the jury that he was not shown to have acted as agent for the plaintiff.

It is urged that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to testify to the meaning of the words used in the despatch, viz.: "Buy three May." Counsel cite some authorities supporting the doctrine that such evidence is not admissible where the statute of frauds has application, but no such question is raised here. There was no contract with the Wylie Company; merely a request to purchase something. If the language had a secret meaning, it was proper to show the fact. Ciphers play an important part in business affairs, and we see no reason why they are not as proper subjects for translation as foreign languages.

The defendant asserts further that there was no competent evidence that the telegram was not delivered. Young stated such fact to the plaintiff before sending the duplicate message, and we think this was an act within the scope of his authority, and a part of this transaction. As it is not in any way contradicted, it is unnecessary to inquire whether the testimony of the Chicago witnesses upon the same subject was admissible or not. We are of the opinion that the court did not err in leaving the question of the price of wheat at Chicago to the jury. The plaintiff testified that he knew what it was, and his cross-examination did not show that he had no knowledge upon the subject.

It is contended further that this telegram was sent in furtherance of a gambling contract, which would have been void under the statute, and that damages for a failure to deliver it cannot be recovered. 3 How. Anno. Stat. § 9354f, prohibits the purchase and sale of grain, etc., on margins for future or optional delivery, without any intention of receiving or paying for the property so bought or sold. If this claim were conclusively proved, so that we could find the fact as alleged, we should have no doubt that the plaintiff's action must fail; but this is a disputed fact. The plaintiff testified that such an arrangement was not contemplated, and that he expected to pay for and receive the grain. We have no occasion to express our opinion of the matter. There was evidence for the jury, and the responsibility of justly determining this fact was theirs. Every contract for a future delivery of grain is not a gambling contract. It is only when the parties mutually understand it to be such and no actual sale or purchase or contemplated delivery is involved, and where the one is to pay and the other receive the amount of fluctuations in the market, that this statute applies. It is the pretended, and not the actual, buying and selling of grain, etc., that is prohibited. An extended discussion of this subject will be found in 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1006 et seq. The subject is also fully discussed by Mr. Justice Marston in Gregory v. Wendell, 39 Mich. 338, 33 Am. Rep. 390, and later, upon another review of the same case, by Mr. Justice Cooley. See 40 Mich. 435.

The judgment is affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Elmer RUNYAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY of New Jersey.

(.....N. J.....)

1. Upon a ticket delivered by a common carrier of passengers to one of *Headnotes by MCGILL, C.

NOTE.—As to the right of a passenger to carry packages into a passenger car. see also Bullock v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (N. J.) 87 L. R. A. 417.

• 43 L. R. A.

its passengers, upon the payment of his fare, was printed: "Good for one continuous passage in either direction between New York and Elizabeth, N. J." "No stop-off allowed." "Free transportation allowed for 150 lbs. baggage (wearing apparel) only, and company's liability expressly limited to $1 per lb." It is, that the reference to baggage was notice of the limit of accommodation and responsibility, upon the part of the carrier, the passenger might have with respect to baggage committed to the custody of the carrier, and did not restrict or in any way affect the common-law right of the passenger to carry personal baggage with him.

2. The common-law right of such a passenger is to take with him his personal baggage appropriate to the journey and its object: that is, not only wearing apparel for use and ornament, but other articles, all within reasonable limit, the use of which is personal to him during his journey and in accomplishing its purposes.

3. If a common carrier of passengers for a long time acquiesces in and makes accommodation for the carriage of small packages of merchandise of its passengers in its passenger cars as personal baggage, so as to lead the passengers to accept and rely upon its attitude in that respect as one of its regulations, it can resume its rights under the law only after reasonable notice of its rescission of the regulation so made.
4. A passenger, refused admission to such a carrier's cars because he proposes to take with him a small package of merchandise, may put in evidence the regulation aforesaid as a step in his proofs, upon suit brought on account of such refusal of admission.

(Depue, Gummere, Hendrickson, and Nixon, JJ., dissent.)

(September 28, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Union County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for alleged breach of contract to carry plaintiff on defendant's train. Reversed.

Statement by McGill, C.:

The plaintiff in error was the plaintiff below. He was nonsuited in the circuit court, and now assigns error in that nonsuit, and in the overruling of two questions at the trial, to which reference will presently be made. The facts in proof are as follows: Elmer Runyan, a resident of the city of Elizabeth, and the president and treasurer of a nursery company there, on the 30th of December, 1896, went to New York City on the railway of the defendant, a common carrier of passengers. He paid the fare demanded by the defendant's ticket agent for an excursion trip to New York and return, and received from that agent a ticket in two parts. The part concerned in this inquiry was denominated the "Return Coupon," and contained these announcements: "Good for one continuous passage in either direction between New York and Elizabeth, N. J." "No stop-off allowed." "Free transportation allowed for 150 lbs. baggage (wearing apparel) only, and company's liability expressly limited to $1 per lb. When he started on his journey, it was wet, and he wore a pair of rubber shoes. It does not appear whether or not he took any baggage with him from Elizabeth. In New York he purchased 10 pounds of nails. The purpose of this purchase does not appear. Between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening he had with him a satchel containing a pair of gloves and some catalogues and papers pertaining to his business, which had been in use by him, and also two small packages, one of which contained the nails he had purchased, and the other a letter file and the rubber shoes he had worn from Elizabeth in the morning. At the ferry house he exhibited to the gate keeper his "Return Coupon." It does not appear that the gate keeper saw the satchel and bundles. The coupon was punched by the gate keeper, and he was permitted to pass upon the ferryboat, and cross the river on it, without interference, to the defendant's train shed, where, as he was about to pass through a gate to the cars for Elizabeth, the defendant's agents refused to permit him to enter with his satchel and packages. Retaining the bundles, after some delay, he walked along the defendant's tracks a mile or more, to another station of defendant, called Communipaw, followed by the defendant's agents, and there paid the proper fare to the defendant's ticket agent for his transportation from Communipaw to Newark, and received a ticket containing these notices: "Good for one passage from Communipaw, N. J., to Newark, N. J., on a continuous train. Only 150 lbs. baggage (wearing apparel) allowed each passenger. Company's responsibility for baggage limited to $1 per lb. unless special agreement be made." Shortly thereafter he attempted to enter a proper train from Communipaw to Newark, and, because he still retained his satchel and packages, was refused admission, and forced, by the defendant's agents, from the steps of the car. He then paid another fare to the defendant's ticket agent for his transportation from Communipaw to Elizabeth, and received a ticket containing these announcements: "Good for one continuous passage in either direction between Communipaw, N. J., and Elizabeth, N. J." "No stop-off allowed." "Only 150 lbs baggage (wearing apparel) allowed each passenger. Company's responsibility for baggage limited to $1 per lb., unless special agreement be made." Thereupon he offered his satchel to the defendant's baggage master at Communipaw, and asked that it be checked as baggage to Elizabeth. He was asked to tell what it contained, but refused to do so. The satchel, however, was duly checked, and taken in charge by the defendant, and ultimately carried by it to Elizabeth. The plaintiff retained the two packages, and attempted to enter a proper train of cars for Elizabeth, but was prevented by the defendant's agents from so doing because he had the packages with him. The plaintiff declares, in several counts, upon the contracts for transportation evidenced by the three tickets above mentioned, and alleges, as the breaches of the contracts, refusal to transport him with baggage. His insistence is that it was his right, under the circumstances of the case, to be transported together with the satchel and packages he had, which he kept in his possession and proposed to retain during his journey. During his examination at the trial, he was asked by his counsel these questions, which were objected to by the defendant's counsel, and overruled by the trial court: "Q. Had you been accustomed to travel between Elizabeth and New York?" "Q. Do you know whether or not the cars—passenger cars—on the Central Railroad, running between New York and Elizabeth, have any provision for small packages in connection with the seats?"

circuit courts if in some counties the two courts have concurrent jurisdiction in a large class of cases and the Constitution provides that laws relating to courts shall have general and uniform operation throughout the state, and that the practice of all courts of the same class or grade so far as regulated by law shall be uniform.

6. County and circuit courts are, so far as their jurisdiction is concurrent, courts of the same grade or class within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring laws relating to such courts and regulating their practice to be general and uniform throughout the state.

(November 28, 1897.)

ON MOTION to dismiss an appeal by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hutchinson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain property. Motion denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. J. Hooper for appellant.

Mr. Wellington Brown for respondent.

Corson, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes before us on a motion to dismiss the appeal. The action was one in claim and delivery, brought in a justice's court, and appealed to the circuit court, in which latter court a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and from which the defendant appealed. The jury in the circuit court found the value of the personal property described in plaintiff's complaint to be $18, and a judgment was thereupon entered "that plaintiff recover of the defendant possession of the property or the value thereof, to wit, $18, in case a recovery cannot be had," and costs, taxed at $86.80. The motion to dismiss the appeal is made upon the ground that under the provisions of chapter 55, Laws 1897, no appeal lies to this court from the circuit court in this class of cases, and hence, since the passage of said act, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal. The appellant resists the motion on two grounds:

(1) That the law of 1897 is void, for the reason that it is in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution of this state; (2) that it does not appear from the appellant's abstract when the appeal was taken, and, there being no additional abstract, the court cannot presume that the appeal was taken since the act of 1897 took effect, and that, if taken before, this court has jurisdiction.

The 1st section of the act of 1897 provides that § 5213, Comp. Laws, shall be amended so as to read as follows: "No appeal shall be allowed or be taken from any judgment rendered by the circuit courts of this state either upon a verdict of a jury or by the court, to the supreme court in any action for the recovery of money where the amount recovered shall be seventy-five dollars ($75) or less, or in any action for the recovery of personal property when the personal property sought to be recovered is of the value of seventy-five dollars ($75) or less." Section 3 provides that all "judgments" rendered in the cases specified in § 43 L. R. A.

2 "shall be final, and no appeal shall be allowed from said judgment or judgments to the supreme court." Section 4 repeals all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of that act. And § 5 contains an emergency clause, and provides that the act shall take effect from and after its passage and approval. The act was approved February 4, 1897. The only sections of the Constitution bearing upon this subject are §§ 2 and 18 of article 5, which read as follows:

"Sec. 2. The supreme court, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be co-extensive with the state, and shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law."

"Sec. 18. Writs of error and appeals may be allowed from the decisions of the circuit courts to the supreme court under such regulations as may be prescribed by law."

Whether the qualifying clause "under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law" applies to the first clause relating to appellate jurisdiction, as well as to the clause relating to the general superintending control of inferior courts, as contended by counsel for respondent, we do not deem it necessary to decide, for the reason that that section does not attempt to define or prescribe in what cases an appeal may be taken to the supreme court. The object and purpose of the section seems to be to define and limit the jurisdiction of the supreme court, and not in any manner define the class of cases in which an appeal might be taken. The language of the section, defining and limiting the jurisdiction of the supreme court, cannot, by any fair construction, be held to confer upon parties the right of appeal in all cases of which the supreme court has been given jurisdiction. This construction of § 2 is much strengthened by the provisions of § 18, above quoted. That section is important because the framers of the Constitution were in that section treating specially of circuit courts. By it they provided that "writs of error and appeals may be allowed . . . under such regulation as may be prescribed by law." The word "may" is evidently used in that section in its proper sense, as permissive, and not in the sense of must or shall. Again, by § 20 of the same article it is provided that "writs of error and appeals may be allowed from county to circuit courts, or to the supreme court, in such cases and in such manner as may be prescribed by law." If the contention of respondent is correct, that by § 2 appellate jurisdiction is given in all cases to the supreme court, neither § 18 nor § 20 would be necessary, except so far as they might provide for the manner in which an appeal should be taken. The authority to allow appeals would be nugatory. It is quite clear from the provisions of §§ 18 and 20 that the framers of the fundamental law intended to leave the power over the subject of appeals to the legislature, to be exercised in such manner as public policy and the best interests of the people might require. The constitutional policy seems to have been not to specify or fix absolutely the class of cases in which appeals should be allowed, but to leave to the legislature discretion over the subject. The provisions of § 20 of article 6 in the Bill of Rights that "all courts shall be open, and every man, for an injury done him in his property, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and right and justice administered without denial or delay," are satisfied by a trial in a court of competent jurisdiction, in which the right to trial by jury, in proper cases, is afforded, as provided in § 6 of article 6. None of the provisions of the Constitution prohibit the legislature from limiting appeals to a defined class of cases, and prescribing at what stage and in what court ordinary litigation shall end. The right to an appeal is not a common-law right, but depends upon the statute, when not specially granted by the Constitution. 2 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 16; Black Hills Plume & Min. Co. v. Grand Island & W. C. R. Co. 2 S. D. 546.

One further consideration may be added, and that is that a court only regards itself authorized to declare an act of the legislature unconstitutional when it is satisfied that it is clearly so, or, as some courts have expressed it, when its unconstitutionality is beyond a reasonable doubt,—language used by this court in some of its decisions. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the act of 1897 is constitutional and valid.

This brings us to a consideration of the second question. The act of 1897, it will be observed, contains no reservations or exceptions as to appeals previously taken or pending at the time the act took effect, and hence it is not material whether the appeal was taken before or after the law was approved. It seems to be well settled that, if a law conferring jurisdiction is repealed without any reservation as to pending cases, all such cases fall with the law, and, of course, where the law conferring the right of appeal is partially repealed. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Grant, 98 U. S. 398, 25 L. ed. 231; Ex parte McCordle, 7 Wall. 514, 19 L. ed. 205; United States v. Boisdore, 8 How. 113, 12 L. ed. 1009; McNulty v. Batty, 10 How. 72, 13 L. ed. 533; Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. 429, 14 L. ed. 210; The Assessors v. Orsborne, 9 Wall. 567, 19 L. ed. 748; United States v. Tynen, 11 Wall. 88, 20 L. ed. 153; Callahan v. Jennings, 16 Colo. 471; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 474. This appeal appearing from appellant's abstract to have been taken from a judgment "in an action for the recovery of personal property when the personal property sought to be recovered is of the value" of less than $75, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal. That the appeal is still pending in this court, undisposed of, is a fact of which the court will take judicial notice. Searls v. Knapp, 5 3d. D. 325.

The appeal is dismissed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Corson, P. J., on May 21, 1898, handed down the following response:

Respondent moved to dismiss the appeal in this case upon the ground that, under the 43 L. R. A.

provisions of chapter 55, Laws 1897, no appeal lies from the judgment appealed from. The motion was granted, and the opinion on the motion is reported in 10 S. D. 332. A petition for a rehearing was filed, calling the attention of the court to section 34, art. 5, of the state Constitution, which was not considered by the court on the motion to dismiss. A rehearing was granted, and the question of the constitutionality of the act of 1897, in view of the provisions of § 34, will now be considered. The section reads as follows: "All laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state, and the organization, jurisdiction, power, proceedings and practice of all of the courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, and the force and effect of the proceedings, judgments and decrees of such courts severally shall be uniform; provided, however, that the legislature may classify the county courts according to the population of the respective counties and fix the jurisdiction and salary of the judges thereof, accordingly." Appellant contends that the act of 1897, being expressly limited to appeals from judgments of the circuit court and not including county courts, which in two counties—Minnehaha and Lawrence—have concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court in a large class of cases, is clearly in conflict with the provisions of § 34, above quoted. He argues that parties living in the two counties named still have the right to appeal from any judgment rendered in the county courts of those counties, without regard to amount of judgment or value of property claimed, while in the same class of cases, tried and determined in the circuit court of those and other counties of the state, parties are denied the right of appeal unless the judgment or value of the property exceeds a fixed sum. He further contends that circuit and county courts, so far as their jurisdiction is concurrent, are, within the meaning of the Constitution, courts of the same class or grade, and that all laws relating to such courts must be general and uniform throughout the state. The respondent insists that the term, "courts of the same class or grade," should be construed as applicable only to each class of courts provided by the Constitution, and not to two or more classes named.

We are inclined to the view presented by appellant. By § 6, chap. 78, Laws 1890, county courts had conferred upon them concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit courts in a large class of cases therein specified, limited to the amount therein specified; and by § 11 of the same act concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit courts, in all appeals from justice courts, was conferred upon them. These sections are still in force in the two counties named, and hence, in a large class of cases, both the county and circuit courts have concurrent jurisdiction in those two counties. It would seem clear, therefore, that, in so far as they have such concurrent jurisdiction, they are "courts of the same class or grade." It would be a too restricted construction of the Constitution to hold that § 34 only applies to some one class of the courts named in the Constitution; that is, either circuit courts, county courts, justices' courts, or supreme courts. It is not by the name, but by the jurisdiction, that we are to determine whether or not courts are of the same class or grade. If, then, to the extent that circuit and county courts have concurrent jurisdiction, they are courts of the same class or grade, it is manifest that the provisions of § 34, art. 5, of the Constitution, have not been complied with in the enactment of the law of 1897. As before stated, parties whose cases have been tried in the county courts of the two counties specified may still appeal to this court in all cases, while parties in those counties or other counties of the state are denied the right of appeal in the same class of cases, unless the judgment exceeds the amount specified, or the property claimed is of a specified value. The law of 1897 is therefore not general or uniform, and bears unequally on different classes of citizens in the same county. Furthermore, the law of 1897 discriminates between citizens of different counties, denying the citizens of other counties of the state rights of appeal that are conferred upon the citizens of Minnehaha and Lawrence counties, in a similar class of cases. Such a law cannot be deemed general or uniform. The constitutionality of a similar law to that of 1897 was recently before the supreme court of Illinois in the case of Dawson v. Eustice, 148 Ill. 346. It would appeal from the decision that county courts in that state generally, as here, have jurisdiction of estate matters, with the right of appeal to the circuit courts; but a law was enacted creating probate courts in counties containing 100,000 population or over, conferring jurisdiction in estate matters, and providing that appeals might be taken directly to the supreme court of the state. That learned court held that the two courts were of "the same class or grade," and that so much of the probate act as conferred a right of appeal directly to the supreme court was unconstitutional, and the appeal was therefore dismissed. Kingsbury v. Sperry, 119 Ill. 279. The constitutional provision of that state seems to be the one from which § 34, art. 5, was copied, except that the proviso was added to our section. The county courts of Minnehaha and Lawrence counties, to the extent that their jurisdiction is concurrent with circuit courts, must be regarded as courts of the same class or grade, and laws relating thereto must be general and uniform. Chapter 55, Laws 1897, being in conflict with the provisions of § 34, art. 5, of the state Constitution, we are compelled to hold the provisions of that act null and void.

The decision of the court granting the motion to dismiss the appeal is disaffirmed, and the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Vermont
v.

William N. THERIAULT.

(.....Vt.....)

The owner of land over which a brook flows is not deprived of property without compensation by Stat. § 4568, allowing fish and game commissioners to place fish in the stream to prohibit fishing therein for not more than three years, and by other provisions that make the waters public for at least five years longer, but such provisions are justified by Const. art. 5, chap. 1, as a regulation of the internal police, and chap. 2, § 40, giving the inhabitants of the state the right to fish "in all boatable and other waters (not private property) under proper regulations to be hereafter made and provided by the general assembly."

(Thompson, J., dissents.)

(July 20, 1898.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to a ruling of the Montpelier City Court holding sufficient a complaint charging defendant with fishing in Hale brook in which fishing had been prohibited in accordance with the statutes upon that subject. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—As to governmental control of right of fishery, see also People v. Truckee Lumber Co. (Cal.) 39 L. R. A. 581.
43 L. R. A.

Mr. John H. Senter, for defendant:

This statute empowers the fish commissioners to take possession of any man's private streams of water that are not boatable and without his consent stock them with the various kinds of fish mentioned in § 4565, Vt. Stat. and to post them and to advertise in some newspaper that such streams of water are closed to fishing for the term of three years, and then that such streams of water shall become public, and not private, waters for five years.

They thus take the property of the land-owners and change it from private ownership and make it by this statute subject to the public jurisdiction, and give the public the same rights by thus stocking and posting such streams after the expiration of three years as they have in boatable and public waters elsewhere in the state.

Simply because Mr. Hale in this case has given his license or consent to the posting of this stream, will not make an unconstitutional statute a constitutional one.

New England Trout & S. Club v. Mather, 68 Vt. 338, 33 L. R. A. 569.

Messrs. F. A. Howland and F. L. Fish, for the State:

By virtue of the police power of the state, the legislature had the authority to make the law in question, and it may be enforced against all parties in cases like this, the owners of such streams included.

This stream is private property.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 60; Angell, Watercourses, §§ 10, 11; Gould, Watercourses, § 46.

Where each proprietor's rights are connected with those of every other and the waters flow into boatable water, the right becomes semi-public.

1 Bishop, New Crim. L. § 1130.

The fish in streams or bodies of water are not the private property of anyone until caught.

People v. Bridges, 142 Ill. 30, 16 L. R. A. 684; State v. Lewis, 134 Ind. 250, 20 L. R. A. 52; Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 409.

The right to regulate the times and manner of taking fish from private as well as public waters has long been recognized. This right arises under the police power of the states.

Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, 19 Am. Rep. 140; State v. Randolph, 1 Mo. App. 15; People v. Collison, 85 Mich. 105; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386; Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 409; Angell, Watercourses, § 65a, p. 71, and notes; State v. Roberts, 59 N. H. 256, 47 Am. Rep. 199; Chase v. Baker, 59 N. H. 347; Randolph, Em. Dom. § 430; Stuttsman v. State, 57 Ind. 119; State v. Boone, 30 Ind. 225; Com. v. Look, 108 Mass. 452; Com. v. Vincent, 108 Mass. 441; Vinton v. Welsh, 9 Pick. 87; State v. Blount, 85 Mo. 543; State v. Beal, 75 Me. 289; Maney v. State, 6 Lea, 218; State v. Franklin Falls Co. 49 N. H. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 513; Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 320; Com. v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 22 L. R. A. 439; Com. v. Essex County, 13 Gray, 247; State, Weller, v. Snover, 42 N. J. L. 341; Inland Fisheries Comrs. v. Holyoke Water-Power Co. 104 Mass. 446; Holyoke Water-Power Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 21 L. ed. 133; Lawton v. Steel, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, p. 451.

This regulation or law is within the general scope and meaning of that authority.

The state having an interest in the fish of all waters of the kind specified in the case, its officers may go upon all premises where such fish are for their protection and preservation.

State, Weller, v. Snover, 42 N. J. L. 341.

Whether the rights of the proprietor in his private stream in respect to fishing exist by virtue of § 40 of art. 2 of the Constitution of Vermont by any other provision of the Constitution, or by virtue of the common law, in no case can they be said to be infringed by the provisions of the act in question.

State v. Norton, 45 Vt. 258; Drew v. Hilliker, 56 Vt. 641.

One is not deprived of his property by laws which fix the periods within which fish may be taken.

Randolph, Em. Dom. § 430; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 84; License Cases, 5 How. 583, 12 L. ed. 291; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 717; Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 409; State v. Mrozinski, 59 Minn. 465, 27 L. R. A. 76.

When a subject is within a police power of the state, the question as to what regulations are proper and needful is the one for legislative consideration and decision, and courts 43 L. R. A.

will not presume that the legislature has usurped powers or disregarded the organic law.

Jamieson v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. 128 Ind. 555, 12 L. R. A. 652, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 613; Fry v. State, 63 Ind. 552, 30 Am. Rep. 238; State, Terre Haute, v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 434, 14 L. R. A. 566; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; State v. Mrozinski, 59 Minn. 465, 27 L. R. A. 76; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438; Pine Grove Twp. v. Talcott, 86 U. S. 666, 22 L. ed. 227.

If there is any doubt as to the constitutionality of the act in question as against every person, the proprietor included, there can be no question as to the validity of the act where the proprietor has given his license and consent to the stocking of his stream, the posting of notices, and the prohibition of fishing therein.

An action must be brought in the name of the party whose legal right has been affected or by his legal representatives.

1 Chitty, Pl. p. 1.

A defense must be made by one interested.

Flint v. Craig, 59 Barb. 319; Campbell v. Erie R. Co. 46 Barb. 540; City Bank v. Perkins, 29 N. Y. 554, 86 Am. Dec. 332; 1 Wait, Act. & Def. 157.

A party may waive any right which the law gives him, even a constitutional one.

1 Bishop, Crim. L. §§ 995, 996; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 117; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 1436.

One with no interest can complain of no statute as unconstitutional.

1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 1436; State, Potter, v. Snow, 3 R. I. 64; Sinclair v. Jackson, Field, 8 Cow. 543; Coleman v. Carr, Walk. (Miss.) 258; Dejarnett v. Haynes, 23 Miss. 600; New Orleans Canal & Nav. Co. v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 364.

ROSS, CH. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondent excepted to the judgment of the city court of the city of Montpelier, holding, on demurrer, the complaint of the state's attorney sufficient. The complaint is in three counts. They all charge him with illegally fishing in a stream known as "Hale's Brook," on land owned by George Hale, in the county of Washington, which brook flows into the Winooski river, a boatable stream. Each count alleges that the brook had been stocked with trout by the fish and game commissioners, and duly posted and advertised, agreeably to Vt. Stat. § 4568. The first count alleges that this was done with the consent of George Hale, the owner of the land over which the brook flows. The other two counts do not allege any such consent. Vt. Stat. § 4568, reads: "When the fish and game commissioners place fish in a pond or stream, they may prohibit fishing therein, or in specified portions thereof, for a period not exceeding three years, by posting notices to that effect conspicuously upon the banks thereof, and publishing such notice three weeks successively in a newspaper published in the county where such waters are located; if a person fishes, or attempts to fish, in such waters within the time specified, he shall be fined $50, if prosecution is commenced within six months after the offense is committed." Vt. Stat. § 4567, reads: "Waters stocked by the fish and game commissioners shall thereafter be treated as public waters, but any person who might otherwise make the same a private preserve or posted waters, may do so at the expiration of five years from the date of fling, with the fish and game commissioners, a written notice of his intention so to do." By Vt. Stat. § 4565, the fish and game commissioners are authorized, at the expense of the state, among other things, to introduce trout, shad, salmon, and other good varieties of fish into such streams, lakes, and ponds within the state, not private preserves or posted waters, as they deem suitable to the successful cultivation of fish. Vt. Stat. § 4562, defines "private preserve," "posted waters," and "public waters," as follows: "Private preserve; a natural pond, of not more than twenty acres, belonging to a common owner, or any artificial pond made solely for the purpose of fish culture." "Posted waters; all waters on lands posted as provided in this chapter." "Public waters; all waters of which the state has jurisdiction, except private preserves and posted waters." Elsewhere in the same chapter it is provided that the owner or occupant of inclosed or cultivated land may, by posting notices as thereby required, prohibit shooting, trapping, or fishing thereon, under a prescribed penalty. These are the main provisions of the statute bearing upon the section brought under consideration. There are provisions establishing a "close season" for hunting and fishing, or a time in the year when all persons are prohibited from hunting and fishing, and also regulating the manner and means by which hunting and fishing shall be prosecuted in the open season. These statutes express the legislative will regulating the rights of riparian owners in regard to taking fish from a common stream, and make the fish and game commissioners officers to carry that will into execution. This is shown by the decision hereinafter cited, and by all authorities. The respondent does not contend otherwise.

The respondent contends that Vt. Stat. § 4568, is unconstitutional, in that it deprives the owner of the land over which the brook flows of his exclusive right to catch fish therein for the period of three years, and then makes them public waters for at least five years longer, without compensation. This is his only contention. Without considering whether the respondent, being a stranger to the right to fish in this brook, can raise this question, we will pass to the consideration of the broader question, which alone has been argued, whether the statute is unconstitutional as regards the owner of the soil, to whom the right to fish attaches. There can be no doubt that if this deprivation of the owner of the soil over which the brook flows of the right to fish in it, for the time specified, is the taking of private property for public use, the law must, as to him, be held unconstitutional. Article 2, chap. 1, of the Constitution of Vermont provides "that private property ought to be subservient to public uses when necessity requires it, nevertheless, whenever any person's property is taken for the use of the public, the owner ought to receive an equivalent in money." If the act infringes this constitutional provision, the legislature had no authority to enact it, and it is without legal validity. But this provision of the Constitution must be read in connection with its other provisions, and especially must be considered with article 5, chap. 1, of the Constitution of Vermont, which declares "that the people of this state by their legal representatives have the sole, inherent, and exclusive right of governing and regulating the internal police of the same;" and § 40 of chapter 2 of the Constitution of Vermont, reading: "The inhabitants of this state shall have liberty in seasonable times, to hunt and fowl on the lands they hold, and on other lands not inclosed; and in like manner to fish in all boatable and other waters (not private property) under proper regulations to be hereafter made and provided by the general assembly." Hence the question for consideration is whether the act of the fish and game commissioners, definitely and specifically authorized and performed by and under Vt. Stat. § 4568, is a taking of a right belonging to the owner of the land over which the brook flows, for the use of the public; or whether it is a regulation of his use of that right, under § 40 of chapter 2 of the Constitution of Vermont, and an exercise of the right of governing and regulating the internal police of the people of the state, reserved to their representatives by article 5, chapter 1, of the Constitution of Vermont.

In considering this question, it is necessary to keep in mind the nature of the right and of the property out of which it arises. The right to take fish from flowing waters, not boatable, in this state, pertains solely to the owner of the land through which such waters flow. It pertains to such owner personally, and is his private right; but he does not own such flowing water, and only has the right properly to use it while on its passage. He can use it in a reasonable manner for domestic purposes, for creating power, and for taking fish therefrom. He must not divert it from its course, nor pollute it, but leave it so that the landowners on the stream above and below him can enjoy their full like use of the water, and, among these, the right to take fish from the stream. This right implies and carries with it the common right to have fish inhabit and spawn in the stream. For this purpose, they must have a common passageway to and from their spawning and feeding grounds. Fish themselves are feras nature—the common property of the public, or of the state—in this country. From this common property, the owner of the soil over which the nonboatable stream flows has the right to appropriate such as he may capture and retain; but this right of capture and appropriation is subject to regulation and control by the representatives of the people, so that there shall continue to be a common property. The preservation of the common property, and its increase by the introduction of new and better species of fish, is not a taking away of the right of the owner of land on the stream to appropriate therefrom, but a preservation or enlargement of such right. The state—the representative of the people, the common owner of all things feræ naturæ—not only has the right, but is under a duty, to preserve and increase such common property. Such is declared to be the duty of the representatives of the people in the articles and sections of the Constitution of Vermont referred to. Such, also, was the common-law view of the nature of the rights of persons in streams and in animals feræ naturæ. Says Mr. Justice Blackstone, in his Commentaries (bk. 2, p. 14): "But, after all, there are some few things which, notwithstanding the general introduction and continuance of property, must still unavoidably remain in common, being such wherein nothing but an usufructuary property is capable of being had; and therefore they still belong to the first occupant, during the time he holds possession of them, and no longer. Such (among others) are the elements of light, air, and water, which a man may occupy by means of his windows, his gardens, his mills, and other conveniences. Such, also, are the generality of those animals which are said to be feræ naturæ, or of a wild and untamable disposition, which any man may seize upon and keep for his own use or pleasure. All these things, so long as they remain in possession, every man has a right to enjoy without disturbance, but if once they escape from his custody, or he voluntarily abandons the use of them, they return to the common stock, and any man else has an equal right to seize and enjoy them afterwards." The same writer treats more fully of this class of common property, and of the rights of individuals therein, in chapter 25 of the same book, and there lays down the principle that an individual may acquire or have a qualified property in such animals, among which fish are classed, either because of his industry in capturing and retaining them, or on account of their inability, for the time being, to escape from his premises or control, like young game birds while in the nest, or on account of his special right or privilege of capturing and killing them, in exclusion of other persons. This latter right does not exist in this country, except as limited by ownership of the place from which they are taken, and the right to exclude others therefrom.

Not a decision in this country, state or national, has been brought to our attention by the respondent, nor by quite an extensive examination of such cases, which holds that such acts of the state legislature, in regard to this class of property, and in restraint of the right of the riparian owner to take and appropriate fish therefrom, are unconstitutional. They have uniformly been held to be, not a taking of private property or private rights for public use, for which compensation must be made, but an exercise of the police power of the state to preserve or increase a common property, and to regulate the right to capture and appropriate therefrom, so as to preserve and increase the common property, or, at least, to prevent its diminution or destruction. Many cases might be cited in support of what has thus far been said. I quote from but a few. In Peters v. State, 96 Tenn. 682, 33 L. R. A. 114, the plaintiff in error owned a tract of land covered by water, from which he alone had the right to take fish. The water was not a stream through which other riparian owners had the right to have fish pass to and from their feeding and spawning grounds. An act limiting his right to take fish therefrom only with rod or line was held constitutional, the court saying: "Fish in streams or bodies of water have always been classed by the common law as feræ naturæ, in which the riparian proprietor or owner of the soil covered by the water, even though he may have the sole and exclusive right of fishing in said waters, has, at best, but a qualified property, which can be rendered absolute only by their actual capture, and which is wholly divested the moment the fish escape to other waters. 2 Bl. Com. 392; People v. Bridges, 142 Ill. 30, 16 L. R. A. 684. But, in addition, the power of the legislature to enact laws for the protection and preservation of game in the forests, and fish in the waters, of the state, has been so frequently exercised, and, when challenged on constitutional grounds, has been so uniformly maintained, that the question has now passed beyond the realm of debate. . . . Mancy v. State, 6 Lea, 218; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385; Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 320; People v. Bridges, 142 Ill. 30, 16 L. R. A. 684; Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, §§ 125, 127." See also State v. Mrozinski, 59 Minn. 465, 27 L. R. A. 76; State v. Lewis, 134 Ind. 250, 20 L. R. A. 52; Ex parte Maier, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129, and note (103 Cal. 476); Fish and Fisheries, 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 23; State v. Roberts, 59 N. H. 256, 47 Am. Rep. 199; New England Trout & S. Club v. Mather, 68 Vt. 338, 33 L. R. A. 569; Drew v. Hilliker, 56 Vt. 641. Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, establishes the attitude of the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to the constitutionality of such laws, and that they are but police regulations within the powers of the states to exercise. Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294, is an interesting case upon the right of a state to enact a law regulating the use of natural gas. It treats it as common property, from which those who strike a vein upon their own lands have a right to draw, but subject to such statutory regulations as the lawmaking power of the state might enact in the exercise of its police power.

The police power extends to almost all kinds of property and rights, and its exercise by the legislative branch is almost unlimited, except where taken away or limited by the state or national Constitution. Courts and law writers have not attempted to define it with precision. It is the general power of the legislative branch to enact laws for the common good of all the people. All property and all rights are held in subjection to the exercise of this power, because all individual property and individual rights in every organized community are connected with, and related more or less intimately to, the individual property and individual rights of others. In the exercise of this power, criminal laws are enacted, laws relating to the support of the poor, to the education of the young people, to build and maintain highways; and, to accomplish these ends, the individual is often compelled to surrender a portion of his rights to property, and sometimes his liberty. In Livermore v. Jamaica, 23 Vt. 361, this court held that the taking of one's land for a public highway was not such a taking as required money compensation to be made therefor under the Constitution, but that the benefit which he derived from the establishment of the highway might be offset to the damage he sustained from the taking. The court says: "The Constitution is the paramount law of the land; and every statute which is in contravention of the Constitution must be held inoperative and void. Whether the statute, or that section of it by which the commissioners were governed in making their appraisal, is repugnant to the Constitution, must, we think, depend upon whether the taking of land for a highway is such an appropriation of the property to public use as is contemplated by the Constitution. The taking of land for a highway does not divest the owner of his title in fee. The public only acquire an easement; and the right of the owner to use, occupy, and control the land in any manner which is not inconsistent with the public enjoyment of the easement still remains. Upon a discontinuance of the highway, the possession of the land reverts to the owner in as full and ample manner as he originally held it. In the opinion of the court, this is not such a taking of property for public use, in the sense of the Constitution, as necessarily requires compensation for the same to be made in money. But to bring a case within this provision of the Constitution it should be such a taking as divests the owner of all title to or control over the property taken, and is an unqualified appropriation of it to the public." In Com. v. Tewksbury, 11 Met. 55, the owner of the fee of a portion of the beach which helps form Boston Harbor was prosecuted for taking sand and gravel therefrom, under a statute which made such taking a penal offense. He defended, and one ground was that the statute was unconstitutional, because it was a taking of his property for public use, without making compensation. The court, in an opinion by Shaw, Ch. J., held that, although the statute prohibited such taking of sand and gravel with no limitation in regard to time, it was not such a taking of his property as required compensation under the Constitution, but a regulation of his use of his own property, necessary in the interest of the state, to protect the harbor of Boston, and therefore constitutional, and that the respondent was guilty. The same power which may tax the people to establish and maintain good roads for the common benefit of the public may tax them and take measures to preserve and increase the common fund of game and fish, from which all can take, subject to regulations prescribed by the legislature, in the 43 L. R. A.

exercise of this power. In Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625, and note, this court held that a law passed subsequently to the granting of the charter of the defendant (which this court held to be a contract), compelling the defendant to maintain, for all time, at a considerable expense, suitable fences on the sides of its railroad track, was a proper exercise of this power. That decision has been generally approved and followed. This power has been exercised in regard to almost every species of property, and all kinds of rights. It is very elastic, and adjustable to new circumstances and new situations,—as flexible and adjustable as the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, in which it has its origin.

In addition to the cases already cited, the following (which could be added to at pleasure) are good illustrations of the extent and application of this power: Champer v. Greencastle, 138 Ind. 339, 24 L. R. A. 768, 46 Am. St. Rep. 390, and note, in which it is said: "The police power of the state extends in the direction of so regulating the use of private property, or of so restraining personal action, as manifestly to secure or tend to the comfort, prosperity, or protection of the community." People v. Wagner, 86 Mich. 594, 13 L. R. A. 286, 24 Am. St. Rep. 141, and note; People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 129, 25 L. R. A. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 788, and note; Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 69, 1 Am. St. Rep. 638, and note; State v. Heinemann, 80 Wis. 253, 27 Am. St. Rep. 34, and note, in which the police power is defined as the power of "the state . . . vested in the legislature to enact such wholesome and reasonable laws not in conflict with the state or Federal Constitution, as may be conducive to the public good." New York Health Department v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L. R. A. 710, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579, and note. The opinion in the last case is carefully prepared. Among other things, it says: "Laws and regulations of a police nature, though they may disturb the enjoyment of individual rights, are not unconstitutional, though no provision is made for a compensation for such disturbances. They do not appropriate private property for public use, but simply regulate its use and enjoyment by the owner. If he suffers injury, it is damnum absque injuria, or, in the theory of the law, he is compensated for it by sharing the general benefits which the regulations are intended and calculated to secure. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 141, and note 2; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 83, 84, 86; Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. 184, 193, 22 Am. Dec. 421; Clark v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. 32, 36." This was said in upholding a law which compelled the owner of a tenement block erected and in use before the passage of the law to introduce water at quite an expense, so it could be drawn from a faucet on every floor of the block. Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 359, 35 Am. Dec. 328, and quite extensive note; People v. Arensburg, 103 N. Y. 388, 57 Am. Rep. 741, and note.

The framers of the state Constitution early began to regulate the right to kill deer, and take fish and muskrats, for their protection and preservation, for the common benefit of the people, and to destroy noxious wild animals, wolves, and panthers, by the payment of bounties with money raised by enforced taxation. These were done by acts passed in March, 1797. 2 Tolman's Comp. Stat. 19-24. The Constitution in its present form was adopted in 1793. The act for the preservation of fish makes the erection of any dam, hedge, seine, fish garth, or other stoppage, in any watercourse, whereby navigation or the passage of fish may be obstructed, a nuisance, and punishes the person erecting the same with a fine. It also establishes a "close season" when trout cannot be taken.

The definition of "public waters" apparently excludes from the jurisdiction of the state private preserves and posted waters. This is not true. Both are subject to the police power of the state. Any man can be punished if he injures the rights of their owners. Posted waters obtain additional protection by an exercise of the police power. At common law the owner could only recover for a trespass upon his land and the invasion of his right of fishery,—generally a very ineffectual remedy. Hence, the right of the riparian owner was rarely regarded or enforced before the legislature, to protect his right, allowed him, if he complied with the law in regard to posting his premises, to recover of every violator substantial damages. Where the owner availed himself of this law, the legislature evidently considered that the unreasonable destruction of the natural supply of fish in the trout brooks and streams would be stayed, and that such streams would need no further protection. Hence such brooks are excluded from the jurisdiction of the fish and game commissioners. But it reasonably judged that a nonboatable stream, which the riparian owner would not be at the expense of posting, was already depleted of the natural supply of this valuable kind of food, and needed to be replenished. It therefore allowed the fish and game commissioners to restock it at the expense of the people; and, to make that expense profitable to such riparian owner, and to the people of the state, the fish must be protected from destruction until they began to reproduce, and then the community should not be burdened, to protect his right beyond what the common law furnished, for five years longer. By providing that such waters should be waters over which the state has jurisdiction, it did not take away such riparian owner's right to maintain trespass against everyone who should enter without his license upon his premises, and catch fish from the nonboatable stream thereon. The action of the fish and game commissioners in stocking the stream and posting it presumably would inure to the benefit of such riparian owner, and all other riparian owners on that and other connected streams. Whether it would or not, the Constitution clearly empowered the legislature to pass such laws as, in its discretion, it might judge would be for the common benefit of the people of the state.

Someone has suggested that the state had no right to send the fish and game commissioners upon Mr. Hale's land to stock the stream. The law is paramount to his property and rights, within the inhibitions of the state and national Constitutions. As well might he contend that the law could not send its officer upon his land to arrest him for a criminal act, or to attach his property at the suit of a creditor. On any view, even if the owner of the land over which the stream flows had been the violator of the law, and was under prosecution, this statute must be held constitutional and enforceable; and much more against this respondent, who clearly had no right upon Mr. Hale's premises, nor the right to take fish from the stream of water flowing thereon.

Judgment affirmed, and cause remanded to the city court.

Thompson, J., dissents.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

R. B. BARTLETT, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Town of CLARKSBURG.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. An incorporated town is not liable for personal injuries occasioned by the firing of squibs, rockets, fireworks, and firearms on the streets by a crowd of citizens, although such acts be done with the knowledge and consent of the mayor, council, police, and other officers of such corporation.
- *2. As to the powers and functions of an incorporated town, of a public governmental character, it is not liable for damages caused by the wrongful acts or negligence of its officers or agents therein.

*Headnotes by McWHORTER, J.

NOTE.—As to the liability of a municipal corporation for fire works, see note to Scanlon v. Wedger (Mass.) 16 L. R. A. 395; Fifield v. Phoenix (Ariz.) 24 L. R. A. 430; Speir v. Brooklyn (N. Y.) 21 L. R. A. 641; Love v. Raleigh (N. C.) 28 L. R. A. 192; and Aron v. Wausau (Wis.) 40 L. R. A. 783, 43 L. R. A.

(November 30, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit court for Harrison County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the discharge of fireworks in defendant's streets. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. Scott for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. John Bassel and M. M. Thompson, for defendant in error:

Upon well-settled principles this action could not be maintained, and the judgment of the court below was correct.

Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 245, 57 Am. Rep. 665; Brown v. Guyandotte, 34 W. Va. 299, 11 L. R. A. 121; Robinson v. Greenville, 42 Ohio St. 625, 51 Am. Rep. 857;

Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Cooley, Torts, pp. 739, 740; Norristown v. Fitzpatrick, 94 Pa. 121, 39 Am. Rep. 771.

McWhorter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

R. B. Bartlett brought his action on the case in the circuit court of Harrison county, to recover damages against the town of Clarksburg for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff by reason of the discharge by private persons of firearms, squibs, rockets, and fireworks at a narrow place in one of the streets of said town, on the ground that the said fireworks were discharged by the consent and written permission of the mayor, and with the knowledge and consent of the council and police and other officers of said town, and that the said discharge of firearms, fireworks, etc., was of such a nature as to be a public nuisance, whereby the team of horses of plaintiff attached to his buggy became frightened and unmanageable, and beyond the control of plaintiff, and ran away, throwing plaintiff from his buggy seat, and badly injuring him, for which injuries plaintiff alleges said town is liable to him for damages. The declaration contains two counts. Defendant demurred to the declaration and each count, which being argued and considered, the court sustained said demurrers; and, plaintiff not desiring to amend his declaration, the same was dismissed, and judgment rendered in favor of defendant for costs. No ground of demurrer is contended for, except that the town is not liable, and that an action cannot be maintained against the town for the wrong complained of. The appellant cites Speir v. Brooklyn, 139 N. Y. 6, 21 L. R. A. 641, which is, as he claims, on all fours with the case at bar, where it is held that "a city is liable for injury to property by an explosion of fireworks constituting a dangerous public nuisance, when the display was made under a permit given by the mayor of the city acting under authority of a city ordinance." In the case under consideration, it is not alleged in the declaration that the written permit was granted by the mayor acting by virtue or under authority of an ordinance of the town. This is about the only particular in which the two cases differ. In Speir v. Brooklyn the judge says: "It is the settled doctrine of the courts that a municipality is not bound merely by the assent of its executive officers to wrongful acts of third persons, nor could the mayor bind the city by a permit, for the granting of which he had no color of authority from the common council, and which was not within the general scope of his authority." The case of Speir v. Brooklyn is supported by some other authorities; and I confess I am largely in sympathy with the decision in that case, and agree with Judge Okey as to the nuisance in the case of Robinson v. Greenville, 42 Ohio St. 630, 51 Am. Rep. 857, where he says: "That firing cannon in a public street of a municipal corporation, except in case of imperative and urgent necessity, is an intolerable nuisance, and that all persons engaged in such unlawful act are personally liable for all damages caused thereby, are propositions concerning which there is no room for difference of opinion. But a very different question is presented when it is attempted to fasten liability for such injuries on a municipal corporation."

In the case at bar the acts complained of are equally as great a nuisance as the firing of cannon as stated in above case. Appellee contends that "the law in this state has been settled in at least two cases upon all fours with this case," viz., Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 233, 57 Am. Rep. 665, and Brown v. Guyandotte, 34 W. Va. 299, 11 L. R. A. 121. Cooley on Torts (pp. 738, 739) says: "Municipal corporations are to be considered, First, as parts of the governmental machinery of the state, legislating for their corporations, and planning and providing for the customary local conveniences of their people; second, as corporate bodies, through proper agencies putting into execution their plans, and discharging such duties as they have imposed upon themselves, or as the state has imposed upon them; and, third, as artificial persons owning and managing property. In this last capacity they are chargeable with all the duties and obligations of other owners of property, and must respond for creating or suffering nuisances, under the same rules which govern the responsibility of natural persons. . . . For taking or neglecting to take strictly governmental action, municipal corporations are under no responsibility whatever, except the political responsibility to their corporators and to the state. The reason is that it is inconsistent with the nature of their powers that they should be compelled to respond to individuals in damages for the manner of their exercise. They are conferred for public purposes, to be exercised within prescribed limits, at discretion for the public good; and there can be no appeal from the judgment of the proper municipal authorities to the judgment of courts and juries. Therefore one shows no ground of action whatever when he complains that he has suffered damage because the city he resides in has made insufficient provision for protection against fire, or because cattle are not prohibited from running at large, or because 'coasting' in the highways is not prevented, or because the operation of an ordinance which prohibits the explosion of fireworks within the city is temporarily suspended, or because provision is not made for lighting the streets. . . . Neither is a municipal corporation responsible for the failure of its officers to discharge properly and effectually their official duties; for in respect to these the officers are not properly the servants or agents of the corporation, but act upon their own official responsibility, except as they may be specially directed by the corporate authority." In Robinson v. Greenville, 42 Ohio St. 630 (Syl. point 4); "An assemblage of disorderly persons, after having been engaged for several hours in discharging a cannon in a public street of a municipal corporation, seriously injured a resident of the corporation, himself without fault, by one of such discharges. Held, that such corporation is not liable for the injury, although the statute provides that the council shall have the care, supervision, and control of the streets, 'and shall cause the same to be kept open and in repair, and free from nuisance' (Ohio Rev. Stat. § 2640), and it will make no difference that the authorities of such corporation, with knowledge of such firing, took no steps to prevent the same." Also Norristown v. Fitzpatrick, 94 Pa. 121 (Syl. points 1 and 2): "(1) N. was injured, while crossing a street in a borough, by the firing of a cannon by a crowd of citizens. In an action against the borough to recover damages for the injury, the jury, in a special verdict, found that the cannon had been fired at short intervals, for several hours, at various points in the borough; that it was not fired at any public or authorized celebration; that a policeman was standing by and made no effort to stop the firing. A special act of assembly authorized the borough to appoint policemen, remove nuisances, etc. Held, that the borough was not liable. (2) Admitting that such an assemblage was a nuisance, and that of the worst kind, it is one that a municipal corporation cannot abate by the use of ordinary appliances, such as suffice for the removal of natural or material obstructions in or near a highway, and resort therefore must be had to the police, but for the doings or misdoings of those who compose this force, the municipality is not liable." Campbell v. Montgomery, 53 Ala. 527, 25 Am. Rep. 656: "The city is not liable for injuries resulting from violence, which the police, by diligent discharge of duty, might have prevented. Although appointed by the city, the police are quasi civil officers, for whose misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office, the city is not responsible, though they are personally answerable." Lafayette v. Timberlake, 38 Ind. 330: "A municipal corporation is not liable for a personal injury occasioned on its streets by persons making an unlawful use of its streets, as by 'coasting.' A municipal corporation is not liable for failure to exercise governmental powers, as for failure to enforce the state laws or its own ordinances. A municipal corporation is not liable for the negligence of its police officers; they are not its agents, but are public officers." Faulkner v. Aurora, 85 Ind. 130, 44 Am. Rep. 1: "A city, after having adopted an ordinance prohibiting, upon its streets, sports tending to produce personal injury, is not liable for a collision occurring upon a street, whereby a traveler was injured, as the result of coasting for sport, though the sport was carried on by crowds, publicly, in the presence of its officers and police, to the obvious danger of persons using the streets." Ball v. Woodbine, 61 Iowa 83, 47 Am. Rep. 805: "Where fireworks are discharged within the limits of an incorporated town, in violation of the ordinances of the town, whereby one is injured, the town is not liable for such injury, notwithstanding the town council and officers of the town and a majority of the citizens actively participate in the discharge of the fireworks, and the town, by its officers, makes no attempt to stop the unlawful proceeding." Hill v. Charlotte, 72 N. C. 55: A municipal corporation having power, under its charter, to make ordinances for the safety of its property in the city, suspended for a short time the operation of an ordinance forbidding the use of fireworks within the city. During such time, plaintiff's building was set on fire, and destroyed, by fireworks negligently used by boys. Held, that the corporation was not liable for such destruction. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 753: "A municipal corporation is not impliedly liable to an action for damage, either for the nonexercise of, or for the manner in which in good faith it exercises, discretionary powers of a public or legislative character." Wheeler v. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St. 19, 2 Am. Rep. 368; Forsyth v. Atlanta, 45 Ga. 152, 12 Am. Rep. 576; Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 87, 6 Am. Rep. 196.

Authorities might be multiplied indefinitely. While the decisions are not all on one side, yet the great weight of the authorities, including those of our own state, is with the action of the circuit court in this case. In Brown v. Guyandotte, 34 W. Va. 209, (Syl. point 1), 11 L. R. A. 121, it is held that, "as to the powers and functions of a town of a public governmental character, it is not liable for damages caused by the wrongful acts or negligence of its officers or agents therein." Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 233, 57 Am. Rep. 665.

The judgment will have to be affirmed.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

William R. WATKINS, Appt.,
v.
BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY & ELECTRIC COMPANY.

(.....Ala.....)

1. A passenger who leaves his seat in a car on a dummy railroad and goes down on the lower step of the back platform as the train slows up for a street crossing at which he is to stop, and while it is passing over the street at a speed of about 3 miles an hour, is not guilty of negligence, as matter of law, which will preclude his recovering for injuries caused by the sudden increase of speed, which throws him to the ground.

2. It is a question for the jury whether a man is guilty of negligence in stepping from a car, or preparing to do so, when it is going about 3 miles an hour.

3. Proof that placards were nailed up in cars and over platforms is not equivalent to proof that they were on a particular car on which a passenger was riding.

NOTE.—For negligence in getting on or off a moving train, see note to Carr v. Eel River & E. R. Co. (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 354; Distler v. 43 L. R. A.

Long Island R. Co. (N. Y.) 35 L. R. A. 762, and other cases cited in footnote thereto; also Graham v. McNeill (Wash.) post, 300.

4. A passenger who gets on the step of a car for the purpose of alighting, when the car is slowing down at a stopping place, is not riding on the platform, within the meaning of the carrier's regulations, but is merely using it as a means of egress.

(November 7, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Birmingham City Court in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Bowman & Harsh, for appellant:

It is not contributory negligence in all cases to alight from a moving street car.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 291; Birmingham Electric R. Co. v. Clay, 108 Ala. 233; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Mills, 88 Ala. 262; Munroe v. Third Ave. R. Co. 18 Jones & S. 114; Mowrey v. Central City R. Co. 66 Barb. 43; Murphy v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 43 Mo. App. 342; Davis v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 69 Miss. 136; Filer v. New York C. R. Co. 68 N. Y. 124; Bowie v. Greenville Street R. Co. 69 Miss. 196; Leslie v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 88 Mo. 50; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Revalet, 17 Ind. App. 657; East Omaha Street R. Co. v. Godola, 50 Neb. 906; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Thalheimer, 59 N. J. L. 474; Booth, Street Railways, § 345.

Messrs. Walker, Porter, & Walker, for appellee, cited—

Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Letcher, 69 Ala. 106, 44 Am. Rep. 505; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hawk, 72 Ala. 112, 47 Am. Rep. 403; Thompson v. Duncan, 76 Ala. 334; Ricketts v. Birmingham Street R. Co. 85 Ala. 600; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Miles, 88 Ala. 256; Hill v. Birmingham Union R. Co. 100 Ala. 447; McCauley v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. 93 Ala. 356.

On rehearing.

There is no evidence that there was any necessity for appellant to be riding upon the platform and steps.

A passenger must keep his seat in the car until it stops before he gets out on the steps, unless there is some urgent necessity to the contrary.

Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hawk, 72 Ala. 112, 47 Am. Rep. 403; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Miles, 88 Ala. 256; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 37 L. ed. 285; Ricketts v. Birmingham Street R. Co. 85 Ala. 600.

Surely a passenger can't indulge a whim of desiring to leave a running train. The evidence tended very strongly to show that appellant was trying to alight from the train when he was injured, and he would not have been injured had he not been trying to do so.

Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Letcher, 69 Ala. 106, 44 Am. Rep. 505.

Brickell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was a passenger on a train operated by appellee on its "East Lake Dummy Line," between East Lake and Birmingham, having boarded the train at Woodlawn to ride to Twenty-Fourth street, in Birmingham. At the time he paid his fare he told the conductor he desired to get off at Twenty-Fourth street, and when the train was between Twenty-Fifth and Twenty-Fourth streets, he left his seat in the rear car, and went out to the back platform; and as the train slowed up for the west crossing, which was the proper side of the street on which to stop, and after the engine and front car had passed over the crossing, and while the rear car was passing over it, at a speed of about three miles an hour, he got on the lower step on the south side of the platform preparatory to stepping off, when the speed of the train was suddenly increased, and he fell to the ground, sustaining the injuries complained of and for which he seeks to recover in this action. There are two tendencies of the evidence with respect both to the position of the plaintiff on the step and the manner in which he fell therefrom. Plaintiff testifies that he "got down on the step with his face to the south, with his right hand hold of the guard, ready to get off," and that while "in that position, and ready to get off, when the car should stop, the car, instead of stopping, jerked forward suddenly, and threw plaintiff down;" and the inference from this testimony is that plaintiff's position on the step was the position ordinarily assumed by one about to step off a car, with his back to the car and his right hand grasping the front guard, and that he was not in the act of stepping off when the car suddenly "jerked forward." One of the inferences deducible from the testimony of the only other witness in the case was that plaintiff was standing on the step with his back to the street, his right hand grasping the rear guard, and his left hand the front guard, and that he was in the act of stepping off backwards, when the speed of the car was suddenly increased. The witness testified: "Plaintiff was standing on the lower step of the platform, and as soon as it started up he stepped off. I could not tell positively whether he stepped off or was jerked off. He was standing in a position to step off, and I could not say he was jerked off. He was standing with his right hand hold of the rear guard, and his left hand hold of the front guard, at the time the train started up, and the next instant he was off. When he touched the ground he was in a falling position, and took two or three steps and fell. As his feet struck the ground, his left hand became disengaged from the car." The instructions to the jury, given at the request of the defendant, assume that the conduct of the plaintiff, as shown by the above statement of facts, constituted negligence per se, and the correctness of this proposition is the principal question presented for consideration. The trial court charged, upon request of the respective parties, that each was guilty of negligence, and the only question left to the jury was, therefore, whether the plaintiff's negligence contributed proximately to his injury.

While there are some cases which hold that the act of a passenger in voluntarily leaving a car while it is in motion constitutes contributory negligence, the better doctrine, and that sustained by the great weight of authority, is that such conduct on the part of the passenger is not negligence per se. There may be, it is true, exceptional circumstances attending the attempt thus to alight, such as the great speed of the train, the age or infirmity of the passenger, or his being encumbered with bundles or children, or other facts which render the attempt so obviously dangerous that the court may, where the testimony is undisputed, declare as matter of law that the passenger's conduct was reckless and negligent. But ordinarily it is for the jury to say whether he acted as a reasonably cautious and prudent man would act under like circumstances. Booth, Street Railways, § 345; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 1st ed. § 90; 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1st ed. p. 1129, §§ 305 et seq.; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 664; Bishop, Noncont. L. § 1101; Eppendorf v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 195, 25 Am. Rep. 171; Medler v. Atlantic Ave. R. Co. 36 N. Y. S. R. 89, Affirmed in 126 N. Y. 669; Morrison v. Erie R. Co. 56 N. Y. 302; Nichols v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. 38 N. Y. 131, 97 Am. Dec. 780; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 37 L. ed. 284; Fleck v. Union R. Co. 134 Mass. 480; Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 59 Mo. 27, 21 Am. Rep. 371; Schachert v. St. Paul City R. Co. 42 Minn. 42; Nance v. Carolina C. R. Co. 94 N. C. 619; Bowie v. Greenville Street R. Co. 69 Miss. 196. This doctrine is not in conflict with any of the previous adjudications of this court. In Ricketts v. Birmingham Street R. Co. 35 Ala. 604, the proposition is stated in general terms that "stepping from a moving car without necessity, when injury is caused thereby, which could have been avoided by remaining on the car,—by the exercise of ordinary care,—is negligence, which will defeat a recovery because of prior negligence of the agents or servants of the company." But in a subsequent case it was said: "This general observation had reference to a charge which instructed the jury that plaintiff was not entitled to recover, if he was standing on the steps in front of the car, with a keg of lead in his hands, and undertook to step off while it was in motion, and such act was not that of an ordinarily prudent man." Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Miles, 88 Ala. 260. It was further said in this last-mentioned case: "When the material facts are disputed, or, if clearly established, different inferences may be reasonably drawn therefrom, contributory negligence is a question of fact, exclusively within the province of the jury. This general rule is as applicable to the act of getting off a car in motion as to other cases, unless the court is prepared to lay down an inexorable rule that except in the well-settled instance of leaping under the impulse of alarm, excited by sudden exposure to great peril, to alight from a moving car is negligence in law in all cases, and under any circumstances." This case expressly recognizes the doctrine that it is not negligence in law for a passenger to attempt to alight from a train moving so slowly that to alight therefrom would not appear dangerous to a man of ordinary prudence, but that ordinarily the question of negligence vel non should be submitted to the jury. 88 Ala. 263. And the doctrine was again recognized in a still later case, in which it was held that a request to charge the jury that "it is negligence for a person to attempt to board a moving train, and if he is injured by such attempt, he cannot recover," was properly refused, the court saying: "We would not say, as a matter of law, that it is contributory negligence, under all circumstances and conditions, to attempt to board a train, if moving." Birmingham Electric R. Co. v. Clay, 108 Ala. 233. To board a moving car cannot be said to be more dangerous than to alight from one.

There were no exceptional circumstances attendant upon appellant's attempt to alight from the car, or upon his taking a position on the step preparatory to alighting, that rendered his conduct so obviously dangerous as to justify the court in declaring it negligent as matter of law, and withdrawing from the jury the issue of negligence on the part of the plaintiff. He had notified the conductor that he desired to get off at Twenty-Fourth street, and, when the train slowed up on approaching the crossing he had a right to assume that it was being slowed up for the purpose of enabling him to get off, and that its speed would be gradually lessened until it stopped at the crossing, rather than increased with a sudden jerk. He assumed, of course, the risk of the ordinary movement of the train slowing up at a street crossing to let off a passenger, but not the risk of a sudden negligent movement at the very place where, and moment when, it should have stopped, and where, in view of the commonly-known custom of passengers on street cars, permitted, if not actually encouraged, by the companies, those in charge of the train, after having been notified to stop, should have known of the position of plaintiff. As was said in Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 37 L. ed. 284: "It may be said that he placed himself where he was in risk of falling off, but that was a risk he could not have anticipated as a result of a sudden start before he had got off, because he had a right to assume that the car would actually stop to allow him to get off, and if it had, as it should have done, . . . no accident would have happened." So far as anything in the record indicates to the contrary, plaintiff was an active, vigorous man, in full possession of his faculties, and unencumbered in any manner, and, under one tendency of the evidence, his position on the step was that ordinarily assumed by one about to step from a car, and he exercised ordinary diligence and care while in that position, and the speed of the car was at the rate of 3 miles an hour or less. Thousands of ordinarily prudent and cautious men, under like circumstances, act in the manner in which, as the jury might have inferred from the evidence, plaintiff acted. Whether or not plaintiff was guilty of negligence in thus acting was therefore a question that should have been submitted to the jury. As was said in Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Miles, 88 Ala. 200, if it was not negligence to attempt to alight under the circumstances, it was not negligence to take, with ordinary care, a position on the step preparatory to alighting.

It results from what has been said that charges 1, 4, 5, and 7, given at the request of the defendant, were improperly given, and should have been refused. Charges 3 and 6 are predicated on the hypothesis that plaintiff attempted to leave the car in a negligent manner, and were properly given, because, as we have seen, the jury might have inferred from the testimony of Peacock that plaintiff attempted to step from the car backwards, and found that such attempt was negligence, and contributed proximately to his injuries. Charge 1, requested by plaintiff and refused, is in conformity with the law applicable to the facts in the case as declared above, and should have been given. Charge 2, requested by plaintiff, predicates his right to recover upon the hypothesis that "the sole cause of the plaintiff's injury was a sudden jerk of the train," and that he acted in attempting to alight as an ordinarily prudent man would have acted. The negligence of plaintiff, in order to bar recovery, must not only have amounted to a want of ordinary care, but must also have co-operated with the negligent act of defendant to cause the injury complained of. It is manifest that, if the sudden jerking of the train was the sole cause of the injury, there was no causal connection between the plaintiff's act and the injury, and therefore no contributory negligence on his part.

The evidence as presented in the record does not show that, at the time of the injury, there was in this particular car any placards forbidding passengers to ride on the platform. The testimony is, "There were placards nailed up in defendant's cars and over the platforms of its cars," etc., which is not equivalent to proof that such placards were in this particular car at this particular time.

The testimony offered by plaintiff as to "the custom and practice of passengers to resort to, and ride on, the platforms of defendant's dummy cars, to smoke," was, we think, properly excluded. It was not contended that plaintiff was riding on the platform when injured, but that he was on the step, for the purpose of alighting, and the evidence shows that he was not riding on the platform, within the meaning of the defendant's regulations, but was merely using it as a means of egress. Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Miles, 88 Ala. 263.

Reversed and remanded.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

John H. GRAHAM, Respt.,

v.

E. McNEILL, Receiver of the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, Appt.

(.....Wash.....)

1. The failure of a railroad company to furnish accommodations for its passengers on a train, so that a large number of them are compelled to stand in the aisles and upon the platforms of the cars, constitutes negligence.
2. A passenger is not guilty of negligence in standing on the platform of a car when there are no vacant seats in the car and the platform is the most comfortable and convenient place for him to occupy on the trip.
3. Mere standing place on the inside of a car is not ordinarily such proper accommodation for a passenger as will make it negligence for him to stand on the car platform.
4. The rule of a railroad company that passengers must not stand on platforms is waived by receiving passengers for whom it fails to provide suitable accommodations inside its coaches.
5. The question of the negligence of a carrier and the contributory negligence of a passenger who is injured while riding on a car platform is for the jury.

(January 6, 1899.)

NOTE.—For negligence in riding on platform of a railroad car, see also Mitchell v. Southern P. R. Co. (Cal.) 11 L. R. A. 130, and note; 43 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Whitman County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cotton, Teal, & Minor, for appellant:

It is negligence per se for a passenger to stand on the platform of a steam railway car while it is in motion.

Bailey v. Tacoma Traction Co. 16 Wash. 48; Thirteenth & F. Street Pass. R. Co. v. Boudrou, 92 Pa. 475, 37 Am. Rep. 707; Campen & A. R. Co. v. Hoosey, 99 Pa. 492, 44 Am. Rep. 120.

An overcrowded condition of the cars preventing the passenger from obtaining a seat therein does not justify him taking a position of known danger upon the platform.

Saunders v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 6 S. D. 40; Etson v. Ft. Wayne & B. I. R. Co. 110 Mich. 494; Bemiss v. New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. 47 La. Am. 1671; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Rice, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 509; Waterbury v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 17 Fed. Rep. 685; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Boyd, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 205; Hickey v. Boston & L. R. Co. 14 Allen, 431; Aufdenberg v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 132 Mo. 565; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 665; 2 Wood, Railroads, §§ 303, 304; Higgins v. Hannibal & St. J. R.

also Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moneyhun (Ind.) 34 L. R. A. 141; and Watkins v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. (Ala.) ante, 297.

Co. 36 Mo. 418; Tulcy v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 41 Mo. App. 432; Worthington v. Central Vermont R. Co. 64 Vt. 107, 15 L. R. A. 326; Goodwin v. Boston & M. R. Co. 84 Me. 203; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moneyhun, 146 Ind. 147, 34 L. R. A. 141; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Hoosey, 99 Pa. 492, 44 Am. Rep. 120; Jackson v. Crilly, 16 Colo. 103; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21.

Where the plaintiff in an action for personal damages is guilty of contributory negligence he cannot recover, and where the testimony is not sufficient to sustain a verdict it is the duty of the court to grant a nonsuit.

Bailey v. Tacoma Traction Co. 16 Wash. 50.

Mr. M. O. Reed, for respondent:

Generally it is only in rare cases that the court is justified in withdrawing the question of contributory negligence from the jury.

McQuillan v. Seattle, 10 Wash. 465.

It is the duty of a railroad company to furnish each passenger with a seat; and if it fails to do so, and the passenger is required to stand up, it is liable for any injury sustained by him in consequence thereof, so long as he is, himself, in the exercise of due care.

2 Wood, Railroads, § 309.

It is not negligent per se for a passenger to ride upon the platform of a railway car; nor is it negligence to stand upon the platform of a car in motion when there are no vacant seats inside.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 149; Hutchinson, Carr. § 652; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Fisher, 141 Ill. 614; Marquette v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 33 Iowa, 564; Choate v. Missouri P. R. Co. 67 Mo. App. 105; Cotchett v. Savannah & T. R. Co. 84 Ga. 687; 2 Redf. Railways, 5th ed. 257; Zemp v. Wilmington & M. R. Co. 9 Rich. L. 84, 64 Am. Dec. 765; Dickinson v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. 53 Mich. 44; Willis v. Long Island R. Co. 34 N. Y. 670; Nolan v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 87 N. Y. 67, 41 Am. Rep. 345; Werie v. Long Island R. Co. 98 N. Y. 650.

If the trainmen considered it a dangerous place, it was their duty to have warned them of their danger, and if they failed so to do, the company is not absolved from liability.

Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 79 Ky. 160, 42 Am. Rep. 208; Zemp v. Wilmington & M. R. Co. 9 Rich. L. 84, 64 Am. Dec. 765; Dickinson v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. 53 Mich. 44; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Patterson, 69 Miss. 421, 22 L. R. A. 259.

Beavis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while a passenger on a railway train operated by defendant. The complaint alleges that on the 7th of October, 1895, at the town of Oakesdale, plaintiff purchased from an agent of defendant an excursion ticket which entitled plaintiff to be transported as a passenger from Oakesdale, in the state of Washington, to the city of Spokane and return, on or before the 9th day of October, 1895; that plaintiff was transported according to the terms of the ticket to Spokane, 43 L. R. A.

and on the 9th of October, 1895, while returning home, at the instance and request of defendant, and pursuant to the terms of the ticket, plaintiff entered one of the coaches of defendant's train carrying passengers from Spokane to Oakesdale, and by reason of the very crowded condition of the cars was unable to obtain a seat or room in any one of defendant's coaches, and was compelled to ride, and did ride, upon the platform of one of the cars of the train, and while so riding the conductor permitted, compelled, and allowed the plaintiff to occupy such position upon the platform without objection or protest, well knowing at the time the overcrowded condition of each and every one of the coaches in said train, and while the plaintiff was standing as aforesaid on the platform, by reason of the negligence, irregular, improper, overcrowded, overloaded, and careless manner in which the said train was being run by the defendant, and the dangerous position which the plaintiff was forced to occupy by reason of the overcrowded condition of the cars, he was, by a sudden careless and unnecessary lurch of the train, caused by the carelessness of the defendant, its servants and employees, in the management and operation of said train, thrown from the platform to the ground in a violent manner, and sustained serious injuries. The answer denies all of the allegations of negligence and damage contained in the complaint, and sets up an affirmative defense, and, in substance, states contributory negligence, by allegations that the plaintiff was drinking when he left Spokane, and continued to drink, and was so far under the influence of liquor as to be intoxicated, and that such intoxication was not known to the defendant; that, after the train left, the plaintiff was standing upon the platform, in a position where, if he had exercised care in preserving his balance, he would not have been injured; that while so standing on the platform the plaintiff's hat was blown off by the wind, and the plaintiff negligently and carelessly released his hold upon the railing of the car, and with his right hand undertook to catch his hat, and in so doing lost his balance, fell from the platform to the ground and was thereby injured, and that the plaintiff was not thrown from the platform by a careless or unnecessary, or any, lurch of the train; that while so standing and exercising care the plaintiff was in a safe position, where he could not have received the injuries complained of. The answer also affirmatively contains the following allegation: That the fact that the plaintiff was occupying the platform was not known to any of the defendant's agents or servants, and that the position occupied by the plaintiff upon the platform was not dangerous to any person occupying the same and exercising reasonable care and prudence. The plaintiff's reply merely denies each and every allegation of new matter contained in the separate defense of the answer. Evidence was submitted by both parties upon the issue of contributory negligence tendered by the defendant,—upon the part of plaintiff, that he exercised due care while standing on the platform; and by defendant, some evidence tending to show that plaintiff attempted to catch his falling hat, and thereby fell. No evidence was directly introduced as to whether the platform, under the circumstances, was in itself a dangerous place, or otherwise. The evidence showed that an excursion train was advertised, and passengers invited to procure tickets therefor from Oakesdale to Spokane, to visit the fruit fair in the latter city; and the advertisement also requested the passengers to notify the agent, so that necessary equipments could be ordered. A large number of passengers were carried to Spokane between Monday, the 7th, and the 9th of October. On the 9th the railroad company carried a crowd of people home on twelve coaches, drawn by one engine. The evidence tends to show that all the seats were occupied, and that the aisles were very much crowded, in the respective coaches, and that people were riding on all the platforms of the train. The plaintiff got on the train at Spokane on the 9th, and passed through six crowded coaches, looking for a seat. The aisles were crowded with people standing along between the seats and leaning over upon them. The plaintiff then took a position on the platform at the rear end of the coach, where he stood. There were six other passengers standing between the two coaches, one or two of them being ladies; and there were ladies generally, as well as men, carried on a number of the platforms of the coaches. The conductor took up the ticket of plaintiff while he was standing upon the platform, and said nothing about the position which plaintiff or anyone else occupied on the platform. While the train was going at considerable speed, and on rather an incline, use of the air brake caused the coach on the platform of which plaintiff was standing to jolt or lurch, and plaintiff was thrown from the train and injured. After the introduction of testimony on the part of the plaintiff had been concluded, defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was overruled; and thereafter, at the conclusion of the case, defendant asked for an instruction for a verdict for itself, which was refused. A verdict was returned for plaintiff, and judgment entered thereon.

A number of objections were taken to the instructions of the court by the counsel for the defendant, and also objections to refusal by the court to give instructions tendered by counsel for defendant. Instructions which are deemed material here were given as follows: "Now, gentlemen of the jury, if you find from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff was a passenger upon this train at the time alleged, and that he fell or was thrown from the train or from the platform—as alleged in both the complaint and answer, I believe—of one of the coaches, it is for you to determine from the evidence in this case, first, as to whether or not the plaintiff was on that platform from his own choice, or whether or not the cars of the defendant upon that occasion were crowded in such a condition that it necessitated him to take up a position upon the platform in question in order to ride from Spokane to 43 L. R. A.

Tekoa." "Now, you are further instructed by the court that if you find from the evidence in this case that there was no room inside of the cars for the plaintiff to either sit or stand, or that there was any other reason justifying the plaintiff in remaining upon the platform, I charge you that it was, even under such circumstances, necessary for the plaintiff, while he was standing upon the platform, to take reasonable precaution to prevent being thrown from the train, by the motion thereof, from where he was; and if you find from the evidence that the plaintiff failed to take such precaution, and by reason of such failure was thrown from the train, by the motion thereof, which could reasonably be expected when running, then I charge you that the plaintiff cannot recover, and you must find for the defendant."

"The jury are further instructed that it is the duty and obligation of a common carrier of passengers for hire to furnish passengers with seats for their accommodation; and, if you find from the testimony in this case that the defendant in this case received the plaintiff as a passenger, the plaintiff thereby became entitled to a seat in one of the cars of the defendant's train, and it is not the duty of the plaintiff to go from car to car while the train is in motion to find a seat; and if the defendant received the plaintiff as a passenger, and failed to furnish plaintiff with a seat, then the court instructs you that it was not negligence for the plaintiff to take a position upon the platform of one of the defendant's cars, provided that said position was one where a person exercising ordinary care and prudence would be safe from injury if the train of the defendant were run in a careful manner. The jury are further instructed that if you find from the evidence in this case that the defendant failed to furnish accommodations for the passengers on the train mentioned, so that a large number of passengers upon that train were compelled to stand in the aisles and upon the platforms of those cars, then you must find that the defendant was guilty of negligence; and, if you find that the defendant was guilty of negligence, you cannot find that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff in this action, unless you find the plaintiff himself was free from negligence upon his part." "The jury are instructed that, if there were no vacant seats in the car of defendant, the plaintiff is not chargeable with negligence in standing on the platform of the car of the defendant, providing that you find that that was the most comfortable and convenient place for the plaintiff to occupy on the trip; and the defendant is not absolved from liability for injury to a passenger while riding on the platform of a car, unless the defendant provided room inside of the car for the proper accommodation of the passengers, and that a mere space on the inside, in which to stand between the seats, is not ordinarily such proper accommodation. If the jury find from the evidence in this case that there were in fact no vacant seats in the car of the defendant, it is for you to determine whether it was negligence on the part of the plaintiff to stand on the platform, even if there was room to stand in the inner gangway. And you are further instructed that in no case can you find for the plaintiff, unless you find that the defendant was guilty of some negligence, by himself or some of his agents or servants." "If the defendant was guilty of negligence in furnishing seats for the passengers, including the plaintiff, but the plaintiff, through his own carelessness and negligence, caused the injury, then you should find for the defendant." The court, at the request of defendant, gave the following instruction: "If you find from the evidence that there was no room inside the car for the plaintiff to either sit or stand, or that there was any other reason [to] justify the plaintiff in remaining upon the platform, I charge you that it was, even under such circumstances, necessary for the plaintiff, while he was standing upon the platform, to take reasonable precaution to prevent from being thrown from the train, by the motion thereof, while running; and if you find from the evidence that the plaintiff failed to take such precaution, and by reason of such failure was thrown from the train, by the motion thereof, reasonably to be expected when running, then I charge you that the plaintiff cannot recover, and you must find for the defendant."

The testimony discloses that notices were posted on the coaches of defendant's train that passengers must not stand on the platform, and that passengers were not allowed to go upon the platform of the car while the train was in motion. It will be observed that the complaint charged that, while the plaintiff was standing on the platform, by reason of the careless manner in which the train was being run, and the dangerous position which the plaintiff was forced to occupy by reason of the overcrowded condition of the cars, he was, by a sudden, careless, and unnecessary lurch of the train, caused by carelessness of the defendant in the operation of the train, thrown from the platform to the ground in a violent manner. And the answer, after denying the negligent acts charged in the complaint, alleges that the position occupied by plaintiff upon the platform was not dangerous to any person occupying the same and exercising reasonable care and prudence, and that plaintiff was standing upon the platform in a position where, if he had exercised care in preserving his balance he would not have been injured. An inspection of the record at the trial indicates that the theory upon which the defense was conducted was that the plaintiff contributed to the falling from the train by his own carelessness in balancing and standing upon the platform. The question of the occupation of the platform by plaintiff in itself being dangerous was not particularly brought to the attention of the court or jury until instructions were requested. It was insisted by the defendant, however, during the trial, that it was not negligence contributory to the accident, on the part of the defendant, to fail to have the necessary cars and provide the necessary accommodations for its passengers returning from Spokane on the 9th of October. Counsel for defendant now urge that it is prima facie negligence, or negligence per se, as a matter of law, for a passenger to stand upon the platform of a railway train in motion, and that, where such position is plainly the cause of the passenger's injury, he is guilty of negligence, as a matter of law, and that, where such position is not plainly the cause of the injury, the question of contributory negligence should be left to the jury as a fact. And the familiar rule is stated that every man in the possession of his faculties is responsible for the consequences reasonably to be anticipated from his own acts, and it is contended that reasonably prudent men do not, under ordinary circumstances, stand upon the platforms of trains in motion, and, when the passenger is thrown from the platform by some sudden lurch or jerk, then his standing upon the platform is plainly the cause of his injury; and many cases are cited by counsel, some of which sustain their contention, but some of which are upon facts essentially different from those in the case at bar. For illustration, in the case of Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moneyhun, 148 Ind. 147, 34 L. R. A. 141, the plaintiff went out, not upon the platform, but upon the lower steps of the platform, and leaned over, and by a lurch of the train was thrown therefrom. A number of cases are also cited upon the presumption of negligence from the happening of the accident, and the presumptions arising therefrom, and also other cases where proper accommodations were provided for the passenger inside the coach, and he left and went out, and stood on the platform. But none of the cases examined are exactly in point with the facts under consideration here. In Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 652, it is stated: "Whether standing upon the platform of a railway car voluntarily, and without any necessity for so doing, would be evidence of the want of such due and reasonable care on the part of the passenger as would exonerate the company from liability in case of an accident resulting in his injury, would, of course, depend upon all the circumstances, and would be the proper subject of inquiry by a jury." See Willis v. Long Island R. Co. 34 N. Y. 670; Werle v. Long Island R. Co. 98 N. Y. 650; Graham v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 336; Merwin v. Manhattan R. Co. 113 N. Y. 659. Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 149, says: "It is not negligence per se for a passenger to ride upon the platform of a railway car; nor is it negligence to stand upon the platform of cars in motion when there are no vacant seats inside the car." In Willis v. Long Island R. Co. 34 N. Y. 670, it was said: "There is no rule of the common law which makes it the duty of the passenger to the carrier to select a position in the vehicle least exposed to danger through the wrongful act of the proprietor. A seat on the outside of a stage coach may be more hazardous than an inside seat if the driver negligently overturns it on a pavement or a hillside; but the selection of that position is neither negligence per se, nor tributary, in a legal sense, to the injury." Mr. Justice Miller, in Marquette v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 33 Iowa, 564, said: "It is not, at common law, necessarily negligence in a passenger to ride on the platform of a car. Meesel v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 8 Allen, 234. It certainly is not improper for him to do so, if he cannot get a seat inside. Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 284. Nor is it negligence in passengers, unable to find seats in a car, to pass into another, by direction of the conductor, while the train is in motion. McIntyre v. New York C. R. Co. 43 Barb. 532. For while moving from one car to another, without cause, while a train is in motion, may be negligence, yet, if a passenger does so in obedience to a direction or request of the officer in charge of the train, the act may be deemed consistent with proper care, since passengers have a right to rely on the judgment of the officers of the train in respect to such matters, and are bound to obey the reasonable directions of such officers. Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 285. In judging of what is negligence in a particular case, regard is to be had to the growth of science and the improvement of the arts which take place from time to time; for many acts or omissions which are now evidence of gross negligence were but a few years ago consistent with great care and skill, and, on the other hand, many things, which a few years since would have been considered negligence, are now consistent with proper care and skill. Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 7. And especially is this true in respect to railroad carriages, which within a few years have been transformed from crude and clumsy cars into magnificent traveling palaces, supplied in many cases with the comforts, conveniences, and even luxuries of elegant dwellings, in which the public may travel at a speed and with a degree of safety which thirty years ago would have been in the highest degree perilous to life and limb. And within a very short period there have been such wonderful improvements in the platforms and couplings of railway passenger coaches as that passengers may, with comparative safety, pass from the other cars of a train to the sleeping and dining coaches, on some of the fastest trains of this country, while in motion. Daily, ladies, with and without gentlemen, by hundreds, pass from car to car, and especially to sleeping and dining coaches, while the train is moving at a rate of speed much above 20 miles an hour, and yet accidents from this practice seldom occur. It cannot be true, therefore, as a matter of fact, that to pass from one car to another while the train is in motion at the usual rate of speed is so necessarily dangerous that it may not be justified under any circumstances; nor can it be true, as a fact, that the removal of a passenger from one car to another while the train is moving at its regular speed is so necessarily dangerous as that it cannot lawfully be done by the officer in charge of the train, under any circumstances, or for any cause. But if the fact were otherwise, it should be left to the jury to find upon the evidence, and it is not the province of the court to pronounce it so as 43 L. R. A.

matter of law." 2 Wood, Railway Law, § 308, declares the rule: "A railroad company is bound to furnish its passengers reasonable and proper accommodations for traveling, and if it has an insufficient number of cars, so that passengers are compelled to ride upon the platform, it is liable for injuries received by them while riding there." See also § 308, as to the duty of the railroad company to furnish each passenger with a seat. It cannot be successfully maintained now that the platform of a railway train is necessarily such a position of danger that no ordinarily prudent person would go upon it while the train was in motion. Such contention would be false to common experience in railway travel. Prudent and careful persons do frequently go across platforms of moving trains, and do stand upon them; and the conductors of trains do collect fare from passengers upon platforms, and frequently on ordinary roadways, and in first-class passenger coaches do not take any notice of such position of travelers. As observed by some of the courts, the modern improvements for safety in coaches, platforms, train appliances, and roadways have largely modified the risk of standing on the platform. But the defendant in this instance had a notice to the passengers to keep off the platform. Companies may make reasonable rules, and the passenger must obey them. Such a rule could doubtless be enforced, but such rules may also be waived by the acts of the company. Hutchinson, Carr. supra, very fairly states the rule. But the defendant in this case waived its notice against standing on the platform when it failed to provide suitable accommodations for the plaintiff inside its coaches, and yet received him on its train. In the case of McQuillan v. Seattle, 10 Wash. 465, it was said: "Generally the question of contributory negligence is for the jury to determine from all the facts and circumstances of the particular case, and it is only in rare cases that the court is justified in withdrawing it from the jury."

The evidence discloses clearly that defendant was negligent in its duty to the passenger when the train left Spokane in its overcrowded condition. Not only did it not furnish seats for the passengers, but the passageways inside the coaches were crowded by standing passengers, and the platforms had men and women standing thereon who could not be accommodated inside the coaches; and, as has been observed by some of the authorities, it is the duty of the conductor to seat passengers. The instructions given by the superior court are not phrased in happy terms, perhaps; but, taken altogether, the question of contributory negligence, and also of the principal negligence, was fairly submitted to the jury, and the case cannot be reversed because the language used in the instructions was not aptly chosen, and may be open to criticism.

The judgment is affirmed.

Anders, Dunbar, and Gordon, JJ., concur.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Mary J. NOLAN, Admr., etc., of Jerry Nolan, Deceased,
v.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN, & HARTFORD RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(70 Conn. 159.)

1. Failure of the superior court to determine the facts correctly cannot be considered in the supreme court of errors.
2. An erroneous conclusion drawn by the trial court from facts found by it from the evidence offered may be corrected on appeal.
3. Findings by a trial court that a railroad did not sufficiently provide for the operation of two trains which came into collision; that it was negligent in falling so to provide by special order in addition to the general rules; that an injury resulted from this negligence; and that the railroad did not exercise ordinary care in the movements of trains,—although called findings of fact are reviewable by the appellate court as conclusions of law.

4. The legal duty of a railroad company operating a single-track road to its employees is not violated by failure to provide in its rules for giving those in charge of trains moving in the same direction telegraphic information of the relative position of the trains.
5. A railroad company operating a single-track road is not negligent in failing to give those in charge of trains moving in the same direction telegraphic information of the relative position of the trains.
6. A finding that conditions attending

NOTE.—Duties of master and servant with regard to rules promulgated for the safe conduct of a business.

- I. General principles.
- II. Limits of the duty to promulgate rules.
  - a. In general.
  - b. Extent of employer's duty tested by the usage of other persons engaged in the same business.
  - c. Rules prescribed must be definite and intelligible.
  - d. Necessity for rules,—whether for court or jury to decide.
- III. Habitual practice of employees, how far a legal substitute for a rule.
- IV. The master's duty to promulgate his rules.
- V. The master's duty to enforce his rules.
- VI. No recovery by servant unless omission to promulgate rules was proximate cause of the injury.
- VII. Construction and meaning of rules.
- VIII. Illustrative decisions as to the sufficiency of rules framed for the protection of railroad servants.
  - a. Rules for the protection of car repairers, and other railroad employees doing work on side tracks.
  - b. Rules to prevent the automatic or unauthorized movements of engines or cars.
  - c. Rules to obviate injury from the sudden starting of railway cars.
  - d. Rules regulating the switching of cars.
  - e. Rules as to the manner of loading railway cars.
  - f. Rules as to the operation of trains by schedules or special orders.
    1. Duty as to trainmen.
    2. Duty as to employees working on or near tracks.
  - g. Rules prescribing means for warning employees of the proximity of moving trains or cars.
- IX. Illustrative decisions as to the sufficiency of rules framed for the protection of servants in miscellaneous employments.
- X. Relation between the doctrine of common employment and the duty of a master to promulgate rules.
  - a. Duty of making rules, assignability of.
  - b. Duty to publish the rules, assignability of.
  - c. Position of employees vested with power to suspend general rules by special directions.

XI. Duty of the servant in regard to the rules promulgated by his employer.

- a. Generally.
  - b. Violation of rule by plaintiff not a bar to recovery, unless shown to be proximate cause of injury.
  - c. Servant not bound by rules not known to him.
    1. General principles stated.
    2. When a servant is deemed to have knowledge of a rule.
  - d. Validity of rules as regards employees.
    1. Public policy.
    2. Reasonableness.
  - e. Illustrative cases with regard to the violation of rules by the servant.
    1. Disobedience to rules respecting signals.
    2. Disobedience to rules regulating the work of coupling cars.
    3. Disobedience to rules regulating the operation of trains.
    4. Disobedience to rules in regard to switching.
    5. Disobedience to rules regulating the manner of getting on or off railway cars.
    6. Rules directing employees to be or not to be in particular places.
    7. Disobedience to rules prescribing that appliances shall be inspected.
    8. Disobedience to rules requiring servant to report dangers.
    9. Disobedience to rules regulating the manipulation of machinery.
    10. Disobedience to rules regulating personal habits of servants.
  - f. Waiver of rules habitually disregarded.
    1. Doctrine of waiver stated.
    2. Acquiescence in violation, when implied from employer's knowledge.
    3. Rationale of doctrine.
    4. Express agreement to obey rules, effect of.
  - g. Obligation of rules and other duties, effect of conflict between.
  - h. Injuries caused by co-servants' violation of rules, liability for.
    1. Under common-law principles.
    2. Under statutes modifying the common law.

two trains moving in the same direction on a single-track road created an emergency for which the rules governing the operation of trains did not provide, requiring the exercise of ordinary prudence in giving special instructions, is a finding of law reviewable by the appellate court.

7. An emergency requiring telegraphic communications to those in charge of trains moving in the same direction, of their relative position is not shown by the fact that the rear train is an engine pushing a snow plow running faster than the forward train and throwing snow, which interferes with the lookout, while the forward train is behind schedule time and required to stop for cars at a siding where trains stop only occasionally and at irregular intervals.
8. The meaning of the word "negligent" is a question of law where the law declares that the other conditions being present a person is liable for the injury caused by his conduct if it is negligent in the sense denoting the conception of moral blame or fault imputed to a person legally liable for the consequences of an unintentional act.

9. A finding of negligence cannot be reviewed for error in law if a separate statement of the facts ascertained and the application of the law thereto is impracticable, so that the case cannot serve as a precedent.
10. The mere fact that rules of a railroad company for the regulation of the movement of trains on the road are sometimes violated by employees to the knowledge of conductors does not charge the company with liability for injury to an employee for failure to enforce its rules.
11. The rule exempting an employee from liability for injury to one servant through the negligence of a fellow servant is too firmly established to be reversed or seriously modified by any power vested in courts.

(January 5, 1898.)

I. General principles.

As to the duty to adopt a safe system in so far as it relates to the duty of inspection, see, note "Knowledge as an element of the employer's liability to an injured servant." Walkowski v. Penokee & Gogebic Consol. Mines, 41 L. R. A. 33.

It has been judicially recognized that rules for the conduct of a business are prescribed both for the purpose of increasing the economic efficiency of the various instrumentalities which are brought into use, and for the purpose of lessening the risks which the servants will have to incur. Sutherland v. Troy & B. R. Co. (1891) 125 N. Y. 737.

The law, however, takes no account of the financial aspects of an employer's arrangements. From a juridical standpoint those arrangements are material only in so far as they may affect the safety of others. The persons who are most directly and vitally interested in the manner in which an industrial concern is carried on by its proprietor are necessarily those who assist him in his enterprise, and the rationale of the obligations which arise out of the situation is not far to seek.

However experienced and careful servants may be, a master is clearly not justified in conducting a complicated business on a system which assumes them to be capable of selecting, upon each and every occasion, that particular course of action which is the safest both for themselves and for their fellow employees. In the very nature of the case, many of the elements of the problems involved in the process of making a choice between alternative methods of work at any given time and place must be unknown to persons whose range of view is necessarily limited to their own immediate environment. Some of the perils produced by unavoidable ignorance may doubtless be obviated by properly instructing the servants. But even after the very fullest information of which the circumstances admit has been imparted to them, there will, in many lines of business, remain a residuum of situations which can be rendered safe for them only by the issuance of peremptory directions which leave nothing to their own discretion, and require them to do certain work in a specified manner. Wherever, therefore, the master should, as a reasonably prudent man, see that there is a probability of injury to some individual servant or to some class of servants, if they and their fellow employees are left to regulate their actions according to their own ideas of what is proper, he is charged with the 43 L. R. A.

obligation of protecting them, as far as possible, both by prescribing the lines upon which the ordinary routine of their work shall be conducted, and by declaring what precautions shall be taken by them to minimize the danger arising from special emergencies.

It has accordingly been recognized from a very early period in the evolution of the law relating to the employer's liability for injuries to his servants that he is, to use the language of an eminent English judge in a noted case, "no less responsible to his workman for personal injuries occasioned by a defective system of using machinery, than for injuries caused by a defect in the machinery itself," or, in other words, that "a master is responsible in point of law, not only for a defect on his part in providing good and sufficient apparatus, but also for his failure to see that the apparatus is properly used." Per Lord Watson in Smith v. Baker [1891] A. C. 325, 353, referring to the opinions of Lord Chelmsford in Barton's Hill Coal Co. v. McGuire (1858) 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 310, and of Lord Wensleydale in Weems v. Mathieson (1859) 4 Macq. H. L. Cas. 226.

About the same time as these last-cited cases were decided the court of exchequer applied a like principle in Vose v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. (1858) 2 Hurlst. & N. 728, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 249, 4 Jur. N. S. 864. (See VIII. a, infra, for the facts.)

The duty upon which this responsibility is predicated is therefore one particular branch of the general duty of the master not to expose his servants to extraordinary dangers. Reagan v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. (1887) 93 Mo. 348.

Thus, in a case in which the absence of regulations was held to raise for the jury the question whether the master was guilty of negligence, the court remarked, arguendo: "It is the duty of the master having control of the times, places, and conditions under which the servant is required to labor, to guard him against probable danger in all cases in which that may be done by the exercise of reasonable caution." McGovern v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1890) 123 N. Y. 280.

Sometimes the courts have apparently failed to realize completely the distinction between the master's responsibility for the safety of his system in so far as it depends on the permanent arrangements of the instrumentalities, and his responsibility for that safety, in so far as it depends upon general directions designed to guide the servants in respect to the use of those instrumentalities. See, for example, Richlands

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fairfield County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence in which defendant suffered default and the contested question was as to the amount of damages. Reversed.

The material facts on which the plaintiff relied for a recovery were that the defendant sent out a snow plow and locomotive following a freight train, and that it conducted itself negligently in the management and equipment of the train by failing to give proper telegraphic information to those in charge of them as to their relative position; by failing to give proper orders as to their running; by running the snow plow at a dangerous rate of speed; by failing to notify the snow plow when the freight train was left standing on the track; by failing to have a sufficient crew on the freight train; by failing to have sufficient brakes on the snow plow; by improper construction of the snow plow so as to prevent a proper lookout along the track; by failing to have the proper means of signaling from the snow plow to the locomotive; and by failing to exercise proper supervision of the running of the trains.

The facts found by the trial judge were as follows:

"(1) On March 12, 1896, the defendant was a duly organized corporation under the laws of the state of Connecticut, and was operating its single-track road with sidings and switches extending from the city of Bridgeport, in the state of Connecticut, to the city of Pittsfield, in the state of Massachusetts, and forming a part of what is

Iron Co. v. Elkins (1893) 90 Va. 249. The general principle as to the duty to prescribe rules was enunciated in the course of the argument, but, as a matter of fact, the injury was caused by the failure of the master to provide adequate protection against flying objects.

The following selection of extracts from various opinions will indicate sufficiently the language in which the obligation of protecting the servant by a proper system has been defined. Other instances will be found scattered through the passages quoted below from cases dealing with special points.

The failure of one "who employs servants in a complex and dangerous business" to "prescribe rules sufficient for its orderly and safe management" is negligence. Richlands Iron Co. v. Elkins (1893) 90 Va. 249.

"Without such regulations their employees would be at the mercy of others [coemployees] whom they had no election in employing, or over whose actions they have no control." Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Powers (1874) 74 Ill. 341.

"The rule is well settled that it is the duty of all persons and corporations having many men in their employ in the same business to make and promulgate rules which, if observed, will afford protection to the employees. This is the more necessary where the manner of doing business is such that the danger or safety of an employee at any given time depends upon the way in which some other employee is engaged at the same time. In such a case, where the action of one employee may make that dangerous which, if he took no action, would be safe, it is undoubtedly the duty of the common employer to make such rules as will enable the person whose safety is put at risk, to be advised of the danger and to avoid it." Eastwood v. Retsof Min. Co. (1895) 86 Hun, 91.

"It is settled doctrine that a railroad company is bound to guard its employees against negligence of coemployees, so far as it can, by the enactment and promulgation of reasonable rules in the management of its business." Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 128 N. Y. 662.

"It is also the duty of a railroad company to use reasonable and proper precautions to protect its employees from injury while engaged in the performance of their duties." Gould v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1885) 66 Iowa, 590.

"It is certainly the duty of railway companies to have suitable regulations for the doing of their business, which will give reasonable protection to their employees where the exposure is such that prudence requires it." Houston 43 L. R. A.

& T. C. R. Co. v. Strycharski (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 555.

"A failure to make proper rules or establish a proper method for the conduct of his business" will make the master liable for injuries to his servant, caused by improper or negligent conduct of the work by coemployees, which the observation of a proper and sufficient rule would have prevented." Ford v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1891) 124 N. Y. 493, 12 L. R. A. 454.

"When a railroad company's employees are known to be doing their work in a reckless and dangerous manner it is the duty of the company [master] to change the manner of operation by some regulation or rule." Doing v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1897) 151 N. Y. 579.

"The intestate, upon entering the defendant's employ, assumed and assented to the ordinary risks incident to the service. But employers cannot avail themselves of this assent unless they take reasonable precautions to insure the servant's safety while in the performance of his duties, and there can be no exemption from liability for injuries sustained by a servant, when such injuries are traced to the employer's failure to take such precautions. Within the operation of this principle a corporation is bound to carry on its business under a proper system and under reasonable rules and regulations, and if, through a failure to establish such, a servant is injured, the corporation is liable. The master is responsible for his own negligence and want of care, and this may appear from his failure to furnish proper machinery and materials for the work, or from the employment of incompetent and unfit servants and agents, or from a failure to make proper rules or establish a proper method for the conduct of his business." Ford v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1891) 124 N. Y. 493, 12 L. R. A. 454.

In Reagan v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. (1887) 93 Mo. 348, the court cited with approval the following passage from the treatise of Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 93: "It is also the duty of the master, so far as he can by the use of ordinary care, to avoid exposing his servants to extraordinary risks, which they could not reasonably anticipate, though he is not bound to guarantee them against risks. One who employs servants in complex and dangerous business ought to prescribe rules sufficient for its orderly and safe management. His failure to do so is a personal negligence, for the consequences of which he is liable to his servants."

The subjoined statement of the general rule by another text-writer has been adopted in Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Echols (1894) 87 Tex. 330: "If a master is engaged in a complex known as the 'Berkshire Division' of the defendant. (2) At all of the regular stopping places for trains, with three exceptions, the defendant maintains a telegraph office, and the departure of all trains from stations having a telegraph office is at once telegraphed to New Haven, to the train despatcher. (3) At all of the regular stopping places for trains, with three exceptions, the defendant maintains a time board, upon which the station agent places in large figures the time of departure of each train from these stations. The time board apprises the conductor and engineer of each train of the time of departure of the train last at the station, and going in the same direction, and these officials rely upon such information in regard to the position of trains in advance, in the absence of special order. (4) The movement of all trains upon this division was in the exclusive control of the train despatcher at New Haven. Conductors and engineers and all officials were bound to obey his orders. He acted in the name, by the authority, and in the place, of the defendant. (5) The division superintendent ordered trains to run, and the train despatcher gave the running orders by telegraph. (6) The train despatcher had at all times the location of every train, regular and extra, running upon this division, as they passed the telegraphic stations, and knew at what stations or places each train was to stop, and about the length of time it would be required to stop. (7) Whenever special orders to control the movements of trains are necessary, the train despatcher at New Haven sends such orders by telegraph to the operator located at a station which such train is approaching, and the operator hands business that requires definite regulations for the safety and protection of his employees, a failure to adopt proper rules, as well as laxity in their enforcement, is negligence per se, and the establishment of defective or improper rules is such negligence as renders the master responsible for all injuries resulting therefrom. Wood, Mast. & S. § 403; 3 Wood, Railway Law, § 382."

To the same general effect, see also Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Powers (1874) 74 Ill. 341; Hartvig v. N. P. Lumber Co. (1890) 19 Or. 522; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb (1894) 9 Ind. App. 198; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Finley (1895) 11 Tex. Civ. App. 64; Crew v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. (1884) 20 Fed. Rep. 87 (in charge to jury).

The doctrine that continuance of work with knowledge of a danger may charge the servant with contributory negligence or an assumption of the risk has been applied in reference to a defective system.

Thus, a brakeman who is notified by a rule of the company that he will sometimes have to couple cars which have lumber, etc., projecting over their ends, and is required to observe the manner in which such cars are loaded, cannot, even if such method of loading is negligent, recover for injuries received in coupling a car so loaded, for he is negligent in voluntarily engaging in the service with knowledge of the company's nonperformance of its duty. Brennan v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1892) 93 Mich. 157.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cumpston (1897) 15 Tex. Civ. App. 493, one of the assignments of error was as follows: "The court erred in charging the jury that defendant would be liable if it did not establish rules and regulations to protect its employees. This was error, because there was no pleading nor evidence showing what rules and regulations should have been established." But the court of appeals said: "It was not necessary for appellees to show, either by their pleading or evidence, exactly what rules and regulations should have been established. The pleading and testimony were amply sufficient to show that proper rules and regulations should have been provided, that it was practicable, and that they were not provided. The evidence indicates that the company did not use ordinary care for the protection of its employees, but negligently left them in a dangerous place, without proper regulations for their safety."

The above principle is sometimes expressed in terms of the doctrine as to the assumption of risks by the servant.

"The rule that the servant takes the risks of the business is subject to the qualification 43 L. R. A.

that the master must exercise reasonable care to guard the servant, while engaged in his duties, from unnecessary hazards, including hazards from negligence of coemployees. In the business of a railroad this duty is especially important in view of the dangers of the employment, and the serious consequence likely to ensue from the negligence of coemployees." Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 128 N. Y. 602.

In Sheehan v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1883) 91 N. Y. 332, it was argued by the defendant's counsel that the plaintiff took the risk of defects in the defendant's system of running trains by telegraphic orders, but the court said: "There are cases where such an argument might apply, but I am not aware of any principle which releases the master from liability to an employee who has been injured by the very act of his employer, or by the omission, on its part, to provide rules which, faithfully carried out, would insure safety. There was no such bargain between the parties, and public policy forbids that one should be implied." Compare Wild v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1891) 21 Or. 159; Ford v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1891) 124 N. Y. 493, 12 L. R. A. 453.

So "if the rules and schedules of a railroad company, calculated and provided for the purpose of running the trains with safety and avoiding collisions, be defective or ambiguous, and an employee knows the rules, or has ample opportunity to know them to such an extent as will authorize the authorities of the road to presume that he does know them, and he continues in the service of the company and makes no complaint or endeavor to have the defect remedied, he may be deemed to have waived his right, and he is barred from claiming damages for an injury suffered by him in consequence of such defect." Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Rhodes (1876) 56 Ga. 645.

It devolves on the master to show that he has observed the duty of making proper regulations. It is an affirmative fact that he can readily show, whilst usually the plaintiff cannot prove its negative. The servant must prove negligence, and to exonerate himself the master should show that proper regulations to prevent accidents had been adopted, and these having been shown to have been made, the presumption is that the act was in violation of the rule, and the company will not be liable, unless the servant inflicting the injury was incompetent, and the company knew it, or had reasonable and proper means of knowing it. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Powers (1874) 74 Ill. 341.

a copy of said order to the conductor and a copy to the engineer of said train. (8) On said day the regular way freight, known as '1411,' and so designated hereafter in this finding, started from Great Barrington at 5:30 A. M. It gradually fell behind its schedule time, and at Falls Village was considerably late. Freight trains are often late, and everyone connected with the operation and movement of defendant's trains knew this. (9) At Great Barrington the conductor received an order from the division superintendent to stop at Kent Furnace, and attach to 1411 three freight cars on siding there. (10) Kent Furnace is between North Kent and Kent, and is nothing but a railroad siding, where freight trains occasionally stop, but only upon orders from the division superintendent. There is no station, no station agent, no telegraph, or time board there.

There are only two other places on this division where freight trains stop similar to this place, viz., Trumbull Ice Pond and Glendale. Kent Furnace is an unusual stopping place, not named upon the official time table in use by defendant's employees. (11) Freight 1411 ran at the rate of from 20 to 25 miles an hour,—the usual speed of freight trains,—and when it left Cornwall Bridge at 10:28 A. M., its last stopping place, and the last station at which telegraphic orders could have been issued to it, it was one hour and eighteen minutes behind its regular schedule time. (12) The only station between Cornwall Bridge and Kent is North Kent, where they have no telegraph, and where 1411 was not required to stop, and did not stop, on this day. (13) Kent Furnace is about 7 miles and Kent about 8½ miles from Cornwall Bridge. (14) Freight 1411

II. Limits of the duty to promulgate rules.

a. In general.

The extent and quality of the obligation of the master to frame rules for the guidance of his servants will be more clearly understood if we advert to the decisions in which the language used has a special relation to the limits of that obligation.

On the one hand, we find in those decisions such positive forms of statement as these: "The law imposed on it [the master] the duty of making and enforcing such reasonable rules and regulations for the government of men in its [his] service as to prevent or guard against injury by one servant to another, in so far as that was reasonable and practicable." Doing v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1897) 151 N. Y. 579.

"The defendant, in making rules for the government of its employees, is bound to use ordinary care and to anticipate and guard against such accidents and casualties as may reasonably be foreseen by its managers exercising such ordinary care." Warn v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1894) 80 Hun. 71.

The establishment of defective or imperfect rules is as much negligence as the failure to establish any rules. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Echols (1894) 87 Tex. 339.

Where an employer knows, or ought to know, that a certain rule is inefficient, either because it is not calculated to furnish proper protection, or because it is habitually disregarded by employees, it becomes his duty to adopt such other additional regulations as will secure the safety of the servant concerned. Fordyce v. Briney (1893) 58 Ark. 206.

Otherwise he must see to it at his peril that the existing rule is carried out. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Triplett (1891) 54 Ark. 280, 11 L. R. A. 773. (See generally, as to the duty to enforce existing rules, V. infra.)

As against the employer, his own rules furnish competent evidence of a proper standard of care. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp (1895) 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. Rep. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233.

Since the law, irrespective of the rules of a railroad company, imposes upon it the duty of inspecting its cars properly, it is not error to allow a plaintiff to prove that the rules of the company required an inspection at terminal and intermediate points. Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Carr (1897) 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1172.

But it would be error to allow a witness to be asked a question based on the hypothesis that the rules of the employer can, as against the servant, be referred to as evidence that a certain way of doing the work was careful. The law, and not the rule of the employer, defines negligence. Pennsylvania Co. v. Stoelke (1882) 104 Ill. 201.

The negative aspect of the same principle is illustrated by such statements as the following, in which the language of the courts is either given verbatim or followed very closely.

An employer is "only bound to use ordinary care in formulating rules, and it is not reasonable to proceed upon the assumption that every injury to an employee can be guarded against and prevented by making such rules. It is the duty of the defendant [employer] to anticipate and guard against, by rules or otherwise, only such accidents and casualties as might reasonably be foreseen by him in the exercise of ordinary prudence and care." Berrigan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892) 131 N. Y. 582.

"Even if it could be shown, after the accident occurred, that it might have been prevented by adopting and enforcing some suitable rule, that would constitute no proper test of liability. The failure to adopt rules is not proof of negligence, unless it appears from the nature of the business in which the servant is engaged that the master, in the exercise of reasonable care, should have foreseen and anticipated the necessity of such precautions." Morgan v. Hudson River Ore. & I. Co. (1892) 133 N. Y. 666.

The law "does not impose upon a railroad company the duty of making a specific rule for every particular act that is to be performed by its employees. The failure to adopt a particular rule is not evidence of negligence, unless it appears that the master in the exercise of reasonable care should have foreseen and anticipated the necessity thereof." Ely v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 88 Hun. 323; S. P. Burke v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. (1893) 69 Hun. 21.

Thus, a railroad company is not negligent in failing to publish rules for the regulation of such simple work as the moving of cars by hand on a siding down a slight grade. Moore Lime Co. v. Richardson (1897) 95 Va. 326. (Plaintiff's decedent walked behind the car he was pushing, and was caught by another which overtook it.)

"A rule easily followed by servants, and, when followed, securing safety to co-servants, is a reasonable compliance with the duty owing by the company to them. Niles v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1897) 14 App. Div. 70.

Unless the rules adopted by railroad companies are shown to be "palpably unreasonable or clearly insufficient," they ought not to be charged with negligence on account of their reached Kent Furnace about 10:50 A. M. and while the train remained on the main track the engine began the work of getting the three freight cars from the siding to the main track. (15) The usual running time for the freight train between Cornwall Bridge and Kent Furnace, where no stop is made at North Kent, is twenty-one minutes, and the usual stopping time to do the work at Kent Furnace is fifteen minutes. (16) The work at Kent Furnace on this morning would have taken the usual stopping time, fifteen minutes. (17) Between 5:30 and 6 A. M. an extra train, known as '474' and hereafter in this finding so designated, consisting of a snow plow, locomotive, and tender, the snow plow being ahead of the locomotive and tender, and pushed by the locomotive, left Pittsfield, for the purpose of clearing the track of the defendant of snow. (18) Train 474 ran at about 40 miles an hour, and steadily gained on 1411. In order that 474 should do effective work, it was necessary that it run between 35 and 40 miles an hour. (19) Train 474 received telegraphic orders at Falls Village to run extra to New Milford. New Milford is the fourth station below Kent. This gave 474 the right of the track to New Milford, keeping ten minutes off the time of all regular trains. Thereafter train 474 ran under this order, which was in accordance with the rules. When 474 reached a station, and the time board showed that the last train at the station departed ten minutes or more before, 474 might continue its run in the absence of special order. (20) Train 474 passed Cornwall Bridge at 10:52 A. M. twenty-four minutes behind freight 1411, under the order recited in paragraph 19, supra. (21) Train 474 knew freight 1411 adoption and use. LITTLE ROCK & M. R. Co. v. BARRY.

The promulgation of such rules as, if faithfully obeyed, will give reasonable safety to workmen, is a full discharge of the employer's duty. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Tohill (1895) 143 Ind. 60.

The test of the sufficiency of a rule is that it shall be reasonably well calculated to secure the safety of the employees, if it is faithfully obeyed. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Kanaley (1888) 39 Kan. 1. For similar expressions, see Warn v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1894) 80 Hun, 71; Texas & P. R. Co. v. French (1893, Tex. Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 866.

Or that it "protects the servant as far as reasonably can be done against the hazard of the negligence of coemployees." Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 128 N. Y. 662.

Or that, "if faithfully and carefully observed, it will give reasonable protection" to the employee concerned. Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1896) 103 N. Y. 581, 57 Am. Rep. 773.

Or that it is a safeguard upon which "a person of ordinary prudence" may rely as affording "reasonable protection" against the danger to which the workman was exposed in the particular case. Fordyce v. Briney (1893) 58 Ark. 206.

Before a railroad company can be found guilty of negligence in not making and promulgating any specific rule, it must at least be shown that the rule is reasonable, proper, and, if observed, would give reasonable protection to its employees. Larow v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1891) 61 Hun, 11.

In the absence of evidence showing that rules would be useful or feasible under the circumstances, the master cannot be found negligent in not having promulgated them. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Carruthers (1896) 56 Kan. 309.

Compare Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Becker (1896) 146 Ind. 202, where the court denied that the company was negligent in omitting to promulgate an additional rule which would have been useless and supererogatory. (See VIII. f, 1, infra, sub finem for the specific facts of the case.)

"A charge of negligence [on the part of an employer] for not making rules is avoided by the proof of a rule and practice, actually in force, which rendered any other rule apparently unnecessary." Kudik v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (1894) 78 Hun, 492.

In Simpson v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1896) 5 App. Div. 614, plaintiff's counsel contended that the defendant might have made further rules beside those in force, but the court re- 43 L. R. A.

marked that "so long as the rules which are promulgated will, if observed, secure safety, it is wiser to leave the making of new rules to the company."

"The doctrine imposing liability upon railroad companies for failure to adopt particular rules, the necessity for which was not apparent to them, should not be unduly or unreasonably extended. And since the company has a paramount interest in protecting its property from injury or destruction, and also in avoiding all liability for damages to employees and passengers, and the officers of the company deemed this system of signals and rules for the management and control of the movements of trains to be fully adequate for all purposes, these considerations must have some weight in determining whether the omission to promulgate a particular rule constitutes a neglect of duty, in not being able to foresee certain contingencies." Niles v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1897) 14 App. Div. 58.

An employer cannot be held liable on the ground of a failure to make rules to provide for a contingency which could not reasonably be anticipated. Whalen v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1897, Mich.) 72 N. W. 323 (unexpected, unusual, and unexplained failure of an air-brake to work).

The fact that an old and experienced employee, fully aware of the possible dangers of the situation existing at the time of the accident, deemed it unnecessary to adopt the precaution which it is suggested should have been embodied in a rule, has been mentioned as a circumstance tending very strongly to show that it was not negligence not to adopt such a rule. Niles v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1897) 14 App. Div. 70.

On the ground that an employer is not under any duty to make rules for the purpose of regulating acts which are in themselves negligent. It has been held that a railroad company is not chargeable with negligence because of its omission to make a rule for the protection of brakemen against injury received in boarding moving freight cars, when there is opportunity to board them while they are standing. McDugan v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1894) 10 Misc. 336.

One of the purposes of a rule is to convey a warning to the servant as to the danger of doing a certain act or doing it in a certain way. See Latorre v. Central Stamping Co. (1896) 9 App. Div. 145, where the main issue was whether a minor employee should have been instructed, and the court said that under the circumstances the jury would have been justified in finding had passed Cornwall Bridge at 10:28. (22) Train 474, under the rules of defendant, had the right to proceed, and under the order recited in paragraph 19 was bound to proceed, and did so, running at the rate of 42 miles an hour. (23) No one on board of train 474 knew that 1411 had received orders to stop at Kent Furnace. The conductor in charge and the engineer knew, from the order, that 474 had the right of track to New Milford. (24) No one in charge of or on 1411 knew officially that 474 was in the rear. The conductor and rear brakeman had heard the night before that 474 would be out in the morning, but had no information that 474 was in fact out. No one on 1411 knew the location of 474 at any time on said day. The conductor of 1411 had cautioned Rear Brakeman Hall, at West Cornwall, the station just north of Cornwall Bridge, to look out for 474, but gave him no further caution or order. (25) No order was received by those in charge of 474 or 1411 of the location of either of said trains, or of any fact relating to either train. (26) The train despatcher knew that 474 must overtake 1411 either at Kent Furnace or on the track before reaching Kent; and all of the foregoing facts except those in paragraphs 1, 14, 16, and 24, and the last two lines of paragraph 18, were known, or ought to have been known, to him, as well as those contained in paragraphs 49 to 53, inclusive. (27) The snow plow on 474 was in charge of plaintiff's intestate, the assistant roadmaster of defendant, who was engaged in working the flanges,—the appliances used in cleaning the tracks,—lifting them when they came to bridges, switches, etc., and lowering them thereafter. (28) Within the front part of said snow plow was that such instruction was necessary, or that there should have been some rule or regulation on the subject.

Hence the question whether the case was one in which there should have been a rule is sometimes determined upon the same principle as those which are controlling where the question to be settled is whether the servant should have been instructed as to some danger of the employment.

Thus, in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Strycharski (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 555, the court discussed the liability of the employer as follows: "It is certainly the duty of railway companies to have suitable regulations for the doing of their business, which will give reasonable protection to their employees where the exposure is such that prudence requires it. But all risks which an employee incurs in the service cannot be so provided against by previous regulation. There are some from which, by the use of his senses, he must protect himself. Such are those which are open and patent to his observation. Such was that from which appellee suffered. When the circumstances are such that the master is required, in the exercise of due care, to have a rule for the protection of the servant, the latter may presume that the rule exists until he ought to know the contrary; and he may rely on such presumption without being guilty of negligence, and may hold the master liable for any harm that results from the absence of the rule. But there is no authority that we know of which exacts from the master the duty of cautioning the servant against a danger which the servant, while performing his work, may see and guard against as well as could the master himself if present, or anyone else whom he might put to give the warning."

In this point of view it is clear that the simpler the acts to be performed, the less ground will there be for inferring the existence of an obligation to frame rules. Thus, it has been held that negligence cannot be predicated of the failure of an employer to promulgate rules for the guidance of men engaged in loading ore on cars and moving them along the track only a few hundred feet in length, not by engines, but by their own strength or that of a horse. Morgan v. Hudson River Ore & I. Co. (1892) 133 N. Y. 666.

Nor is a railroad company bound to make rules to govern its laborers as to what should be done to secure the remnants of the stacks of ties and prevent them from falling. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Echols (1894) 87 Tex. 339. The court said: "In this case the work to be done was of that character which could be performed and understood by any laborer of common intelligence. In its performance there was no danger greater than attends any work commonly done in the ordinary avocations of life. The reason for the rule requiring of the master the precaution of prescribing regulations for the discharge of such duties does not exist here, and therefore the rule does not apply to this case. The same requirements apply to all employers, railroads, manufacturers, merchants, farmers, and in fact every branch of business, when the business is such that the danger to the servant exists by reason of the very nature of the service to be performed; and it applies to neither when that danger may not be reasonably anticipated on account of the character of the work. Suppose that a citizen of the city of Houston had been running a wood yard, with hands employed in hauling and stacking cord wood, and at the same time other hands taking down the stacks of wood, and delivering it to customers. The same danger would exist as in this case, that a stack of wood 8 feet high, left unsecured, with a narrow base, might fall upon one passing, in discharge of a duty, in the yard. The same reason for the owner of the wood yard to make rules for the performance of this duty would arise out of this state of facts. Indeed, there is scarcely an employment in which labor finds remuneration that is not attended by some dangers, arising out of the negligence of coemployees. The rule is a sound and salutary one, when applied to cases involving extra risks, but it would be burdensome to all characters of ordinary business if extended beyond the necessity out of which it originated."

The employer's failure to promulgate a written rule cannot be made the basis of an action, where oral instructions covering the same subject-matter have been given. Whalen v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1897, Mich.) 72 N. W. 323.

b. Extent of employer's duty tested by the usage of other persons engaged in the same business.

Where the rules promulgated by an employer afford ample protection, if duly observed, the fact that different rules for the same emergency have been adopted by other employers is not sufficient to show that he is negligent. Smith v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1895) 88 Hun, 468.

But within certain limits the usage of other employers supplies an important element in the determination of cases of this type.

"When the question is whether the case was one in which rules ought to have been made, the fact that other people or corporations ena small elevation above its main floor, known as the observatory or cupola, and from which through two circular windows about 15 inches in diameter, the track could be seen. The snow plow was so constructed that it prevented a view ahead of the engine by the engineer. (29) Rule 104 of said defendant for the movement and operation of trains provides that 'when a train is being pushed by an engine, a flagman must be stationed in a conspicuous position on the front of the leading car, so as to perceive the first sign of danger, and immediately signal the engineman.' (30) The cupola was designed to carry two men, one to work the flanges, and one to act as a lookout. (31) Between West Cornwall and Kent Furnace no one was in the cupola as a lookout or flagman. The assistant superintendent of the division was in said cupola watching the work of the plow, for which purpose he boarded the plow at Falls Village. (32) In the small compartment on the main floor of the plow were a stove, and nine men, who were laborers, to shovel snow in case of a drift, and other employees of defendant. (33) Said day was very cold, and the snow plow threw the snow considerably, rendering it difficult to see ahead. Just before the accident the plow was not throwing much snow, and a lookout could see through said two windows. (34) During the trip from Pittsfield, an employee, by direction of the conductor, had cleaned the two windows in the cupola every time 474 stopped. It was impossible to clean them while the train was in motion, and these windows had not been cleaned since 474 stopped at West Cornwall, eighteen minutes before. (35) After 1411 stopped at Kent Furnace, the rear brakeman, Hall, went up the track to flag 474. Rule 97 covered all the duty devolving on Hall, and provides: 'When a schedule freight train is detained at any of its usual stops beyond its gaged in the same business had or had not found it necessary to make rules upon that subject, is one which might well be considered." Eastwood v. Retsof Min. Co. (1895) 86 Hun. 91.

The positive branch of this rule is illustrated by an Illinois case in which it was held proper on the cross-examination of a witness to ask whether it was not the custom of the defendant company, or of all companies, to have a foreman with the sectionmen, to warn them of the approach of trains. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McGrath (1885) 115 Ill. 172.

In Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 128 N. Y. 662, the trial judge had admitted in evidence, against the objection of the defendant, the rules of other railroad companies, and among other rules those enacted for the protection of repairmen, and instructed the jury upon the obligation of the defendant to make and promulgate proper rules for the conduct of its business. He referred to the fact that he had admitted the rules of other companies to be proved, "not because it was the duty of this company to adopt the rules of any other company, but to better enable you to judge and determine, in looking at the different rules that prevail, what is a reasonable and proper rule." After some further remarks on this point the judge proceeded: "I think rules might have been suggested, not adopted by any company. You have a right to consider whether some rule which occurs to you, even though no company had adopted it, would have been a better rule and given better protection, and such an one as ought to have been adopted and maintained. The defendant's counsel excepted to that part of the charge in relation to the jury determining what were proper rules, and they might conclude what rules should be." But the court of appeals said: "If the charge is to be construed as leaving it to the jury to determine, irrespective of the evidence, what rules ought to have been adopted for the safety of the repairmen, and to find the one way or the other on the question of the defendant's negligence in conformity with a conclusion so reached, the charge was undoubtedly erroneous. But this is not the fair interpretation of the charge. The plain object of the court was to guard the jury against giving undue weight to the fact that more specific, and, as the plaintiff's counsel contended, better, rules had been adopted by other companies than had been adopted by the defendant. This is very apparent from what follows the clause quoted: 'So that some other company has adopted a rule, you can't hold as matter of right that this company should have adopted it. If, on examining the rules of other companies and those that prevailed here, you should think that one set of them was not a reasonable protection, and the other was, it would help you very much in getting at what ought to be done. That is the reason why this evidence was admitted.' The effect of the charge was that the jury were to weigh the evidence, and, in view of the rules adopted by different companies, determine whether the defendant had discharged its duty in the premises, and that they were not to find a rule proper or improper because some other company has adopted or rejected it. The court was endeavoring to aid the jury in weighing the evidence which related to the rule under which the defendant's business was conducted, and that adopted on the same subject by other companies. We do not think the jury were misled."

On the other hand, the fact that no rule covering the circumstances out of which the injury arose has been promulgated by other employers in the same kind of business points very strongly to the conclusion that the failure to promulgate such a rule is not actionable negligence. See this point emphasized in Berrigan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892) 131 N. Y. 582; Morgan v. Hudson River Ore & I. Co. (1892) 133 N. Y. 666.

"But the fact that no such rules had been made [by other employers in the same business] is not conclusive against the necessity of making them. It is simply a fact to be considered. Where the business is complicated, the circumstances are those which do not occur often, and the danger is not serious, it may well be that the fact that other people engaged in the same business have found no necessity for making rules for the particular case is almost conclusive that such rules are not necessary. But where the circumstances are such that any person can see what might happen in a given case, and the danger is plain and obvious, the jurors might be at liberty to infer that rules to protect the employee were necessary, although they had no experience in the particular business, and although there was no evidence that other corporations in the same business had made rules for such cases." Eastwood v. Retsof Min. Co. (1895) 86 Hun. 91.

In Crowe v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1893) 70 Hun. 37, it was laid down that a railway company cannot be held negligent in failing to promulgate a rule which has never been adopted, and which would not be practicable.

leaving time, when the rear of the train can be plainly seen from a train moving in the same direction at a distance of at least twenty telegraph poles, the flagman must go back with danger signals not less than fifteen telegraph poles, and as much further as may be necessary to protect his train; but, if the rear of his train cannot be plainly seen at a distance of at least twenty telegraph poles, or if it stops at any point that is not its usual stopping place, or if an extra train is stopped at any point, the flagman must go back not less than twenty telegraph poles, and, if his train should be detained until within ten minutes of the time of a passenger train moving in the same direction, he must be governed by rule No. 99.' The employees of defendant occasionally violated this rule, and the conductor of 1411 knew this. Trains sometimes stopped so short a time that a strict compliance with the rule was impossible unless the brakeman was left behind, able if it were adopted, but the above cases show that the former of the grounds here suggested is laid down in too unqualified terms.

In Dcing v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1893) 73 Hun, 270, a case the facts of which are stated in VIII. a, infra, the plaintiff was non-suit on the ground that no evidence had been given that any rules were in use by other corporations engaged in business of a similar character, and no experts or other witnesses had given testimony tending to show that any rule was necessary or practicable in such a case, nor was the evidence such as to make the necessity and propriety of making and promulgating the rule contended for so obvious as to make the question one of common experience and knowledge. The abstract correctness of this doctrine was not denied by the court of appeals, but it was held that the principle which really controlled the case was that, when a master knows that his employees are doing their work in a reckless and dangerous manner it is his duty to change the manner of operation by some regulation or rule. Doing v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1897) 151 N. Y. 579. The decision in (1893) 73 Hun, 270, was followed in Ely v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1895) 88 Hun, 323, holding that the failure of a railroad company to adopt rules or regulations governing the loading of rails upon a flat car by gangs of men on either side is not negligence rendering it liable for an injury to one so engaged from the falling of a rail thrown on the car from the opposite side, unless rules relating to such work have been adopted by other companies, or a rule would be necessary and practicable. But the position taken by the court of appeals in (1897) 151 N. Y. 579, renders it difficult to say whether this decision would be upheld upon the facts disclosed, if it came under review in the higher tribunal.

Sometimes the employer's liability in this point of view has been determined by applying the test of the doctrine of assumption of risks.

Thus, in Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Kanaley (1888) 39 Kan. 1, we find the court arguing as follows: "Again, a railroad company is not required to change its orders, or signals, for the movement of its trains, because some other railroad company has adopted a different system of orders or signals. A railroad company may even have in use a system of orders or signals shown to be less safe than that adopted by another railroad company, without being liable to its employees for the consequences of the use of such orders, or signals. If the employee thinks which sometimes occurred. 474 was an extra train, and Hall's duty under the rules was to go back twenty telegraph poles, and flag the same. This was a distance of 3,000 feet, the telegraph poles being 150 feet apart. Hall went up the track about 600 feet, when train 474 rounded a sharp curve. (36) The assistant superintendent saw Hall running up the track and flagging, as soon as he could have seen from 474; and when 474 was about 600 feet from Hall he jumped from the cupola to the compartment, and motioned the conductor to stop the train. The conductor at once jumped upon the cupola, and pulled the bell rope twice, but it did not ring the bell in the engine cab. This bell rope connected with the engine, and the engineer relied upon it to warn him of danger ahead. (37) The engineer saw around the sharp curve, from the right hand side of his cab, Flagman Hall, when about 300 feet ahead, and he at once did all that he could do to stop 474 by proper to continue in the service of the company with the knowledge of the orders or signals in use, it is at his own risk, and all that he can require of the company is that he shall not be deceived as to the degree of danger he incurs."

c. Rules prescribed must be definite and intelligible.

See also VII. infra.

It is sufficiently obvious that an employer cannot be said to have discharged his duty in regard to the framing of rules unless their provisions are sufficiently specific to furnish the employees affected with adequate information respecting the acts which are to be done in order to carry out the employer's ideas as to the proper manner of performing the work.

Thus, a general rule that freight is to be safely loaded so that it cannot fall off the cars is not sufficient as a rule in regard to loading timber above the sides of the car, so as to relieve the railroad company from liability for injury to a servant by the fall of timber from a gondola car on which it was piled above the sides without stakes to hold it, although stakes were furnished by the company to be used in the discretion of its servants. Ford v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1891) 124 N. Y. 493, 12 L. R. A. 454. The court said: "Method or system as to loading lumber, there was none. Having furnished a good car and stakes that might be used, the manner of loading lumber was left to the judgment and discretion of its agents and servants. It was not sufficient for the defendant to show that its employees knew that the rule I have quoted applied to lumber, and also knew that the general usage required it to be staked, and that stakes were furnished and available to the men in the particular case before us. All this may be assumed to be true, and yet the fact exists that the use of the stakes was not enjoined upon the servants by any rule of the defendant or by any instruction ever given them. Having furnished the car and the stakes, it was left to the judgment and discretion of the foreman whether to use the stakes or not, and in this particular instance they were not used for the reason that they supposed the lumber would stay on the car over the short distance it was to be carried. And it is because of the failure of the defendant to require the use of the stakes in all cases that the neglect of its servants in this case is imputed to it. There was no rule, and the only method or system was such as the foreman in each par-reversing and applying brakes to engine and tender. (38) There was no air brake on said plow, the only brake being a hand brake. (39) Train 474 slowed down in running the 900 feet to train 1411, after Flagman Hall was seen. It was running about 20 miles an hour when it struck the rear of the freight train as it stood on the main track. It plunged through three freight cars before it stopped. The collision occurred at 11:02 A. M., ten minutes after 474 passed Cornwall Bridge. (40) As a result of the collision, the conductor of 474 was killed, some of the men in the compartment were injured, and the plaintiff's intestate was fatally injured. He lived about two or three hours after the collision, suffering greatly, and then died. He was fifty-one years of age, in good health, and at the time of his death, and for some time before, he had been the assistant roadmaster of the Berkshire Division of the defendant, having been employed on this division some thirty years. (41) Had the engineer been notified, through the bell, of the flagman ahead, and had he then done all he could to have stopped the train, the collision could not have been avoided, but probably its force and extent somewhat modified. (42) There was no negligence on the part of any of the employees of train 474, or of train 1411, except Rear Brakeman Hall. (43) Said train 474 was properly equipped, and its appliances in good order, except that it had no hospital stretcher on board, as required by statute, and no air brakes on the snow plow. Its appliances were in good order, except the said bell cord and bell. Train 1411 and its appliances were proper, and in good order. (44) The absence of the hospital stretcher in some degree increased the sufferings of the plaintiff's intestate, who had to be removed on boards for some distance, but did not cause his death. (45) Train 474 could have been particular case should deem the safe and proper one to pursue. Under such a state of facts the employer must be deemed constructively present during the loading of the cars, and the acts of his agents are in law deemed to be his acts. The improper and negligent loading of the cars is thus traced directly to the defendant, and its negligence established."

Where car repairers are required to work on a siding which trains may, in the ordinary course of business, enter from either end, and the custom is to protect such car repairers by placing a blue flag at one end only of a car which is undergoing repair, the company is negligent in not promulgating a more definite rule than one which merely provides that "blue is a signal to be used by car inspectors." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGraw (1896) 22 Colo. 363.

So, also, a rule for the protection of car repairers is essentially defective where it omits to designate the person by whom the danger signal may be removed. Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 128 N. Y. 662. (This case is reviewed at length in VIII. a, infra.)

So, also, it is as much the duty of a master to specify in a rule the means by which the notice of danger for which it provides is to be given as it is his duty to direct that such notice shall be given. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb (1894) 9 Ind. App. 198. (Rule requiring that actual notice of any switching done in the daytime on repair track should be given to the men working there, but not designating the person by whom notice was to be given, held not sufficient as a matter of law.)

But it would seem that as the work of examining, repairing, and moving cars in a yard is irregular, and not susceptible of being arranged with that nicety and exactness which can conveniently be applied in the running of regular trains, a railroad company is not negligent in promulgating general rules in regard to the duties to be performed under such circumstances. Besel v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1877) 70 N. Y. 171.

A rule which requires employees of one class to protect themselves by certain precautions against the possible consequences of certain acts of employees of another class cannot be impugned on the ground of insufficiency because it does not in terms forbid the latter class of employees to do those acts. Corcoran v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1891) 128 N. Y. 678. There one of the rules of the defendant provided that "men repairing cars must see for themselves that they are protected by a flag when under and between the cars;" another that "a red flag by day, red light or fire on the track by night, indicates danger; on perceiving such the engineer shall immediately stop his train before passing such signal." The trial judge, under the defendant's exception, submitted to the jury the question as to the sufficiency of the rules, the only suggestion made as to their insufficiency being that they did not in terms prohibit the coservants of the plaintiff from moving other cars upon the one from which the red flag was shown and under which the plaintiff was. But the court of appeals said: "This idea was necessarily included in the regulation which required a red flag to be hung out from a car in process of repair, and the rule must have been so understood by any person of common intelligence. It is not suggested that . . . [the coservant] was ignorant of the meaning of the signal. The rule would not be any more effective to prevent the accident, or more likely to insure observance, had it been followed by a provision, in express words, forbidding the employees from moving cars against, or in the direction of, another car from which a flag was exhibited. We think there was no proof of neglect on the part of the defendant to make and promulgate suitable and proper rules for the information and government of its employees, to warrant the submission of the case to the jury."

d. Necessity for rules,—whether for court or jury to decide.

In the absence of any testimony as to the possibility or usefulness of any code of rules or system of signals, which might be framed for the purpose of warning employees of the approach of detached cars in railroad yards, a jury is not justified in finding that the company was negligent in failing to promulgate such a code or system. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Carruthers (1896) 56 Kan. 309.

But where the evidence is, as is commonly the case, conflicting, or such as may be construed differently by reasonable men, it becomes a question of fact for the jury whether proper rules have been established. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Finley (1895) 11 Tex. Civ. App. 64.

The doctrine which is usually laid down, therefore, is that the question whether the master has failed in its performance of the duty which it owes to provide such appliances, and a system of transacting its business under a rule which would render their work reasonably stopped in about 1,500 feet, or the distance of ten telegraph poles. (46) Had the rear brakeman gone back twenty telegraph poles, and signaled, and had those in the cupola or on the engine of 474 seen him, and done their duty, the collision would not have occurred. (46½) The rear brakeman had about time to have gone back 3,000 feet after 1411 stopped at Kent Furnace, but not time enough to have returned to 1411, nor to have returned within the ordinary time of stopping at Kent Furnace. (47) The rules or regulations for the movement and operation of trains adopted and used by the defendant were substantially the same as those adopted by the American Railway Association after protracted conferences, and revised from time to time at the semiannual meetings of this association. About 90 per cent of the steam railways of this country are using these rules with such modifications as adapt them to the particular railway. (48) For the general movement and operation of trains these rules are the best and safest general rules yet devised by the best railroad talent of the country. (49) The only protection afforded by these rules to trains 474 and 1411 to prevent their colliding was the rule quoted in paragraph 33, supra. These rules were not and are not intended to cover all emergencies. These call often for special orders. (50) No order had been sent 474 or 1411 when they should meet, and it was certain they would meet unless 474 was stopped before 1411 reached Kent. It was part of the train despatcher's duty to notify trains, not regulated by the time tables and rules, in advance, where they would meet, so that they might know this fact, and collisions be avoided. Ordinary care required such orders, and in his failure to notify trains 474 and 1411 of this he was negligent. (51) Train 474 was a special and irregular train, run for an unusual purpose, for the safe, is a question for the jury. Warn v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1895) 92 Hun, 91.

In an action by a car repairer for injuries resulting from the car under repair being struck by a moving train, it is error to nonsuit the plaintiff, where the defendant admits that, while cars are being repaired (as this was), on tracks other than the repair tracks, "ordinary prudence, care, and the customs and regulations of the company, require that such work should not be done except while the car is being protected by watchmen or other suitable protection," and no evidence is offered that any such protection was provided. Luebke v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1883) 59 Wis. 127.

Whether, in the operation of trains, emergencies which no system of rules can anticipate and provide for have arisen, and whether, in view of such emergencies, the company has acted with the care which the circumstances demand, are questions of fact for the trial court. Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1896) 68 Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638. There a collision was caused by the incompetence of an inexperienced engineer, and the appellate court refused to review the following conclusion of the trial court: "The superintendent and train despatchers did not give Conrad special orders or proper messages to guide him in the movement of his train from Hawleyville, and failed to exercise reasonable care in this regard, in view of Conrad's known inexperience and the condition of business and situation of trains on the road on that day. The defendant was guilty of negligence amounting to a want of reasonable care in not providing, in some way, for the special direction of Conrad under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence. The collision was due to the incompetency of conductor Conrad, and to the negligence and want of reasonable care of the defendant, its superintendent, trainmaster, and despatchers, as above stated."

But the jury cannot be asked whether some specific rule suggested by the plaintiff should have been adopted. Larow v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1891) 61 Hun, 11. (For facts, see VIII. a, infra.)

Unless at least some evidence is offered showing that it was reasonable or practicable to obviate by a rule such accidents as that for which the servant seeks indemnity. Berrigan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892) 131 N. Y. 582. (See quotation from opinion in VIII. a, infra.)

To justify the submission of the question of the master's liability to the jury it must appear 43 L. R. A.

from the evidence, either that some rule relating to the work in which the servant was engaged had been adopted by other employers engaged in business of a similar character, or that, in the opinion of experts or other witnesses qualified to speak on the subject, a rule was necessary and practicable in such a case, or that the necessity and propriety of making and promulgating a rule is so obvious as to render the question one of common knowledge and experience. Ely v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1895) 88 Hun, 323, stating the effect of Berrigan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892) 131 N. Y. 582. (See the passage quoted in VIII. a, infra.)

In Cumpton v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1895, Tex. Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 737, the propriety of submitting to the jury the question whether the defendant should have provided reasonable regulations on the subject was made by the court to depend upon whether it was practicable under the given circumstances.

In Morgan v. Hudson River Ore & I. Co. (1892) 133 N. Y. 666, the plaintiff was one of several workmen engaged in loading with ore certain cars which were moved by hand or horse power along a slightly inclined track, and had crept under one of the cars to sweep some ore off the rails, when a car on the grade above him was started in some way, owing to the improper act of some coservant or outsider in removing the blocking. It was left to the jury to say whether it was a case for rules, and, if so, what particular rule should have been adopted. This the court of appeals held to be error, saying: "The recovery was based entirely on the absence of rules. It was not suggested at the trial, nor is it on this appeal, what particular rule the defendant could have adopted that would have been likely to prevent the accident. No evidence was given that any rule is in use in business of a similar character by other corporations of the same class carrying on like operations, nor was there any evidence by experts or other witnesses to show that any rule was necessary or practicable in such cases. It was left to the jury to say whether or not it was a case for rules, and if so, what particular rule should have been adopted. We know nothing with respect to the views entertained by the jury on these questions, except so far as they are indicated by their verdict for the plaintiff. It is not probable that they concluded that any definite rule should have been promulgated, but were content to hold that, as the plaintiff was injured, the defendant ought in first time the morning in question. The circumstances of this case were unusual, and present an emergency which probably no general code of rules could provide for, and the rules in question did not provide for. It required special orders and special instructions to trains 474 and 1411, so that train 474 should not collide with 1411 between Cornwall Bridge and Kent. (52) Extra trains are run daily over said division, averaging from eight to fifteen, and some days as high as twenty. (53) It would be impracticable to operate extra and regular trains entirely by special orders. In case of emergency, this must be done, and general rules cannot cover them. The meeting places of trains not upon the time-table and of regular trains off the regular time are provided for by special orders, and not governed by the printed rules. (54) Those in charge of 474 and 1411 and Rear Brakeman Hall were familiar with the rules, and knew that in ordinary cases the rules, and not special orders, would govern the movement of all trains on the division. The defendant had exercised ordinary care in the selection of all of its employees on trains 474 and 1411. (55) On March 20, 1896, the plaintiff was duly appointed administratrix of the estate of said Jerry Nolan, and duly qualified. (56) Written notice of a claim for damages was made in conformity to the statutory provision. (57) Time-table No. 23 and rules are made a part of the record, but need not be printed. Copies of the same may be handed to the judges of the supreme court of errors. (58) I find as a fact that these rules did not sufficiently provide for this emergency, and for the reasonably safe operation of trains 474 and 1411. This emergency required the exercise of great care by the defendant, since the danger of collision was great. (59) I find as a fact that the defendant was negligent in not providing for some way to have prevented it, or, in case it did not, respond to him in damages. Almost every conceivable injury that a servant receives in the course of his employment may in this way be submitted to a jury, and with the same result."

Whether or not the evidence is sufficient to show a case in which the duty to make rules rested on the employer is a question of law for the court. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Echols (1894) 87 Tex. 339.

In one case the court remarked: "A rule which would require no movement of the engine to be made . . . except in response to a signal from one person, when he might be in a position where his signal could not be seen by the engineer, would be such an unreasonable impediment to the prompt despatch of defendant's business as a public carrier, that we do not consider the question whether or not defendant was bound to adopt it, debatable, or one upon which fair-minded men would differ." Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 123 Mo. 121.

In Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1887) 67 Mich. 61, it was held that the plaintiff had not succeeded in establishing a want of ordinary care on the defendant's part where the evidence (as stated by the court) was to the following effect: "The platform car which caused the accident had stood upon the track for a month, and during the entire existence of the siding no car was shown ever to have left it before without being moved by the defendant's servants. Those connected with the freight train which backed in upon the siding just before the accident say it did not touch the car, and this testimony is substantially undisputed. The wind which, it is claimed, moved the car is shown to have produced a pressure against the end of the car not exceeding 20 pounds, which would hardly be expected to move a car weighing 7 tons on a grade such as this siding was shown to have been. This side track had been in constant use for at least sixteen years, holds all kinds of cars, and no case of a car of any kind going out by force of the wind has ever been known at that station. It also appears by the testimony of competent and skillful engineers and mechanics and railroad men that upon this siding there was no occasion for using stop-blocks; that their use was accompanied with inconvenience and danger; that good railroad management dispensed with them when not actually necessary, and that no necessity existed for their use upon this siding. There was no pretense but that all of the employees of 43 L. R. A.

the defendant were competent, skilled, and experienced men." (See also the specific rulings referred to in VIII. infra.)

III. Habitual practice of employees, how far a legal substitute for a rule.

An obvious corollary to the proposition that the master is responsible for the exercise of due diligence in directing the mode and manner of carrying on his business is that he is not liable where the mode in which it is carried on, by his authority, is reasonably safe, prudent, and careful, howsoever that result may be brought about. Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 123 Mo. 131.

Hence, whether an employer who is charged with a breach of the duty to make rules is entitled to shelter himself under the plea that the casualty which produced the injury would not have occurred if a certain customary method of doing the work had been adopted depends upon whether that method has actually become an incident of the management of his business, not only with his sanction and approval, but also in such a sense that his employees comprehend that he requires and expects them to conform to it. In other words, such a method is regarded as the legal equivalent of a rule when it is recognized and regularly enforced by the employer, and not otherwise.

In the case just cited a switchman, while uncoupling cars, was thrown to the ground by the sudden checking of the train in response to an unauthorized signal by another employee. The evidence showed that there were printed rules prescribing the signals for movements of trains, and that, according to the custom of the yard, those signals should have been given by the person engaged in the coupling. In discussing the question whether sufficient precaution had been taken to secure the safety of the employees, the court said: "That practice or custom was a part of the mode of conducting defendant's work, and its long continuance implies that it had the sanction of defendant. The employees were expected to conform to it as part of the usual course of the defendants business. . . . What greater protection would the plaintiff have had from the existence of a formal rule, directing the work to be done in the manner in which the men already observed? How can it justly be said that there is need of a particular rule, or negligence in failing, to declare it, when the practice which it would prescribe has already been adopted and is followed by the men to whom it would apply? . . . The practice of this emergency, and for the safe operation of trains 474 and 1411 by special orders and instructions, in addition to the general rules, and that this collision resulted from the defendant's failure to so provide. (60) I find as a fact that the operation of these trains under these general rules alone, under the circumstances of this case, was not a suitable and safe method to operate these trains. (61) I find as a fact that the train despatcher did not exercise ordinary care in not issuing special orders for the reasonably safe movement of these trains. (62) I find as a fact that the injury to plaintiff's intestate resulted from the combined negligence of Rear Brakeman Hall and of the defendant. (63) I find as a fact that the defendant did not exercise ordinary care in the movement and operation of trains 474 and 1411. (64) I find as a fact that the plaintiff's intestate was not guilty of any negligence contributing to his injury or death."

Defendant claimed the law to be as follows: "(1) That, if the collision occurred through the negligence of Rear Brakeman Hall, the plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages only, because Nolan, the plaintiff's intestate, and said rear brakeman, were fellow servants. (2) That, upon the facts in evidence, the defendant, having operated its trains under suitable rules and regulations, and having properly equipped said trains, had performed its entire duty towards plaintiff's intestate, and the law imposed no higher degree of care than that exercised by it. The court sustained the defendant's first claim, and did not pass upon its second claim, except to find as a matter of fact from the evidence submitted that the defendant did not exercise ordinary care in the operation of these trains, and that ordinary care required additional precautions by way of special orders to those provided in the rules for the reasonably safe operation of these trains."

the workmen, no less than any possible rule, sanctioned the repetition of the first signal, in some circumstances, by another employee, in order to catch the eye of the engineer. The latter (who testified for plaintiff) declared that he stopped the locomotive and train in response to a lantern signal given by some one. If that signal, at the time plaintiff was hurt, did not originate with the plaintiff, there was a plain violation of the custom and practice of the yard, quite as much as there would have been a violation of the rule, had one existed to the same effect."

In Luebke v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1885) 63 Wis. 91, 53 Am. Rep. 266, the court, in ruling that sufficient precaution had been taken to secure an employee working under a car, where the evidence showed that, while he was under the car, three trainmen in the employ of defendant were standing by the car, and that it was the duty of each of them, incident to his employment, to act as a watchman to protect the plaintiff from injury, said: "True, no written or published regulation of the company to that effect was shown; neither did any witness in the employ of the company testify that he had been charged by any officer of the company with the duty of watching for the safety of other employees working under cars upon the tracks; but many such witnesses testified that their duty in that behalf was well understood by them and other employees of the company. It was a sort of common law of the company obligatory upon its employees, and as thoroughly understood by them as though it had been embodied in the printed regulations, and read by the officers of the company to them. It thus became a rule or custom of the company as well as an understanding between its employees."

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Campbell (1894, Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 1104, it was proved that there was a custom in force which required employees engaged in handling the cars to notify those engaged in repairing, before setting cars in upon the repair track; and it was conceded that this custom, if observed, was a sufficient regulation for the purpose. The court refused to attribute any importance to the fact that this regulation was not contained in a written rule.

On the other hand, the fact that certain employees were in the habit of observing a custom or rule for their own protection will not operate as a discharge of the employer's duty to see that the department of his business to which it relates is conducted upon a safe system, where 43 L. R. A.

there is no evidence that it was published by printing, or generally known to that particular class of employees against whose acts it was supposed to be a safeguard, or that it was regularly prescribed by the employer in some way, or that he required it to be obeyed. Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1886) 103 N. Y. 581, 57 Am. Rep. 773.

Still less will the mere supposition or "general understanding" of defendant's employees be deemed competent evidence of the existence of a rule. James v. Northern P. R. Co. (1891) 46 Minn. 168.

The following passages from the prevailing and dissenting opinions in Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 123 Mo. 131, may also be advantageously cited as illustrative of the principle that the crucial point to be determined in cases of this kind is whether or not it was by the exertion of the employer's authority that the observance of the custom was secured.

In the former Barclay, J., in criticising a remark made by Judge Thomas on the former appeal that it seemed to be well settled also that rules adopted by the employees, not regularly prescribed and obedience to which is not required by the company, would not excuse the company from the performance of the duty of making needful rules for the safe prosecution of the business, said: "It does not appear . . . in the present record that the employees . . . were not required to conform to the practice or custom described. The evidence throughout plainly indicates the contrary, and that it amounted to a verbal rule or direction as part of defendant's method of doing business, taken in connection with the printed rules, touching the giving of signals. . . . The case as now presented does not, therefore, fall within range of the remark of Judge Thomas above quoted. But we think, moreover, that learned judge (as the conclusion then announced by him shows) had no intention of holding that a custom, generally recognized and practised by managers and workmen as the correct mode of conducting a certain business, could form the basis for a recovery against the master, simply because the practice had not been reduced to the form of a paper or formal rule."

In the latter Macfarlane, J., reasoned thus: "It is said that, if the employees adopt a custom under which their duties are performed, which gives reasonable protection, there is no reason for a rule by the master, embodying the same methods as those thus voluntarily adopted.

Messrs. Stoddard & Bishop, for appellant:

The questions as to defendant's negligence which the trial court has determined as questions of fact, are questions of law, and the trial court erred in refusing to so consider them.

The only question for the trial court to determine was whether the conduct of the defendant under the conceded circumstances was what we should expect that of a man of ordinary care to have been under such circumstances.

To reach a conclusion in the matter required a consideration and determination of it as a question of law.

Sharp v. Lockwood, 12 Conn. 159; Belden v. Lamb, 17 Conn. 451; Schoonmaker v. Albers, 51 Conn. 392; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 471; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 282, 38 L. ed. 443; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 215.

To this proposition I do not accede. A rule, unless enforced, is of no purpose in the way of protection. The enforcement of rules, only, makes them effective. The master alone has the authority to enforce their observance. The laborers among themselves have no such authority, or any other effective means of enforcing the observance of a custom. So, a custom has no more binding force on an employee than has a rule which, with the master's knowledge, is habitually disregarded. A rule unenforced secures no protection to employees. Barry v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 98 Mo. 66. A custom permits a discretion by each employee. An authoritative rule leaves no discretion. The latter gives protection, the former allures into unexpected perils. . . . The evidence in this case tended to prove that the signal to stop the train was not given, as custom required, by plaintiff, who was charged with the duty of uncoupling the cars, and who was exposed to the dangers incident thereto. We cannot say that the negligent act of some other employee would have been committed had all engaged in the work been acting under, and been governed by, a rule formulated and enforced by the company, instead of one voluntarily adopted by the employees for their mutual protection, and having only such binding force as the care, competency, humanity, or discretion of each might enjoin.

We do not say that a custom if known to the employees and sanctioned and enforced by the company, would not answer the purposes of a written or printed rule. Whether the master sanctioned and enforced the custom in question in this case was a question for the jury."

Where the consequences of a violation of a rule by the injured employee are in question (see XI. infra), a custom which has been regularly observed is, for legal purposes, equivalent to a rule promulgated by the master. Crane v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1896) 93 Wis. 487, where an experienced locomotive fireman who, in violation of a well-understood custom among engineers and firemen, went under an engine to clean out the ash pan without notifying the engineer, and was scalded by the engineer's blowing off the engine, was held chargeable with such contributory negligence as to preclude a recovery for the injury.

So, also, a steam-ferry company is not liable for the death of an oiler on a ferry boat, caused by the failure of the engineer to warn him before starting the machinery, where a rule of 43 L. R. A.

The question is, Was it the duty of defendant to perform the acts required of it by the trial court? This has always been held to be a question of law, and the fact that the trial court has in so many words determined it as one of fact is not effective to make it such.

Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 471; Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68 Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 215.

In cases similar to the present one the reasonableness of rules and regulations has been held to be a question of law and not of fact.

South Florida R. Co. v. Rhodes, 25 Fla. 45, 3 L. R. A. 733; Wolsey v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 33 Ohio St. 234; Vedder v. Felious, 20 N. Y. 130; 2 Bailey, Personal Injuries Relating to Master & Servant, § 3325; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Graham, 94 Ala. 556; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 43 Ill. 423, 12 Am. Dec. 138; Louisville, N. & G. S.

such engineer, known to deceased, requiring him, if he should be going into a dangerous place and the engineer should not be in the engine room, to withdraw the starting bar and place it on the floor of the engine room to notify him not to start, was disobeyed by the deceased. Stevens v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. (1893) 100 Cal. 554.

In such a case as this, it is obvious that the question whether the custom was enforced or not by the employer is immaterial. The servant's incapacity to recover is referable to the principle that he knows himself to be doing his work in a manner which is likely to cause him injury.

IV. The master's duty to promulgate his rules.

The principle is undisputed that, "where rules are prescribed or regulations adopted for the government of employees in and about the discharge of their duties, it is the duty of the employer to give notice of their existence, and so to promulgate them as to afford to the employee a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining their terms." Port Royal & W. R. Co. v. Davis (1894) 95 Ga. 292.

"The duty of informing a servant of a rule is specially imperative where he is hired to fill a position temporarily. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Turnaville (1892-93) 97 Ala. 122.

"The general principle holds although the plaintiff, in a written application for employment, has undertaken to "study the rules governing employees, carefully keep posted, and obey them. Carroll v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (1889) 82 Ga. 452, 6 L. R. A. 214.

"That a traffic manager omits to see personally that the printed notices of alterations in the movements of trains are served upon the employees who ought, in the course of business, to be warned of such alterations, is no evidence of systematic mismanagement on the part of the company. His duty is fully performed if the notices are handed to his subordinates for distribution. Conway v. Belfast & N. C. R. Co. (1877) 11 Ir. Rep. 11 C. L. 345, Affirming (1875) 11 Ir. Rep. 9 C. L. 498.

Whether the master was negligent in failing to promulgate and enforce a rule adopted by it, is a question of fact for the jury. Warn v. New York C. & H. R. Co. (1895) 92 Hun. 91.

Usually the question whether the rules have been duly published is considered as in connection with the question whether the means

R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 145; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Wyssor, 82 Va. 261; Ohlilton v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 114 Mo. 91, 19 L. R. A. 269; Avery v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 121 N. Y. 44; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Adcock, 52 Ark. 410; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Hammond, 58 Ark. 334; Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 343, 35 Am. Rep. 278; Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 409; Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 103 N. Y. 587, 57 Am. Rep. 773; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lyon, 123 Pa. 140, 2 L. R. A. 489.

There was imposed by law upon the defendant the duty to make and promulgate rules for the movement of these trains, which, if faithfully observed, would have afforded reasonable protection to the plaintiff's intestate.

Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. 110 Mo. 312.

The proximate cause of this unfortunate adopted for publication were such that knowledge of them should be attributed to the servant. This topic will be discussed in a subsequent part of the note. (See IX. c. infra.)

V. The master's duty to enforce his rules.

See also X. XI. f, g, h, infra.

An employer does not discharge his whole duty to the public by merely framing and publishing proper rules for the conduct of his business and the guidance and control of his servants, but he is also required to exercise such a supervision over his servants and the prosecution of his business as to have reason to believe that it is being conducted in pursuance of such rules. Whittaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1891) 126 N. Y. 544, Followed in Warn v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1894) 80 Hun, 71, where the court referring to a certain rule of the defendant said: "If . . . [It] was intended to apply to a train like the one in the inspection of which the plaintiff was injured, it became a question of fact whether the defendant was guilty of negligence in regard to its proper promulgation and enforcement. If that rule was not intended to apply to such a train, then it became a question of fact whether the defendant had performed the measure of its duty within the rule" that a railroad company is bound to protect its employees, so far as it can, by the promulgation of reasonable rules.

The duty of a railroad company does not end with prescribing rules calculated to secure the safety of employees. It is equally binding on it honestly and faithfully to require their observance. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Hissong (1892-93) 97 Ala. 187.

Laxity in the enforcement of rules is negligence. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Echols (1894) 87 Tex. 339.

Where a car repairer is injured through the negligence of an assistant roadmaster (a person "exercising superintendence under Code, § 2590, and therefore a vice principal) in shunting, contrary to the regulations of the company, a defective car on to the repair track by a "running switch," the company cannot be heard to plead that other well-regulated roads were in the habit of doing what it had done. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davis (1892) 99 Ala. 593.

Where a mine is operated by a company through an incline extending from the surface several hundred feet into the earth, by means of cars run upon iron rails laid therein, and it is an established rule of the company that a accident was the failure of the rear brakeman to observe the rules, and the fact that now in cold blood and with this experience before us we are enabled to suggest innumerable precautions which, if adopted by the defendant, might have averted this collision, furnishes no just ground for holding that the exercise of reasonable care required their adoption.

Hayes v. Western R. Corp. 3 Cush. 274.

The facts that the freight train was late, that it had no official information of the proximity of the extra to it, and that the extra was not informed that the freight would stop at Kent Furnace siding, are not sufficient to charge the defendant with negligence in the absence of proof that the trains were so dangerously near together that the rear brakeman did not have sufficient time to comply with the rule, an observance of which would confessedly have averted the collision.

signal called a "tally" shall be sounded at twenty-three minutes before 5 o'clock every evening, at which time the cars shall cease running up and down the incline and the workman shall have the right of way for the space of seven minutes to reach the surface, it is negligence on the part of the company to allow the "tally" to be given by an employee stationed at an intermediate point on the incline where it is impossible for him to know when cars will be sent down by the engineer at the top. Silver Cord Combination Min. Co. v. McDonald (1890) 14 Colo. 191.

By promulgating a paper rule the master does not become responsible for its observance in every case which it fitted. "A rule . . . is but a direction or command as to the mode of carrying on the work. The master is bound to the use of reasonable diligence in enforcing it; but he certainly is not an insurer of its observance." Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1894) 123 Mo. 121.

In some cases negligence in respect to the enforcement of a rule may be inferred where the defendant has noticed that it is constantly being violated and is therefore insufficient for the protection of certain employees, unless some other employee is personally present to see that the precautions which it contemplates are properly observed. Such was the opinion of the court in St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Triplett (1891) 54 Ark. 289, 11 L. R. A. 773, where the only rule promulgated for the protection of men working on repair tracks was one which forbade men to do switching on such tracks without the permission of the foreman of repairs. It was asserted by the company that if this rule was sufficient, when faithfully observed by its employees, to guard against the danger, the company has discharged its duty. The court, however, said: "This seems to be a general rule of law, when the circumstances are such that a reasonably prudent person might rely upon rules and regulations to afford protection. But if the master sees proper to rely upon such methods of protection to his servants, and the occasion demands it, he should also adopt such measures as may be reasonably necessary to secure the observance of such rules. The fact that rules have been adopted is only evidence by the decree of care and diligence exercised by the master in any given case."

Whether a master can be held liable on the ground that he neglected to take proper precautions, in relation to an elevator, to prevent persons in their employ from using it in a manner

Relyea v. Kansas City, S. & G. R. Co. 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817.

When a rear-end collision occurs, and it appears that a rule of the company has been violated, but for which fact the collision would not have occurred, the negligence of the employees violating such rule constitutes the "proximate cause."

Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 409; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Neer, 31 Ill. App. 126; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Lang, 118 Ind. 579; Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 49 Mich. 501; Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Mich. 108; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Markee, 103 Ala. 173; Shepard v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 174; McGrath v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 14 R. I. 358; Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 29 Am. Rep. 627; Hinz v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 93 Wis. 16; 1 Bailey, Personal Injuries Relating to Master & Servant, §§ 550-554.

and for a purpose for which it was not intended, and contrary to the rules of their business, depends upon three questions of fact: First, whether the condition of the elevator, its relation to the business of the defendants, or to the work in which the plaintiff was engaged, and all the circumstances of the case, were such as to require of the defendants some precaution against such improper use; second, whether they were guilty of neglect, either in not taking precautions, or in respect to the sufficiency of the precautions taken by them; third, whether the plaintiff was injured by reason of the want or insufficiency of such precaution. Avilla v. Nash (1875) 117 Mass. 319. The master's duty as to supervision, as understood in Massachusetts, has been lately discussed in this series in subd. X. of the note on Knowledge as an element of an employer's liability to an injured servant, Walkowski v. Penokee & Gogebic Consol. Mines, 41 L. R. A. 33.

Cases of this description, like all others in which the gist of the action is the employer's negligence, are sometimes controlled by the principle that the servant's continuance of work with knowledge of such negligence precludes him from recovery on the ground either of the assumption of the risk or of contributory negligence. Thus, a railway company is not liable for injuries to a brakeman because of its failure to furnish him with a coupling stick, as provided by its rule, where such sticks are not in use by the brakemen on its road, and are regarded as useless appliances in coupling cars, and the injured brakeman had been in its employ for a month, and made no objection on the ground of not being furnished with a stick. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bryant (1893) 15 Ky. L. Rep. 181.

But although the long acquiescence of a servant in a departure from rules is competent evidence to prove an assumption of the additional risk thereby incurred, a compliance with an exceptional order varying from the rule, suddenly made, does not constitute such acquiescence. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp (1895) 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. Rep. 952, 13 C. C. A. 233.

VI. No recovery by servant unless omission to promulgate rules was proximate cause of the injury.

The general principle that the plaintiff in an action for negligence cannot recover damages unless he shows that the negligence was the proximate or efficient cause of his injury, has been applied in several cases of the type reviewed in the present note.

43 L. R. A.

Messrs. John Cullinan, Jr., and Thomas M. Cullinan, for appellee:

Is the negligence of the defendant a question of fact or a question of law?

The trial court treated it as a question of fact, and in so doing was in line with a long succession of decisions in this state which have definitely fixed the doctrine of the law upon this point.

Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68 Conn. 347, 37 L. R. A. 638; Fritts v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 62 Conn. 503; Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. 65 Conn. 201, 29 L. R. A. 297; Dundon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 67 Conn. 266; McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 445; Heenan v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 67 Conn. 594; Carstesen v. Stratford, 67 Conn. 433; O'Neil v. East Windsor, 63 Conn. 150; Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 239; Fiske v. Forsyth Dyeing, Laundering &

The want of a legal connection between the master's failure to make rules and the injury was the basis of the subjoined rulings. Where a train running ahead of its regular time comes into collision with another, an employee injured by the collision cannot recover damages on the theory that the system of running trains was defective, unless the train's running ahead of its time is the direct cause of the accident. Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (1892) 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817.

Where a special order of the company prohibits the running of trains at a greater rate of speed than 20 miles per hour at a given switch-point, the court does not err in charging the jury as follows: "If . . . [the engineer] was not running faster than 20 miles per hour when he passed the switch, you ought to find that he did not violate the bulletin order mentioned, even though he ran faster than that at a point further back on the track." Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey (1894) 95 Ga. 584.

Nor is it error, in view of the existence of such an order, to refuse a request to charge that it was the duty of the engineer to "slacken" the speed of the train at such point; the request leaving out of consideration the rate of speed at which the train in question was actually being run at such given point at the time the collision occurred which resulted in the injury complained of. Ibid.

In Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1892) 110 Mo. 312. It was held that the trial court should have sustained defendant's objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, where it first averred that plaintiff proceeded, in pursuance of orders given him by the yard master, to uncouple the car, and before he reached the proper place to perform that duty "someone unknown to him caused the cars to be moved without notice to him, whereby he was thrown from said car" and injured, and then also averred that the failure of defendant "to have such proper system and published rules regarding said matters was directly the cause of said train of cars being suddenly, without notice to plaintiff, moved," whereby he was thrown off and injured. The court said: "We do not see how these two allegations can stand together. He first alleged that he did not know who caused the train to move, and, of course, he did not know why and how it was moved, and not knowing this he could not affirm that the movement was the result of the failure to establish rules. It is evident

B. Co. 57 Conn. 118; Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Congdon v. Norwich, 37 Conn. 420; Williams v. Clinton, 28 Conn. 266; Park v. O'Brien, 23 Conn. 345; Beers v. Housatonic R. Co. 19 Conn. 566.

The placing entirely within the province of the trial court the question whether, upon all the evidence, a railway company exercised the required degree of care in operating its trains; whether its general rules and regulations were sufficient, or whether additional precautions by way of special orders and instructions were called for,—is not the law of Connecticut alone. It is abundantly supported by the decisions of other states.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 908; Sheehan v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 332; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson, 37 Ohio St. 549; Hunn v. Michigan C. R. Co.

this is a mere surmise, supposition, or guess of the plaintiff. The probata must correspond with the allegata. . . . At all events we think the plaintiff was bound to prove how and why this sudden movement occurred, and this he utterly failed to do. If the sudden movement was caused by the voluntary action of the engineer or in pursuance of a signal given by someone other than plaintiff, and this action of the engineer was caused, or the signal was given by the wrong person, because defendant had failed to promulgate and enforce proper rules and regulations in regard to the movement of trains in its yards at Chamois, defendant is liable for the injury caused by such movement. We can appreciate how important it is in the management of trains to have a proper system of signals to protect the employees from danger; and the propriety of conferring on the switchman performing the duty of coupling or uncoupling cars the right to give signals to stop or start is apparent, whether on the cars or on the ground. On the other hand, if the sudden movement was the result alone of the ordinary operation of the train going onto the switch, plaintiff must be held to have assumed the risk of being thrown off the car by it, and therefore cannot recover. This is one of the risks of the employment which the law holds that he assumed when he engaged to perform the work assigned him. He mounted the car while in motion, and he knew it was going in on the switch, and hence he should have taken proper precaution against the ordinary movements of the train."

Where the proximate cause of the death of a car repairer was the unauthorized removal by some unknown person of a red flag used as a signal of danger, the questions whether a flag of that color was a sufficient warning, or whether a flag of some other color would have been more suitable, are immaterial. Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1890) 31 N. Y. S. R. 356 (after the re-trial ordered in (1886) 103 N. Y. 381, 57 Am. Rep. 773).

The omission of a railroad company to make a rule prohibiting "running switches" cannot be regarded as the efficient cause of an injury to a brakeman, who, with a full knowledge of the movement of a car which is being side-tracked by this method, puts himself in front of it to arrange the couplings, and, catching his foot in a frog, is knocked down and run over. The injury under such circumstances is due to his own negligence. Sheets v. Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. (1894) 139 Ind. 682.

43 L. R. A.

78 Mich. 512, 7 L. R. A. 500; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McLallen, 84 Ill. 116; Reagan v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 93 Mo. 348; Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 103 N. Y. 581, 57 Am. Rep. 773.

The conduct of the defendant was not what the conduct of a prudent man would have been under like circumstances.

Peltier v. Bradley, D. & C. Co. 67 Conn. 49, 32 L. R. A. 651; McAdam v. Central R. & Electric Co. 67 Conn. 447.

If the negligence of the company contributed it must necessarily have been an immediate cause of the accident, and it is no defense that another was likewise guilty of wrong.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 702, 27 L. ed. 267; Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68 Conn. 347, 37 L. R. A. 638; Elmer v. Locke,

Where the locomotive of a freight train on a main track is unexpectedly set in motion and comes into collision with one standing on a side track close to the junction between the two tracks, thereby crushing to death the fireman of the latter who is engaged in oiling the wheels, the want of a proper system of signaling is not the efficient cause of the accident, where it appears that the signal required by the rules of the company was not, as a matter of fact, given, and that the signal in obedience to which the locomotive was actually put in motion was misunderstood by the engineer. Peaslee v. Fitchburg R. Co. (1890) 152 Mass. 155.

Failure of a railroad company to prescribe a rule confining the giving of signals to some one person connected with the making up or movement of a freight train will not render it liable to a brakeman injured by the starting of the train upon a signal given by another brakeman who supposed that the former's work of uncoupling cars had been completed, in the absence of anything to show that the same mistake would not have been made had the brakeman giving the signal been the only person authorized to signal. Cole v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. (1898) 72 Hun, 467.

Where a switchman, acting under a sudden impulse and in the mistaken belief that a switch is wrongly set for a train approaching on the main track, manipulates it so as to throw that train on a siding, thereby causing the death of an engineer, it is not error to refuse to submit to the jury the question whether the company was negligent in failing to adopt a rule requiring switches to be locked, and switchmen to be at their posts when trains were passing on the main track. Burke v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. (1893) 69 Hun, 21.

Failure of an employer to make and promulgate rules for operating a machine does not render him liable for an accident to an employee from her hand being caught between revolving cylinders while cleaning the same, owing to the inherent danger of the work, and not to any action or failure to act on the part of her fellow servants, which proper rules might have prevented. DeYoung v. Irving (1896) 5 App. Div. 490.

In Benfield v. Vacuum Oil Co. (1894) 75 Hun, 209, the plaintiff was injured by an explosion caused by the contact of the flame of his lamp with gas which escaped from a tank of paraffine oil when he opened it. The court in commenting on the testimony of the plaintiff, that he had been in the habit, during the whole of his experience with the paraffine tanks, of doing the 135 Mass. 576; Cone v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 81 N. Y. 206, 37 Am. Rep. 491; Crowell v. Thomas, 90 Hun, 198; Paulmier v. Erie R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 155; Rogers v. Leyden, 127 Ind. 50; Young v. Shickle, H. & H. Iron Co. 103 Mo. 324; Sherman v. Menominee River Lumber Co. 72 Wis. 127, 1 L. R. A. 173.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The finding of facts upon which judgment is founded contains a statement in detail of inferences produced in whole or in part by weighing evidence, and the credit to be given witnesses, and also of the conclusions drawn from these inferences. The former are called "facts," as denoting adjudicated facts, which can only be retried by an appellate court having jurisdiction in the trials of such facts. This court does not have appellate jurisdiction of that nature. The superior court is the court of last resort for that purpose; and its adjudication of such facts, in the exercise of original or appellate jurisdiction, is the end of litigation, unless, in the process of adjudication, it has violated some rule or principle of law. Styles v. Tyler, 64 Conn. 432; Thresher v. Dyer, 69 Conn. 404, 408. The alleged failure to determine such facts correctly is improperly assigned in the appeal as error, and cannot be considered. The request of counsel for the certification of testimony in support of such claimed errors is an abuse of the provisions in respect to certifying evidence. Thresher v. Dyer, 69 Conn. 404, 408. The latter—that is, conclusions drawn from such facts—are also called facts, but with a much broader signification, including all issues that the line separating the province of the jury from that of the judge in a jury trial practically leaves to the jury. The word "fact," used in this broad sense, does work assigned to him in the same way as on the night in question, and that no explosion had ever before occurred, remarked: "If this is true—if he had habitually raised the lid of the tank with his lantern in his hand, or hanging on his arm, and done so with impunity, then the inference is unavoidable that the conditions present on the night in question were materially different from those which usually prevailed, and the only reason for that difference which is suggested by the evidence is that the heat in the tank was greater than it ordinarily was when the lid was raised, and that this was caused by leaving the steam on longer that was proper, and that the tank was opened too soon after the steam was shut off. This conclusion, if it afforded the correct hypothesis to account for the unusual and, indeed, unprecedented explosion, is important in two respects as bearing upon the question of the defendant's liability; for, first, it tends to show that the danger here encountered was one not reasonably to have been apprehended by the defendant, and second, it demonstrates either that the negligence of the fellow servant, the engineer, who devolved his own duty upon the plaintiff, or of the plaintiff himself, who undertook the performance of that duty, or of both, contributed to occasion the accident and to produce the injury complained of, and in either case there could be no recovery in this action."

In Gibson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1893) 23 Or. 493, it was contended that the rules to protect track-walkers from dangers of an approaching train, while in the discharge of their duties, were defective in not providing that the engines should whistle at frequent intervals before approaching bridges or trestles on which trackmen might be walking. It was held, however, upon the evidence disclosed by the record, that the injury was not owing either to the fact that the engine did not whistle, as required by the rules, or to the fact that the rules were defective in not requiring the engine to whistle at more frequent intervals, inasmuch as the plaintiff saw the approaching train half a mile ahead, and had ample time to retreat or step from the bridge to the caps, and there remain in safety until the train passed.

VII. Construction and meaning of rules.

When a rule is clear and explicit, free from ambiguity and equivocation, evidence of usage and custom is inadmissible to vary or alter its terms. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Graham (1891) 94 Ala. 545.
43 L. R. A.

It is error to leave to the jury the determination of the meaning of a rule. Western & A. R. Co. v. Moore (1893) 94 Ga. 457.

A witness cannot be asked whether, under some particular rule, there would be any objection to doing a certain thing in a certain way, as this would be asking him to construe the rule, and this is not within the domain of verbal evidence. Pennsylvania Co. v. Stoelke (1882) 104 Ill. 201.

An ambiguous rule promulgated by a corporation for the government of its employees in a dangerous service should generally be taken in its stronger sense against the corporation and in favor of the employee. Western & A. R. Co. v. Moore (1893) 94 Ga. 457.

Obscurity of language which renders rules unintelligible to employees creates a species of trap for them, and, where the consequence of holding a given rule valid will be to disable an employee from recovering damage on the ground that he violated its provisions, the courts very properly apply the principle that rules are to be strictly construed against the master.

As was well said in Western & A. R. Co. v. Bussey (1894) 95 Ga. 584, "when the [a railroad] corporation itself enters upon the task of framing rules which shall stand as law unto its employees, the law-making power should be reasonable in framing such rules, and should express them in such language, and so directly, as to be entirely unequivocal. If by the formulation of rules it undertakes to meet the varying exigencies which may arise in the conduct of its business, substituting direction to him for a discretion which otherwise the employee would be required to exercise, and for the exercise of which he would be answerable, their statutes must be at least unequivocal, and within the comprehension of the class of persons upon whom they are designed to operate. Nothing should be left to intentment. It should be borne in mind that the persons ordinarily employed in the conduct of this business, and for the government of whom these rules are designed, are not learned or skilled in the technical rules of statutory interpretation; and therefore, if they be not couched in such terms as to make them intelligible to employees, or if they be so far equivocal as to express one thing and mean another, it would be a harsh rule of law which would hold the employee answerable where he conformed to the express direction of the master, but in doing so violated what the latter may be pleased to term the spirit of a rule."

not accurately denote matters not reviewable by this court. In defining facts as denoting those questions practically within the province of a jury, we are controlled, not only by established practice, but by the constitutional provision forbidding any violation of the political "right of trial by jury." In defining facts as denoting questions not reviewable by this court, we are controlled by "the primary distinction drawn by the Constitution, between the jurisdiction original and appellate of courts for the full trial and adjudication of causes, and the jurisdiction of a court of last resort for correcting errors in law which may have intervened in the course of a trial." Atwater v. Morning News Co. 67 Conn. 504, 526. "The true distinction as drawn under our system of jurisprudence, in connection with this provision of the Constitution, between facts that the trial court must find from the testimony, and the application of the principles of law in reaching a judgment based upon such facts," includes "questions of law," as distinguished from "questions of fact," in a jury trial, but is not fully expressed by that distinction. While the jurisdiction of this court may be affected in its practical operation by existing procedure or practice, the jurisdiction itself "is coextensive with the judicial power of the state in all matters wherein legal principles,—that is, rules of law or principles of equity,—appear to have been erroneously or mistakenly determined by a trial court." Styles v. Tyler, 65 Conn. 454.

The limitations of procedure formerly existing, in connection with the practice followed in view of that procedure, prevented in some instances the full exercise of our jurisdiction, and the conclusions of trial courts, because not presented in such manner as to be reviewable under existing procedure and practice, have been spoken of in

In Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Mitchell (1892) 92 Ga. 82, the plaintiff, as part of his contract of employment with the company, subscribed an instrument to the following effect: "I fully understand that the rules of the Richmond & Danville Railroad Company positively prohibit brakemen from coupling or uncoupling cars, except with a stick, and that brakemen or others must not go between the cars under any circumstances, for the purpose of coupling or uncoupling or adjusting pins, etc., when an engine is attached to said cars or train; and in consideration of being employed by said company, I hereby agree to be bound by such rule, and waive all or any liability of said company to me for any results of disobedience or infraction thereof. I have read the above carefully and fully understand it." The court said: "It may be fairly presumed that the rules referred to and quoted from in the contract were carefully prepared, deliberately adopted, and embodied in some written or printed document. It is allowable therefore to notice the phraseology critically in order to ascertain whether or not, fairly construed, that phraseology embraces such a coupling as was attempted in this case. The plaintiff was neither coupling nor uncoupling cars, nor did he go between the cars, nor was the engine attached to any cars or train. The evidence is, in substance, that the plaintiff, who was a brakeman, stationed himself, in the way usually practised by employees, upon the foot-board of the pilot on the tender, and while there attempted to withdraw with his hand, without using a stick, a pin and link from the coupling apparatus of the engine, the engine and tender being in motion backwards at the time towards a standing car in the rear, for the purpose of being coupled thereto. Certainly the rules as quoted do not, by their letter, cover such a transaction as that in which the plaintiff was engaged. It is said, however, that they do cover it in spirit and intention. This seems to be altogether too doubtful, for, as we have already said, there is a presumption that such rules would be carefully considered and accurately expressed, and we may add that they ought to be construed more strongly against the party who made and adopted them than against one who merely assented to and agreed to be bound by them when they were presented to him as a basis of contract. The strong probability is that, in preparing the rules, such a case as the present, though it might frequently occur, was overlooked, and therefore was not provided for. We think this is the truth of the matter, and we 43 L. R. A.

hold with confidence that the rules have no application to the present case."

Notwithstanding a rule of the defendant company requiring all trains to stop at schedule meeting and passing points, it is not error to refuse a request to charge in an action for injuries caused by a collision, that it was the duty of the engineer to stop his train at the point where the collision occurred, it not appearing that the same was either a schedule meeting or passing point. Nor is it error to charge the jury that the engineer under such rule could pass other than schedule meeting and passing points "at such rate of speed as common prudence dictated as safe." Western & A. R. Co. v. Buessey (1894) 95 Ga. 584.

A special bulletin order regulating the speed of trains when passing certain particular switch points designated therein, has no application to switch points generally; and in the absence of evidence showing that the point at which the disaster occurred was of the particular class of switch points embraced within the terms of such order, a court does not err in charging the jury that this order could have no application to the point in question. Ibid.

Under a rule of a railroad company in these words: "Conductors and trainmen are required to be at terminal stations thirty minutes before the leaving time of their trains. Brakemen must examine the coupling apparatus and brakes before train starts and report to the conductor such as are not in good order,"—it is prima facie incumbent upon brakemen to examine brakes only at terminal points before the starting of a train. Western & A. R. Co. v. Moore (1893) 94 Ga. 457.

Evidence is not admissible to show that employees of the company interpreted and acted upon such a rule as meaning that it was a brakeman's duty to examine the brakes upon a car taken on at a station before the train left that station, without showing that the plaintiff so understood or so acted on the rule, or knew that the other employees did so. Ibid.

A rule to the following effect, "Coach switching conductors must see that brakemen, with good and sufficient brakes, are on any moving cars; and they are cautioned as to making flying switches (switch rope being furnished). Avoid such switching, even if it increases your work," is advisory only, and imposes caution on the employees when making such switches, but does not forbid them. Youll v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. (1885) 86 Iowa, 346.

Rules prohibiting switchmen from using any language appropriate enough for the purpose, as questions of fact. But whenever the record before us has legally presented all the facts found by the trial court as the basis of its judgment, and the conclusion drawn from those facts has been plainly erroneous, and such error has been lawfully assigned, we have uniformly held such conclusion, although for some purposes it might be called a question of fact, to be, quoad the jurisdiction of this court, a question of law; i. e. it is reviewable. When the finding of facts states evidence so that the conclusion must be reached by weighing evidence, the finding is essentially a report of evidence, and not a statement of facts adjudicated; and the question of legal inference from facts that may be involved is irregularly presented. Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 278, 71 Am. Dec. 63. In Bloodgood v. Beecher, 35 Conn. 469, the judges were equally divided upon the question whether, upon the finding of facts in that case, the intention of a mortgagor to prefer the mortgagee to his other creditors could be drawn by this court as a conclusion of law; Hinmon, Ch. J., and Park, J., holding that it could not, and Burtler and Carpenter, JJ., holding that it could. The case was decided by the second vote of the Chief Justice. In Mead v. Noyes, 44 Conn. 487, the trial court, in an action of replevin, spread upon the record the facts from which it drew its conclusion that the plaintiff was the owner of, and entitled to immediate possession of, the property replevied. Upon motion in error, this court reversed the judgment, because the conclusion from the facts found was an error in law. In Hayden v. Allyn, 55 Conn. 280, 289, Judge Loomis, speaking for the court, laid down the broad principle that whenever, in trials to the court, the judge has fully weighed the testimony, and passed upon the credit of wit-tools or appliances of any kind which are not "safe," and stating that employees will be upheld by the company in refusing to use tools, machinery, rolling-stock, or appliances which are unsafe, cannot be construed in such a sense that they are deemed to be violated by an employee who makes a pilot-bar coupling with a "Janney" coupler, where such a coupling, although more dangerous than one made with the ordinary apparatus, can be made safely by the exercise of due care. Kerns v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1895) 94 Iowa, 121.

A rule that "no lumber, wood, stone, materials, or tools" shall be placed within 5 feet of the rail applies to loose tools, etc., which are liable to be accidentally moved by the wind or other causes, without the concurrence and against the wish of the railroad company, and not to permanent structures, such as cattle guards. McKee v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1891) 83 Iowa, 616, 13 L. R. A. 817.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kenley (1893) 92 Tenn. 207, where the question was whether the promise of a conductor to repair a car was binding on the company, it was denied that a rule to the effect that "conductors, flagmen, brakemen, and train porters were to report to, and receive their instructions from, the master of trains," had any application to complaints about defective appliances.

In Haas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1894) 90 Iowa, 250, one rule declared that a work train "must not leave a station, when directed to run by special order, unless the conductor and engineer had a copy of the same in their possession;" while another required the conductor to show his order to the brakeman, and the engineer to show his to the fireman. The conductor of such a train received a message stating that a certain passenger train was fifty-three minutes late, and kept his train at a station until half an hour after this period had expired, the train crew having meantime taken their dinner at a place about two blocks away, where it was doubtful whether a passing train would have been heard, and then ran out his train without having inquired whether the passenger train had passed through the station, and without having received any message regulating the movements of his own train. A collision took place between the work train and the belated passenger train, and the fireman of the former was killed. The company sought to escape liability on the theory that the fireman was guilty of contributory negligence in not having refused to obey the directions of the conductor until he had first satisfied himself that such directions were authorized by a new telegraphic order superseding the one which announced that the passenger train was late. The court, however, refused to set aside a verdict finding that the fireman was not negligent in remaining at his post, saying: "It is scarcely necessary to say that such a rule would destroy the discipline essential to the proper management of trains, and we find nothing in the record which requires that it be enforced in this case. Whether Davies knew that No. 3 had not passed when the conductor ordered his train out onto the main line is not shown. It is probable, but not certain, that he would have heard the train had it gone through the station while he was at dinner. But conceding that he should have known that it had not yet arrived, it does not follow that he knew his train should not have been ordered out. He knew that he had not seen a telegraphic order which announced any further change in the time of No. 3, it is true, but he did not know what information the conductor had received. It may be said that it was his right to see the order, if one had been received, and that until he saw it he should have acted on the presumption that none had been sent, but such a course on his part was not required by the rules. They provided that train and engine men should be held equally responsible for the violation of any of the rules governing the safety of the trains, and that they should take every precaution for the protection of trains, even if not provided for by the rules, but they also provided that the conductor should have charge and control of the train and of all persons employed on it, and made him responsible for its movements while on the road, 'except when his directions conflict with the rules or involve risk or hazard.' In either of which cases the engineer was to be held alike accountable. Brakemen and firemen were required to report every instance when the conductors and engineers should fail to show their telegraphic orders as provided by rule 101, but we find nothing in the rules which required them to disobey the orders given. The provision holding them equally responsible for the violation of the rules governing the safety of the train must be given a reasonable construction. It applied to each one within the range of his own duties, and did not make him responsible for the wrongful actions or omissions of others. It is said that Davies and all the other train-men forgot all about No. 3. That nesses, and specifically found, as the basis of his judgment, the inferences produced by the testimony, so that the evidence "had exhausted itself in producing the facts thus found, nothing remained but for the court, in the exercise of its legal judgment, to draw its inference from the facts"; and "in such a case the conclusion of the court can always be reviewed by the appellate court. An erroneous conclusion is an error of law, and not an error in an inference of fact." This principle was deliberately affirmed in Tyler v. Waddingham, 58 Conn. 375, 386, 8 L. R. A. 657, and applied to a special finding of facts, from which was drawn the conclusion that the plaintiff, at the time of making the contract with a partnership, elected to give exclusive credit to a single partner. In Ward v. Ward, 59 Conn. 188, 197, the principle is recognized as established, although its application in that case is treated with some subtlety. The principle may at times be is not shown by the evidence, although the rear brakeman testified to that effect; but it is evident that he had no means of knowing the fact in regard to the engineer and fireman. The conductor and rear brakeman forgot it. The engineer remembered it, but, as the conductor had just come from the telegraph station when the signal to move was given he concluded that the train had passed. It is not shown that Davies had forgotten it, nor is it shown that he knowingly went into a place of danger, and the jury may well have found that he was not negligent in remaining at his post."

A rule of a railroad company that when a train "stops for any cause," danger signals must be given, including the placing of torpedoes on the track at least thirty telegraph poles from the rear of the train, seems intended to apply to trains stopped by accident or obstruction or unexpectedly compelled to stop between stations, and not intended to be followed every time a train stops at a station. Northern P. R. Co. v. Polrier (1897) 167 U. S. 48, 42 L. ed. 72. (The contention was that the conductor of one train which was running a short distance ahead of another failed to comply with such a rule.)

Where there is no rule which, in express terms requires the engineer to give any signal for sending out a flagman to protect a train, in case of a stoppage on the main line, but a rule states that "five short blasts of the whistle is a signal to the flagman to go back and protect the rear of his train," and the conductor is also required to protect his train by flagging, in case of stoppage, the construction to be placed on the rules is that it is the engineer's duty, upon stopping his train, to give the signal for the flagman to be sent back, and the duty of the conductor to take that precaution without the signal. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Culpepper (1898, Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 922.

A rule requiring warning signals to be displayed at an adequate distance from a place where work is to be done "which will render the track unsafe or impassable, or unsafe for trains at their usual rate of speed," has no application to a case where a bridge which has sunk about an inch below its proper level is being "surfaced." Under such circumstances it is rather the duty of the workman to clear the track for the trains, and the track is not impassable nor even dangerous within the meaning of the rule. Aurandt v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1894) 90 Iowa, 617.

One of the rules of a railroad company ran 43 L. R. A.

misapplied, but a mistake of this kind cannot shake its authority. It is not only supported by the true ratio decidendi of a long line of decisions, but is imbedded in the very structure of our system of jurisprudence. Settling the credit of witnesses, weighing evidence, ascertaining the truth from conflicting testimony or incongruous evidential facts, this is the peculiar province of, and under our system within the exclusive jurisdiction of, trial courts; and a mistake in the inference produced by such means is an error in fact. When such facts are adjudicated, a mistake in drawing the legal inference—i. e. in applying the law to the facts found—is an error in law. The application of this principle has been hampered, and its meaning somewhat obscured, through inadequate and uncertain methods for bringing into action the jurisdiction of this court. Sometimes the conclusion of a trial court from conceded facts is so clearly right that as follows: "At stations (except where governed by the automatic block signals) upon the passing of every train, the red signal will be at once displayed next the track upon which the train has passed, and kept there until it has been gone the length of time given in the timetable between it and the train that should follow, if not more than ten minutes, but in all cases kept there for five minutes; and no train will pass this signal until the five minutes shall have elapsed, unless otherwise ordered in the timetable or by special instructions." The plaintiff's decedent placed a lantern between the rails after the passage of a train, and left it there more than five minutes. Then hearing another train coming, which was due ten minutes after the first, he rushed out on the track to take up the light and was struck by the train. The court declined to accept the plaintiff's contention that the decedent was required by the rule to display the signal after the passing of the first train and keep it there ten minutes until the exact time when the second one was due, and that he was therefore killed in doing what he had been expressly directed to do. The first part of the rule, it was pointed out could only be applied when both trains were to stop at the station and not when the second one was to pass by, this case being governed by the last clause. The plaintiff therefore was held to have been rightly nonsuited, as the only legal inferences that could be drawn from the evidence were either that the decedent had placed the lantern in a dangerous place, or that he, through carelessness, did not remove it when he should have done. Foss v. Old Colony R. Co. (1898) 170 Mass. 168.

A rule requiring car repairers, while at work on main or side tracks, to put out a blue flag as an indication of their presence, does not apply to cars upon which repairs are being made in the shops or shop yards. Quick v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1889) 130 Ill. 334.

The effect of evidence that it was a part of the duty of trackmen to look out for wild trains, and that they had no other means of protection except to take care of themselves, is not qualified by a rule that wild trains "must run cautiously around curves and over grade crossings, looking out for trackmen," the proper interpretation of the rule being that the caution has reference to the safety of the train, not of the trackmen. Sullivan v. Fitchburg R. Co. (1894) 161 Mass. 125.

Evidence that a railroad company has pro-practically no question is presented; and in such cases we have said that the conclusion is one of fact, properly decided; yet if in such cases the conclusion, instead of being clearly right, had been a palpable non sequitur, we would have reviewed it as a question of law, unless the question were irregularly presented. But more frequently the alleged error in a conclusion from conceded facts has been irregularly presented, either through mistake in making up the record, or through defect in methods for obtaining a record which should properly present the question; and in such cases we have said that the conclusion is one of fact, not reviewable. Such indeterminate use of the phrase "question of fact" or "conclusion of fact" must be taken in connection with the circumstances of each case, and cannot be treated as precisely distinguishing those conclusions which are to be treated as facts in respect to the jurisdiction of this court, nor as modifying the settled principle that the unwarranted conclusion of a trial court in drawing its inference from the special facts which, in compliance with existing law of procedure, it has found for the purpose of drawing that inference, is essentially an error in law.

For many years, and especially since 1879, the legislature has endeavored, by means of various statutes, to modify the law of procedure so as to require a trial court to place upon record the special facts on which its judgment is founded, and to enable this court to exercise its full jurisdiction in reviewing the legal judgment of a trial court in drawing its inference from conceded facts. Such legislation has considerably enlarged the facilities for exercising the jurisdiction of this court. The effect of this legislation has been the subject of frequent consideration, and the main general conclusions reached are summarized in mulgated rules requiring track repairers to examine their sections daily to ascertain if the track is safe, and to keep them and the cattle guards in good repair, is inadmissible in an action to recover for injuries received by a brakeman through a collision with the wing fence at a cattle guard, where there is no allegation that the fence which caused the injury is not in good order, and the rules gave the track repairers no authority to remove such fences. McKee v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1891) 83 Iowa, 616, 13 L. R. A. 817.

Where the language of a rule regulating the movements of trains may, when read in the light of the circumstances inducing its promulgations, be fairly construed as being not intended to be applicable to night trains, it is a question of fact for the jury whether the servant was guilty of negligence in putting that construction upon it, and moving a train accordingly. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Leighty (1895) 88 Tex. 604.

VIII. Illustrative decisions as to the sufficiency of rules framed for the protection of railroad servants.

a. Rules for the protection of car repairers, and other railroad employees doing work on side tracks.

The work of repairing a car while it is standing upon a track in a yard where switching is in progress is one of peculiar danger, and the courts have always held railroad companies to a strict account in regard to the duty of protecting employees engaged in such work, so far as that object can be attained by proper regulations.

In fact, as already mentioned (I. supra), one of the very earliest cases in which the employer's duty in regard to rules was discussed established the doctrine that it is the duty of railway companies to provide for the protection of this class of workmen by proper regulations. Vose v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. (1858) 2 Hurlst. & N. 723, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 249, 4 Jur. N. S. 364.

There the trial judge asked the jury, first, whether the deceased was guilty of negligence. Secondly, he said that no railway company by establishing rules could justify its servants in not taking due care of human life; if they drove wagons into a place where men may be at work, it was the duty of the company to see that proper rules for the safety of such persons 43 L. R. A.

were established; and he asked the jury whether there was negligence; whether the shuntsman, pointsman, and driver did all that the rules of the company required; and whether the accident was caused by the company not giving proper directions to its servants? The jury found that the accident was owing to the defective rules, and that no person other than the defendants was guilty of negligence. A verdict entered for the plaintiff upon this finding was sustained.

There is, therefore, no dispute as to the general principle that it is the duty of a railroad company to establish regulations advising its servants engaged in moving cars on a track of the whereabouts of an employee at work in this dangerous position, and to provide adequate means of warning him of the approach of danger. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall (1890) 78 Tex. 657.

By some companies the rule has been adopted that the switches leading to such a track must always be locked, and this precaution is presumably entirely adequate. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Triplett (1891) 54 Ark. 289, 11 L. R. A. 773.

Considering the lamentable frequency with which car repairers are injured, and the fact that these employees are, as was observed very truly in the case last cited, entirely helpless so far as any precautionary measures that they might take to protect themselves are concerned, it is perhaps to be regretted that the courts have ever conceded that anything short of this or some other provision for absolutely blocking the repair track should have been deemed adequate to absolve a railroad company from a charge of negligence. But the cases impose a much lower standard of liability, the accepted doctrine being that the company performs its whole duty by issuing suitable directions for the placing of danger signals to notify the other employees of the fact that the repairs are going on.

A railroad company is not required to have a watchman or bumpers to protect repair tracks where one of the rules provides that car inspectors and repairmen before they go under or between cars, shall display a red signal in the direction from which a train could approach, and that trainmen shall under no circumstances back or couple on to any car while such flag is displayed. Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1887) 67 Mich. 102. (Accident caused by failure of foreman of car repairers to move red Thresher v. Dyer, 69 Conn. 404, 408, and Winsted Hosiery Co. v. New Britain Knitting Co. 69 Conn. 565, 575. In the latter case we say: "The judgment or ultimate conclusion of a court upon the special facts in issue, as ascertained from the evidence and settled by the trier, is a conclusion of law, and, as such, reviewable by this court; and this is true whether such facts are settled by a special verdict of a jury or by a special finding of a judge;" and referring to the changes in procedure: "We think that the result of this legislation is that in cases tried to the court the judge is now authorized, and, upon request, required, to find and state in a special finding the facts adjudicated by him in reaching his ultimate conclusion, including all specific facts which, when so adjudicated, must determine the nature of the ultimate conclusion and subordinate conclusions involved therein by force of settled rules and principles of law.

flag to end of the section of cars last run on the repair tracks. Adequacy of rule decided as matter of law.)

A regulation which has been pronounced very efficient is the following: "A blue flag by day and blue light by night, placed in the draw, head or on the platform or step of a car at the end of a train, or car standing on a main track or siding, denotes that car repairmen are at work underneath. The car or train thus protected must not be coupled or moved until the blue signal is removed by the repairmen." Abel v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (1886) 103 N. Y. 581. 57 Am. Rep. 773. There the only rule which had been made bearing upon the case was as follows: "A red flag by day and a red lantern by night, or any signal violently given, are signals of danger, on perceiving which the train must be brought to a full stop as soon as possible, and not proceed until it can be done with safety." The court, in upholding the plaintiff's contention that it was, under the circumstances, a question for the jury to determine whether the defendant should not have promulgated such a rule as the one above set out, or one substantially equivalent to it, said: "This rule seems from its phraseology to have been mainly, if not exclusively, intended for the government of moving trains, and was not very well adapted for the protection of men under stationary cars, upon side tracks, engaged in making repairs. There was no rule prohibiting the removal of the signal, and the signal was not intended exclusively for the protection of such men, nor did it give notice that human life was in danger."

On the second appeal (1891, 128 N. Y. 662), the court again held that it "was for the jury to determine whether the rule . . . [in evidence] provided both for the putting up of the danger signal and its removal so as to protect the repairmen as far as reasonably could be done against the hazard of the negligence of co-employees." The following remarks of the court are worth quoting: "Donnelly on the first trial testified substantially that the only rule he heard of was rule 63, and what the repairmen told him, viz.: That they worked under the protection of a red flag. It is evident that if this was the extent of the regulations on the subject, the repairmen had a very inadequate protection. If the red flag was put up and maintained, wherever the repairmen were at work and the meaning of the signal was known by the switchmen, as it probably was, the repair-

The judgment rendered on such an adjudication of facts is merely the voice of the law declaring the legal effect of the facts adjudicated."

These considerations must control the disposition of the claim made in the case before us, that the conclusions we are asked to review are conclusions of fact, and not of law.

It appears that the defendant operated a single-track railroad; that train 474 (an extra train), following train 1411 (a regular way freight), ran into the latter train, which had stopped to attach some freight cars standing on a siding; and in the collision one Jerry Nolan, the plaintiff's intestate, was killed. Every special fact from which the trial court inferred the liability of the defendant for the injury is found, including the rules and regulations adopted by the defendant for safely operating these trains. The finding shows the neglect of one Hall, the rear brakeman of train 1411, men would be protected except as against the reckless or heedless conduct of the switchmen. But it was essential to the efficiency of the rule that it should designate the persons authorized to remove the flag. It was shown that this was done by the rules of the New York Central Railroad which provide that the repairmen alone should have power to remove the flag from cars on a repair track. The same rule was recommended in railroad manuals published before the occurrence of the accident in question. It is obvious that such a or similar regulation, which should place the duty and responsibility of removing the flag upon persons officially designated, was essential to the car repairers' protection. The rule that they should put up a red flag when they commenced work, unaccompanied by a rule prohibiting the brakemen or other employees from taking it down when they desired to remove cars from the cripple track, unless by the consent or direction of the repairmen engaged in repairing the cars, would leave the repairmen exposed to the danger of the mistake or negligence of the brakemen. If it was left to the brakemen to determine for themselves whether there were men engaged in repairing the cars, and whether the flag might be safely removed or not, and to act upon their judgment in removing it, the chances of accident would be greatly increased."

If it is practicable for a railroad company to prescribe a certain distance along which cars to be repaired must be moved on a repair track, in order to prevent any danger of their being struck by moving locomotives or cars on the adjacent lead tracks, the question should be submitted to the jury whether or not the company had provided reasonable regulations on the subject. Cumpston v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1895, Tex. Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 737.

In Dolg v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1897) 151 N. Y. 579, the evidence tended to establish the following facts: The deceased was at work repairing a crippled car in the repair shop, which occupied the whole of a building 50 feet wide and about 200 feet in length. Three tracks passed through the shop through doors which were kept closed, and there were no windows on the side where the tracks entered the building from the yard. These tracks ran from the shop out into the yard and were connected with the main track and other tracks by switches. The three tracks were used for the purpose of moving crippled cars and material into and from the shop to the main and side tracks. The cars were moved by being kicked or shunted by means to obey the rules provided for the protection of his train under such circumstances, and that the collision might not have happened if the rules had been obeyed, but also shows that Nolan and Hall were fellow workmen; and the trial court therefore holds that the defendant is not liable for this neglect. The question of liability is not otherwise affected by the relation of master and servant. The complaint does not allege that this relation existed between Nolan and the defendant, and claims nothing by reason of that relation, but charges the defendant with negligently conducting itself in the management of said trains; and the only allegations, so far as is material under the finding, of acts constituting such negligent conduct, are: "by failing to give proper telegraphic information to the conductor and engineer of each of such trains relative to the position of the other of said trains," and "by failing to exercise proper supervision of the running of said trains," so that train 474 ran into train 1411, and, as a result of the collision, said Nolan, who was rightfully on the former train, was killed. The trial court draws from the special facts found the following inferences: That the rules and regulations of the defendant "did not sufficiently provide for this emergency (i. e. the operation of the trains in the manner as found), and for the reasonably safe operation of trains 474 and 1411; . . . that the defendant was negligent in not providing for the emergency (i. e. the operation of the trains as found), and for the safe operation of trains 474 and 1411, by special orders and instructions, in addition to the general rules; . . . that the operation of these trains under these general rules alone, under the circumstances of this case (i. e. the special facts as found), was not a suitable and safe method to operate these trains; . . . that the train despatcher did not ex-of force applied to them by engines some distance from the shop, and in that way propelled by the momentum into or near the shop doors and controlled while in motion by the brakes. On the day that the deceased was killed some of the men who worked in the yard or about the shops were moving cars on the tracks outside the shop for the purpose of collecting and moving scrap iron. There was a pile of this iron near one of the tracks about 20 feet from the shop door, and the men wanted to load it upon a car. With this end in view they placed a car already loaded with 24,000 pounds of scrap iron on one of these tracks at a point about 800 feet from the doors and there kicked or shunted it towards the shop. The brakeman evidently saw that the force applied would send the car past the pile of iron where they intended to have it stop, and possibly through the doors, and he attempted to control the movement with the brake, but, for some reason, it did not work, and the car ran past the pile of iron, and killed the deceased, who was working inside one of the crippled cars. He had no means of guarding against such a peril, as it was impossible for him to see the approaching car, even if the work at which he was employed would permit him to be on the lookout, since the doors were closed and there were no windows. The court said: "The question is whether this was an accident or the result of some neglect or breach of duty on the part of the defendant. A loaded car was driven through the door of a workshop filled with busy men and one of them was killed. That the defendant's workmen in attempting to move cars in this manner in the yard were engaged in a very dangerous, if not reckless, experiment, cannot well be denied. The danger of the experiment consisted in moving cars in such a way that no one could tell exactly when or where they would stop. If upon the occasion in question the force applied was so measured that the car would stop at the pile of scrap iron, the deceased would not have been killed, but if the force applied was sufficient to send it 20 feet further and it could not be controlled by the brake, the danger to the men inside the shop was so obvious that the manner in which this part of the defendant's work was carried on may very well be characterized as reckless. We will assume then, what cannot be questioned, that the workmen were doing the defendant's work in a dangerous and reckless manner. But these workmen were doing nothing but what, according to the testimony, they had been doing for years before. If the defendant permitted its employees to carry on its operations upon these three tracks outside the shop in such a manner as to endanger the lives of those inside, who could not protect themselves, it failed to discharge to the deceased the duty which the law imposed upon it of furnishing him a reasonably safe place to do his work. The defendant had the power to control and regulate its business. The law imposed upon it the duty of making and enforcing such reasonable rules and regulations for the government of the men in its service, as to prevent or guard against injury by one servant to another in so far as that was reasonable and practicable. It could certainly put an end to the practice of propelling cars upon these tracks by a force that could not be controlled, and it could provide for moving them in some other and safer way. In other words, it could change this method of doing the work by making proper rules and regulations to that end. The jury could have found from the evidence that the practice of kicking or shunting cars upon these tracks in the direction of the doors of the repair shop was known to the defendant. The danger to be apprehended from such a practice was so obvious that the defendant, in the proper discharge of the duties which it owed to its employees, was bound to guard against it by proper rules and regulations, so far as that was reasonable and practicable." (See also II. e. supra.)

A cause of action on the ground of the failure to promulgate suitable rules for the safety of car repairers is sufficiently stated where the complaint imputes to the defendant carelessness and negligence in causing and permitting a locomotive to run against the place at which the plaintiff was at work. Wild v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (1891) 21 Or. 159. The court said: "The language of this allegation is broad enough to admit evidence of all kinds and grades of negligence on the part of the defendant which resulted from causing or permitting the locomotive to run down upon the place where the plaintiff was at work, and thereby rendering it unsafe and causing the injury. This would include the failure to provide such rules, or to adopt such precautionary regulations, as were needful to regulate or oversee the running of the locomotives upon the tracks and switches of the yard as would render the place and employment reasonably safe. While a servant assumes the risks ordinarily incident to his employment, and all open and visible risks, including the negligence of a fellow servant, yet he has a right to presume that the master will exercise ordinary care in not issuing special orders for the reasonably safe movement of these trains; . . . that the injury to plaintiff's intestate resulted from the combined negligence of Rear Brakeman Hall and of the defendant; . . . that the defendant did not exercise ordinary care in the movement and operation of trains 474 and 1411." These inferences are reviewable as conclusions of law. It is true that, in stating the inferences, the trial judge says, "I find as a fact," etc., but this is immaterial. It is the duty of the trial judge to find, as facts within the peculiar province of a trial court, those inferences which are controlled by the weighing of evidence and the credit given to witnesses. It is also his duty to find his conclusions drawn from these inferences of fact; and, in a certain sense, these latter are findings of fact, but they are conclusions reviewable by this court, and the name given them does not alter their intrinsic character of conclusions reviewable for error in law.

We think the court below erred in reaching these conclusions. They are all drawn in support of the claim set up in the complaint that the defendant violated the legal rights of the plaintiff's intestate, because it failed to exercise proper supervision of the running of said trains, and because it failed to give telegraphic information to the conductor of each train relative to the position of the other. The supervision of the trains (unless as involved in the failure to give telegraphic information) is to be found in the rules for the movement of the trains. These rules are before us. They are substantially the same as those in use by about 90 per cent of the steam railways of this country; and the trial court finds that, "for the general movement and operation of trains, these rules are the best and safest general rules yet devised by the best rail-exercise due care for his safety by providing when necessary all such needful rules for the conduct of its business, or such precautionary measures, as will not needlessly expose him to risks not necessarily resulting from his employment. This being so, we hold the language of the complaint broad enough to cover the negligence imputed to the defendant. Nor does this work any hardship. If it had desired a more specific statement of the negligence imputed to it, that end could have been attained by a motion to make the allegation more specific; but the defect is not fatal to the sufficiency of the complaint as stating a cause of action."

Where cars are sent on to a siding without any warning to employees working thereon and cause the death of a brakeman while he is engaged in coupling the cars of another train, the question whether the company has exercised reasonable care in the making and promulgating of rules for the management of the cars in its yard, may properly be submitted to the jury, but the jury cannot be asked whether some specific rule should have been adopted. Larow v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1891) 61 Hun, 11. The court said: "The only negligence claimed was, that the defendant omitted to make and promulgate a rule to the effect that an engine should not enter upon a siding upon which there was another engine and cars without giving a signal or sending notice to the employees of that train. The court submitted to the jury the question whether such a rule was reasonable, and instructed it that if it found that it was reasonable, fair, and just, it might find that the defendant had omitted a reasonable rule, and was therefore negligent, unless the rules already established by the defendant substantially provided for such a case. The court well remarked that there was no evidence in the case that any other company had promulgated any such rule, and none to show whether such a rule could be practically followed in doing the work to be performed in the defendant's yard where the accident occurred. The court then added: 'You must use your best judgment, and, we assume, it is better than mine; hence, I have left it to you as a question of fact.' The effect of this instruction was to submit to the jury the question whether a certain rule should have been made and promulgated by the defendant without any proof whatever as to its practicability, or that any similar rule had ever been adopted or followed by any other railroad company in the management of the engines 43 L. R. A.

and cars in its yards. In other words, the plaintiff was permitted to suggest a rule for the management of the business of railroads, which, so far as appears from the evidence, was not shown to be either in use or practicable, and the court then submitted the question of its propriety to the jury, that it might, by guess or speculation, determine whether such a rule was proper, and, if so, might find that the defendant was negligent in not having adopted and promulgated it."

In Berrian v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (1892) 131 N. Y. 582, it was suggested on behalf of the plaintiff that a rule of the company which prescribed a red flag by day and a red light by night upon a crippled or disabled car to indicate that it was not to be moved or collided with, for the reason that men who were engaged in repairing such car might be under or about it in such a position as to be unable to save themselves if the car was moved, should have been extended to the cars on a siding when being coupled; or, in other words, the company should have formulated and put in operation a rule which would require a red light by night and a red flag by day to be exhibited from the east end of the caboose or from the end of cars which are being coupled. The court, after laying down the general principle as to the extent of the master's duty, which has been already quoted (II. supra) proceeded as follows: "The question here is whether by the exercise of such prudence and foresight, they could have adopted any precautions against injury to the employees than such as they did, or whether there were still others that would suggest themselves to men of ordinary intelligence and vigilance. They had a body of rules embracing every case that was supposed to need regulation. One of these rules provided that when a locomotive was moving backward, its signals must be displayed upon the bumpers. It was made the duty of the yardmaster to see that cars were brought together with as slight a jar as possible, and coupled with coupling sticks. The engineers were required to use the utmost care in pushing cars into turnouts so as to avoid injuring them or other property. Brakemen were required to exercise great care in coupling cars, 'and as, for various causes, it is dangerous to expose the hands, arms, or person between the same,' they were required, before coupling, to examine the situation so as to act prudently. The deceased made the coupling alone, though he was not required to do so, but could have road talent of the country." There is nothing in the record that calls for a review of this finding. For the purposes of this case, we assume the conclusion to be correct. These rules cover the movement of regular and extra trains. They provide for special orders for starting extra trains. They require the train despatcher to give telegraphic information of the meeting place of such trains, and of trains moving in the opposite direction, as well as of regular trains off the regular time. But they do not require him to inform, by telegraph, trains moving in the same direction of their relative position, and for that purpose to keep in mind the position of all such trains, so as to decide, as they approach each station, whether there is a likelihood that a rear train may overtake, and, if the rules are not obeyed, run into, the forward train. On the contrary, they are drawn upon the theory that such telegraphic supervision of trains moving in the same direction, in view of all the conditions involved in operating a single-track road, tends rather to lessen than increase the safety secured by the rules adopted relative to the movement of such trains. The soundness of this theory has received judicial sanction. Enright v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 93 Mich. 409, 413; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Neer, 31 Ill. App. 126, 134. In the latter case some self-evident reasons are given. We think in this respect the rules of the defendant do not violate its legal duty, and that their compliance or noncompliance with that duty, under a given state of facts (notwithstanding many cases hold that such question must be submitted, with instructions more or less precise, to a jury, by force of the law defining the province of a jury), is essentially an inference of law, and, when drawn by a trial court, is reviewable by this court. So far, therefore, as the proper supervision of trains 474 and 1411 depended waited for the engine, and could have had the assistance of some of his coworkers to help him. He could have used a lamp, but did not, though he had a full supply. There were coupling sticks in the caboose for the use of the deceased, which, when used, had the effect, as the court below said, of lengthening the arms. He slept in the caboose and knew and understood the situation and the dangers of the business. Considering the precautions and aids which the deceased might have used to avoid the accident and did not, it would be quite as easy to show that the accident resulted from an omission to use these precautions on his part as that it was caused by the defendant's neglect to make a rule for the display, upon cars that were being coupled, of a red light or a red flag. There is no proof in the case that rules for such a case had ever been promulgated by any other railroad company, or that it was reasonable or practicable to provide against the occurrence of such an accident by a rule. The learned trial judge submitted to the jury the question whether the defendant was at fault in omitting to make and publish such a rule. This opened to the jury a wide field for speculation and conjecture. In the absence of some proof on the part of the plaintiff that such a rule was in operation by other roads, or of persons possessing peculiar skill and experience in the management and operation of railroads to the effect that such a rule was necessary or practicable under the circumstances, or unless the necessity and propriety of making and promulgating such a rule was so obvious as to make the question one of common experience and knowledge, the court is not warranted in submitting such a question to the jury. Besides, it affirmatively appeared that the rules in use by the defendant provided in a reasonable way against the occurrence of such an accident so far as such casualties can be prevented by rules. There was not, we think, sufficient evidence of any neglect of duty on the part of the defendant in this or in any other respect to warrant the submission of the case to the jury."

b. Rules to prevent the automatic or unauthorized movements of engines or cars.

A railroad company which constructs a siding upon an inclined plane owes the duty to an engineer of providing rules and regulations to secure the cars placed upon such siding from getting out upon the main line. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Topliff (1895) 2 Ohio Dec. 522; 43 L. R. A.

Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Croskell (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 160. In the latter case the precaution suggested was the use of a stub-switch so constructed that it would cause loose cars to run off the side track before reaching the main track.

An employer which requires the brakes to be securely set upon all cars standing upon its coal trestle is not guilty of negligence in failing to promulgate other rules, where the proof is that such rule is entirely adequate, if complied with, to prevent the moving of the cars to the injury of employees. Kudlik v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (1894) 78 Hun. 492.

In Southern P. Co. v. Lafferty (1893) 15 U. S. App. 193, 57 Fed. Rep. 536, 6 C. C. A. 474, the court after referring to the cases of Filke v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1873) 53 N. Y. 549, and Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1878) 73 N. Y. 38, 29 Am. Rep. 97 (where the defendant's liability was predicated on the fact that the crew of trainmen was insufficient for the work to be done), proceeded as follows: "Both of these cases were decided upon the application of the familiar principle of law, which is clearly and distinctly stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. (1879) 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612, that the master is liable to the servant for an injury caused by the master's own negligence. It is true that in the cases referred to this principle was applied to trains put in motion by the railroad company, but it seems to us that the general doctrines therein announced are equally applicable to the facts of this case. It is the duty of a railroad company to see that its locomotive engines, after their run, are left in a place of safety. If left where they are liable to be put in motion by the careless, negligent, or wilful act of outside parties, it is as much the duty of the railroad company to see that they are properly guarded to prevent accidents from occurring, as it is to see that a sufficient number of employees are put on board the trains set in motion by its own orders. The company is bound to take ordinary care to prevent such engines from running out from the side tracks or turntable tracks, where they are left, onto the main track, of their own motion, or from being run out by any interference of outside parties. This duty it owes to its employees on trains regularly upon the main track, in order not to expose them to the extra risks of danger from accidents which might otherwise be liable to happen. The moving of such engines at such a time and in such a manner from the side on the adoption of adequate rules for the safe operation of those trains, the only legal inference from the facts found is that the defendant did not fail to exercise proper supervision of the running of these trains.

The failure to give trains 474 and 1411 telegraphic information of their relative positions is found as a fact, and the conclusions of the trial court are simply an inference from this fact, in connection with other facts found, that the defendant, by this means, had violated the legal rights of the plaintiff's intestate. In other words, the inference is one of legal liability, and affirms that the law which defines the duties of railroad corporations, and the rights of persons lawfully on their trains, imposed upon the defendant the duty of giving such telegraphic information, and gave to the plaintiff's intestate the correlative right to have such information given. The validity of this inference is really determined in the disposal

